

Reagan threatens to fire striking air controllers

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan today threatened to fire striking air traffic controllers if they did not return to the control tower. He gave striking air traffic controllers 48 hours to return to work or be fired.

"I must tell those who failed to report for duty this morning they are in violation of the law, and if they don't report for work within 48 hours, they have forfeited their jobs and will be terminated," Reagan told a Rose Garden briefing this morning.

Reagan's announcement came at the same time the Federal Aviation Administration grounded much of the nation's commercial air traffic as the controllers, in defiance of a federal judge, launched their first nationwide strike.

The walkout began with the day shift at 7 a.m. local time, and the FAA said early indications were that more controllers were staying off their jobs at some centers than had been anticipated while in other areas some controllers were defying the strike.

No figures on the number of strikers were available.

Reagan told reporters that federal law prohibits federal employees from striking and that air controllers promised not to strike when they were hired.

"I hope you'll emphasize again the possibility of termination, because I believe that there are a great many of those people who have been swept up in this and probably have not really considered the fact that they have taken an oath, the fact that this is now in violation of the law."

"I hope they will remove themselves from the lawbreaker situation by returning to their posts."

Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis, who also briefed reporters, said the government will not offer the controllers any more money.

"We do not plan to increase our offer to the union," he said.

Reagan said the threat to fire the controllers was the only action open to him.

"What lesser action can there be?" he asked. "The law is very explicit. They are violating the law."

Reagan and Lewis spoke after a midmorning White House meeting also attended by Attorney General William French Smith.

Lewis said beforehand that the government would not try to put controllers in jail, but would seek civil penalties and ask to have the union removed as the controllers' bargaining agent.

Meanwhile, U.S. District Judge Joyce Green ordered the union and its leaders to tell the court by 5 p.m. why they should not be held in contempt of court for disobeying her order that made the strike illegal.

The judge, at the pre-dawn hearing, also granted the government's request to bar the union from paying any benefits from its strike fund to the controllers.

Lewis has said no talks would be held as long as there was a strike and federal mediator Kenneth Moffett said earlier that no new negotiations were on tap.

The FAA said it was telling the nation's airlines to ground half their flights at 23 major airports later today but was leaving it up to the airlines to decide which flights to cancel.

"Our first concern is safety. We're not going to jeopardize the public lives," Lewis said in a televised interview. But he advised travelers to seek ground transportation for shorter flights and be prepared for delays on the longer distances. Amtrak and various bus lines were preparing to meet an onslaught of passengers.

Robert E. Poli, the president of the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization, announced the strike at about 4 a.m. EDT, 20 minutes before U.S. District Judge Joyce Green in Washington issued an order making the walkout illegal.

The Air Transport Association, the industry lobbying group, called the strike "deplorable" and said it would go into federal court in New York later in the day and seek $50,000 in damages for every hour of the strike.

Pickets appeared at airports and regional control centers around the country, but it was uncertain in the opening hours of the strike how many controllers and supervisory personnel would be available for work.

Government attorney Dennis Linder told a pre-dawn hearing that a strike would pose "truly a threat to the health and welfare of the United States" and cause a widespread impact on the economy amounting to millions of dollars a day.

But Poli, asked whether he would ignore the order, told reporters "I've said that before. Yes, I will."

Marijuana plants prompt arrests

A man and two women were arrested Friday after marijuana plants, some with stalks two inches in diameter, were discovered by Gray County Sheriff's deputies on a farm 11 miles south of Pampa.

The farm, located near the intersection of U.S. Highway 70 and a farm to market road, was the site of digging by Pampa police officers last week, reportedly for the body of a missing person.

Gray County Sheriff Rufe Jordan said today he had not received a report of a missing person.

Pampa police today refused to comment on the digging. Barriers were erected in the vicinity of the dig late last week.

Commenting on the arrests, Sheriff Jordan said today that Ervin Dale Prouse, 40, of Star Route 3, Pampa, was arrested Friday afternoon at his residence 11 miles south of Pampa by Deputies J. D. Smith and Doug Davis. A mother and daughter, Donna W. Williams, 40, of 908 1/2 E. Francis and Diana Williams, 20, of Star Route 3, Pampa, also were arrested at the Prouse farm house, Jordan said.

The three were brought before Justice of the Peace Nat Lunsford Friday night, the sheriff said. Lunsford set bond at $10,000 for Prouse and $2,500 each for the Williams women, he said.

The trio made bond at 10:20 p.m. Friday, the sheriff reported.

Official complaints against the three persons have not yet been filed with the district attorney's office, Jordan said. He believed the complaints will be for possession of a controlled substance. The complaints have not been filed because the district attorney has been in district court trying a murder case, he said.

The search and arrests were made following several reports to the sheriff's office of marijuana being grown at the Prouse farm, the sheriff said.

In the search, Gray County deputies found marijuana plants being grown in a metal quonset hut-type building with large glass windows around it, located behind the Prouse residence, the sheriff said.

The marijuana stalks were from five to six feet tall, some with stalks measuring two to two and a quarter inches in diameter, Jordan added. In the state the illegal plants were found, the marijuana weighed approximately 50 to 75 pounds, he said. Once the plants were dried and prepared for use, the weight would equal about 15 to 18 pounds, Jordan said.

The Prouse farm is from 400 to 500 acres and is located 11 miles south of Pampa, east of Texas 70.

Investigator seeks Pampanas in search for missing woman

Information concerning the disappearance of a 23-year-old Amarillo woman may hinge upon locating four Pampa persons who saw an unidentified man give the woman a ride from an Amarillo club April 25. She has not been seen since, Manuel Lopez, a New Mexico Private Detective involved in the case, said today.

Anselma Saiz of 202 S. Alabama in Amarillo, was last seen the night of April 25 when she accompanied her sister, Suzanne, and some friends to South Amarillo disco Hot Rocks at 4541 Canyon Dr., investigating Amarillo Detective Capt. Jimmy Davis reported.

During the course of the evening, a group of people at a nearby table struck up conversation with the Saiz party, and one man asked Anselma and her friend to dance, according to Amarillo police reports.

Police reports say the man was about 27 years old, 140 pounds and balding in front. He was dressed in boots and western clothes and seemed to aim his attentions to Anselma Saiz. The man bought the young woman drinks and a Hot Rocks t-shirt.

The Saiz group decided to leave the club about midnight for another nightclub, and the man offered Anselma a ride in his brown pickup. Friends agreed to meet the two at the next club, but according to police reports, the two never arrived and the girl has not been seen since.

"We have not had any calls about the girl, and it has been over a month since her disappearance," Capt. Davis said.

"It is very unlikely that a girl like Anselma Saiz would leave a place with a man she did not know. In fact, we learned that she had a boyfriend in Las Vegas, N.M. that she intended to marry," Capt. Davis said.

Miss Saiz is originally from Anton Chico, N.M., and her parents, still living there, have hired Lopez of Albuquerque to trace their daughter's steps April 25.

"I do feel that there is foul play in the case at this point," Lopez said.

"We know that there were two men, Timothy and Marion, and a couple, Linda and Dennis, from Pampa at the nightclub the evening of April 25. They all talked to the Saiz group and saw the man who gave Anselma Saiz a ride," Lopez said today.

The two girls with Anselma, Suzanne Saiz and her friend took Linda and Dennis, Timothy and Marion back to Pampa later in the evening on April 25, Lopez said.

"We have been back to Pampa but the two girls have been unable to locate the home again. However, the girls do remember that Linda and Dennis planned to get married on June 4 in a Pampa park," Lopez said.

"I am working hard to find the four Pampa persons because they saw the man who gave Anselma Saiz a ride that night and they talked to him. If I can find them, we can at least get a composite sketch of the man," Lopez said.

Anselma Saiz had been working at the Levi Strauss Company in Amarillo for three years, and the people there regarded Anselma highly. They said she was a good worker and always came to work. She was not the kind who would take off with a man from a nightclub," Lopez said.

Anselma told her sister during the evening on April 25 she would like to go home, but this one man just kept bothering her," Lopez said.

Burned youth files suit against Laketon Processing for $500,000

A 9-year-old Oklahoma boy, severely burned when he fell into a grease pit two years ago, has filed a $500,000 negligence suit against Laketon Processing, a rendering business 19 miles east of Pampa, in 223rd District Court here today.

The complainants in the suit, received today by the District Clerk's office, lists the complainants as Derek Earl Holder, and his mother, Linda Elaine Holder, both of Oklahoma.

The boy is asking $400,000 in damages for his mental and physical pain, and for the progressive and disfiguring injuries to his body.

Separately, Mrs. Holder is asking $70,000 in reimbursement of medical

Brady suffers grand mal seizure

WASHINGTON (AP) — James S. Brady, President Reagan's press secretary who was wounded when Reagan was shot March 30, had a major seizure in his hospital room today, deputy press secretary Larry Speakes announced.

The seizure, known as a "grand mal seizure," was treated with intravenous medication and anesthesia, Speakes said.

Brady had been receiving anti-seizure medication.

Maynard case to go to jury

Defense and prosecuting attorneys were presenting closing arguments to the jury today in the 31st District Court trial of Preston Wayne Maynard accused in the Dec. 10 shooting death of his wife, Shirley Louise.

After four days of testimony the case is expected to go to the nine-man, three-woman jury after 1 p.m. today.

Maynard was charged with first degree murder on Dec. 11 while recovering in an Amarillo hospital from a gunshot wound to his knee.

Mrs. Maynard was found Dec. 10 in the couple's mobile home lying on the sofa with a gunshot wound to her chest. Maynard was found lying next to his wife on the floor.

Gray County deputies entered the Maynard home forcefully after receiving a tip from a Lipscomb County deputy that all was not right at the home.

and doctor bills, resulting from the accident, and $30,000 for future medical expenses.

The civil suit alleges Joseph J. Janousek and Carl Ellis Holder, doing business as Laketon Processing, were negligent for the following reasons:

—No warning signs were posted near a concrete grease pit, sunk at floor level into the floor of the building.

—No barriers were erected around the pit of near-boiling grease.

—In failing to provide a safe place for persons to walk around the grease pit.

The suit also charges that the two men "knew" or "should have known" that the grayish-colored grease pit presented an unexpected or concealed hazard to persons walking near it because of the color being almost the same as the color of the surrounding concrete.

On Aug. 18, 1979, Derek Holder, then 7, was walking out of the building when he fell into a pit about four feet by five feet, containing near-boiling grease from animal by-products.

The boy suffered first- to third-degree burns over 60 percent of his body, the suit says.

The negligence suit says the boy suffered "profound mental and nervous shock," in addition, to severe damage to his muscles, tendons, ligaments, blood vessels, soft tissues, bony structure and nerve centers of his body.

As a result of the burns, Derek Holder will suffer excruciating mental and physical pain for the rest of his life, the suit says.

The Holders are being represented by Daniel K. Zorn, an attorney from Oklahoma City.

Torrijos funeral, then power fight

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — The funeral of strongman Omar Torrijos Tuesday is expected to launch a period of intense political maneuvering to decide the control of Panama. There was no clear indication yet of the outcome. Torrijos, 52, and six companions were killed Friday when their small, twin-engine plane slammed into a cloud-shrouded mountain 60 miles west of Panama City. For the time being, his successor as commander of the national guard, Col. Florencio Flores, appeared to be in control. Thousands lined up during the night to file past the bier of the cigar-smoking, pistol-packing general who had ruled Panama since a military coup in 1968 and concluded the treaty that will end U.S. control of the Panama Canal by the end of the century.

A government spokesman announced that Cuban President Fidel Castro was expected to attend the state funeral Tuesday. The United States also planned to send a delegation, but there was no indication of its makeup yet. In a move toward limited democracy in 1978, Torrijos chose Aristides Royo, 41, as president. But it was clear, despite the general's repeated denials, that as commander of the all-powerful national guard, the nation's military and police force, he remained the kingpin and de facto prime minister. The government was not ready for this and neither was the opposition. The country is not ready for this, said Foreign Minister Jorge Illueca. Key national guard and government officials met Saturday and chose Flores, Torrijos' second-in-command as chief of staff of the guard, to succeed him.

It looks like Flores will have no trouble running the show until after they bury Torrijos, and then we might see the opposition make a real run for more say in the government, said a foreign diplomat who asked not to be identified. Little is known of the colonel, who at 50 is the oldest active guard officer. But he is considered a moderate and concerned about politics, although a military man primarily. After being named to replace Torrijos, he told Royo: "We want you to continue serving the government and the democratic cause of the nation." It was not clear whether Flores and Royo would compete for Torrijos' power. But it appears certain there will be competition from increasingly vocal opposition factions, which in recent months were pushing for a new constitution.

Rocket attack follows striker's death

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Rioters and IRA guerrillas attacks security forces in Roman Catholic areas of Northern Ireland and a British soldier lost both legs in a rocket attack following the eighth death in the Irish Republican Army's hunger strike. But the violence in response to the death of hunger striker Kieran Doherty Sunday night, like that early Saturday after the starvation death of Kevin Lynch, was markedly less intense than the riots triggered by the first deaths in the five-month-old fast. A police spokesman said the violence was "not much worse than any Saturday night." The lack of widespread, prolonged rioting indicated that the hunger strike to force the British government to treat imprisoned nationalist guerrillas as political prisoners has lost much of its emotional impact on the province's 500,000 Catholics. This decrease in support follows a string of denunciations of the fast by the church hierarchy and a growing belief that the British government will make no concessions to those convicted as terrorists and criminals. However, security forces were prepared for more violence today following Lynch's funeral at Dungiven, his hometown 45 miles northwest of Belfast. The IRA's image was not helped by the killing of two policemen Sunday in a landmine ambush west of Belfast that wounded two other members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary. Irish Prime Minister Garret FitzGerald in a statement expressing regret for Doherty's death denounced the outlawed guerrilla army for the "murder" of the police officers and said: "This deplorable act brings only further disgrace on the organization which carried it out." Meanwhile, Sinn Fein, the legal political arm of the IRA, said 25-year-old Liam McCloskey would join the hunger strike today as a replacement for Lynch, and another prisoner would take Doherty's place.

Royal wedding still tourist attraction

LONDON (AP) — Five days after Prince Charles married Lady Di, the royal wedding is still London's premier tourist attraction. Tens of thousands stroll each day along the route of the wedding procession, looking at the decorations that still adorn store windows and taking pictures of each other beneath the flowers and banners still hanging from lampposts. The strollers snarled up traffic worse than usual Sunday along Fleet Street and the Strand. "It's absolutely miserable," said one cabbie stopped by the throng crossing in front of his taxi. Tourists are filing through St. Paul's Cathedral, where Charles and Diana exchanged their vows on Wednesday, at the rate of 30,000 a day. They stand patiently in a line two and three across, stretching two-thirds of the way around Sir Christopher Wren's massive edifice, sometimes in pouring rain. "We are overwhelmed," said the registrar of St. Paul's, Cmdr. Charles Shears. "It's really taken us by surprise. Between 4 p.m. on Wednesday and Saturday afternoon, we've had at least 100,000 visitors." The number is far more than the cathedral staff can handle. The whispering gallery and the crypt are closed. The stock of souvenir pamphlets is nearly depleted. For the first three days after the wedding, the registrar said the royal couple signed was on display. Sightseers could look at it for five seconds for 55 cents.

It was moved to St. James's Palace, and the bride's bouquet is at Westminster Cathedral. "There's really nothing left to see," said a verger, trying to discourage the crowds at the cathedral door. But they were happy just to see where it happened. The lines Sunday included a group of scouts from Germany, nuns from Hertfordshire, disabled people from Stoke Mandeville Hospital at Aylesbury, outside London, and loads of tourists from Japan, France, Sweden and the United States. "To be honest, I shall be glad when it's all over," said the registrar. "But with the school holidays here, this could go on for weeks."

DDT contamination of Rio Grande Valley water supplies puzzles scientists

DALLAS (AP) — A puzzling contamination of drinking water, supplies with a highly toxic pesticide banned from use nine years ago poses a serious threat to public health in at least a dozen far South Texas towns, a scientist said.

Tests funded by the Environmental Protection Agency found higher than acceptable levels of DDT in drinking water, soil, streams, bays and fish in a wide area of Texas' agriculturally rich Lower Rio Grande Valley, the Dallas Morning News reported in a copyright story Sunday.

Scientists who disagree about the source of the pollution told the newspaper they are concerned about the hazard and puzzled by fresh contamination from a pesticide banned in 1972 and which by now should have broken down into its less dangerous components.

A recently completed study, commissioned two years ago by the Lower Rio Grande Valley Development Council with an EPA grant, found an increase of DDT concentrations, including significantly higher-than-acceptable levels in the Rio Grande where most valley towns get their drinking water.

Pesticide levels in drinking water at McAllen, Mission, Edinburg, Harlingen, Brownsville and several smaller valley towns were found to exceed those the National Technical Information Service said "may result in incremental increase of cancer risk over a lifetime," the newspaper said.

The report, compiled by Black & Vetch Consulting Engineers of Dallas, indicated DDT levels are 80 times higher than the one part per billion level the EPA has set as acceptable in drinking water.

"I consider this to be rather high DDT contamination. I interpret this as a significant threat to public health, not merely undesirable," said Robert J. Edwards, professor of biology at Pan American University in Edinburg.

The council's Environmental Committee chairman, Ersel Lantz of Brownsville, said he believes the DDT contamination resulted from its continued use in nearby Mexico despite that nation's ban of the pesticide eight years ago.

"It washes off their crops and into the rivers and runs into the Rio Grande," said Lantz. "Our irrigators pump that water and spread it all over the valley."

Others said the DDT, outlawed by the EPA after a number of deaths and long-term health problems were attributed to the pesticide, was smuggled into South Texas from Mexico and Central America and used on crops in the valley.

But others, including Black & Vetch scientists, believe the DDT may have seeped from abandoned pesticide plants and storage facilities.

Black & Vetch scientists say the highest concentrations of the fresh DDT are near the headwaters of the Arroyo Colorado, a stream that winds through miles of citrus groves and vegetable fields from near Mission to the estuaries of the Laguna Madre between Padre Island and the Gulf coast.

Farmers expressed doubted theories about smuggled DDT, saying growers consider it almost useless because insects have developed a tolerance for the once-popular pesticide.

J. Cuahuathemec Bernal, a Mexican farmers' union official, denied the contamination stemmed from Mexico and said farmers there have a universal dislike for the pesticide they consider ineffective.

Plastic heart recipient dies despite having human organ

HOUSTON (AP) — Willebrordus A. Meuffels lost his second chance at life to the "overwhelming complications" of three radical operations, but surgeons say the Dutchman's endurance offers promise of an artificial heart to a handful of patients without other hope.

Meuffels, 36, died Sunday, almost 10 days after Dr. Denton Cooley connected him to the artificial heart that sustained him for 54 hours, and a week after surgeons replaced the plastic pump with a human heart.

"We're terribly saddened by Mr. Meuffels' death. But with this sadness comes the realization that the artificial heart opens new promise for 3 percent of those 'last-ditch' heart patients who can't be helped by conventional methods," said Hazel Haby, a spokeswoman for the Texas Heart Institute.

She said surgeons at the institute were convinced that the artificial heart, a small plastic pump connected to wires and tubes outside the body, had served its purpose.

"The artificial heart was meant to be used as an interim device, to keep the patient alive until a donor heart can be found. It worked on Mr. Meuffels, and it worked on all," Ms. Haby said.

Cooley, a heart transplant pioneer, said he implanted the plastic pump in Meuffels' chest because his patient — whose own heart failed following a triple-bypass operation — "deserved a second chance at life."

The retired tour bus driver from The Netherlands survived longer than either of the two previous patients to receive an artificial heart.

He had been hooked up to a respirator to assist his breathing, a dialysis machine to aid his weakened kidneys, and was kept heavily sedated until his death.

"There were just a lot of overwhelming complications. He had endured three major operations in little more than a week. The odds just kept mounting and his body just couldn't take anymore," said Ms. Haby.

Neither Cooley nor the patient's wife was at the hospital at the time of death. Cooley was not available for comment Sunday.

Since his ordeal began July 23, Meuffels had survived a diseased heart that became "completely lifeless" following triple-bypass surgery, two transplant operations, more than two days on the artificial heart and overcame a blood-clotting problem.

"He developed kidney problems three days ago and was hooked up to a dialysis machine. We were never able to wean him off the respirator and let his lungs take over. He also had been given a lot of drugs to prevent his body from rejecting the donor heart but that weakened his body's defenses against infection," said Ms. Haby.

The use of a plastic device to replace the entire heart has been tried only twice before, first by Cooley in 1969, and then last August in Argentina in a patient who died 15 hours later.

The artificial device, an electronically controlled twin chambered device, was first implanted in a dog in 1957 and since has been tested in hundreds of calves.

Meuffels lived longer than either of the other two artificial heart patients, but did not hold the record for length of time on a plastic pump.

In Cooley's first try 12 years ago, the patient, Haskell Karp, of Skokie, Ill., lived 65 hours on the device and then died 36 hours after receiving a human heart.

The controversy that surrounded that first attempt interrupted use of the artificial heart for more than a decade and brought Cooley under fire from the National Heart Institute and Karp's survivors.

His former mentor, Dr. Michael DeBakey, also complained the device was used prematurely and argued it was unethical to "experiment" on a human being.

When Cooley decided to try the artificial heart again, the device sustained Meuffels until the heart of a 27-year-old Tennessee man who died of irreversible brain damage, could be transplanted into Meuffels' chest.

The new heart functioned well, said Ms. Haby. Doctors reported last Tuesday that Meuffels was responding to doctors' commands to move his arms and legs.

"We were optimistic then," she said. "There had been some concern that he might have suffered brain damage when he had the massive heart attack (the blood) flow to the brain was cut off for almost 45 minutes," Ms. Haby said.

"So when he understood and responded to verbal commands everyone was fairly optimistic that there would be minimal damage," she said.

Ms. Haby said hospital officials had "no idea" of the cost of the operations and use of more than 500 doctors, nurses and technicians.

Each Texan's share of state debt: $1,397

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Not many Texans know that if they had to pay their share of the state's public debt it would cost them $1,397.

That's the latest figure from the Municipal Advisory Council of Texas, based on its research through Jan. 1, 1980.

"The public debt, at $19.8 billion, represents an increase of 187.22 percent over the past 10 years, an average annual increase of 18.72 percent," said Danny Burger, executive director of the non-profit trade association that represents Texas dealers who handle bonds issued by the state and its political subdivisions.

The public debt outstanding, according to 1980 figures, shows that state agencies and state senior colleges owe $2.25 billion, cities owe $7 billion, school and junior college districts owe $3.9 billion, county and road districts owe $788 million and special districts and authorities owe $5.8 billion.

"Obviously, that while the public debt in Texas is moderate (compared with other states), it is no small sum," said Burger.

Burger said his association is the only place where statistics are gathered concerning public indebtedness, mainly for association members who are municipal bond dealers, including numerous banks.

The state has no central agency for issuance of bonds. Burger said his agency's figures come from the attorney general and comptroller, from credit reports on the 3,500 government units issuing bonds in the state and from staff investigations.

"We don't editorialize," Burger said about the reports issued by his association. "We just publish the figures and let the figures speak for themselves."

"By far and large, Texas cities were the largest single issuer of bonds in the 1970s, at least $6.7 billion, which comprises some 37 percent of new issue financing during the last decade," Burger said.

"However, Texas school districts, as a class of issuer, had outstanding the largest amount of general obligation bonds, amounting to $3.7 billion, or about 42 percent of bonds payable from ad valorem taxes."

Burger noted that several new classes of government units issuing bonds emerged during the past decade, including power agencies, transit authorities, housing finance corporations, higher educational authorities and pollution control bonds issued by special districts.

In 1951, when Texas' total population was 9.7 million, the public debt in Texas was only $3.45 billion. This made the per capita share of the public debt only $354.

By 1980 census, the population had grown to 14.2 million, but the public debt jumped to $19.8 billion. This makes the per capita share $1,397.

The question of whether a bonded debt is excessive depends on the ability of the governmental unit involved to pay, Burger said.

"Obviously Texas is at the top of the list of Sunbelt states in good shape because of increasing populations and increasing personal income," he said.

In looking at the state's 10 largest cities according to the 1960 and 1970 censuses, it generally was apparent that all 10 cities had held steady on their public debt or even had declined, Burger said.

"We are waiting for the 1980 personal income figures to see how they stand now," he said.

Burger said figures so far indicate that taxes are not excessive in the Texas cities because of public indebtedness, when compared with per capita income.

"However," he said, "we have found that where the per capita income is higher, the residents of these cities also expect more from their city governments."

Murder trial's arguments today

HOUSTON (AP) — The story has been marked by irony, twists in the plot, and a cast of characters that rivals anything Hollywood could come up with. And the trial of Markham Duff-Smith — who prosecutors hope will be the final chapter in the tale — has been no less dramatic.

So far, a burly detective has wept in court, and a key defense witness has changed his story and begun testifying for the prosecution while stunned defense lawyers were questioning him.

Duff-Smith, 34, is on trial for allegedly hiring the men who confessed strangling Duff-Smith's mother, Gertrude Zabolio, in 1975. But he also is accused of arranging the 1979 shooting deaths of his sister, Diana Wanstrath, her husband and their 14-month-old son, Kevin.

Prosecutors say Duff-Smith plotted the killings so he could inherit his family's money.

Duff-Smith's attorneys say their client is being framed.

After both sides present final arguments today, jurors will have to decide which to believe.

Prosecutors credit detective Johnny Bonds with breaking both the Wanstrath and Zabolio cases. Both had been closed with official rulings of suicide and murder-suicide.

But Bonds tracked down a hit man and two middlemen who confessed and named Duff-Smith as the "mastermind."

Defense attorneys tried to show that middlemen Walter Waldhauser, a former associate of Duff-Smith, and Florida investor Paul MacDonald had "set up" Duff-Smith to get a "deal" from prosecutors.

But the defense team admitted things did not look good for their side when the prosecution rested Thursday after Bonds wept on the witness stand as he told why he dogged Duff-Smith.

"Because they killed Kevin," the big, normally tough detective sobbed to jurors as the packed gallery watched in silence. "It looked like they were about to get away with it."

NUMB ARMS, LEGS Danger Signals

There may be misalignment of vertebrae in the spine causing pressure on nerves, yet the patient experiences no pain in the back. Instead, a variety of sensations may be felt in other parts of the body. These include tingling, tightness, hot spots, cold spots, crawling sensations, electric shock sensations, stinging, burning, and others.

Here are nine critical symptoms involving back pain or strange sensations which are usually the forerunners of more serious conditions. Any one of these usually spells back trouble.

- (1) Paresthesias (see above)
- (2) Headaches
- (3) Painful joints
- (4) Numbness in the arms or hands
- (5) Loss of sleep
- (6) Stiffness in the neck
- (7) Pain between the shoulders
- (8) Stiffness or pain in lower back
- (9) Numbness or pain in the legs.

These signals indicate that your body is being robbed of normal nerve function. Until this function is restored, you will, in some degree, be incapacitated. The longer you wait to seek help, the worse the condition will become. Don't wait! Should you experience any of these danger signals... call for in depth consultation in Layman's terms.

High court rules public rights first

The U.S. Supreme Court apparently has found no difficulty in deciding between the rights of a religious group and those of the public. It unanimously ruled Hare Krishna may be limited at a state fair in soliciting, despite the sect's assertion that fund raising is a mandatory religious ritual.

Although Associate Justice Byron R. White said in a written opinion that "the First Amendment does not guarantee the right to communicate one's views at all times and places in any manner that may be desired," the court otherwise avoided the prickly religious issues raised by Hare Krishna. Instead, it ruled on the more narrow question of whether the Minnesota State Fair could require all literature sales and distribution and fund raising to be conducted from one of the 1,400 booths on the fairgrounds. The justices said the state needs such authority because unlimited fund solicitation would create problems of crowd control and they emphasized the requirement applied to all fund raisers and not to the Krishnas alone.

Because of free speech concerns, the justices divided, 5 to 4, however, on the constitutionality of restricting to booths the simple distribution of literature where there was no fund raising.

Inasmuch as the decision in this case was confined to the concept of crowd control at a fair, it left unresolved related questions not being litigated in the lower courts concerning the right of airport and shopping center managers to limit solicitation by religious and other groups. The larger issue, of course, concerns the right of individual citizens to be protected from harassment in public places.

Even so, court orders that limit the numbers of Krishnas and define where they may not solicit are now, it would seem, sustained. And through the Minnesota Fair doctrine, we can anticipate greater restrictions on public fund solicitations in the future, especially where crowd control is at stake. This is as it should be. Definite lines should be more closely drawn to protect individual citizens from being plagued for contributions under the cloak of religious freedom.

China - one step back

Mainland China's decision to postpone for yet another year the solicitation of bids from oil companies to begin exploratory drilling in the South China Sea is an indication that China's progress out of the morass of ideology is likely to be slow and sometimes hesitant.

The last few years have seen a number of indications that the era of Maoist ideological fervor was coming to an end. The Little Red Book has virtually disappeared. Mao's widow and the Gang of Four were subjected to a show trial and Hua Guofeng, Mao's designated successor, has been demoted by Deng Xiaoping, who is widely regarded as one of the new pragmatists. Steps have been taken to permit some elements of economic freedom and independence into agriculture and light industry. But China still has a long way to go.

Despite some liberalization, political controls in mainland China remain almost as strict as they have been in the recent past. Half of the Communist Party's 38 million members are people who were recruited during the fervor of the unlamented Red Guard era. Most of Deng Xiaoping's vaunted pragmatists are older people, and the cultural and ideological cast of the younger generation in China remains a question for speculation.

The decision about oil drilling illustrates the ambivalent attitude prevalent among China's leadership about the modernization and industrialization that offer hope for the future. Every invitation to Western industrialists to participate in the remaking of China is followed by a series of barriers that make rapid movement difficult. Part of the problem is technological — many who lived through the cultural revolution were deprived of all but the most rudimentary training, and there is an enormous educational gap. But part of the problem is political — China's leadership is still so powerful and volatile that few people want to take chances. The petroleum ministry was reportedly under close scrutiny from Party officials because of past mistakes, and opted to wait rather than risk making new miscalculations that could cost them their jobs.

There is hope for mainland China under the new pragmatism. But progress is not likely to be as rapid as many enthusiasts have hoped.

Who's exploiting whom?

The Department of Labor wants to eliminate a federal regulation that makes it illegal to do piecework in the garment industry in your home. Congressman George Miller, who is chairman of the House Subcommittee on Labor Standards, is fighting against this easing of the law. The whole flap makes you wonder what the federal government was ever doing involved in this issue.

Sometimes it takes an example with an emotional tug built-in to get laws relaxed. The group that brought this one to a head consisted of women in Vermont who knit sweaters and ski-caps at home for commercial manufacturers. It's a traditional business in Vermont. Most of the women who do it are mothers, and they appreciate being able to be at home when their children come home from school and still earn some extra money. The companies that buy the sweaters are mostly small businesses who would find it hard to stay in business at competitive prices if they had to rent or buy factories big enough to accommodate all the people who now knit at home. So they buy the knitting machines and place them in peoples' homes. It works out well for all concerned.

The Fair Labor Standards Act, however, which was written with big-city garment districts in mind, makes such an arrangement illegal. Forgive us if we can't quite follow the logic of the argument. Those who oppose relaxing the law claim that such action would lead to the proliferation of sweatshops. Now just how letting people work in their homes instead of in sweatshops will lead to more sweatshops is beyond us. But that's what the proponents of maintaining this restrictive law claim.

We suspect that Edgar Romney, an official of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, has let the cat out of the bag, however. If any exception to the strict rule is allowed, says Romney, "it would spread like cancer. You would see a migration of workers from New York up Interstate 91 to Vermont to get the homework."

Ah. And people working in their homes would be difficult to unionize, wouldn't they? They'd also be quite independent of the State, which may be one reason the Labor Department enacted the restriction in the first place.

The rationale for the law is to prevent exploitation, of course, almost all restrictions on worker freedom are justified by their need for protection from exploitation. But it looks to us as if the law is the exploiter in this case. The prohibition on homework that the Labor Department wants to eliminate would force people out of their homes and into sweatshops, not the other way around. More likely, it would eliminate their jobs altogether.

If homework is so attractive that union officials fear a migration if Vermont is permitted to continue permitting it, what does that tell you about where exploitation exists? And what business did the federal government have outlawing homework in the first place, in a country as diverse as this one?

We hope Labor Secretary Donovan stands firm on this one, and revokes the homework ban.

Saving--Individualistic vs. Socialistic

By OSCAR COOLEY

There are two ways of saving money for old age. One is the voluntary individualistic way: each during his earning years saves for himself and loved ones. The other is the compulsory, socialistic way: society's agency, the government, taxes earners and saves for them.

An example of the second is Social Security, and it is that the Social Security system is teetering on the edge of bankruptcy. It will run out of cash some time in 1982.

Why is this monstrous savings system on which millions of old folks depend approaching bankruptcy?

Because it was a grandiose, centralized scheme to start with. And it was founded on socialistic, not individualistic, thrift.

Founded in 1935, Social Security was sold to the American people as a plan for taking a small amount from each worker's paycheck and stashing it away in a "trust fund," to be invested in U.S. government bonds. Presumably it would be held intact, the interest compounding until the worker retired at 65. Then this accumulated hoard would be drawn upon to give him a monthly payment, or benefit, hopefully large enough for him to live for the rest of his life.

What a beautiful scheme! FDR made it sound like utopia, finally arrived for the deserving aged. But what seemed like utopia did not prove to resemble that much-touted fairyland.

In the first place, the trust fund was not what it seemed. The money taxed from each earner and supposedly saved for him was not saved at all. It was spent by Washington, almost as fast as it came in, to pay benefits to those who had already retired. The Social Security Administration was in business. It got an income by taxing payrolls, and it had an outgo in the form of benefit payments to retirees.

At first the taxes added up to more than the benefits, and so the trust fund grew, but the retirees (and other beneficiaries) increased rapidly. So Congress had to keep increasing the rate of tax on the earners.

Being generous — politically — Congress also boasted the benefits and added new ones. Social Security was not only in business but in big business.

Guess which, the income or the outgo, increased most rapidly. Right! The outgo. The early benefits were a paltry few dollars per month. Now they run to hundreds and are indexed upward every July 1. And there's no pretense of basing them on need.

Not only the benefits but the beneficiaries multiplied. The tax increases could not keep up without provoking a rebellion. So the "trust fund" became downright untrustworthy. It shrank and it shrank, until Realist Reagan has to tell us that in about a year it will disappear. Then what?

He has hinted that the rate of benefit will have to be reduced, and maybe the age of retirement raised. That will not be popular with the recipients. The taxes, too, will have to be raised again. Already, about 13 percent of the national payroll goes into Social Security, says Ross McKenzie, a fellow columnist. That will not arouse a cheer of enthusiasm from the taxpayers.

McKenzie would make the thing voluntary, or partly so. He would require everybody to get under some retirement umbrella, private if not public. And he would nudge the high earners to "shop for a better system" than Social Security — that is, a private system.

Compulsory saving should never have been adopted. The people who did it had more compassion than comprehension. Human nature has turned Social Security into a common trough into which everybody wants to put his forefeet.

Interestingly, Social Security has its counterpart in Canada and other countries. In all of them it is a bust.

Individual thrift is difficult and painful, but it works. Saving is present sacrifice for future enjoyment. Let each sacrifice as much or as little as he chooses, and let each also enjoy according to his own choice. That does not equalize — but it maximizes. And the books always balance.

Today in history

Today is Monday, Aug. 3, the 215th day of 1980. There are 150 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history: On Aug. 3, 1492, Christopher Columbus set sail from Spain on an expedition that resulted in the European discovery of America.

On this date: In 1675, the French defeated Dutch and Spanish fleets in the Bay of Palermo and took the island of Sicily.

In 1780, during the American Revolution, Benedict Arnold was put in command of the fortifications at West Point, N.Y.

In 1951, it was disclosed that 60 cadets at the U.S. military academy at West Point had been dismissed for cheating.

And in 1973, the Justice Department ordered a new investigation into the deaths of four Kent State University students. The four had been gunned down by Ohio National Guardsmen during an anti-war protest three years earlier.

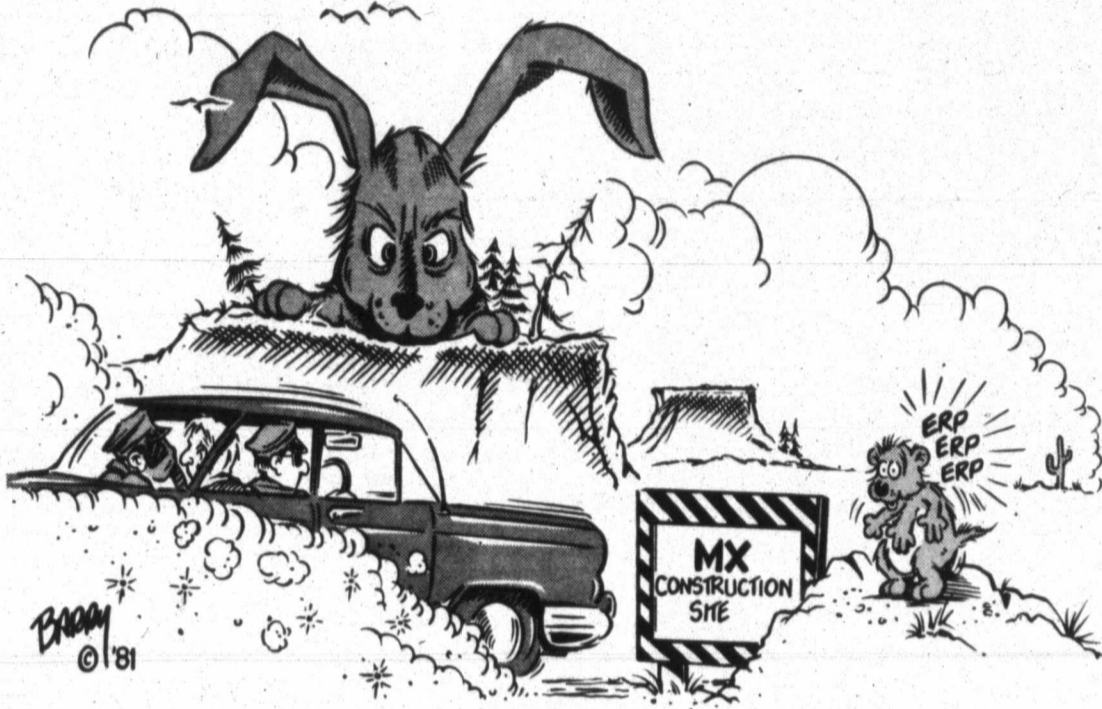

Ten years ago: Cuba closed its embassy in Madrid because of a deadlock in trade talks with Spain.

Five years ago: the death toll from the mysterious "Legionnaires disease" rose to 20 in Pennsylvania, as doctors intensified their search to identify the cause of the illness.

One year ago: Hurricane Allen, stormed across Barbados, downing power lines, causing widespread flooding and forcing hundreds to head for shelters.

Today's birthdays: singer Tony Bennett is 55 years old. Actor Martin Sheen is 41.

Thought for today: Life is like an onion; you peel it off one layer at a time, and sometimes you weep — author Carl Sandburg (1878-1967).

"RELAX, GENERAL—THERE IS NO HARD EVIDENCE TO PROVE THAT RADIOACTIVITY FROM THE A-BOMB TESTING IS STILL ACTIVE IN THESE SOILS..."

Who'll hold the high ground

By PAUL HARVEY
The United States is presently preparing for "star wars."
We have to.
There is no way American mothers can bear enough boys babies to police this planet with bayonets. We will rely on technology — or perish.

I remain convinced that the awesome atom bomb was entrusted by an all-wise Almighty first to our six percent fraction of the planet's population — not for our destruction — but for our deliverance.

It, in its time, cut the limitless hordes of Asia down to our size.
The man power equation remains stacked against us.

But again technology can come to our rescue.
Israel's recent strike against a nuclear installation in Iraq has demonstrated the modern weaponry can neutralize modern weaponry.

For better or worse, right or wrong, Israel's anti-proliferation policy is effective.

Upstairs — while the United States has concentrated on such scientific achievements as interplanetary exploration and Moon landings — the Soviets have concentrated on developing orbiting satellites with strategic military potential.

Our Army's Gen. Dan Graham, director of our Defense Intelligence Agency during the '70s, expects that as surely as Britain dominated the seven seas for two centuries, the airless ocean of overhead space will be dominated by a nation — or a consortium of nations.

He wants to be sure that we are among the dominators.

Presently the Soviets figure they can pin down our Titan and Minuteman missiles by orbiting two warheads for every one we have on the ground.

But, Gen. Graham computes, we can upset their arithmetic with a space-born ABM system which will catch Soviet missiles "on the rise."

In Gen. Graham's view, such an ABM system would restore American military superiority over the U.S.S.R. — and reduce the incentive on both sides to accumulate more and more enormously costly nuclear weapons.

The general adds that this would also be much more effective.

Feather bedding

By ANTHONY HARRIGAN
Excessive labor costs constitute the No. 1 problem for the nation as it seeks to restore lost productivity and regain markets for its goods, both domestic and foreign.

Over the years, wages in many industries and public organizations have been pushed up to artificial levels. Featherbedding has become a way of life.

The railroads are a classic case of an industry where union featherbedding has done terrible damage.

Currently, Americans are concerned about the high cost of transportation. Airline fares have shot up in the last year or so. The Air Line Pilots Association is waging a furious battle, however, against new airlines that pay pilots less than $50,000 a year.

AMTRAK, which provides an important alternative transportation system, can't maintain existing routes because it is compelled by the rail unions to hire more people than it needs. The "Passenger Train Journal" recently reported that AMTRAK has to hire three complete train crews for the seven-hour run between Pittsburgh and Philadelphia. One may say: What a way to run a railroad! But the rail management isn't at fault. To date, Congress has declined to break up the union monopoly that imposes unreasonable costs on the industry and the country as a whole.

In recent weeks, the public has heard a great deal about the near-collapse of the public transit system in the Chicago area. Unfortunately, the American people hear few of the details about excessive wages in the Chicago Transit Authority.

Jack Mabley, a columnist for the Chicago Tribune, recently reported some of the shocking details in an interview with Dr. Henry Lowenstein, a University of Illinois professor who specializes in transit problems.

Dr. Lowenstein reported that the CTA is loaded with patronage jobs, saying that "The CTA has 14 persons listed as management interns." They average $28,000 a year. When you think of an intern, you think of a student with a low pay summer job who is getting experience. At the CTA, Dr. Lowenstein said, one "intern" has been there since 1964. He adds that one of the chauffeurs makes between $40,000 and $50,000 a year.

All sorts of public and quasi-public organizations have a featherbedding problem and a problem with excessive pay for employees. The federal government long has paid wages above those paid by private industry. Excessive wages paid postal workers, who haven't increased their productivity in years, are a case in point.

Once excessive wages are built into an organization, it is hard to bring them down to reasonable levels without considerable disruption and agitation. One way to move, therefore, is to dismantle as many publicly-financed organizations as possible. This is the recommendation of Dr. Lowenstein with respect to the Chicago Transit Authority.

"If the government can't operate mass transit any more efficiently than the private sector can," he said, "it should get out of the business. Maybe we should go to contracting out for mass transportation."

With funds in short supply, there's pressure on to squeeze waste out of all sorts of systems, both public and private. The recent actions of the Congress on budget issues show that support for cutbacks can be mobilized and become effective. The effort must be made at the state and local levels as well.

Spear sausages for summer supper

With summer comes a welcome boost for simple and economical meals. Quick and easy combinations that rate as routine indoor fare are greeted with cheers when given special outdoor treatment.

For instance, with a little imagination, everyday sausage can become an eating adventure. Take the combination of frankfurters and - or other sausage with carrots and potatoes. Sound like another routine family supper? Not when the meat and vegetables are threaded on skewers, glazed with a sweet and sour sauce and broiled on the grill!

In this recipe, both smoked sausage links and frankfurters are skewered along with canned whole potatoes, pre-cooked carrots and either dill pickles or cherry peppers, depending on family preference. The carrots and potatoes are deliciously flavored as they are marinated in a sweet and sour mixture made with the liquid from either dill pickles or sweet peppers.

The cured meats also take on the marinade's perky flavor as they are broasted along with the vegetables during broiling. Since all the foods on the skewers are fully cooked, the broiling time is brief, just long enough for all to heat through and to pick up that marvelous charcoal flavor.

This kabob supper can be just the inspiration needed for making a variety of budget meals in similar fashion. Try substituting other fully-cooked sausage such as Polish sausage, thuringer or bratwurst. You might also like to try a variety of vegetables, remembering to precook those with longer cooking times.

SKEWERED SAUSAGE SUPPER

- 1 package (12 ounces) smoked sausage links
- 1 package (1 pound) frankfurters, cut in half
- 8 small carrots, cut

- in thirds
- 1-3 cup dill pickle or mild cherry pepper liquid
- 1-3 cup sugar
- 1/4 cup water
- 2 tablespoons chopped green pepper
- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- 2 cans (16 ounces each) whole potatoes, drained
- 8 pieces dill pickles or mild cherry peppers
- Paprika

Cook carrots in boiling salted water until just tender. Drain 1-3 cup liquid from dill pickles or mild cherry peppers and combine with sugar, water, green pepper and salt; cook slowly for 10 minutes, stirring to dissolve sugar.

Place carrots, potatoes and marinade in plastic bag or bowl. Tie bag securely or cover bowl and marinate in refrigerator 4 hours (or overnight).

Remove carrots and potatoes from marinade; reserve marinade. Alternately thread on each of 8 metal skewers: 1 smoked sausage link, 2 pieces frankfurter, 3 pieces carrot and an eighth of the potatoes. Place a piece of dill pickle or a cherry pepper on each skewer.

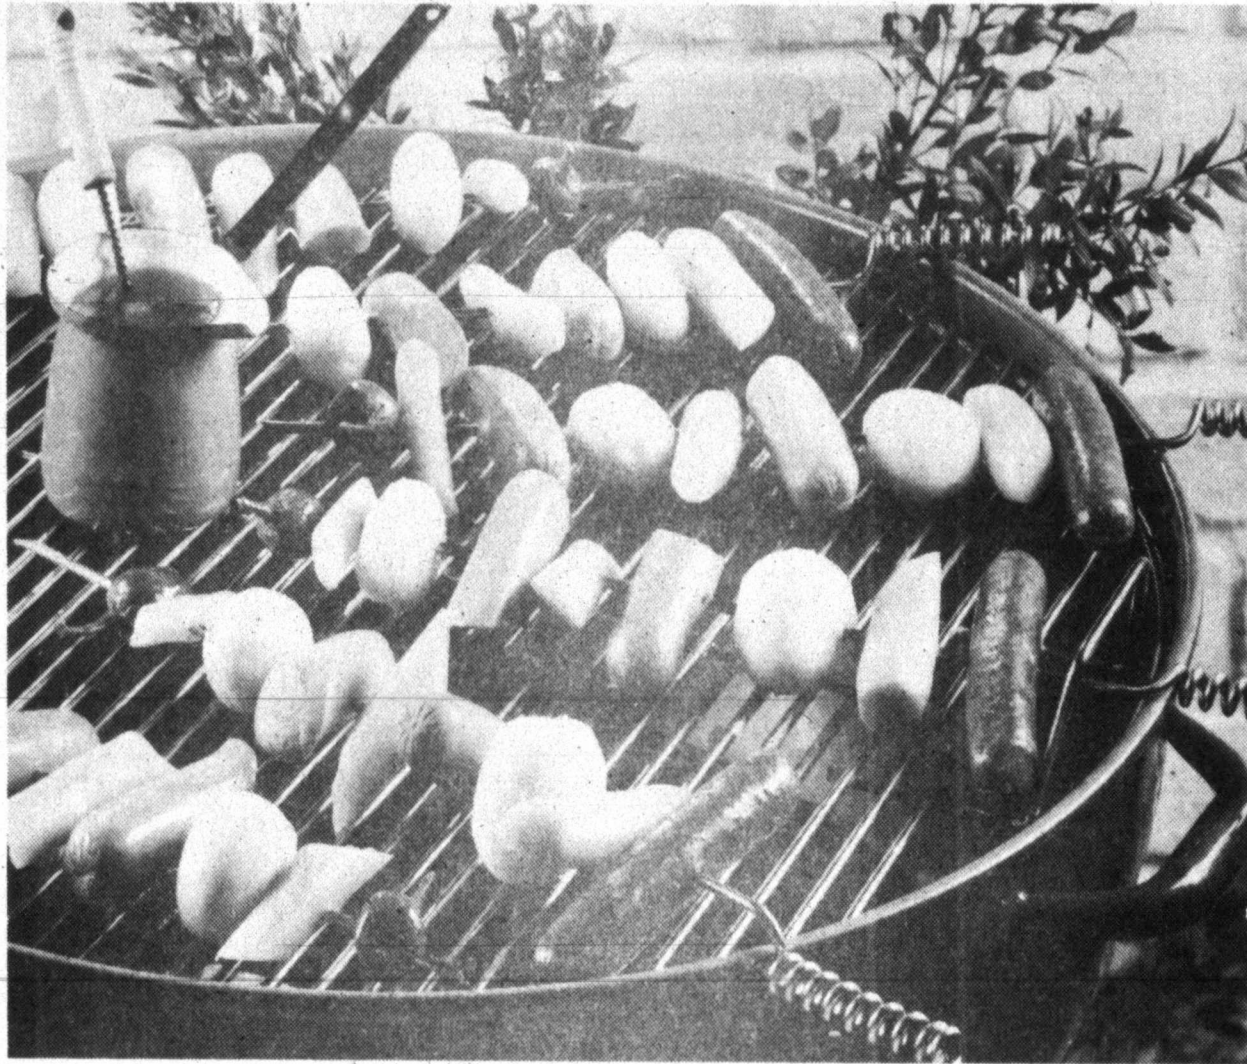

Place kabobs on grill 3 to 4 inches from heat and broil at moderate temperature 7 to 8 minutes, turning and brushing with marinade occasionally. Makes 8 servings.

With meat, potatoes and vegetables all secured on the skewers, only a salad is needed to round out the main course. Cool gelatin salads are always welcome on warm summer days, and a cherry gelatin mold studded with pineapple chunks will be no exception. For a dessert the whole family will appreciate, serve squares of yellow cake topped with a chocolate butter cream frosting.

Dear Abby

Girl can't cope with parents' alcoholism

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am a 12-year-old girl with a problem I can't talk to anybody about, and it's getting worse. I'm the oldest of three children. We live in a nice house in a nice neighborhood. We aren't poor and we aren't rich either. Mom works part time as a nurse, and Dad works every day except weekends — and that's when the trouble starts. Dad starts drinking on Friday night and he stays drunk all weekend.

When he's drunk he gets mean to Mom, and there's so much yelling and fighting I'm afraid the neighbors will hear it.

Now Mom has started to drink with him, and she even drinks during the daytime when she's home. When Dad comes home and she's been drinking, they have a big fight. I'm afraid they are going to get a divorce. I'm ashamed to have my friends over, and I don't want to go anywhere when my parents are drinking because I worry about my brother, who's 9, and my sister, who's 6.

What can I do, Abby? Don't tell me to try to talk some sense into them. Who would listen to a 12-year-old kid? ASHAMED IN INDIANAPOLIS

DEAR ASHAMED: You are not alone. There are more kids with your problem than you know. I recently read an excellent little book titled, "The Secret Everyone Knows." Its author, Cathleen Brooks, grew up with alcoholic parents and knows what a child must do in order to survive in that environment. She explains alcoholism for the disease it is and tells kids how to deal with drinking parents and where to get help in their own communities. It's not only for children. A 40-year-old friend told me that her father had died 22 years ago of chronic alcoholism, and after reading this little book much of the anger, hostility and shame she had harbored over the years was greatly reduced.

It's available by writing to: Operation Cork, 8939 Villa La Jolla, San Diego, Calif. 92037. If you can send $1 to cover cost of mailing, please do, as it is a non-profit organization. If you don't have the dollar, the organization will send one free.

DEAR ABBY: A follow-up to Donna in the lost-and-found-department of Eastern Airlines in Seattle: It's a good idea to put I.D. tags on all your luggage, inside and out, but here's another suggestion:

Put your destination address instead of your home address in the I.D. holders. That way, should your luggage be lost, misdirected or delayed, when located it will be sent to where you are, not where you were! REILLY, ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.

DEAR REILLY: Smart move rather than depending on the luck o' the Irish.

DEAR ABBY: A 7-year-old boy wrote to say he wanted a dog, but his mother said no. He asked for your help in persuading his mother to change her mind, and all he got from you was a long lecture on what it meant to be a responsible pet owner. You asked him who was going to feed the dog, walk the dog and clean up any messes it might make. That made sense.

But how come you asked a 7-year-old kid who was going to pay for the dog license, regular examinations at the vet, shots and the cost of having the dog spayed or neutered? I want to know how you figure a child that age can come up with that kind of money? CURIOUS IN FORT DODGE, IOWA

DEAR CURIOUS: I didn't expect the boy to come up with the money. I mentioned it to let every kid who wants a dog know that it costs money to be a responsible pet owner, and while dogs need trees — money doesn't grow on them!

Problems? You'll feel better if you get them off your chest. Write to Abby: 12060 Hawthorne Blvd., Suite 5000, Hawthorne, Calif. 90250. For a personal reply, please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Well-established farmers fare well, report says

WASHINGTON (AP) — A team of Agriculture Department economists has come up with a computerized profile of 100 farming situations intended to show how the family farm is faring. Generally, it fares better with less debt.

The report, "Economic Well-Being of Farms," was sent to Congress recently as required by the Food and Agriculture Act of 1977. Put bluntly, it says the bigger, well-established farmers are having a fairly easy time of making ends meet, while the younger, debt-carrying producer is having it tough.

What the economists did was to use information in computer banks to design 20 farming situations involving the major types and geographic locations of U.S. agriculture.

Then they took five combinations of financial equity and tenure of the operator and applied those to each situation to come up with 100 "illustrative farm situations" used in the analysis.

"These 100 situations may not represent actual farms, but they describe realistic approximations," the report said.

The financial strength of the farms was based on their ability to generate enough cash to meet all current expenses and provide a $12,000 allowance for family living, plus a depreciation fund to replace farm machinery and equipment.

Using 1979 prices, production and other factors in developing the analysis, the report included these observations:

— "Owner-operated farms generally fare better than tenant-run farms and farms that are owned only partly by the operator because of the owner's potential for capital gains on land ownership. — "Farms where the operators own the land and equipment debt-free generally fare better than farms where the operator must make annual interest and principal payments on debts.

— "Pests, disease, low prices, poor management and small size can hamper the productivity and profitability of individual farms. But tenure and equity seem to be factors that apply to farms in general."

According to the analysis, full owners who have 100 percent equity are at the top of the heap. Those are "usually long-established farmers who own all their land free of debt and all their machinery and livestock."

Part owners with a 67 percent equity also are financially sound. They own half the land they operate and rent the rest. They own all their machinery and livestock but have an outstanding debt equal to one-third of the value of their owned assets.

Another category that is in good shape financially is the tenant farmer who has a 50 percent equity. He rents all the land but owns the machinery and livestock. However, he has a 50 percent debt on the machinery and livestock.

"Full owners with a 50 percent equity are in a rather weak financial condition," the report said. "They represent farmers who have recently expanded or are expanding aggressively. They own all their land, equipment and livestock, but with outstanding debts equal to half the total value of the farm."

Their vulnerability is due to the large and stable cash flow they need to meet their debt repayments."

But the farmers who are worst off are tenants who own but a 25 percent equity in their operations.

"They are usually beginning farmers who rent all the land they operate, own their livestock and machinery, and have debts that amount to three-fourths of the value of their livestock and machinery," the report said.

All but 30 of the 100 "farms" were able to generate enough cash to cover all cash-flow requirements. Of those, eight were able to meet their farm cash expenses and provide $12,000 for family living but could not set aside money to meet depreciation expenses.

Nineteen were able to meet farm cash expenses but could not provide $12,000 for family living; three were unable even to meet their cash farm expenses.

Single free copies of the report — "Economic Well-Being of Farms" AER-469 — are available from: ERS Publications, Room 0054-S, USDA, Washington, D.C. 20251.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Agriculture Department says "there's good news for food buyers in August: growers are expecting record plum, nectarine, lime, peach and Bartlett pear crops."

Also in "plentiful" supply this month, says the department's Agricultural Marketing Service, are lemons, raisins, dried prunes, eggs, broilers, turkeys, milk and other dairy products, rice, dry beans and dry peas.

The agency defines plentiful as "more than enough to meet requirements." If an item is described as adequate, the supply is "enough to meet normal needs." And if it is in light supply the commodity is "less than adequate, not enough for normal needs."

Beef and pork in August will be in adequate supply, the agency said in its monthly report.

Weekly beef production will be about the same as last year, but will fall about 6 percent short of the 1978-80 average for August. Pork output is expected to decline even more than its seasonal slump, averaging 6 to 8 percent below a year ago and 4 to 6 percent less than the 1978-80 average for August.

FBI looks at trouble on boat

NEW BEDFORD, Mass. (AP) — A day of trouble aboard a Texas-based fishing boat during which the Coast Guard said the captain allegedly was threatened by crew members with knives and clubs is under investigation by the FBI.

Lawrence Sarhatt, special agent in charge of the FBI's Boston office, said no charges had been filed and no one has been taken into custody in connection with the incident aboard the 75-foot Miss Suni Suzanne. The FBI took jurisdiction of the case under the crime on the high seas statute.

The fishing boat was approximately 70 miles east of Chatham when the trouble broke out Saturday. Coast Guard Petty Officer Carolyn Feldman said.

The vessel was escorted by a Coast Guard cutter into New Bedford at 6:50 a.m. Sunday. Later in the day, the New Bedford Fire Department found the scalloper sinking and kept it afloat, and District Fire Chief Thomas Spence said. "It appears that someone tried to sink the boat."

When the cutter Point Turner and the fishing boat docked, conflicting stories on what had happened were given to reporters.

The Coast Guard, according to Ms. Feldman, had received a radio message at about 10:30 a.m. Saturday from the scalloper's skipper, Capt. John Duzich, saying that he had barricaded himself in the pilot house against members of the crew, some of whom carried knives.

However, Duzich, upon arrival here, denied the Coast Guard report. After refusing for several hours to talk with newsmen at the pier—and at one point hosing down a group of reporters—Duzich eventually said the Coast Guard had "misinterpreted the situation."

Seaman Achiel Altman, 32, of New Bedford, said crew members, not the captain were locked up. He said he and three other crew members had refused to work when another seaman, David Scribner, 23, also of New Bedford, had injured his arm and Duzich refused to put Scribner ashore for medical attention.

Altman said all five found themselves locked up Saturday morning, but finally managed to break out.

Duzich, 27, who said he was armed, agreed he had locked up the five men, saying that they refused to work and had threatened him. He said he never barricaded himself in the pilot house against the 12-member crew.

Scribner was treated Sunday at St. Luke's Hospital for an arm injury.

Suspects are legion in slaying of 'Town Bully'

EDITOR'S NOTE — Whatever the opposite of a popularity contest is, Ken McElroy had long since won it. Clearly, a majority of his fellow townsmen thought him the meanest man in town. Also the most frightening. Now the town bully is shot to death, and the suspects are legion.

By JULES LOH
AP Special Correspondent
SKIDMORE, Mo. (AP) — No sooner had Ken McElroy walked out of the courtroom where they found him guilty of shotgunning the village grocer than sure enough, there he was back at the D&G tavern.

He showed no remorse. He was sullen. When Ken McElroy was sullen, prudent people gave him room. Even when he was not sullen, tough guys in saloons all across Nodaway County called him mister. It was recognized as unhealthy to cross Ken McElroy.

"He never knelt down to nobody," his young, blonde wife of five years, Trina, reflected the other day. "He didn't care who they were or how many there were. He didn't need nobody beside him."

Just so. He was a big, thickset man of 47 ill-spent years, 5 foot 10 and 265 pounds, massive arms, low forehead, bushy eyebrows and sideburns.

He wasn't a street brawler. He was specific. He struck fear in your soul by staring you down, flashing a gun, occasionally using it. If you were his prey for today, he stalked you. He glared at you in silence, and when he spoke it was in a slow whisper. Chilling.
He was born on a farm just outside of town. When he was a boy, he fell off a hay wagon, requiring a steel plate to be implanted in his head. Some wondered if that was what made him so mean.

This is a small town: 440 people, filling station, bank, post office, tavern, blacktop street, grain elevator. Beyond are rolling meadows, ripening corn, redwing blackbirds, fat cattle, windmills and silos, a scent off a Sweet Lassy feed calendar.

Ken McElroy jarred that pastoral serenity. So it is with outspoken relief that the citizens of Nodaway County now speak of him in the past tense. He is dead. The fear he brought them, though, still lingers in a new, unexpected form.

At the D&G tavern the day of his conviction, last June 26, he was very much alive, and he was decidedly sullen.

"I been fighting prosecutors since I was 13 years old and I'm damn near 50," he muttered in his beer. "This is the first time I've lost."

For the next two weeks the townspeople muttered, too. They wondered why Ken McElroy was in the D&G tavern in the first place, or anywhere else than where they had wanted him to be approximately since he was 13, which was in a well-barred jail.

Here he was again, scot free on a $40,000 appeal bond, terrorizing the countryside. Bond or no bond, he had swaggered into the D&G tavern toting an M-1 rifle with a bayonet on it.

"Same old story," Lois Bowenkamp said. "Police arrest him, courts let him go." Lois is the wife of Ernest Bowenkamp, known affectionately as Bo. The 72-year-old grocer whom McElroy shot in the neck. Bo survived and is back at work.

On the day of a hearing to revoke McElroy's bond for carrying the rifle, July 10, about 60 men gathered downtown. They figured a big crowd at the hearing would impress the judge, and they figured to go to the courthouse together.

When the men got to town, though, they learned the hearing had been postponed. Another maddening delay. In their frustration they gathered at the Legion hall, and invited the sheriff, to discuss how to protect themselves from the county menace.

The meeting broke up when someone burst in with a message that more than once had cleared the streets of Skidmore.

"McElroy's in town."
This time they didn't clear the streets. This time they strode over to the D&G, and, when McElroy finished his beer, they walked out with him. They stared wordlessly as he got into his pickup. Suddenly, someone put at least three bullets in McElroy's head.

Now a new terror grips the people of Skidmore. Having survived their fear of the lawless, they now fear the law. Not one person in the crowd has been willing to say who it was who shot and killed Ken Rex McElroy.

Trina McElroy, who was with him, told a coroner's jury she saw who it was and named his name. Nonetheless, the jury concluded that McElroy was killed by a "person or persons unknown." Now a grand jury, in another county, will investigate.

Trina was not McElroy's first wife. She was his fourth, the mother of three of the 15 children he fathered over the years.

They were married when their first child was a year old and Trina was 17 — married under circumstances the prosecutor termed "suspicious." The townspeople had other words for it.

The prosecutor had charged McElroy with raping Trina. Trina says it was a lie, that they wanted to get married all along. Fair enough, except that Ken already had a wife and, besides, Trina would need her parents' consent, which they refused to give.

A few days before the rape trial, four things happened.

One, Ken got a divorce. Two, a house burned down. Three, Trina's parents gave their consent. Four, Ken and Trina found a magistrate in another county who married them. The house that burned down belonged to Trina's parents.

Thus ended the possibility of Trina's testifying against Ken. The rape charges were dropped.

Charges being dropped for lack of people willing to testify against Ken McElroy was the theme of his long criminal record. His lawyer said he had been run in and turned loose "for lack of a case" so many times he couldn't remember them all.

Rustling livestock, threatening people, molesting a minor, arson, you name it, McElroy had been charged with it, but witnesses had a way of backing off.

So it went, until he shot Bo Bowenkamp. Guilty. Finally. "Oh, he was intimidating," Lois Bowenkamp said. "You can't know how awful it was. My neighbor and I took turns sleeping at night."

Before the trial, he would drive up in his pickup at night and sit there. Occasionally he would fire a gun. We knew him, knew his reputation. It was frightening.

You could never know what small thing might set McElroy off. His falling out with Bo Bowenkamp resulted from Bo's clerk asking McElroy's daughter to put away a candy bar she hadn't paid for, or from McElroy's view, "accusing her of raiding the store."

When McElroy roared into town in his pickup with the big mud flaps and the gun rack, his wife in a second pickup ("backup," she explained), everybody fled not so much for their immediate safety but for fear they might see McElroy do something they would have to testify to later.

In fairness to the late Ken McElroy, it is also true that, like another who once prowled these parts and met his Maker just south of here, Jesse James, he was suspected of every crime in the county.

Especially rustling. Last year, Nodaway County led the state in stolen livestock — six times the thefts in any other county — and the ranchers who were aware of that were also aware that Ken McElroy always had a pocket full of money.

He lived on a small farm not likely to win any agricultural awards, so where did he get it all? He claimed also to trade in antiques, to which everybody said, but not to his face, whose antiques?

The McElroy shooting has thoroughly shaken this rural community. The townsfolk don't want to talk about who might have shot him, they don't want to talk about "the incident," as they refer to it, at all, not even among themselves.

Pampa eliminated from Babe Ruth tourney

Pampa was eliminated from the Southwest Regional Babe Ruth Tournament in a late Sunday night game against the West Texas champs from Lubbock who won the game 9-6. Pampa played Lubbock in a game ending at 1:30 a.m. this morning in the second loser's bracket elimination game, after losing to Oklahoma champions from Miami 22-0 Saturday night.

Coming back from Saturday's opening loss, Pampa stayed with the Lubbock team.

Leading hitter was Wade Howard with two hits, a triple and a single, scoring one run.

A big boost for Pampa was a three-base hit by Dierk Milum, driving in two runs, which brought Pampa within two runs of Lubbock in the sixth inning, with a score of Lubbock 7, Pampa 5.

Lubbock came back in the top of the seventh inning and scored two runs, topping out at 9, while Pampa came back with only one run, for the 9-6 final score.

In tournament play so far, New Mexico champions Albuquerque defeated Lubbock 6-5 Saturday night; and Miami, Oklahoma defeated Pampa 22-0, pitting Albuquerque against Miami in winner's bracket play Sunday. Albuquerque went down to Miami in Sunday's game 17-11.

Arkansas champions Rosenberg defeated Lake Shore of Louisiana Sunday with a 3-1 score.

The winners, Rosenberg and Miami, will meet at 8:30 p.m. Tuesday night to determine who will go into championship play.

In the loser's bracket Sunday, Del Rio of South Texas beat Clark County, Ark., with a score of 10-8.

Tonight Del Rio will meet Albuquerque at 5:30 p.m., followed by Lake Shore, La. vs. Lubbock in the loser's bracket.

The winners of tonight's loser's bracket games will meet at 5:30 p.m. Tuesday.

Oosterhuis bursts Nicklaus challenge

OAKVILLE, Ontario (AP) — Although he had encountered little but frustration since joining the American PGA Tour, Peter Oosterhuis never really considered returning to his native England where he once dominated pro golf.

"I now have homes in Palm Springs and Santa Barbara (Calif.). My children are in school in the States.

"It would be a bigger move, a much bigger move, to return to England now than it was to come to the States," said Oosterhuis, who joined the American tour seven years ago and finally broke through to a victory Sunday in the Canadian Open, this country's national championship but also a part of the U.S. PGA circuit.

"When I was playing in Britain, I didn't have a home. I just traveled all the time," he said.

In those travels, the pleasant, 6-foot-5 Oosterhuis established himself as the outstanding player in Europe. He topped the British Order of Merit four consecutive seasons and collected 19 international titles.

Then he joined the American tour and it all turned sour. He lost a playoff for the 1974 Pensacola Open title and didn't finish higher until the weekend, when a last-gasp challenge by Jack Nicklaus fell short.

Oosterhuis won $76,500 in Canadian funds and the spectacular Peter Jackson trophy with a final-round 70 and a 280 total, four shots under par on the difficult, 7,060-yard Glen Abbey Golf Club course in suburban Toronto.

Nicklaus, who designed the course as a permanent home for the Canadian Open, left critical putts short of the cup on three of the last four holes and finished second again a single shot back at 281.

Nicklaus had a closing round of par-71 and was tied with Bruce Lietzke and Andy North, each of whom had a closing 70.

Mark Hayes, who was tied for the lead until he double bogeyed the 17th hole, finished with a 74-282. Third round leader Leonard Thompson was another shot back at 283 after a 76.

Georgia not optimistic this year

MASON, Ohio (AP) — University of Georgia football Coach Vince Dooley isn't optimistic about his team's chances of repeating as national champions.

Dooley accepted the MacArthur Bowl trophy for winning the 1980 championship Sunday as 18 college greats were enshrined into the College Football Hall of Fame.

At one point during the ceremonies, former Notre Dame coach Ara Parseghian leaned over and told Dooley, "I know what you're thinking. When this is all over, the new season begins."

Parseghian was right. The man who became a legend at Notre Dame as he lost just 17 of 116 games in 11 years has been in Dooley's shoes. His teams captured two national championships.

But Dooley said he doesn't expect to duplicate last year when Georgia won all twelve games.

"Last year, the chances were slim, but this year they're a lot slimmer. Trying to defend a championship in college sports is a lot different than in professional football," he said, pointing out that professional teams keep many players from year to year.

Dooley said there were two times in his life when he considered quitting coaching because he was worried that he was reaching a dead end in the sport. He said he got involved in football because he grew up in a tough neighborhood and football "made sense when nothing else did."

He first considered quitting in 1963 as an assistant coach at Auburn University. He said he decided to wait a year to decide.

"I was 30 years old in 1963 and the prospects didn't look too good," he said. "You have these times when you're not too pleased with yourself."

Caponi nears $1 million mark after Boston Five Classic win

BOSTON (AP) — Donna Caponi, a Ladies Professional Golfers Association superstar by day and a disco queen by night, tripped the light fantastic to the bank again today, but she had better watch her step.

LPGA officials are going by the rule book, playing no favorites. And that includes Caponi in her chase to become a $1 million winner on the tour in her 16th season at the age of 36.

Caponi, a two-time winner of both the U.S. Open and LPGA titles, withstood controversy and fired a 1-under-par 71 for a 72-hole total of 276 Sunday in capturing her fifth crown of the year in the $150,000 Boston Five Classic at Fencroft Country Club.

With top prize money of $22,500, Caponi boosted her earnings for the year to $158,595 and her career total to $982,521 in a goal to join Kathy Whitworth in the millionaire queendom.

However, Caponi, bidding for LPGA "Player of the Year" honors for the first time, was virtually overshadowed by controversy in the four-day tournament, which drew a crowd of 63,090 for the tour's second stop here.

The turmoil started in the second round Friday when rookie pro Deanie Wood sank her tee shot for an ace on the 16th hole. A spectator's guide inadvertently said an ace on the hole was worth a new car. It should have been listed for the sixth hole.

Tennis in brief

NORTH CONWAY, N.H. (AP) — Jose-Luis Clerc of Argentina, seeking his third straight tournament title, unleashed a devastating serve and overcame Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia 6-7, 6-4, 6-4 in gaining the final of the $175,000 Volvo International Tennis Tournament.

who became the first LPGA player to win $1 million in official prize money with a third-place finish in the U.S. Open a week ago, was disqualified for signing an incorrect scorecard. She signed a card that showed she had a 4 on the ninth hole when she actually shot a 5.

Caponi led Jan Stephenson by three strokes and JoAnne Carner by six as they teed off together for the last round. Caponi took bogeys on two of her first three holes and Stephenson pulled into a tie with a birdie on the third green.

Stephenson finished with a 74 for second place at 282, worth $14,700. Carner had a closing round 72 for 283 and $10,500, leaving her $24,000 shy of the $1 million goal.

Gibson, Mize and Negro League pioneer inducted in Hall of Fame

COOPERSTOWN, N.Y. (AP) — For Bob Gibson, the trip to Cooperstown was as short as possible.

For Johnny Mize, it was long and agonizing. Gibson and Mize, along with Negro League pioneer Rube Foster, were inducted into the Baseball Hall of Fame Sunday. Gibson, 45, returned to the spotlight only five years after his retirement. He is only the 11th man elected to baseball's shrine in his first year of eligibility.

Mize, meanwhile, has been retired for 28 years and eligible for the Hall for 23. But he was bypassed 20 times by the Baseball Writers' Association of America and twice by the Veterans Committee before making it this year.

"I certainly am proud to be here," said Gibson, who amassed 251 wins, 56 shutouts and 3,117 strikeouts in his outstanding 17-year career. He is the only pitcher to win the seventh game of a World Series twice and had seven consecutive Series victories in a 7-2 postseason record.

Never one to do things at half-speed, Gibson was the most intimidating pitcher in the game for much of the 1960s. He was so dominant in 1968 — 22.9, 13 shutouts, 268 strikeouts and a phenomenal 1.12 earned run average — that he won the first of his two Cy Young awards and the National League's Most Valuable Player honor.

Following that season, which Gibson capped with a record 17-strikeout performance in Game 1 of the World Series against Detroit, baseball lowered the pitching mound to give batters a better chance to hit against the likes of Gibson.

"A writer asked me how I'd like to be remembered," said Gibson, now a coach with the New York Mets. "I think as a person who was a competitor and gave 100 percent every time I went out on the field. I might not have been so good, but I gave it my all."

Gibson nearly gave his all to another sport after starring in basketball and baseball at Creighton University.

"I was looking for a $35,000 bonus to sign," he recalled. "Bill Bergesch, who's with the (New York) Yankees now but was scouting for St. Louis, was the only one to tell me the truth. He said a lot of scouts were saying the closest I'd get to $35,000 was $3,000."

Owners to decide 'hot issue' on how to resume baseball play

CHICAGO (AP) — The agreement that ended the 50-day baseball strike is expected to be ratified by the 26 major league baseball club owners at a meeting Tuesday in Chicago, where owners also will formulate a plan to resume the season.

While ratification of the strike-ending agreement is virtually guaranteed, the question of how to resume play is a "hot issue" in the words of New York Yankees owner George Steinbrenner.

"It may divide the leagues," said Steinbrenner. "The public's not in a mood for gimmicks, so if we don't handle this carefully, it could backfire on us."

One proposal is for the season to be split, with the second half starting Aug. 10. If that option is chosen, first-half leaders in each division — the Yankees and the Oakland A's in the American League and the Philadelphia Phillies and Los Angeles Dodgers in the National — would face the second-half winners after the season ends Oct. 3.

Or the owners could decide simply to resume play as scheduled and let the divisional races continue as if there had been no strike.

"If we start all over again with a second half, we could find ourselves back in the

"I said I liked basketball better anyway and wouldn't play baseball."

"But that's the reason I signed with St. Louis...honesty." Mize would have had an honest beef with the selectors about being overlooked despite some excellent career statistics. He hit 359 homers, including a National League record for left-handed hitters of 51 in 1947 with the New York Giants. He won or tied for the NL home run title four times, captured the RBI crown three times and the batting title once.

And he's the only major leaguer to have hit three homers or more in a game twice in a season in two different years.

But Mize, 58, betrayed no bitterness at the ceremonies. "Somebody said to me the other day that getting in by the Veterans Committee was going in the back door," said Mize, known as "Big Cat" when he was belting the ball for the Cardinals, Giants and Yankees from 1936-53. "I said, 'no. Look at who is on the committee: managers, general managers, players. Who do you want to pick you? They're your peers.' In Hollywood, when your peers elect you, you receive an Oscar."

Mize said he learned how to hit while in high school and never forgot his lessons.

"My first game as a pro, in Greensboro, N.C., I got a hit the first time up and fell over first base because I was watching the ball," he said. "I watched it ever since."

"I'd like to thank those people who stuck with me and worked so hard to get me in," he said.

Foster, who died in 1930, was represented by his son Earl. One of the pioneers of the Negro leagues, he was a pitcher from 1897, when he toured as a 17-year-old with the Waco (Texas) Yellow Jackets, until 1915.

In 1911, Foster formed the Chicago American Giants and embarked on a career as an owner and manager. And, in 1920, he founded the Negro National League.

Also honored at the ceremonies were Ernie Harwell, who received the Ford C. Frick Award for excellence in baseball broadcasting, and sports writers Milton Richman of United Press International and Joe Reichler, formerly of The Associated Press, who received the J.G. Taylor Spink Award for their contributions as baseball reporters.

race and generate some interest among the fans," said Herman Franks, general manager of the Chicago Cubs.

"Splitting the season is nonsensical, so I guess it'll happen," said Jerry Reinsdorf, chairman of the Chicago White Sox.

In a CBS telephone survey conducted Sunday, spokesmen for 16 of the 26 teams favor adopting a split season, with four clubs opposed and six undecided.

A simple majority is needed in the American League to go to the split season, while a three-quarters vote is needed in the National League.

If one league votes for the split season and the other votes against it, Commissioner Bowie Kuhn apparently will decide the matter.

The executive committee of the Major League Players Association voted unanimously at a meeting here Saturday to approve the agreement. Following the committee's vote, player representatives returned to their teams to conduct votes by the rank-and-file. The balloting was expected to be finished this week.

Also on the agenda at the owners' meeting will be the proposed sale of the Cubs by William Wrigley Jr. to the Chicago Tribune Co. for $20 million. The sale requires a three-fourths vote — nine of the 12 owners — and is expected to be approved.

"I haven't heard of any problems and we're very hopeful," said Andrew McKenna, who is expected to become the Cubs' new chairman of the board when the sale is completed.

Aquifer's depletion threatens ag empires

By ALLEN K. SHORT
Associated Press Writer
LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — It fed the freshwater springs that sustained migrating Indians. A century later, it helped America's heartland rise out of the devastation of the Dust Bowl.

But today more than 100,000 wells are slowly depleting the Ogallala aquifer, the United States' largest and most economically vital source of irrigation water.

In a good year, as much as 20 inches of rain fall on the high plains of Texas, Oklahoma, Kansas and Nebraska. In a bad year, farmers turn their eyes from the heavens to the Ogallala, a huge underground reservoir that flirts with these and four other states — South Dakota, Wyoming, Colorado and New Mexico.

In the past 50 years, the Ogallala — named for a tribe of Sioux who once roamed the area — has given up more than 200 million gallons of water in Texas alone. Sucked from the ground by pumps, the water has built grain and cotton empires where once only buffalo grass grew.

But time is running on the Ogallala and the agricultural wealth perched atop it. Farms and towns above sections of the aquifer that have grown as dry as the surrounding sun-baked prairie are becoming the first casualties.

Lubbock, population 160,000, sits above one of the aquifer's thin sections and must pipe in much of its drinking water from 60 miles away.

Wolfforth, 10 miles west of Lubbock, will soon have to do same. The water table under the town drops about 3 feet a year, and officials estimate that the supply will last only 12-15 years.

The farmers here are keenly aware of the implications. Agriculture is a $2 billion-a-year industry on the high plains, where more than half the state's wheat, cotton, and grain crops ripen and more than three-quarters of all Texas feed catow fat — enough cattle each year to feed 13.2 million people.

But the aquifer's depth in most of the Panhandle is less than 100 feet — not enough to sustain farming on its present scale beyond the next century.

Farmers like James Mitchell of Wolfforth, who raises lint cotton just west of town, are caught between declining water reserves and rising energy prices.

The water table below Mitchell's irrigated cottonfields falls each year, which means his pumps have to work harder to bring the water to the surface. But the pumps are powered by natural gas, and energy costs have risen 400 percent in the past three years.

Farmers like Mitchell are rapidly nearing the point where they can no longer afford traditional irrigation practices.

Mitchell, for one, has gone untraditional. On a recent day when the afternoon sun had pushed temperatures above 100 degrees, he showed off an automated irrigation system he says has cut his water demand almost in half.

As traditional spray irrigators sent fine streams of water into the air on neighboring farms, Mitchell watched his rig fill each furrow with water from long metal tubes. The coarse soil soaked up the water instantly, even as mist from the other rigs was blowing away on a gusty wind.

"We're all facing the same problem," Mitchell said. "We've got to learn how to make the resource last as long as possible."

"This," he said, gesturing toward the mass of tubes behind him, "will help a lot." The problem, say local water conservation officials, is that years after people first voiced concern about the Ogallala, Mitchell is still an exception among irrigators.

More than 70,000 irrigation and domestic wells bore into the Ogallala in Texas, said Wayne Wyatt, manager of the High Plains Underground Water Conservation District. Most of the pumps attached to the wells function at less than 30 percent energy efficiency even though pumps with ratings of up to 88 percent are available.

"The technology is already here," Wyatt said. "The problem is, very few farmers are using it."

Mitchell and other plains farmers are experimenting with half a dozen different irrigation tools and methods, most aimed at reducing evaporation. As Mitchell notes, they have little to lose and a livelihood to preserve.

Not far from Mitchell's spread, researchers at the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station in Lubbock are using emulsified beef fat to cut moisture losses from crops.

A mixture of tallow and water is sprayed on the plants, preventing or reducing evaporation from leaf surfaces, Wyatt said.

But perhaps the most promising conservation project under way is one that leans heavily on secondary recovery techniques developed by the oil and natural gas industries.

Above the Ogallala water table is a thick layer of sand that was saturated with water when the aquifer level was higher. The sands still hold 200 million acre-feet of water — equal to more than half the reserves remaining in the aquifer, Wyatt said.

The problem is to find a way to force the trapped water down into the Ogallala, where it can be recovered through wells, he said. One possibility is to use compressed air to push the water down. The air compressors, Wyatt said, could be powered by windmills turned by the high plains' nearly constant winds.

Senate investigators unhappy with Labor Department decision

WASHINGTON (AP) — Leaders of a Senate investigation are unhappy with the Labor Department's refusal to seek the ouster of Roy Lee Williams as president of the Teamsters union if he refuses to answer questions about alleged pension fund abuses.

Sen. William V. Roth, R-Del., chairman of the permanent investigations subcommittee, and Sam Nunn, D-Ga., ranking minority member, said they disagree with Donovan's assertion that the department has no legal authority to challenge Williams' suitability to remain as head of the 2-million-member union.

They released a July 9 letter, in which Donovan said T. Timothy Ryan Jr., the department solicitor, had studied whether the Labor Department had such authority.

"The solicitor has informed me that the Department of Labor has no authority to seek the removal of Williams or to otherwise challenge his incumbency as president of the Teamsters," the labor secretary said.

Both Roth and Nunn maintained that the department already has such authority.

The Georgia senator said that "while federal law does give the Labor Department authority to initiate action to remove union officers for fiduciary breach," he has concluded it is necessary for Congress to reassert its intent.

Tax bill benefits advisors

By JOHN CUNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — No denying it: Among the beneficiaries of the new tax bill are lawyers, accountants and financial advisers who will earn lots of money interpreting and advising. But there's something for you, too.

And for others — for business people, investors, the poor, the rich, the saver, the young, the old, the retiree-to-be. It's been called a Christmas tree. Barring a blown fuse, it may grow bigger, brighter.

Because of the tax-cut concept — to nourish thrift and promote private-sector production — the impact could spread. Investments in securities might be spurred. Factory modernization should be less costly. Research and development may be encouraged. Troubled savings and loans might be bolstered. Home mortgage funds conceivably could be more available.

With the assistance of Ira Shapiro, national director of tax services for Coopers and Lybrand, the accounting firm, here are some highlights and insights, some interpretations and even a bit of advice.

A caution, for example, to savers in the lower income tax brackets who might seek tax-exempt All-Saver Certificates, to be offered by banks and savings institutions. The certificates could be a poor choice.

The reason — interest on the certificates is limited to 70 percent of the Treasury Bill rate, so benefits would accrue mainly to those in tax brackets of 30 percent or more. A low-bracket saver might be better served by a higher-interest though taxed investment. The new law allows individuals to earn $1,000 and couples $2,000 of interest tax-free.

Among other consequences, the 20 percentage point reduction is expected to encourage securities investments. It could have a secondary impact: To assure being taxed at no more than 50 percent, some small businesses have shunned incorporation. The impediment is now removed.

Inventiveness is also spurred, at least in theory. The new law allows a 25 percent tax credit — a credit is better than a deduction — for money spent on research and development beyond the average of previous years. If a company's R&D budget is $100,000 more, it will earn under the new bill a $25,000 credit. Again, an effort to spur modernization.

Those people who worry that Social Security has become a questionable promise, can apply at least a partial remedy of their own under the new law. The maximum tax-free contribution to individual Keogh plans (for the self-employed) has been doubled to $15,000 a year. The maximums for IRA's, or individual retirement accounts (for those who work at concerns without pension plans) have also been doubled, to $2,000.

To fathom all the changes, to adjust to the free new world, may take time, study and diligence. Maybe even some professional advice, which is why the lawyers, accountants and financial advisers are smiling.

Oswald's widow says she will go to court for exhumation order

DALLAS (AP) — The widow of accused presidential assassin Lee Harvey Oswald says she has exhausted all decent and polite routes and now will go to court to open the grave she maintains does not contain the remains of her slain husband.

"I've been trying everything for a year to get it (the grave) opened because I don't think there's a body down there," Marina Oswald Porter said Sunday.

Mrs. Porter said she is determined to file suit to force the exhumation because her former brother-in-law, Robert Oswald, last month rejected her offer to have the grave opened just to determine if a body was inside.

"Robert has been rejecting everything for a year," she said. "I don't think there's a body in there and he should be curious, too."

"I guess I have exhausted all my routes of being decent and polite. I'm being forced to take drastic measures."

Robert Oswald's Dallas attorney, Craig Fowler, said his client rejected Mrs. Porter's suggestion because "he's just against disturbing the grave."

Mrs. Porter's Jerry Pittman, said her "primary concern is to make certain the body is still there and has not been tampered with or stolen."

She did not say when she planned to file suit. Oswald's relatives had been trying to reach agreement for the past 11

The Texas Legislature has appropriated $250,000 for research into recovery methods.
