Power failure shuts plant; four treated for gas inhalation

A power failure, due to the wind and ice Tuesday, shut down Celanese plant operations for two hours and ultimately sent four men to Coronado Community Hospital for treatment.

"In the course of the shutdown, some of the plant gases were vented. The fire crews were called as a precautionary measure to be certain nothing caught fire," Plant Manager Marion John said. "Four of the men on the fire crew inhaled the vapors and became nauseated, so we took them in to be checked."

The four men, Dwight Keith, 25, 2120

Lynn, Chris Hansen, 27, 2607 Seminole, Kevin Skaggs, 23, 1601 N. Sommerville, and Robert Eastham, 25, 710 N. Banks, were treated and released from Coronado Community Hospital, according to hospital reports.

"Part of the process that was vented included the chemical benzene. This was the only chemical that we were worried about," John said.

"Nausea was the only symptom the men had, and we administered oxygen at the plant. Just to be sure they were all right, we sent them to the hospital," John said.

The men were back at work today.

Joe Gidden of Southwestern Public Service said Tuesday that the power failure at Celanese was an internal problem.

"There were about eight or ten power failures in town Tuesday, but they were not lengthy," Gidden said.

"When the cold weather comes as fast as it did Tuesday, the power lines oscillate causing them to slap together and sometimes this causes a fuse to blow. We dispatch a man immediately to replace the fuse, and the power is back on," Gidden said.

"One of the failures was a substation operation, and it was put back (in operation) within seconds," Gidden said.

Call about kidnapped general thought a hoax

ROME (AP) — Italian police said a telephone call claiming kidnapped U.S. Brig. Gen. James L. Dozier's body was probably a hoax, possibly an attempt by the Red Brigades to heighten tension over his disappearance.

On Tuesday, the Beirut office of the Italian news agency ANSA received an anonymous phone call from someone who said Dozier's body would be found in an Italian village Tuesday night.

Italian police, who have reported no clues in Dozier's disappearance, said they took the call seriously at first, but as the night passed, they began to suspect it was a hoax.

"We don't believe the call," said an Italian police official who asked not to be identified. "It's probable that they're doing this to distract the police."

Dozier, 50, the highest-ranking American at NATO headquarters in the northern Italian city of Verona, was kidnapped from his home on Thursday by armed men posing as plumbers. His wife, Judith, was bound and gagged.

The kidnapers have listed no demands, but have said he will be tried by the Red Brigades.

Italian and American officials said they would not negotiate with the terrorists if demands were made.

The Red Brigades claim the responsibility for the sentencing to death and the execution of the American general James Dozier, found guilty by a people's tribunal, the Beirut caller, speaking in Arabic, told ANSA. He said he was speaking on behalf of the "Red Brigades of Baader-Meinhof."

Baader-Meinhof is a West German guerrilla group that some prosecutors suspect has ties to the Red Brigades.

"There is no need to call the American CIA for help in trying to liberate the imperialist American pig," the caller said. "The body of the American pig will be found in a village in the countryside and the police will find it soon after 2000 hours (8 p.m.) Italian time."

Woman asks for Christmas for kids

A young lady in her late 20s has two elementary aged children.

She transferred to Pampa, but the company she was working for closed down. She has found another job and is working full time now. She has not asked for government assistance since she prefers to support herself, but because of expenses and bills incurred while out of work, she has asked The Salvation Army to provide Christmas for her children.

If you would like to help this family and others celebrate Christmas, send your contribution to The Salvation Army, Box 1458, Pampa, Texas 79065.

Reagan addresses nation on situation in Poland

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, preparing to address the nation tonight on the situation in Poland, is weighing "an array of political, diplomatic, security and economic measures" the United States might take against the Warsaw government and the Soviet Union.

Reagan planned to confer with his national security advisers today — the third meeting in three days — before making an address from the Oval Office at 9 p.m. EST. The speech is to be broadcast by the three major television networks.

White House counselor Edwin Meese III indicated that options being considered included steps against the Soviet Union.

"I would say we are looking at every possible step that needs to be taken either in relation to the Polish regime or in relation to the Soviet Union to prevent the situation from getting worse, and hopefully to work for improvements as far as the Polish people are concerned," Meese said Tuesday.

Meese and other administration officials would not discuss the options or say whether Reagan actually would announce any U.S. action. "It may just be a toughening of the rhetoric," one official said privately.

Meese said the administration was "looking at an array of political, diplomatic, security and economic measures that might be taken" in connection with the events in Poland. "We will consider anything at any time that may be necessary."

Asked whether the United States is considering suspending talks with the Soviet Union on limiting medium range missiles in Europe, Meese said the administration was proceeding with the negotiations because they are in the best interest of world peace.

"If at any time we find that the conduct of the Soviets is such that it is not in our interests to go forward with those talks... then we would make that decision," Meese said.

Officials noted that provisions of the farm bill signed by Reagan on Tuesday make it virtually impossible to impose a grain embargo against the Soviet Union unless all trade is blocked.

White House spokesman David Gergen said Reagan's address, lasting from 10 to 20 minutes, would include a Christmas message.

In his only public appearance Tuesday, Reagan welcomed to the White House the former Polish ambassador, Romuald Spasowski, announced Sunday that he was seeking asylum in the United States.

"I am very proud that he's here in this office," Reagan said of Spasowski who was accompanied by his wife.

"I think we're in the presence of a very courageous man and woman who have acted on the highest of principles," Reagan declared. "And I think the people of Poland are probably very proud of him also."

Reagan's eyes were filling with tears as he met Spasowski. White House deputy press secretary Larry Spea said. He described it as a very emotional meeting and said Spasowski and his wife both wept.

Reagan and the former envoy talked about developments in Poland. Spea said, adding that Spasowski "had some recommendations for the president. Speakes declined to say what they were."

Priests, soldiers enter mines to stop strike by 3,000 workers

By The Associated Press

Poland said priests and soldiers entered coal shafts to try to talk 3,000 miners out of quitting a prolonged strike. It said four detained Solidarity unionists who had been freed were re-arrested for disobeying martial law.

Reliable reports from Poland that bypassed military censors said Premier Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski was preparing his first televised message since announcing the state of emergency Dec. 13, possibly as early as today.

In Washington, President Reagan scheduled a television address to the nation at 9 p.m. EST on the Polish situation. The President was said to be weighing "an array of political, diplomatic, security and economic measures" the United States might take against the Warsaw government and the Soviet Union.

The state-run Warsaw Radio said most Poles were obeying martial law. But reports from outside Poland on Tuesday indicated thousands of Poles were resisting the crackdown in several regions, hundreds of prisoners were being mistreated and Solidarity union leader Lech Walesa was on a hunger strike.

The reports could not be independently confirmed. All news communications facilities in Poland have been cut and severe restrictions placed on Western reporters there. Uncensored news reports from within Poland are few and Western news agencies piece together information from travelers, diplomatic sources and others.

A Warsaw television broadcast monitored in Bonn Tuesday night said four members of Solidarity who were freed on promises they would obey martial law were re-arrested for trying to organize strikes or holding illegal meetings.

The state radio said the Communist government eased travel restrictions imposed Dec. 13, shortened the nightly curfew and would suspend it on Christmas Eve to allow Poles to attend midnight Mass. More than 90 percent of Poland's population of 36 million is Roman Catholic.

The broadcasts, monitored in London, said 3,000 holdout strikers in two Silesian coal mines refused to come out, and that Roman Catholic priests agreed to go in with military representatives to negotiate.

The Silesian coal belt in southwest Poland is critical to the nation's economy because it is the country's main earner of foreign currency. It also is a center of resistance to the government. More than a year ago when Solidarity was emerging, 300,000 Silesian miners struck to demand self-governing unions.

Also in London, the Daily Telegraph newspaper quoted Polish exiles as saying prisoners were suffering gangrene and frostbite in outdoor detention camps and that all jails were full. Government spokesman Jerzy Urban said Monday that 5,000 Poles have been arrested since Dec. 13. In Bonn, a member of Solidarity's national commission who was outside Poland when martial law was announced said 70,000 people were arrested, many put in freezing camps. He did not say how he got the information.

The British Broadcasting Corp. quoted sources as saying 8,000 steelworkers were holding the large Katowice steel mill, the city of Radom was ringed by troops and protesters. Gdansk were beaten by soldiers in clubs.

"There's quite a lot of people being killed I can assure you," the BBC quoted a businessman traveling from Poland who arrived in Helsinki. The agency said he was carrying messages between Solidarity activists and the British Trade Union Council but did not further identify him.

Poland says seven people have been killed in clashes since martial law was declared. Reports from outside Poland say as many as 200 people have died.

The BBC also quoted a businessman as saying Walesa has been on a hunger strike since Saturday to protest the crackdown. Walesa reportedly being held in Warsaw army headquarters.

The businessman said he knew about Walesa "because the secretary (Solidarity's) Internal Affairs was my home an hour before I was leave."

No snow in forecast for Christmas

Pampa skies remained overcast today, and several young persons were seen looking longingly upward in anticipation, but no snow is in the forecast for Christmas.

Pampa received 0.21 of an inch of precipitation from the snow Tuesday, which covered the green and brown lawns with a holiday coat and dressed Pampans up in the holiday spirit.

The snow fell in a path from Clayton to Dumas. Surrounding areas received light fog and some intermittent sleet. The snow stopped in all areas by noon, according to Clinnie Brown with the National Weather Service in Amarillo.

Borger reported 1 inch of snow on the ground Tuesday; Dumas - 2 inches; Perryton - 3 to 4 inches and 2 to 3 foot snow drifts in places; Guymon, Okla. - 4 inches; Boise City, Okla. - 5 inches; Clayton, N.M. - 5 inches and Amarillo came in with a trace, according to the NWS reports.

Cloudy and cold conditions are in the forecast for Christmas Eve and Christmas Day, the NWS said.

Fund established for Pampa woman

A fund has been established at First National Bank for Lee Ann Randall, the daughter of Margaret Randall.

Lee Ann has undergone three heart surgeries in Amarillo. The funds will help with the hospital expenses, as Margaret is the sole support of her family.

Donations may be taken to Janelle Cochran at First National Bank.

Weather

The forecast calls for clear and cold conditions today with light winds. The high for today will be in the upper 30s with overnight lows in the mid teens. Pampa received 0.21 inch of precipitation from Tuesday's snow. Christmas Eve will be cloudy and cold.

State senator announces his candidacy for Attorney General

By JACK KEEVER Associated Press Writer
AUSTIN, Texas (AP) - State Sen. Bill Meier has announced as a Republican candidate for attorney general, stating he would spend more time "tending to the store" and less recrossing the state.
 The GOP apparently has never won the attorney general's office since it became an elective position in 1850, but the task might be less awesome than that statistic would indicate.
 Republican Gov. Bill Clements, for example, ended over a century of Democratic gubernatorial victories when he was elected in 1978.
 Also, there is no incumbent in the race as Attorney General Mark White is running for governor. Former U.S.

attorney John Hannah of Tyler is the only Democratic candidate for attorney general.
 Asked at a Tuesday news conference if he had discussed his decision with Clements, Meier said, "Yes, and his response was 'Well, I'm glad to see you're interested, and I wish you good luck.'"
 This encouragement came despite the interest of Secretary of State David Dean, 33, a Clements appointee, in being attorney general.
 Meier, 41, described himself as a "crystal clear conservative," and said his candidacy "will give Texas conservatives an opportunity to gather early under one roof" with the clear purpose of restoring a businesslike and professional atmosphere to the office of attorney general.

 Meier, a Euless lawyer and former Democrat who switched to the Republican party last June, said Texas "present difficulties" in federal court "may indicate a lack of attention to detail" by White.
 He obviously was referring to such rulings as the one holding Texas' prison system unconstitutional.
 Meier said he would go to court himself to defend major challenges to state policy, rather than waiting until the lawsuits were on appeal.

Woman detained as key witness in probe of arms sales to Libya

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) - Federal authorities investigating two former CIA agents accused of smuggling arms to Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy have detained a woman they identify as a key witness in the grand jury inquiry.
 Roberta J. Barnes, 33, is being held in the Tarrant County jail on $500,000 bond on a sealed arrest warrant naming her as a material witness in a federal grand jury investigation and a $20,000 bond on a currency declaration charge.
 Unidentified sources close to the federal investigation told the Dallas Times Herald Tuesday that federal grand jurors looking into the activities of former CIA agents Edwin Wilson and Frank Terpil want to question Ms. Barnes.
 Wilson and Terpil were indicted last year on charges of illegally supplying Khadafy with restricted military equipment and training terrorists. Federal investigators have said the items were sold to Libya for $3.2 million.
 Ms. Barnes began working for Wilson in Washington in 1977 and has been running his London office for two years, sources familiar with the investigation told the Washington Post.
 The Post reported the unidentified sources said Ms. Barnes had been on a "lookout list" of Wilson's associates since her refusal to comply with a grand jury subpoena.

 "I think the whole thing is a sham," said Bill Neal, a Vernon, Texas, lawyer representing Ms. Barnes.
 Ms. Barnes was arrested under a technical customs charge and is being held under exorbitant bond in an obvious attempt by the government to extort information - hearsay or otherwise - on an acquaintance who the government wants very much to convict," Neal told The Associated Press.
 Ms. Barnes said during a court appearance Tuesday before U.S. Magistrate Alex H. McGlinchey that she was en route from London to Austin, Texas, to visit relatives when she was arrested at the Dallas-Fort Worth Regional Airport Monday night.
 The complaint alleges Ms. Barnes gave a false currency declaration when she said she was not carrying more than $5,000. Customs agents said they found $5,050 when they examined her briefcase.
 David Greenleaf, the district Customs director, said his office had been tipped by another federal agency of Ms. Barnes' probable arrival.

 However, he told the Dallas Times Herald that agents did not realize who she was until after she was detained for allegedly making a false currency declaration.
 Luke Thompson, a former Green Beret who said he was hired by Wilson to set up a Libyan commando school, told the Times Herald Ms. Barnes was an employee and close associate of Wilson when he first met her in Washington.
 Thompson told the newspaper in a telephone interview from Honolulu that later he met Ms. Barnes again in London where she relayed instructions from Wilson.
 E. Lawrence Barcellona, the federal prosecutor directing the grand jury investigation, told the Times Herald he would not discuss the Wilson and Terpil investigation except to say other aspects of it also are centered in Texas.
 One source close to the investigation told the newspaper that when Ms. Barnes was detained by customs officials she was carrying "documentation" pertaining to a Swiss bank account with a $250,000 balance.

Couple expecting triplets gets quadruplets

GRAND FORKS, N.D. (AP) - Terri and Kenneth Arnold were ready for the triplets the doctor told them to expect, and they carefully chose names for their three newborn sons.
 But Mrs. Arnold surprised everyone by having quadruplets Tuesday.
 "I didn't believe it until I saw the fourth baby. I watched it all," Arnold said.
 He said his 21-year-old wife "was very happy" after delivering the four by Caesarean section at United Hospital.
 "We've just named three of them: Joshua, Justin and Joel. We weren't planning on a fourth," he said.
 The babies, premature by six weeks, were put in an intensive care nursery, where they were "doing very well so far," Dr. Steven McDonough said.
 Two of the boys weighed 4 pounds, 13 ounces; another weighed 4 pounds, 8 ounces; and the fourth weighed 8 pounds, 6 ounces.
 Mrs. Arnold also was "doing very well," McDonough said.
 The couple, married three years, had one child and told Mrs. Arnold's

5-year-old daughter by a previous marriage, April, to expect a sister or brother soon.
 Then Mrs. Arnold's doctor said "there would be three, and it took us two months to explain that to April."
 Arnold said, "And now there's four, so it's going to be difficult to try to tell her where the last one came from."
 The couple also have a 10-month-old son, Kenneth Arnold III.
 Arnold, 25, a senior in business administration at the University of North Dakota, said his wife didn't take fertility drugs and said multiple births were not uncommon "on my side of the family. Every other generation has had twins."

 Mrs. Arnold's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Gene Blake of Cape Canaveral, Fla., were informed by phone of the quadruplets.
 "I told them to sit down before I told them," Arnold said. "Then her mother started crying. She was happy."
 "That's what she'd prayed for - all boys. But not that many."

The real Santa Claus lives in mesquite

By SUSAN STEWART
Dallas Times Herald

DALLAS (AP) — If Santa Michael Claus had any other name, he might be a different man. It has something to do with honor.

"People have said you've got to be able to make some money off of it, but I never felt that way," Claus said, sitting in an empty conference room in the AT&T building where he works as a communications technician. "I guess I've always felt that if Santa Claus was a drunk it'd be terrible. Or a dope addict. Or a crook."

"This gives me the incentive to walk the straight line, to not slander the name or destroy the image."

If Claus had a son, he would name him Santa. "It's not an ego trip or the Junior thing, but to carry on. I'm proud of it, and I've had a good life with it."

Claus, 34, and his wife Joyce (who signs her checks "Mrs. Santa Claus") live in Mesquite. They have four daughters, none with funny names.

"My oldest daughter, Danielle, was about four when she realized Santa Claus and I have the same name. Her mother explained it to her by reminding her she had a friend named Danielle too. So my kids know we're two different entities, that I've just got the same name as the guy in the red suit."

Like the guy in the red suit, Claus is plump. His friends tell him he's jolly. He takes Christmas seriously.

"My favorite Christmas carol? Right off the top of my head, I said 'Joy to the World.' But all of them make me cry, let's put it that way."

Claus doesn't seem to mind any aspect of having a funny name. This may be because his parents called him "Mike" when he was a child, thereby shielding him from the cruelty of second-graders in Victoria, Texas.

He doesn't mind the jokes, the fact that at Christmas most department store clerks refuse to honor his credit card until he has convinced them he's real (or that he isn't, depending on your viewpoint). He doesn't mind the interviews, and there have been scores of them.

"Sometimes you feel like, 'Aw, man, I've said this so many times before.' But I really don't have that many unusual things happen to me."

The most frequently asked question is, of course, how he got his name. Claus recited the answer as if in deep sleep.

"OK. My sister, when my mother found out she was pregnant, said she wanted to name the next one. She was 15, old enough to know better."

"Her name is Wanda."

Claus went by "Mike" until he entered the regimentation of Victoria Junior College and the further regimentation of the Navy, where seamen must go by their first name and middle initial. This made him Torpedoman 3rd Class Santa M. Claus.

"Change my name? Never in my life. Well, the only time it might have inked in my thoughts was going into the Navy. From boot camp we went to San Diego. There was this big mean petty officer that looked like he could bite the heads off nails. He was looking over the roster, and he says, 'All right, who's the clown?'"

Out came the half-dozen IDs. "We go through the whole rigamarole. Then the reporters were always coming in from San Diego to interview me. That didn't set too well, either."

Claus was interviewed on his honeymoon.

He and his bride appeared on Johnny Carson less than a week after they were married. "I had just gotten out of the Navy, so I had my Navy stories was real smooth. The associate producer had asked us a long list of questions, and we went over the answers. Then he picked some of the questions Carson. Carson didn't throw us any curves, so I really enjoyed that."

Something he didn't enjoy: a traffic ticket. Connecticut during his Navy days. "I got it for unsafe movement. See, I had just put on new tires and I wanted to see how they worked, so I kind of gassed the car, left a little of the tires on the road. When the officer saw my name, we talked a little while, and I thought I'd get out of it. But no, I got the citation. Thought that was the end of it."

"But the next day I pick up the paper and here this story in this little Connecticut paper. All this cute stuff. 'Santa Claus was arrested last night. He wasn't in a sleigh with eight tiny reindeer ... but in '63 Plymouth Fury.'"

"Infuriated me."

Still, from that story a broadcasting mogul called up Claus and took him to Orlando, Fla., to be grand marshal in a summertime "Christmas in July" parade, all gratis.

Claus finds the good in everything.

"See, people with normal names, you don't understand the look on little kids' faces when I'm introduced as Santa Claus ... At first they're uneasy. Then they kind of light up."

REAL LIFE SANTA. Santa Michael Claus (his true name) says that having the well known name has given him "incentive to walk the straight line." Claus, 34, a resident of Mesquite, was named by his sister Wanda, who was 15 at the time. Claus has four daughters and says that if he had a son he would name him Santa as well, since he has been so proud to have the name. (AP Laserphoto)

Americans abandon drives across border since Mexican gasoline prices were doubled

MATAMOROS, Mexico (AP) — Increased prices for Mexican gasoline have caused some Americans to abandon their weekly drives across the border to fill up their tanks.

"No more for me, especially with the traffic at the international bridge," Garth Jenkins of Brownsville, Texas, said Tuesday when faced with doubled prices for regular gasoline at Pemex stations.

Jenkins is one of thousands of Americans who regularly cross the Rio Grande into Mexico to pump their cars with inexpensive fuel from Pemex, the Mexican petroleum monopoly.

Pemex officials decided Americans were getting too much of a good thing and taking supplies away from Mexican vehicles. The monopoly announced Monday increased prices for gasoline and diesel in a conservation move.

Costs rose from 38 cents a gallon for regular to 82 cents and a hike in unleaded gas from 97 cents to $1.36 a gallon.

Prices for self-service regular and unleaded gas in Brownsville generally start at $1.19 and $1.25 a gallon, respectively.

Diesel remained a relative bargain in Mexico even after prices jumped from 14 cents a gallon to 34 cents, compared to $1.19 a gallon across the border in Texas.

Americans living along the U.S.-Mexico border began flocking to Pemex stations several years ago when prices at U.S. pumps began their drastic rise.

Last year, Pemex stations began limiting cars with U.S.

plates to purchases of 100 pesos, or $4, in a similar effort to conserve fuel for Mexican vehicles.

"Ever since gas went to $1 a gallon (in the states) I've been buying here," Jenkins said. "They cut us down to 100 pesos and I tried to bribe the guy, you know the 'mordida,' but he wouldn't accept it last time, which was unusual. Yet he told me to drive around the block and come back a second time."

Another waiting for gas Tuesday was Pete Blanco Jr. of Brownsville.

"I think if it keeps on going up, I'll just go ahead and put it (gas) in over there (Texas)," he said.

Blanco said he had been buying Mexican gas about 1½ years.

Problems were compounded Tuesday at the Pemex station where Blanco and Jenkins waited. A power outage idled the gas pumps and lines backed up for blocks at the station nearest the two international bridges leading from Brownsville.

Holiday traffic and several stalled cars in the 82-degree weather spelled a 45-minute delay in crossing the international boundary into the United States.

Attorney General rules that insurance records not public

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Attorney General Mark White has held that the State Insurance Board may withhold from public inspection its reports on the financial affairs of Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Texas.

General counsel Tom McFarling of the State Insurance Board said Tuesday the Dallas Morning News had requested reports on the company, which lost $45 million in 1980.

White's official opinion was in response to an inquiry from board chairman W.P. Daves Jr., who asked White whether "reports regarding the financial affairs of a group hospital service plan are available to the public."

"Examination, operating, or condition reports prepared by, on behalf of, or for the use of the State Board of Insurance regarding an organization chartered under chapter 20 of the Texas Insurance Code are excepted from disclosure under the Open Records Act," White responded.

McFarling said Blue Cross is the only "chapter 20" company in Texas.

In another Open Records decision, White said the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department could withhold from the public draft proposals for managing 19,000 acres of federally owned land on Matagorda Island.

The acreage is being administered by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service as part of the Aransas National Wildlife Refuge, winter home of the endangered whooping cranes.

James Bell, director of the Parks Division, said the final plan now has been submitted to the service and has been made available to several environmental groups and newspapers.

"When we got a final plan, we released it as a public document," Bell said.

In a third Open Records decision, White said the University of Texas did not have to release "all wire, cable and teletype traffic" between the UT International Office and the government of Bahrain during June, July and August 1980.

Certain documents ... identify individual students and furnish information regarding grades, disciplinary action, scholarships, and recommendations" by the International Office. "Such information may properly be withheld ...," White said.

W.O. Shultz II, UT associate general counsel, asked for the attorney general's opinion.

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessing. For only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that all men are equally endowed by their Creator, and not by a government, with the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property and secure more freedom and keep it for themselves and others.

To discharge this responsibility, free men, to the best of their ability, must understand and apply to daily living the great moral guide expressed in the Coveting Commandment.

Pipeline is needed for gas

There are at least 26 trillion cubic feet of natural gas lying underground in Alaska's Prudhoe Bay, but it will be no help for heating, cooking, and industrial use until a pipeline is built to get it to the lower 48. And there will be no pipeline, it appears, unless potential users of the gas help underwrite the construction cost.

That's the word coming from the financial community, which is balking at the terms originally laid down for financing what will be the largest private construction project ever undertaken. The gas pipeline running from Alaska through Canada into the United States will cost about $40 billion — four times as much as the pipeline carrying crude oil from the Alaskan North Slope to the port of Valdez.

A measure before Congress would change the financing terms laid down when President Carter approved the gas pipeline project in 1977. Among them were provisions that consumers could not be charged any costs of the pipeline before it was completed and that oil companies operating in Alaska could not participate in ownership of the pipeline.

After four years, the sponsors of the project report that investors are unwilling to risk the huge sums required unless there is assurance that the pipeline eventually will be completed. The new plan provides that once the pipeline is one-third complete, the customers of companies contracting to buy Alaskan gas will be liable for the costs and risks of completing the line.

The House Energy Subcommittee was told that the most that could be added to gas bills under the prepayment plan would be $1.75 a month. That sounds reasonable, since the cost of gas coming through the pipeline would only be higher if the project is financed entirely with borrowed money.

The new plan also would permit oil companies to own part of the pipeline. That, too, is a reasonable way to inducing the companies to reinvest their oil profits in an alternate energy development.

The pipeline financing waivers have cleared the Senate by a vote of 75 - 19, indicating the degree of support for making the terms more realistic. We trust the House will go along when the measure comes to a vote this month.

The gift of love

For most of modern history the idea of organ transplant for humans was restricted to the realm of superstitions, science fiction, or ghoulish literature. Since World War II, however, medicine has once again transformed fantasy into routine.

For decades, medical pioneers explored the frontiers of transplant technology. Every year a new barrier was eliminated and a new transplant perfected. The pinnacle was reached on Dec. 3, 1967. Dr. Christian N. Barnard and a team of South African surgeons that day performed the first successful human heart transplant.

Today many transplants operations are considered acceptable treatment for chronic medical problems. Ironically, transplant medicine has become a victim of its own success. The supply of organs available for transplant is critically short of the need. In Los Angeles, for example, 3,000 people are on a waiting list for kidney transplants. Unfortunately the perception of the public contributes to the problem. Transplants are seen by many as a last-ditch medical procedure when in fact they are a standard, but vital, alternative for thousands of patients. Information on donor programs is therefore scarce or often ignored.

The problem is to get the word out to the general public and the medical community that transplant medicine has the tools, but not the means, with which to perform its miracles.

We think the medical societies should take the initiative in educating the public and streamlining donor programs. It would be a tragedy to allow transplant medicine to be wasted simply because the public never received the word on its needs as well as its potential.

Casey is still in 'hot water'

CIA Director William J. Casey emerged from a four-month investigation by the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence with something less than a vote of confidence. The committee, after days of wrangling over how to word its conclusion, declared that Casey was "not unfit to hold office."

That's hardly the kind of endorsement President Reagan's director of Central Intelligence, and former campaign manager, will want to hang on the wall at CIA headquarters. It is one that gives comfort to Casey's critics.

The committee began its investigation of Casey's past business practices last July after it was learned that two federal court decisions had criticized his conduct as a partner in a now-defunct company (Multiponic, Inc.) that may have misled investors during the late 1960s.

The controversy over his choice of businessman and former Reagan campaign aide Max Hugel to head the CIA's sensitive covert operations branch added fuel to the committee's inquiry. Committee members also wanted to learn more about what Case had omitted from his financial disclosure statement filed when he took office last January.

The answer, as it turned out, was plenty. According to the committee's report, Director Casey's disclosure statement "omitted at least nine investments valued at more than a quarter of a million dollars, personal debt and contingent liabilities of nearly $500,000, a number of corporations or foundations on whose board Casey served, for civil lawsuits in which he was involved in the last five years and more than 70 clients he had represented in private practice in the last five years." Among the clients: the governments of South Korea and Indonesia.

As though all this wasn't enough, it was learned last month that Casey had declined to pace his extensive stock holdings — including some in companies with substantial foreign investments — in a blind trust to avoid even the appearance of a conflict of interest.

Nevertheless, the committee found no "smoking guns" — no concrete evidence of illegal conduct. And innocence must be assumed until guilt is proven.

Nevertheless, the facts surrounding Casey's role in Multiponics are still in dispute. Max Hugel resigned last summer and Director Casey acknowledges that the appointment was a "mistake." And even the glaring omissions from William Casey's financial disclosure statement can be set right by adding the additional information before next January.

For now, at least, Casey will continue as director of the CIA. But he clearly does not enjoy the confidence of the Senate Intelligence Committee nor, we might add, of many career intelligence officers within the CIA.

The White House obviously hopes that Casey can now begin to alter those perceptions. If he doesn't, he will have to go. A position such as Casey's is too sensitive to afford even the suspicion of evil. Such suspicion will set back the painstaking effort, following the revelations of CIA improprieties several years ago, to restore confidence in the agency.

The Bomb is the chief industry

By ROBERT WAGNER
AMARILLO - Sprawling across a 9,100 acre tract in the midst of the desolate, windblown High Plains of Texas stand hundreds of nondescript buildings that comprise one of the federal government's most sensitive facilities.

Only the signs posted on the perimeter fence offer a clue that something extraordinary is occurring inside.

"All vehicles and personnel are subject to search while on this facility," says one warning.

Another summarizes the provisions of an obscure federal law known as the Atomic Weapons and Special Nuclear Materials Rewards Act. A third identifies the facility as the Department of Energy's Pantex Plant.

Beyond the bulletproof guard towers, the cyclone fences and the electrified gates, approximately 2,400 men and women are engaged in a highly classified, very specialized form of work matched nowhere else in the nation.

The Pantex Plant is the final assembly point for every nuclear weapon produced in the United States.

Shipped here by truck and train are fuses from a Motorola Inc. plant in Scottsdale, Ariz.; neutron generators from a General Electric Company facility in Pinellas, Fla.; and electronic components from a Bendix Corporation plant in Kansas City, Mo.

Weapons-grade plutonium and enriched uranium come from facilities in Aiken, S.C.; Richland, Wash.; Piketon, Ohio; Oak Ridge, Tenn.; and Paducah, Ky.

Workers at the Pantex Plant, 17 miles northeast of downtown Amarillo transform those components into nuclear warheads for both tactical weapons and strategic intercontinental weapons.

Constructed as an Army ordnance facility during World War II, the Pantex Plant was temporarily abandoned by the federal government in 1945, then reopened in 1951 to perform its current mission.

Throughout most of the ensuing 30 years, the facility operated in relative anonymity. Even residents of nearby communities in the Texas Panhandle were unaware of precisely what was being produced at the Pantex Plant.

Today, however, the facility is the object of a fierce controversy, touched off last summer by Bishop Leroy T. Matthiesen, leader of the Catholic Diocese of Amarillo.

After President Reagan announced his decision to proceed with the production of neutron bombs, the bishop composed a statement, which appeared in the diocesan newspaper, criticizing that decision as "tragic."

Other Catholic bishops throughout the country have decried the escalation of the arms race but Matthiesen's statement was distinguished by two unique sentences.

"The matter is of immediate concern to us who live next door to Pantex, the nation's final assembly point for nuclear weapons, including the neutron bomb. We urge individuals involved in the production and stockpiling of nuclear bombs to consider what they are doing, to resign from such activities and to seek employment in peaceful pursuits.

Matthiesen received hundreds of letters reacting to his call for resignations. The mail from other sections of the county was almost universally favorable, but the reaction in the Panhandle was overwhelmingly hostile.

One of the area's major employers, Pantex has an annual budget estimated at $75 million to $80 million, including a substantial payroll of $45 million per year.

Local political, civic and business leaders were highly critical of the bishop.

They apparently look at the question of nuclear proliferation as a "chamber of commerce matter," responded an editor of the West Texas State University campus newspaper.

Matthiesen says he "never expected a mass resignation" but notes that in his private discussions with Catholics working at the Pantex Plant he has found that "some of them are suffering from real guilt feelings."

Time to get out of Libya

Col. Moammar Khadafy, the Soviet-backed maniac who runs oil-rich Libya, has ordered "special assassination squads" to kill President Reagan. Vice President George Bush, Secretary of State Alexander Haig, and Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, according to Newsweek magazine.

And NBC News has reported that extra measures are being taken to shield the nation's top leadership following recent intelligence reports about a Libyan assassination conspiracy. Moreover, unusual precautions are being taken to safeguard American diplomats abroad who are also rumored to be marked for murder. Col. Khadafy is said to have worn vengeance against the United States following the loss of two Libyan planes over the Mediterranean to U.S. Navy fighters.

U.S. authorities are correct, of course, to take the Libyan threat seriously. Khadafy's madness aside, our tragic national experience with assassinations and assassination attempts should permit no other reaction.

The Reagan administration is appropriately making no secret of its intention to punish any Libyan assassination attempt. Newsweek reports official contingency plans for B-52 bombing attacks on terrorist training camps in Libya, where up to 20,000 foreign trainees are under instruction at any given time. Obviously advance warning of swift, sure retaliation is designed to act as a deterrent to the Libyans.

The problem for the United States with this worst-case scenario, as Khadafy would be the first to appreciate, is that 2,500 American workers and their dependents are in Libya, associated with U.S. firms and other concerns producing Libyan oil. Following direct U.S. military action against Libya, American citizens there could be slaughtered wholesale in an instant act of madness, or they could be held hostage in a magnified and even more vicious replay of the Iranian crisis.

The State Department has repeatedly warned U.S. citizens to quit Libya. Few have done so. But the Exxon Corp's recent decision to walk away from its 25-year involvement in Libya promises a substantial reduction of America's exposure there.

Exxon's action is being hailed for its good corporate citizenship and sound business judgment — placing the safety and welfare of Exxon employees above the next quarterly earnings report and, at the same time, liberating itself to shop around the world for better off deals elsewhere.

We would hope that other U.S. firms in Libya follow Exxon's lead.

The Miracle

By PAUL HARVEY
Daily, my desk receives mail from individuals who are convinced they have seen visions, ghosts, flying saucers, abominable snowmen. I can't run down all these reports.

For years, for example, I have heard sensitive persons try to describe a phenomenon they concede is "indescritably." Some artists tried to capture the sight on canvas. I saw their canvases, yet remained unimpressed.

Then I heard a minister from somewhere in Texas broadcasting that he had seen it, and I listened. His name is Dr. John W. Drakeford. I have since learned that he is a respected man and a responsible witness.

His account of the event exceeds the limits of my own imagination, but I am now determined to journey to wherever necessary to witness this sight for myself the next time the astronomers anticipate it and the weather is right for observation. It has been seen from the forests in East Texas, from the highlands of Montana, best from several points in Kansas.

First, so that you will not be unduly frightened, I should mention that this is what scientists call "a natural phenomenon." They cannot explain it, but they are confident it is not "supernatural."

Here is the way Dr. Drakeford and other men of unquestioned veracity describe the miracle.

You will be out of doors. You will awaken while it is yet night.

The horizon line, illumined only by reflected starlight, will be barely visible.

You will then see, according to witnesses, an apparent rim of radiance separating the two shades of dark.

Some say that at this instant you also "feel" something. Others say you "hear" something.

At any event, there is this electric glow which begins gradually to backdrop the stars as if some mystic incandescence were seeking to extinguish them, one by one. The luminescence glows brighter; purples become wine red — then there leaps from the epicenter of all this daggers of fire, daggers of yellow fire, squirting forth a symmetrical arc of blazing gases — like half of a huge fiery pinwheel.

This is not a volcanic eruption, so far as is known. But the color which begins to spew forth from the inverted vortex appears both electrical and geometrical — like an illumined magnetic field.

Then, for all your anticipation and preparation, when "it" appears from the edge of the earth you quake — as you might shake from a sudden crack of thunder.

The Sky is stabbed deeper and deeper by more and more tongues of yellow flame.

And here adjectives lose their descriptive adequacy. You are seeing a peacock's tail of fire as wide as the sky. A color-blend no mortal's brush can duplicate.

If you are in a rural area, roosters begin to crow, the breeze begins to blow, leaves whisper excitedly among themselves.

Your own eyes widen until the colors fade. Then... a yellow explosion on the horizon, and you must turn away, unable to watch the a-borning day.

No human can any longer fix his naked eyes on the brilliance of the sun's rise.

The sight which you and I would travel so far to see — if, indeed, it really were a rarity — is called — "Daybreak."

Today in History

Today is Wednesday, Dec. 23, the 357th day of 1981. There are eight days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history: On Dec. 23, 1948, Japan's former Premier Hideki Tojo and six other Japanese World War II leaders were executed in Tokyo.

On this date: In 1920, the Government of Ireland Act was passed in Britain, mandating separate parliaments for Northern and southern Ireland.

In 1972, Nicaraguan officials reported 10,000 people killed in an earthquake in Managua.

In 1973, six Persian Gulf nations doubled their oil prices.

And in 1975, the Central Intelligence Agency chief in Athens, Richard Welch, was killed by gunmen outside his residence.

Ten years ago: President Nixon commuted the prison term of former Teamsters' president Jimmy Hoffa.

Five years ago: President-elect Jimmy Carter named Joseph Califano secretary of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

One year ago: Hundreds of Lebanese villagers stormed a United Nations building in Beirut, attacking its employees, in protest of the U.N. peacekeeping force's alleged failure to keep the peace.

Today's birthday: Dancer-choreographer Jose Greco is 63.

Thought for today: "The world is a comedy to those who think, a tragedy to those who feel." — Horace Walpole, English statesman, 1678-1757.

Reagan's no was really a maybe

By WALTER R. MEARS
AP Special Correspondent
WASHINGTON (AP) — When President Reagan said no, what he meant was maybe. For there almost certainly will be some tax increases built into his new budget.

Tg 'be called tax increases, and they will not alter his centerpiece, three-year income tax reduction. But a revenue enhancement — the administration's chosen euphemism — is a tax increase no matter how it is styled.

After Reagan said at a news conference he had no plan to increase taxes "in any way," his spokesman, Larry Speakes, produced a swift clarification: Reagan is firm on the big income tax cut, but there is room for other tax measures to whittle at the hefty budget deficits now in prospect.

Hundred-billion-dollar deficit forecasts are unnerving to congressmen who have to go before the voters next year, and that has led to suggestions from Republicans as well as Democrats that the administration should do something to raise more revenue and reduce the shortfall.

Reagan has said over and over again that the right course is to curb spending, not to try to balance the budget on the backs of the taxpayers. He argued that if the government takes in more money, it will spend more money and the whole cycle will be repeated.

Speakes reiterated the administration's position that there would be no change in the 25 percent income tax cut that began this year with a 5 percent reduction. "But there are some other proposals floating around that we're going to have a look at," he said.

The reason they are floating around is that the administration has been floating them for weeks. Indeed, Reagan himself proposed $22 billion revenue-raising measures Sept. 24, but never formally submitted them to Congress.

Speakes said long ago that the president would consider "what has become known as revenue enhancement." That phrase was coined in Reagan's Office of Management and Budget.

One good, used circus on the block

DELAND, Fla. (AP) — For all the young-at-heart who ever wanted to run away to the circus and spend their days watching the elephants, tigers, trapeze artists and clowns, this may be your chance.

The financially struggling 98-year-old Clyde Beatty-Cole Bros. Circus, one of three major traveling road shows in the country, is up for sale.

There are only two conditions: that you can afford the price — something less than the $3 million the owner says it's worth — and that you keep the circus on the road.

But the buyer gets a lot for the money. Besides the Big Top that covers 45,000 square feet, there are 30 tractor-trailers, a water truck, dining truck and 38 acres of land for the winter when the circus pauses to catch its breath. Also the Asian elephants — 13 of them — said to be worth $25,000 each.

"I could liquidate the whole thing and say the tented circus is dead. It would have died 27 years ago if not for me. But I'd like to sell it to somebody who would keep it intact," says Sarasota millionaire Jerry Collins, 74, the owner.

Nine months a year for 98 seasons, the Clyde Beatty-Cole Bros. Circus has carried nearly 200 performers, a band, high-wire and juggling acts.

lions and tigers that jump through a ring of fire, trained bears, tumbling clowns and more.

But inflation has struck hard.

Attendance is down, and operating expenses have ballooned to $15,000 a day during the season for the nomadic army of Beatty performers.

"American circuses are going through the same thing everybody in America is going through," says John Pugh, its vice president and general manager since 1966. "They're having to adjust the times and finances."

Collins, who says he never forgot his first trip to a circus at age 7 or 8, has spent more than $2 million over the year trying to keep the Beatty circus going, Pugh said.

Snow buries parts of Rocky Mountains

By The Associated Press
Cars and buses slid into one another and authorities warned of avalanches after up to 5 feet of new snow buried parts of the Rocky Mountains. High winds and up to 7 inches of snow whipped the Midwest, contributing to the death of two people.

Forecasters said "weird" weather conditions spawned a midwestern storm system that produced the threat of a tornado as well as snow. Tornadoes generally occur during spring and summer.

Meanwhile, a mix of rain and snow chilled the mid-Atlantic coast.

The road from Salt Lake City to the Alta and Snowbird ski resorts 20 miles away was closed Tuesday by natural avalanches and by the man-made kind, set off to prevent bigger snowslides.

"I'm sure a few people had planes to catch," said Barbara Altum of Alta, which reported 56 inches of new snow in 24 hours. "But I don't think they minded. I saw a lot of smiles today."

Utah's Salt Lake Valley got up to 18 inches of snow as the frigid Wasatch Mountains wrung moisture from air that had passed over the Great Salt Lake. More snow was predicted for today.

An avalanche warning was issued for the northern Utah mountains and snowpacked road surfaces melted and refroze in some areas of the valley, causing more than 100 accidents in Salt Lake and Davis counties. Four Utah Transit Authority buses were involved in accidents, said UTA spokesman Rod Clifford.

Gusty winds and a snowfall of up to 18 inches made travel difficult in the Colorado mountains, and icy roads in the Denver area caused so many fender-benders that authorities told motorists involved in non-injury accidents to exchange information and file reports later.

A blizzard of snow and gusty wind belted Greensburg, Kan., 40 miles southeast of Dodge City.

Up to 5 inches of snow fell Tuesday in a diagonal band across Kansas from southwest to northeast, accompanied by north winds of 15 to 25 mph. A tornado watch was posted for southeastern Missouri and northern Arkansas, but no tornadoes were seen.

Columbia, Mo. got up to 7 inches of snow Tuesday, while midafternoon thunderstorms drenched some southern areas of the state with 2 inches of rain and a tornado watch was issued for the Bootheel. No twisters were sighted.

Snow on the road shoulder may have caused a school bus to roll over on a wet road near Grayling, Mich. Seven children and the bus driver suffered minor injuries, deputies said.

The Kansas Highway Patrol said Margo L. O'Neal, 30, of Paola, Kan., was killed when her car spun out of control on snowy U.S. 169 near Spring Hill and collided with an oncoming van. The two occupants of the other vehicle were reported only slightly injured.

Rolland Brown, 45, of Odin, Ill., was killed early Tuesday when a car he was in hit ice on a bridge and slipped off the road, hitting a tree near Beckemeyer, Ill.

Household making own economic forecast

By JOHN CUNIFF
AP Business Analyst
NEW YORK (AP) — While every financial institution is busily promoting its economic forecast for 1982, American households are making their own, with far less fanfare.

This is unfortunate, because what families are deciding to do or not to do amounts almost to an economic dictate, affecting retailers, car makers, banks and sellers and buyers of homes, to name just a few.

Their decisions have an impact on wage scales and government spending and mammoth capital-expansion projects, and in some small or large way on just about everything else in the multi-trillion dollar economy.

Their decisions are not made in isolation, of course, because an economy involves the interaction of buyer and seller, producer and consumer, supply and demand. But if you check back over the past year or so you'll get some small idea of who has really called the shots.

The Big Three automakers, for example, have not had the upper hand. Despite their mighty financial and industrial power, they've been unable to have their kind of market. Instead, they have had to revise their production schedules, close their plants and settle for less.

The immediate reason for their failure lies with a consumer who balked at the prices asked and the interest rates demanded, and who thereby exercised his option to keep the old jalopy another year or two. There are deeper reasons too, of course, but you might say they were merely material for the final buy-or-not-buy decision made by the consumer.

What will that same consumer think about conditions in June? We don't know. What we certainly do know a lot about is something of which we can do with less, which is the unsolicited opinions of "experts" who use the beginning of a new year to publicize themselves.

Where will stocks go? Why they'll go soaring to 1200 on the Dow Jones industrial average, says a brokerage firm. And gold? To $600 says one so-called authority. And prices? Inflation is coming down — all the experts say so. And without your even asking, they'll tell you that interest rates will fall too, and the recession will end in May.

To check back on such forecasts is hardly worth the effort, but if you really want to size them up you may read a few newspapers from September, in which you will find the establishment of forecasters, including those of the Federal Reserve and the White House.

Surplus cheese will go to poor

WASHINGTON (AP) — Stuck with a growing mountain of government-owned cheese that violates his free enterprise ideals, President Reagan is slicing off some of the surplus for free distribution to the poor.

But in keeping with his principles of New Federalism, Reagan said cheese will be given to the needy only in states where officials ask for it.

And he wants the states to turn it over to non-profit organizations in observance of yet another principle — letting charity do what the government used to do.

In a written statement Tuesday, Reagan said 30 million pounds of the 560 million pounds in storage will be distributed through the states. The total now in warehouses around the nation amounts to more than two pounds for every man, woman and child in America.

The unwanted cheese has been accumulating as a result of farm laws that assure dairy farmers a minimum price for their products.

Cheese is acquired and put in storage when producers can get more by selling it to the government than selling it in the market place.

"At a time when American families are under increasing financial pressure, their government cannot sit by and watch millions of pounds of food turn to waste," Reagan said.

"More distributions may be necessary as we continue our drive to root out waste in government and make the best possible use of our nation's resources," the president said.

White House communications director David Gergen said the government paid $43 million for the 30 million pounds it plans to distribute.

The announcement had the earmarks of a hasty decision, with no one able to say how much the distribution program would cost. While Gergen said the cheese to be distributed is natural cheddar, Timmie Jensen, a public information officer at the Food and Nutrition Service, said her understanding was that it is processed American cheese. California already has submitted a plan for distributing the cheese and will become the first participating state, receiving 3 million pounds of cheese in 5-pound blocks Monday from storage facilities in that state.

The Agriculture Department said the system used for distributing commodities to schools and other public institutions will be brought into play. States will work through local offices of the Food and Nutritional Service.

Block successful in battle with Stockman

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — All the details won't be known for five weeks or so, but it appears Agriculture Secretary John R. Block has successfully defended some of his turf from budget director David A. Stockman's spending ax. The victory was the scrapping of a Stockman plan to impose user fees on slaughter plants and processors to pay for the costs of federal meat inspection, a source said Monday. The source, who asked not to be identified, applied a copy of a memo which outlined Block's "head-to-head confrontation" with Stockman last week at the White House. No details were available, however, on what major cuts will be in store for the Agriculture Department in fiscal 1983. President Reagan is to announce his budget recommendations next month. Reports have circulated that government food programs may be targets for cuts. Also among the possibilities are block grants to states which would replace the current system of allocating money for food stamps, school lunches and supplemental family food donations. The memo said Block "was able to get more than $50 million reinstated in agricultural research funds, which will allow the Department of Agriculture to increase its 1983 funding for research." Stepped-up research has been one of Block's personal goals for some time. "A Stockman proposal that would have made a drastic cut in Soil Conservation Service funds and staffing out in the country struck at the heart of another one of Block's personal high-priority goals," the memo said. No dollar figure was included, but it said Block "fought for a plan that allows minimum cuts" in agency funds "but keeps the soil conservation program intact" and able to continue with a strong program. The memo also said Block was able to counter Stockman's arguments for holding the lid on farm operating loans offered by the Farmers Home Administration. "Stockman stood against any increase," it said. "Block came away with some increase in funds for farm operating loans." The FmHA, as the agency calls itself, is basically a lender of last resort to farmers who cannot qualify for credit at banks and other commercial lending institutions. "Stockman also came up with a proposal to reduce the USDA budget by putting federal meat inspection on an across-the-board user fee basis," the memo said. "Block argued that this would introduce a fundamental question of the integrity of our food safety system if meat processors were required to pay for the meat inspection in their own plants." According to the information, Block "also argued that the meat packers would simply take the user fee costs out of the prices paid for livestock at the farm end" and would charge consumers more at the retail end.

Santa and the ICE KING

by Lucrece Beale

SYNOPSIS: Santa's attempt to make a match between the Sun Daughter and the Ice King failed miserably. In anger and shame, the Ice King is determined to go back to his castle to grind out more winter.

CHAPTER FOURTEEN ONE MORE TRY

"What will we do?" whispered Ononik as the sled flew away. "The Ice King will never stop making winter now."

"We'll make one more try," said Santa. "This one I think will do."
"Who is she?" asked Ononik.
"The Ice Queen of the South," said Santa.
"I didn't know there was such a one!" exclaimed Ononik.
"Oh, yes," said Santa. "She lives at the South Pole where, I have heard, it is colder by far than at our home in the North."

The Ice King had buried his head in the polar bear's fur to hide his tears of shame and sorrow at being rejected by the Sun Daughter. As the reindeer sped towards the South Pole it grew colder and colder and the Ice King, thinking they were nearing home, raised his head and shouted gleefully, "I must have left my ice machine going full blast!"

The sled came down before a palace of ice. "What is this?" cried the King. "This isn't my home."

"It is the South Pole," replied Santa. "The Ice Queen lives here. I have brought you to ask for her hand."

"Never!" roared the king. "I told you I would never humble myself again. Everyone hates me and I hate everyone and that's the end of that." And he threw himself down beside the polar bear and refused to budge an inch.

Santa left him there and went into the Ice Queen's palace. Now the Ice Queen's palace was just like the Ice King's castle. Everything was made of ice and far above Santa could be heard the same grinding, clattering noise he had heard at the King's home. Santa went up a winding icy staircase and found the Ice Queen energetically working her ice machines and pumping her wind bellows.

"Fly with me to the North," said the Ice King.

But this was as it should be for at the South Pole winter always came in June and July and August and when December, January and February came, the Ice Queen would stop her work for it would be summertime in her upside down world.

Santa had to holler to make himself heard over the noise. "I've brought you a suitor!" he belloped.

The Ice Queen stopped pounding and pumping. She turned and stared at Santa. She was tall and regal looking and she too had icicles in her hair and frost on her eyebrows.

"A suitor?" she exclaimed blushing. "What nonsense! Who would ever want to marry me?"

"He's in my sled," said Santa. "Come and see."

Picking up her icy skirts the Ice Queen rushed down the stairs and out to the sled. There was the Ice King sitting there with his back to her staring at his feet.
The Ice Queen walked in front of him and gazed at him worshipfully. "Oh, no!" she whispered. "He's too wonderful for me."

The Ice King raised his sullen eyes and when he saw her his heart turned over. He got out of the sled and took one step towards the Queen and then they both gulped and cried out, "Oh, would you marry me?"

They fell in each other's arms and Ononik jumped up and down with joy and Keotuk barked and even the polar bear looked pleased.

Then the Ice King said, "Fly with me now to my castle in the north."
But the Queen said, "I can't do that for it is wintertime at the South Pole and I must keep things cold."

The King looked crestfallen. "But, I can't stay here," he mumbled unhappily. "I am needed at the North Pole."

Santa burst into laughter. He laughed until the tears rolled down his cheeks.

"What is so funny?" demanded the Ice King.

"You!" cried Santa. "You've forgotten — it's August! It should be summer in the North and you're not needed or wanted there at all!"

Hypertension begins in childhood, studies say

By JANET McCONAUGHEY
Associated Press Writer

BOGALUSA, La. (AP) — Hypertension or high blood pressure doesn't just happen suddenly to adults. A painstaking series of studies, which began 10 years ago in the piney woods region of Louisiana, indicates that it can begin in kindergarten or before.

"We learned several years ago that arteriosclerosis begins in childhood; we think from our research that essential hypertension does, too," said Dr. Gerald S. Berenson, in charge of the Specialized Center of Research in Arteriosclerosis, located about 70 miles north of New Orleans.

At the American Heart Association's November convention in Dallas, Berenson presented some of his most recent findings — showing that diet, exercise and some drugs can lower high blood pressure in children prone to develop heart disease.

He indicated it will take another 40 years to finish the Bogalusa project, which has recently received a five-year grant of $7.5 million from the National Institutes of Health.

Among his findings so far: — Children can show some of the "type A" or high blood pressure behavior that often goes along with heart attacks in older people. — Adolescent changes indicate that white boys may be identified as susceptible to earlier heart attacks than white girls or blacks of either sex. — And schoolchildren can suffer from hypertension — and show dramatic improvement when given the same treatments used on adults.

There's a lot of controversy about diet, using drugs, what levels are abnormal in children. Our mission is to get reliable information," Berenson said. In one of his studies, Berenson worked backward from the fact that high-pressure up-and-at-tem types — the kind of people known as "Type A" — are more likely to develop heart disease than their slower-paced counterparts. Psychologists gave schoolchildren 8 years old or older a list of 23 questions, including "Do you eat fast?" "Do you walk fast?" and concluded that "Type A" symptoms can be found in children.

In another study, the group checked infants for cholesterol levels. Berenson and his colleagues — 11 nurses in Bogalusa, a nurse in nearby Franklinton, and 35 psychologists, statisticians, physicians, chemists, technicians, nutritionists — checked 470 babies over several years.

They checked them when first born, at six months, then yearly. They found that the cholesterol levels were at almost an adult level by 6 months to a year of age, and related the levels to the sort of food the babies were getting.

Other studies were prompted by the knowledge that blacks are more prone to hypertension than are whites, and that white men are more likely to have heart attacks than are white women or blacks of either sex.

The heart attack rate has been tied to cholesterol levels. And recently, it was found that one sort of cholesterol, called high-density lipoproteins — HDL for short — actually helps to protect against heart attacks.

Berenson said all children's cholesterol levels tend to drop at puberty. But he said blacks tend to have higher levels of the protective HDL — and the different types of cholesterol tend to drop in proportion to each other.

"In white boys, there's a tremendous drop of high-density lipoproteins. And the low-density lipoproteins tend to go up earlier in white boys."

"If you look at these patterns, it suggests that they're patterned for earlier heart attacks. It's as if white boys are targeted for early heart attacks. The presentation for the American Heart Association showed the effects of his program to control high blood pressure in children by diet, exercise and some drugs.

When they started that program two years ago, Berenson's team checked the blood pressure of 1,600 children in Franklinton, population about 3,500. They chose 100 children whose blood pressures were consistently higher and treated half of them as they would treat adults — with diet, exercise, and small doses of the safest known drugs. The other 50 were left untreated as a comparison group.

The team worked hard to get the whole town involved. Nine local restaurants agreed to serve low-sodium, low-cholesterol dishes. Similar products were stocked by local groceries. And the children's parents came in for checkups.

If the parents had high blood pressure and were too poor to go to a doctor, Berenson's group treated them. Otherwise, they were sent to their own doctors.

A number of the children under treatment have moved or gone off to college: Berenson estimates that 30 or 35 are left of the treatment group. "And they're not taking

Lawyer says woman framed

HOUSTON (AP) — A defense lawyer for a woman convicted of painting communist slogans on the wall of the Exxon Building here says his client was framed because of her well-known revolutionary activities.

"She looked like a good target," Glenn Van Slyke said after Betty Sullivan, 32, was sentenced to two years in prison for criminal mischief. "It is definitely an unjust sentence, a vindictive sentence."

Van Slyke says Bob Price, the cab driver who testified against Ms. Sullivan, could not identify her for two days after the April 28 incident, when police showed him photos taken at protest rallies.

He said Price's original description did not match Ms. Sullivan's appearance.

The slogans read, "Fly the red flag May Day" and "Red, white and blue we spit on you May Day."

"If she'd painted, 'God bless America' or 'Jesus is coming' on the side of the building, we never would have been in court," Van Slyke said. "Or 'Nuke Iran,' which I've seen painted all over this city."

Santa's helper is kids' pen friend

By LEIGH SHIRLEY
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — Jolly old St. Nicholas bends an ear to many requests for toys. But Santa's helper says children write Father Christmas mostly because they believe he's a special friend who can help with problems and make dreams come true.

"I've noticed this year kids aren't asking for a lot of toys," said Carol Keeley, a U.S. Postal Service secretary who has been answering Santa's mail for seven years. "Basically, they're writing to a friend. They talk about parents, brothers and sisters, the needy. They really feel that Santa can help."

"He's like a secret friend," she said. "They tell him about bad family situations, divorce or whatever. It's like they think he knows about it."

The 46-year-old grandmother, whose special job keeps her working double-time during the Christmas season, says answering Santa's mail lifts her spirits and restores her faith in people.

"It's really my Christmas. It gives you such a good feeling," she said. "The thing that has impressed me is their caring for other people. Their courtesy. Their love for mom and dad. Their sincerity."

"These kids are very aware that there are people who are less advantaged than they are. I give parents the credit for teaching them that. They are so compassionate and caring. I see such fine qualities and I think, here's our legacy evolving — it gives you hope," she said.

"Dear Santa Claus: Hi. How are you? Before I ask for my Christmas present I would like to ask if you could manage to give my present to the Cambodia children. I love Christmas and I believe in you. I saw you fly over our roof. I don't want anything for Christmas but for the poor and disabled people to have a nice Christmas. Love, Adrian."

Mrs. Keeley says she usually sets aside special letters, like the one from Adrian, to keep and reread year after year.

A letter from a fifth grader included a request for a toy and a thoughtful postscript: "I love you Santa. Send me a picture of the reindeer. Please bless the children on the other side of the world with toys and food. Give my love to the missus and Rudolph. Love, Carolyn."

Another letter promised Santa. "I have been a pretty good girl and obeyed my parents. If you have time to come to the house I want a 10-speed. Please bring something for my family. P.S. If you can, please help the poor. Love, Jennifer."

The letters come in all shapes and sizes. Some have stamps, many have drawings and others include the child's picture, she said. Most of the letters are from children in the Dallas area. But some arrive here from as far away as New York and Ohio.

Every letter is answered on illustrated stationery with a message from Santa and a hand-written postscript, penned by Mrs. Keeley and a volunteer who works with her.

Requests from needy children are passed on to charitable organizations or individuals, she said.

"Basically, it's individuals who call in offering their help. We had a call this year from a man who is unemployed," Mrs. Keeley said. "He said, 'Even though I'm not working, I'm making it. I feel like I have enough to help those who don't.'"

Land reform program catching on

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — An agrarian reform program, started nearly two years ago to distribute land to peasants and undermine leftist popularity, is catching hold after a bumpy and sometimes violent start, its government organizers claim.

But problems remain, and a major phase of the program meant to turn large landholdings over to peasant cooperatives in this tiny, strife-torn Central American nation has been delayed, probably for years, by financial and other problems. "There was an initial period of confusion, on the part of the peasants as well as in some cases on the part of government officials," said a spokesman at the Salvadoran Institute for Agrarian Reform, which supervises most of the program.

Another institute source said it was as difficult for peasants to understand that they owned the land as it was for the landlords to realize that they had lost it.

"The timidity is now gone," he said of the peasant management of the cooperatives. "The campesino (peasant) has matured."

Both the spokesman and the source asked to remain anonymous.

The program started in March, 1980, when army troops and agrarian reform officials arrived on the largest landholdings in the country, owned by about 100 families, and informed the peasants that the farms would become cooperatives owned by those who farmed them.

Tex-Mex Christmas

AUSTIN — Christmas — that better time to assemble old friends for a party. Deck the halls, light the fireplace and lay out a buffet of hearty, additional Tex-Mex cooking. With these ingredients good cheer will develop naturally.

Tex-Mex combines the best of the culinary arts of two warm, outgoing cultures. The food is down-to-earth, filling and frequently spicy. Mexican oven-cooked brisket provides a slight twist to conventional barbecue. It is an double as the main dish at dinner or as one of several foods on a buffet table. Fresh homemade bread makes an excellent accompaniment on a buffet. Cut thick slices of bread, pile it with beef drizzled with the open-face sandwich with hot picante and wine marinade.

Texas Department of Agriculture meat specialist Frank Brooks suggests looking for specials on brisket. Texans eat more brisket than any other people in the country, so prices are frequently competitive.

Brooks recommends buying a brisket that is at least eight pounds. Smaller ones, he says, usually come from young animals and do not have the maturity necessary for a juicy, flavorful piece of meat. The meat should be lean with just enough fat for flavor and juiciness. Trim unwanted fat after cooking.

Brooks says to cook the meat at a low temperature. A brisket cooked at 175 degrees will yield up to 27 percent more meat than one cooked at 450 degrees.

Picadillo, a sweet and spicy dip which is served warm, is garlic, cloves, cinnamon and raisins. Picadillo goes well with unsalted corn chips or tostadas. It also makes a nice filling for pocket bread.

MEXICAN OVEN-COOKED BRISKET

- 1 10-lb. beef brisket
- 1 bottle Sangria wine
- 1 finely sliced onion
- 1 finely sliced green pepper
- 1/4 C. picante sauce or to taste

Place brisket in a large glass, glazed ceramic or stainless steel container. Pour wine over meat and marinate refrigerated 24 hours, turning occasional with a wooden spoon. Remove brisket from marinade and place in roaster about the size of a turkey pan. Pour marinade over meat. Add onion, green pepper, picante sauce and salt and pepper. Cook in 300 degree oven 7-8 hours or until tender. When brisket is done, remove to a serving platter. Pour off liquid and serve on the side as a sauce. Serves 25-30 allowing one-third pound per serving.

PICCADILLO

- 2 lg. finely chopped onions
- 2 drippings or butter
- 2 lb. ground beef
- 2 cloves minced garlic
- 2 tsp. ground cloves
- 2 tsp. cinnamon
- 2 (10 oz.) cans tomatoes with green chilies
- 2 tsp. sugar
- 1 C. raisins
- 2 tsp. ground cumin
- 1 1/4 C. toasted pecans
- Salt to taste
- Corn chips or tostads
- Brown onion in bacon drippings or butter in large pan. Add beef and brown, discarding excess fat. Add garlic, cloves, cinnamon, tomatoes and chilies and sugar. Simmer, covered approximately 1 hour. Add raisins and cumin; simmer covered, 20 minutes. Add pecans, cover and simmer another 10 minutes. Salt to taste. Put picadillo into chafing dish. Serve hot with corn chips or tostads. Yield: 2 quarts.

TAMALES WITH SPICY BEEF FILLING

- 30-36 corn husks
- 2 C. solid shortening
- 8 C. masa harina
- 3 C. chicken broth heated to lukewarm (95 degrees)
- 2 tsp. baking powder
- 1 T. salt
- 2 qt. Spicy Beef Filling

Soak corn husk overnight in enough cold water to cover. Lay out husks in a single layer. Beat shortening in large bowl or electric mixer until light and fluffy, about 5 minutes. Gradually add masa harina alternately with chicken broth, adding broth in slow, steady stream. Add baking powder and salt; mix well. Drain and dry corn husks. Divide dough among husks, spreading on one long side. Spoon 1-2 tablespoons of Spicy Beef Filling down center of dough. Fold in long sides of husks, then fold narrow half over to make packet open at one end. Arrange tamales with open end upright in steamer. Tamales should lean toward the center of the steamer at a 45-degree angle, touching as they meet teepee style. Steam 2 hours over slowly boiling water. This dish can be made ahead as tamales freeze well. Makes 3 dozen.

Spicy Beef Filling

- 2 lb. ground beef
 - 2 tsp. salt
 - 1/2 tsp. black pepper
 - 1 clove minced garlic
 - 1 lg. chopped onion
 - 1 tsp. comino
 - 1 (1 lb.) can tomatoes, chopped and drained
 - 1 C. beef bouillon
 - 2 T. chili powder
- Brown ground beef in large skillet. Season with salt and pepper. Add garlic and onions. Cook until onions are soft. Add remaining ingredients. Cover and simmer one hour.

TEX-MEX BUFFET—Hearty food with a Tex-Mex touch is guaranteed to create holiday cheer, says Texas Department of Agriculture home economist Fran Gerling. Gerling created a buffet of Mexican Oven-Cooked Brisket, Piccadillo and Tamales to entertain guests during the holiday season.

Dr. Lamb

Symptoms of hypoglycemia

By Lawrence Lamb, M.D.

DEAR DR. LAMB — I am a 26-year-old female and have been diagnosed as having low blood sugar. A restricted diet has helped this condition. I would like to know if fructose can be useful in my diet. I have heard that it can be used by some diabetics instead of sugar and that it has a different effect on the body than sugar. Is this true? If so, how much can be used without harmful effects?

DEAR READER — If you read my column often you know that hypoglycemia (low blood sugar) is diagnosed far more frequently than the condition exists.

Too many people getting this diagnosis have not been demonstrated to have a significantly low blood glucose level. The diagnosis should not be made unless it can be demonstrated that real low blood glucose levels occur at the same time that the symptoms are induced. Many healthy athletic people have surprisingly low blood glucose levels and don't have a single symptom.

The problem is that the symptoms attributed to hypoglycemia can also occur from many other conditions. The release of adrenaline, from anxiety or other causes, can induce these same symptoms. Happily, some of the same measures that help the person who does have hypoglycemia also help the person who has similar symptoms but who does not have hypoglycemia.

You'll understand this better by reading The Health Letter number 18-8, Hypoglycemia: The Low Blood Sugar Problem, which I am sending you. Others who want this issue can send 75 cents with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it to me, in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, NY 10019.

Fructose is absorbed differently and it may help in a person who has reactive hypoglycemia, the type that occurs in response to having eaten sweets and starches. It is useful in some mild diabetics. But in diabetics who must take insulin it is of little value and begins to affect the blood glucose level the way glucose or table sugar does.

It provides the same number of calories as ordinary sugar, so you should not use very much of it. Fructose is converted to glucose in the liver and muscles.

Diet is not the only important factor. Avoiding coffee, tea, colas, cigarettes and alcohol is also important in the true reactive hypogly-cemia patient or many of those with similar symptoms simply induced by the release of excess adrenaline.

DEAR DR. LAMB — Exactly what nutritional value does lettuce have? I am arguing with my mother about it.

DEAR READER — Calorie-wise it has very little. There is some difference in various types of lettuce but in general 100 grams (3.5 ounces) of lettuce contains about 15 calories. That is a lot of lettuce, and that is why it is popular for salads for weight control. About one out of five calories in lettuce are from protein, but it is of little importance because there are so few calories anyway.

Helping others made her Christmas merry

By Nita Schuh (Fourth of six parts)

Thanksgiving had been difficult enough. How would I ever make it through Christmas?

I couldn't go running to family or friends again, or take a get-away cruise. No. The time had come to pick up the threads of losing Joe.

Though his death had left me feeling empty, like a fresh mountain stream gone dry, somehow I knew I would have to find a way of restoring the joy to this holy season — without my husband.

It pained me to think that his bubbly spirit would not be around to make the holidays full and complete. I had to accept that things could never again be the way they used to be. I had to let go of "us." I had to begin reaching forward — on my own.

December was here and Christmas was right around the corner. Nothing came to my mind.

My spirits were heavy when I walked into the kitchen one morning. It was three weeks till Christmas, and I hadn't done a thing.

Between sips of hot coffee, my eye suddenly caught my wall calendar hanging on the refrigerator door. The month of December peered back at me, the boxes glaringly empty until Dec. 25, circled in red. I felt ashamed.

I got up and took the calendar down, placing it on the table in front of me. "No more wasting time," I told myself. "Right now I will expectantly look forward to Christmas."

I picked up a pencil, and at the top of the calendar I wrote "The Merry Month of Christmas" — feeling anything but merry as I did so.

Then, hoping for something inspirational to plan for, I began to idly fill in the blank squares: make cookies for Cousin Edie (89 years old, blind and in a nursing home); babysit while Nancy, a friend's daughter, Christmas shops; address and mail Dad's cards; share holly and other greenery from my garden with Virginia, my apartment-dweller friend; have a tea for widowed friends in my neighborhood, and so on.

I felt lighter. There was nothing spectacular, but before I knew it, nearly every date had been filled in and the margins of the calendar were full and overflowing with scribbled notes and ideas as well.

As the days unfolded and I began to actually do the things I had jotted down, an excitement for each day filled me in an unbelievable way. Soon my problem became, "How shall I get all of these things done?"

I didn't want to leave anyone out! I could hardly believe that only a few weeks ago I had been so lonely I didn't even want to think about Christmas. Now I wished I had more time before Christmas arrived.

In the end, I did have plenty of time to do the things I had planned, and to enjoy the company of my friends. And when the month was over, I discovered it had, indeed, been the "Merry Month of Christmas" after all!

The simple practice of making commitments brought rich rewards in learning to give — when I thought I had nothing — and, in the end, made my Christmas full and complete.

That was five years ago. Each year since, I've repeated my tradition in some form, and it has become more and more a time of happy anticipation as well.

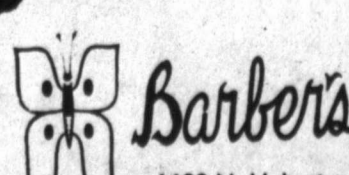

And I know Joe would have been proud of me. What is even more pleasing is that my little idea caught the imagination of others. Last year one friend called to tell me, "Remember when you celebrated all the month of December, Nita? Well, I'm doing that, too."

Medic alert offers lifesaving service

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Will you please pass along to your large readership some facts about Medic Alert, a system of emergency medical identification?

Medic Alert provides an important service especially for people who have hidden medical conditions, ranging from medication allergies to diabetes, heart problems, hypertension, hemophilia or epilepsy, to name a few.

If a person wearing a Medic Alert emblem is unable to speak or communicate because of accident or sudden illness, the emblem "speaks" for them.

On the back of the emblem is listed that person's special medical problem, an I.D. number and a phone number that can be called collect 24 hours a day from anywhere in the world.

Emergency information available at the answering service can range from the name of a hospital in the immediate area that carries a rare serum, to blood type, type and dose of insulin, next of kin, family physician and whether or not the person is an organ donor.

Medic Alert is a charitable, tax-exempt, non-profit foundation. Membership is provided free to those who cannot afford to pay the one-time-only $15 charge for a lifetime membership. Each year the member is sent a computer printout of his file in the form of a wallet card.

There are over a million members in the U.S.A., and affiliate organizations exist in 15 foreign countries. Our national chairman is Lorne Greene.

Medic Alert Foundation International is located in Turlock, Calif. 96380. Our phone is 209-668-3333.

JIM FLOOD,
DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC AFFAIRS

DEAR JIM: I have checked out Medic Alert, and find it to be legitimate, non-profit and life-saving. It has demonstrated its value thousands of times in emergency rooms and hospitals across the country. Prepare for a flood (no pun intended) of letters requesting information on how to become a member.

DEAR ABBY: For my 16th birthday, my parents bought me a brand-new bedroom set: a double bed, a chest of drawers, a vanity dressing table and a chair. I am 20 now and I'm being married soon, and I think I am entitled to take my bedroom furniture with me. My parents think my husband and I should buy our own bedroom furniture. What do you think, Abby?

FAMILY ARGUMENT

DEAR ARGUMENT: Since there is obviously a difference of opinion, accept your parents' decision without further discussion.

DEAR ABBY: Today I received a letter from a well-known business firm that required an answer. The letter was signed, "J. Jackson." I was at a loss as to how I should address my correspondence. Should I begin, "Dear J. Jackson"?

I believe in equal rights, but why should one's sex be a matter of privacy? I couldn't care whether the writer is Jane Jackson or John.

Neither do I have any interest in the writer's marital status, but if the writer happens to be a female and she doesn't wish to disclose her marital status, she could sign herself "Ms."

What are your feelings in the matter?

CURIOUS

DEAR CURIOUS: I believe in equal rights as well as privacy, and when one signs him or herself "J. Jackson," that's how I would address him or her.

Problems? You'll feel better if you get them off your chest. Write to Abby: 12060 Hawthorne Blvd., Suite 5000, Hawthorne, Calif. 90250. For a personal reply, please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

NUMB ARMS, LEGS

Danger Signals

There may be misalignment of vertebrae in the spine causing pressure on nerves, yet the patient experiences no pain in the back. Instead, a variety of sensations may be felt in other parts of the body. These include tingling, tightness, hot spots, cold spots, crawling sensations, electric shock sensations, stinging, burning, and others. Here are nine critical symptoms involving back pain or strange sensations which are usually the forerunners of more serious conditions. Any one of these usually spells back trouble.

- (1) Paresthesias (see above)
- (2) Headaches
- (3) Painful joints
- (4) Numbness in the arms or hands
- (5) Loss of sleep
- (6) Stiffness in the neck
- (7) Pain between the shoulders
- (8) Stiffness of pain in lower back
- (9) Numbness or pain in the legs.

These signals indicate that your body is being robbed of normal nerve function. Until this function is restored, you will, in some degree, be incapacitated. The longer you wait to seek help, the worse the condition will become. Don't wait! Should you experience any of these danger signals...call for in-Depth consultation in Layman's terms.

Allergies--or eating their way to hyperactivity

Some children may be literally eating their way directly into a "learning disability" and a special education class. There is strong evidence that certain foods can produce symptoms of hyperactivity in children with allergies.

Dr. B. Feingold of San Francisco reported in two books written during the 1970s (Introduction to Clinical Allergy and Why Your Child is Hyperactive) that "a diet free of food additives was effective for children who showed signs of hyperactivity, lack of concentration... learning difficulties."

More recently, Dr. William G. Crooks, a pediatrician of Jackson, Tenn., reported in the Journal of Learning Disabilities:

"Based on reports that have appeared in the literature during the past 60 years... and my own clinical observations, I am absolutely certain that what a child eats can make him dull, stupid or hyperactive."

And the New York Institute for Child Development recently said, "In a study of 265 hyperactive and learning disabled children, (we) found that almost 75 percent had difficulties in breaking down sugar and other carbohydrates in their bodies. This inability to handle large amounts of sugar had an adverse effect on their behavior."

The Institute also noted that changing a child's diet can even improve vision because, "The ability of the eyes to focus depends on the glucose levels in the body. When these levels are regulated by proper diet, changes may be noted in tasks involving visual skills."

There are still questions to be answered, and research to be done, but it is already apparent that what a child eats or doesn't eat can have a definite impact on his performance in school.

Parents who have any reason to believe that their child may be allergic to certain foods should consult an allergist, pediatrician, or physician. They shouldn't depend on the schools to diagnose allergic problems, because the schools don't have the facilities, knowledge or time.

Researchers have found that the food to which a child allergic may be the very food he craves most... or even a that is normally considered healthful, such as cow's milk.

Some of the foods suspected of causing hyperactivity include sugar, color additives and flavors (particularly red coloring), milk, corn, chocolate, eggs, wheat, potatoes, citrus, pork and (to a lesser degree) beef, apples, chick grapes, peanuts, onions, pineapples, tomatoes, carrots, rice, and lettuce.

With any particular child, any particular food can be culprit.

The New York Institute for Child Development observations there "indict sugar as a critical culprit producing symptoms of hyperactivity and learning disorders." It also said that some children are allergic to usually wholesome foods as milk, wheat and nuts and symptoms ranging from hives to hyperactivity to depression and mental exhaustion.

Dr. Hilde L. Mosse of the New York Medical College says is fortunate that not all children who eat large quantities of food additives show an allergic reactions; not even all children in the same family.

"Why some children are sensitive to these substances and others are not, is not yet known," she said.

Some allergists recommend an elimination diet to determine possible allergic reactions; withholding various foods for a period of time and, after carefully noting results, returning patients to their normal diet, one food at a time.

Much research is being done in this area. But it will take long time for the medical profession, as a whole, to legitimize the findings made. After all, some doctors still insist that "Vitamin C can be dangerous to your health."

Fights break out in Georgetown's victory over Western Kentucky

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

The Georgetown Hoyas and Western Kentucky Hilltoppers gave it their best shots — and some shots were harder than others.

"It was more like a pro game than a college affair," said Western Kentucky Coach Clem Haskins after Tuesday night's fight-punctuated, 64-45 loss to 17th-ranked Georgetown. "I was very disappointed in the officiating. If the officials want to call a National Basketball Association game, let them get an NBA license."

The rough game was halted in the second half when the Hilltoppers' Percy White threw a punch after Georgetown's Fred Brown had wrapped his arms around White's head. At the final buzzer, Western Kentucky's Bobby Jones was knocked to the floor by a punch after he had grabbed Georgetown's Pat Ewing.

Eric Floyd led the Hoyas with 22 points, including 14 in the second half as Georgetown won its seventh straight game and eighth in 10 outings. But the victory generally left a bad taste for Georgetown Coach John Thompson.

"It was extremely physical and I spoke to the officials at halftime," he said. "The officials told me that as long as it was incidental contact, they would let it continue. But there was an awful lot of contact being allowed by the officials."

Floyd, a 6-foot-3 senior guard, scored seven points and assisted on two other baskets as Georgetown ran off 11 straight points to take a solid 49-36 lead with 10:29 left.

In other college basketball games involving the nation's ranked teams, No. 6 Arkansas defeated Southern Mississippi 63-54; No. 7 San Francisco edged New Orleans 86-83 in overtime; 13th-ranked DePaul stopped Maine 90-67; No. 14 Tulsa trimmed Florida Southern 94-88; No. 19 Alabama-Birmingham whipped California State-Chico 80-60 and No. 20 Villanova hammered Pace 121-64.

Top Ten
Scott Hastings scored 21 points to pace Arkansas' conquest of Southern Mississippi. The victory was the seventh straight for the undefeated Razorbacks.

Darrell Walker was Arkansas' only other double-figure scorer with 10 points. Joe Dawson led the Golden Eagles with 18 points, while Curtis Green had 12 for the losers.

Quintin Dailey's 12-foot jump shot with 2½ minutes remaining in overtime sent San Francisco ahead to stay over New Orleans. Dailey, the Dons' star guard who finished the game with 28 points, made two straight baskets as USF came back to gain a 72-72 tie before the end of regulation time.

Dailey then broke a 77-77 tie with his shot from the baseline midway in the overtime, and he made two free throws to stretch the San Francisco lead to 81-77. Forward John Hegwood, who led USF with 29 points, put in two more free throws to boost the unbeaten Dons into a six-point lead and sew up their eighth victory of the season.

Second Ten
Terry Cummings scored a season-high 27 points and Bernard Randolph added 15 to lead DePaul over Maine. Cummings, who left the floor with 6:50 left, also was a standout on defense as he and Randolph held Maine's high-scoring Clay Pickering to eight points. Pickering had been averaging 18 points a game for the Black Bears.

"When the score was tied 24-24 in the first half, I knew that was the moment to get these guys going," said Cummings. "We lost our cool against UCLA and I made up my mind that it would never happen again. I'm supposed to be the leader, and for the first time in my career I put it into practice."

Cummings referred to last Saturday night's loss to the Bruins at Pauley Pavilion.

Center Greg Stewart and guard Mike Anderson each scored 18 points as Tulsa outpaced Florida Southern.

The defense-minded Golden Hurricane, now 7-1, set a team record with 20 steals from the Moccasins, who managed only 15 shots from the field in the first half.

Florida Southern's John Ebeling started the contest with a per-game average of 31 points, but managed only 23, making 15 of them on free throws. The defending NCAA Division II champions are now 3-3.

Oliver Robinson scored a game-high 18 points to lead Alabama-Birmingham over Cal State-Chico. The Blazers pulled ahead early and never trailed, cruising to a 48-34 halftime lead.

Stewart Granger and Ed Pinckney triggered a first-half surge as Villanova trounced Pace. Pace took a 10-8 lead three minutes into the game before Granger and Pinckney sparked a 45-6 barrage that buried the Setters. Villanova led 61-29 at halftime.

Others
Elsewhere, Jacques Tuz scored 21 points and Colorado hit seven of eight free throws in the last 1:49 as the Buffaloes took a 65-59 victory over Nevada-Las Vegas to win the sixth annual Rebel Roundup Tournament. Ken Green scored 29 points and grabbed 10 rebounds to lead Nevada-Reno to the championship of their own Wolf Pack Classic with a 91-76 win over St. Mary's.

Groom wins pair

GROOM—Groom won two games from Hedley in basketball action Tuesday night.

Seniors Jennifer Treadwell and Dorothy Kuehler scored eight points apiece to lead the Tigerettes to an easy 43-20 victory.

Kim Taylor and Wannan Woodward had six points apiece for the losers.

Groom toppled Hedley, 71-48, in the boys' game. Tracy Britten and Micheal Fraser led Groom with 18 points apiece.

Scott Doherty paced Hedley with 15 points. David Phelts had 14.

Groom hosts Miami in its next game Jan. 2.

Pistons topple Mavs

DALLAS (AP) — Kelly Tripucka scored 18 of his game-high 27 points in the second half but the Detroit rookie said a defensive change triggered the Pistons' 106-98 victory over Dallas.

"In the second half, we kept the ball away from (Jay) Vincent and forced Dallas out of its offense," Tripucka said Tuesday night. "They had isolated him on me in the first half and you can't stop any player one on one in this league."

Vincent, the rookie from Michigan State, totaled 13 first-half points as the Mavericks built a 10-point margin at intermission in the National Basketball Association contest.

Detroit, which had trailed by as many as 13 points in the second quarter, gained the lead for the first time in the third period on a 15-3 streak in the opening three minutes.

The Pistons increased their lead to 12 points in the fourth quarter while piling up a 64-47 advantage over the final two quarters.

Supporting Tripucka's 18 points in the second half were 15 by Terry Tyler, and eight by rookie Isiah Thomas, who was held scoreless in the first half.

Others placing in the three age groups are as follows:

Sons are home after lengthy custody fight

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Bill Carney is spending this Christmas with his sons — a victory for the crippled Army veteran who convinced the courts he was a fit father even if he couldn't throw a football. And he has a message for other handicapped parents so challenged: "If you love 'em, if you really care, don't give up." His story, "The Ordeal of Bill Carney," will be broadcast in a television special tonight on CBS at 9 o'clock EST. Carney says he has mixed emotions about the program. He says it portrays him as embittered by his injury, and he doesn't think that's true. He says the show also failed to mention his daughter, Jacqueline, who lives with his ex-wife, despite his request that she be mentioned. Carney's ex-wife, Ellen Farnham of Buffalo, N.Y., reached by telephone

Tuesday morning, refused comment on the court case or the program. This holiday will be very different from the last one Willie, 12, and Eddie, 10, spent with their father in 1979. At that time, they faced a court-imposed return to their mother. Carney said he refused to see the boys off at the airport because he couldn't bear it. Carney took custody of the boys informally after separating from his wife in 1971. He says their mother didn't want them. He was injured Aug. 15, 1976 when a jeep overturned while he was on Army Reserve maneuvers at Camp Parks, Calif., near Oakland. His sons were staying with his parents in Phoenix, Ariz., during his 45-day Army stint. While recovering at a Long Beach Naval hospital, he initiated divorce action. Then, their mother asked for legal custody and it was granted. The divorce commissioner who issued the August 1977 ruling said a man "who couldn't play football with his kids" should not have custody of them.

(AP) — A judge has ordered a former Nazi officer to surrender his American citizenship and says he may face prosecution and deportation if his health improves. Otto von Bolschwing, 72, was not present during the federal court ruling Tuesday. He lives in a suburban Carmichael nursing home, where he suffers from a brain disease, officials said. The Justice Department filed a complaint in May seeking his deportation, saying von Bolschwing persecuted Jews. Von Bolschwing has said he worked for American intelligence during and after World War II. In Tuesday's agreement, the federal government refused to confirm or deny Bolschwing's claim.

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — President Leopoldo F. Galtieri was expected to outline his government's goals today, one day after taking the oath of office and swearing in a new cabinet. Revitalizing Argentina's sluggish economy is expected to be one of the first targets of the government. Galtieri was presented with the ceremonial sash and baton Tuesday by Air force chief Gen. Basilio Lami Dozo and navy commander Adm. Jorge Anaya. Galtieri is head of the army.
