AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Southwestern Bell, a benefactor of hundreds of Texas charities, bills its customers for about a third of the $22 million it gives away and spends on ads each year.

The donations — about $1.9 million last year — are part of being a good "corporate citizen," says Paul Roth, Bell vice president for revenues in Texas.

The ads — about $19.3 million — are "essential," he said. It adds up to about 11 or 12 cents per month on Texans' phone bills.

"The best way to be a good corporate citizen would be not to gouge the customers," says Texas Consumer Association President Jim Hightower.

can be passed on to ratepayers. The contributions go to assorted charities, Little League organizations, service clubs and universities. For example, the Tarrant County United Way got about $70,000 from the phone company last year.

Some of the money was doled out to business-related organizations. The Foundation for Business, Politics and Economics in Houston got $18,750 to help pay for a building.

Another $500 went to something called the University for Young Americans in Houston. It's not a university. It's a nonprofit group that sponsors seminars that bring business leaders in touch with high school students.

about "significant issues of the day." Bell sent $5,000 to the Preservation Trust Fund for Texas, which wants to "conserve, preserve and restore historic monuments in Texas," according to Hutchinson.

The Palmer Drug Abuse Program, which in the past has drawn criticism for its methods, got $6,500.

Perhaps the biggest chunk of phone money went to colleges. Southern Methodist University got donations of more than $44,000. Other checks went to St. Edwards, Texas Christian, Baylor, Texas Wesleyan, Abilene Christian, Hardin-Simmons, McMurry, Wayland Baptist, St. Mary's and Trinity. Princeton University in New Jersey got $500.

Roth said many of the charities "just simply would not survive" without corporate donations.

"We want to be good corporate citizens in the many communities we serve," he said.

Hightower agreed Bell should be supporting United Way drives and other charities, but at the cost of stockholders, not phone users. The cost of advertising is a battle Bell fights each time it comes back for more money.

its income tax. Again, it's something stockholders should pay for. Roth said all phone customers benefit from the ad expenditures — over half of which is spent to push long distance service.

WILLING BRIDEGROOM. A man identified as Donald Lee Laisure, a self-described "unemployed millionaire" from Texas, stands next to his flamboyant Cadillac outside an Ontario, Calif. hotel Saturday. On the fender of the car is the name of Susan Atkins, a member of the Charles Manson family, serving a life sentence in a nearby women's prison for her part in the 1969 Sharon Tate murders. Ex-Manson follower to wed millionaire FRONTERA, Calif. (AP) — Donald Lee Laisure says his friends are betting 40-to-1 that he won't marry former Charles Manson follower Susan Atkins. But both Laisure and prison officials say the planned wedding is on.

Officials at the California Institute for Women, where Ms. Atkins is serving a life sentence for the murders of Sharon Tate and six others, confirmed Monday that the private ceremony will take place at 2:30 p.m. Wednesday.

That confirmation followed earlier conflicting reports from prison officials that the wedding had been postponed and then cancelled. Officials refused Monday to elaborate.

Laisure, 52, who describes himself as an "unemployed millionaire" from Texas, said Monday he is listed as a "permanent visitor" at the prison and that he and the woman he calls "Honey Bear" will consummate their marriage there in a "family living unit."

"This is a love story," he said of his relationship with the 33-year-old Ms. Atkins. "This has nothing to do with Charles Manson."

He has said he met Ms. Atkins in 1965 and that they have corresponded ever since.

He said he and his bride-to-be have already received a wedding present from Cuban Premier Fidel Castro. He said he is fond of cigars but refused to divulge the contents of the present.

"It's for Susan and me, that's all I can tell you," he said.

The controversy surrounding the marriage has only heightened the mystery surrounding Laisure, who says he doesn't need to work for his money but refuses to say where he gets it.

In an interview Monday with the Ontario Daily Report, Laisure said he intends to build a $12 million solar home in western San Bernardino County so he can be close to his bride until she is freed. Laisure has steadfastly maintained Ms. Atkins' innocence and says he will continue to seek her release.

Ms. Atkins was convicted of murder and conspiracy along with Manson, Patricia Krenwinkel and Leslie Van Houten in the murders of Miss Tate, coffee heiress Abigail Folger and three others, as well as the subsequent killing of grocery store owners Leno and Rosemary LaBianca.

Laisure also told the Daily Report that he had dated Ms. Folger for four or five years and that they had discussed marriage. But he declined to elaborate on his feelings about marrying the woman convicted in her death.

Air controller may lose job for criticizing air safety

By LEE JONES Associated Press Writer

A non-striking Houston air traffic controller may lose his job after writing a letter complaining of unsafe airways and fellow controllers who "couldn't separate two flies with a screen door."

But the Federal Aviation Agency says all the allegations made by controller Stanley Jorgensen of the Houston Air Route Traffic Control Center are unfounded.

Jorgensen wrote his letter to J.J. O'Donnell, president of the Airline Pilots Association, who had publicly pronounced the airways safe.

"I personally will not allow any of my family members to fly and will advocate the same to friends and relatives. Why don't you think of saving lives before it is too late?" Jorgensen, a former Braniff pilot, told O'Donnell.

Arnold Price, chief of the FAA's Houston Operations

Center, said. "We investigated his (Jorgensen's) report and found it unfounded and unjustified and that he unfairly criticized the people and the system that are doing a good job."

Jorgensen complained of private planes at altitudes reserved for commercial jets and also bemoaned the quality of substitute controllers.

The chiefs of the FAA's air route control centers at Houston and Fort Worth said they knew of no incidents where planes flying visually had flown higher than the 18,000-foot ceiling for VFR flights.

"We have supervisors working who couldn't separate two flies with a screen door, yet they work traffic," Jorgensen said in his letter.

Striking Houston controllers said Jorgensen handed a copy of the Aug. 21 letter to picketing PATCO members and later came by PATCO strike headquarters and authorized its distribution.

"He told us to do whatever we saw fit with the letter. ... We distributed it to every member of Congress," said Roger Hicks, public relations coordinator for the Houston PATCO local.

He said Jorgensen was in danger of losing his job and said two controllers outside Texas had been fired by the Federal Aviation Agency for criticizing the safety of the airways during the PATCO strike.

Jorgensen's boss called him in Monday but refused to say whether Jorgensen would be disciplined, calling it "an internal matter I can't get into."

Jorgensen, reached at his home in Kingwood, said, "I will have no comment in any way, shape or form."

Woman stabbed to death

BLOOMING GROVE, Texas (AP) — An autopsy will be performed on the body of a 21-year-old Irving woman whose partially clad body was discovered along a dirt road Sunday.

The body of Carol Armstrong, a dress shop employee who lived in the Dallas suburb of Irving, was riddled with stab wounds when it was discovered about 9 a.m. Sunday by a woman who was checking on some livestock pastured nearby, said Navarro County Sheriff Bobby Ross. The young woman was nude from the waist down and had been stabbed repeatedly in the chest, neck and left hand, he said.

Ross said her 1978 Thunderbird was found three miles east of where the body was discovered.

DPS predicts 48 dead over holiday

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — As many as 48 persons may die in traffic accidents during the Labor Day weekend, the Department of Public Safety said Monday.

DPS Director Jim Adams made a special appeal to Texas drivers and passengers to wear seatbelts.

A total of 60 persons were killed on Texas highways and streets during the July 4th weekend, 16 more than the DPS had estimated.

passengers killed during the July 4th period were wearing seatbelts. Adams said Thirty-five of the fatalities resulted from persons being thrown from their vehicles.

Adams urged all motorists to wear their seatbelts to minimize the hazard posed by careless drivers. He said safety belts should be used during city driving as well as long distance trips.

Last year in Texas, about 1200 lives would have been saved if all occupants of passenger vehicles had used safety belts, he said. Texas' traffic death count will be in effect from 6 p.m. Friday Sept. 4 through midnight Monday Sept. 7.

Redfish, speckled trout ban begins

BROWNSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Redfish and speckled trout swam free of commercial fishermen's lines today as a two-year ban on professional harvesting of the two species began.

Commercial anglers along the Texas coast waited in vain Monday for last minute court action that would have blocked the ban.

A group of fishermen and seafood dealers had asked U.S. District Judge James DeAnda for a temporary restraining order against enforcement of the state ban.

DeAnda instead set a Sept. 14 hearing on a preliminary injunction and said at 5:15 p.m. through his law clerk that the law would take effect at midnight Monday.

The Texas Legislature passed the redfish and trout moratorium after sportsmen and state wildlife officials argued the two species were being overharvested by commercial fishermen.

Game wardens blamed commercial use of illegal gill nets for decimating redfish, which do not reproduce until after 5 years of age.

After two years, marine biologists will study the fish populations and decide whether to recommend an end to the moratorium.

Instead of fishing up to the deadline, many commercial anglers said they waited anxiously by their phones for word of a last minute court order.

"None of my crews have gone out. They're just waiting," said commercial fisherman Dan Coley of Arroyo City.

Coley was one of those filing the federal suit, which claimed the law discriminated against commercial fishermen because of exempted sportsmen.

"We're just all sitting around with our fingers crossed," said the wife of another fisherman in Port Mansfield, where commercial anglers also stayed home to find out what would happen.

Joe Solis, a Brownsville fish dealer and another plaintiff in the suit, said some of his suppliers would have hard times finding other jobs.

"I don't think I can survive. Reds are 75 percent of my business," Solis said.

Game wardens fielded phone calls throughout the day from anxious fishermen.

Tests show DDT levels not hazardous

BROWNSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Tests of Rio Grande Valley drinking water show DDT pesticide levels to be insignificant and not hazardous to health, says Sen. Hector Uribe, D-Brownsville.

Uribe told a news conference Monday that results of Texas Department of Health water analysis conflicted with earlier published reports that the toxic pesticide had high levels in municipal water supplies.

"Every single test show we have an insignificant level of DDT contamination," Uribe said. "It's been described as less than 31 parts of DDT per billion parts of water, which is a minute amount."

Tests of Brownsville water showed a slightly higher concentration of .035 parts per billion, he said. Water supplies also were tested at Harlingen, Mission and McAllen.

Uribe requested water testing by the Texas Department of Health following published reports that DDT levels in South Texas were 80 parts per billion and hazardous to health.

Scientists and state officials do not know why DDT continues to show up in local water supplies nine years after it was banned in the United States.

Some have suggested it may flow into the Rio Grande — source of local drinking water — from Mexico. Other possibilities are illegal use of the pesticide by local farmers or existing residues that have not broken down in the soil.

Distant cousin claims he was groomed to oversee estate

HOUSTON (AP) — An Alabama high school teacher claims he was groomed beginning at age 8 to oversee the estate of his distant cousin, the late billionaire Howard Hughes.

But Robert C. Hughes, a second cousin to the late tycoon, testified Monday that documents to back up his claim were destroyed in a fire 35 years before the eccentric recluse died.

He said he began at age 8, at his family's urging, to commit to memory articles and documents stored in a trunk belonging to his uncle, John. However, he told the jury, the trunk was later burned in a 1941 fire.

"Uncle John told me that if I could maintain the material I could administer the Hughes estate, and after it was destroyed, if I could reassemble, then I could administer it," the 55-year-old agri-business teacher said.

He also said the family set aside a plot of land in 1936 "so that when Howard Hughes died, there would be money to hire a lawyer to permit me to administer the estate."

Robert Hughes and about 100 other distant relatives are fighting claims by five first cousins on Hughes' father's side, arguing the late Elspeth Hughes Lapp, who provides the first cousins' blood link to Hughes, was actually the stepdaughter of New York playwright Rupert Hughes, the tycoon's uncle.

But their story contradicts about 400 other first cousins who contend Rupert was sterile and Elspeth was illegitimate.

Robert Hughes also said his uncle told him that Elspeth's three daughters, now defending their claims to Hughes' estate, would attempt to secure part of the fortune.

"Are you saying that Uncle John told you back in 1940 that these three girls — whom you had never met — would ultimately claim the estate as the granddaughters of Rupert Hughes and that you would have the job of disproving otherwise?" attorney Wayne Fisher asked. Fisher represents two of the five first cousins.

Robert Hughes responded, "I wouldn't be here if I wasn't."

A six-person jury will consider the claims of the first cousins and the distant relatives and then decide who shares in the fortune valued up to $2 billion.

New curbs set in student loan program

WASHINGTON (AP) — A public college student whose family earns more than $33,875 a year will be denied guaranteed federal loans, for the most part, under new curbs which take effect Oct. 1.

The income cutoff for loans for students attending the average four-year college is $46,375, according to figures obtained Monday from the Education Department.

The College Board on Sunday reported that the average cost this fall of tuition, fees, room, board and other expenses will be $6,885 at private four-year colleges and $3,873 at public four-year colleges.

Since 1978, students have been able to borrow up to $2,500 under the Guaranteed Student Loan program regardless of family income or college cost. Congress recently reimposed an income limit to hold down the spiraling costs of the program.

Starting Oct. 1, students whose adjusted gross family income is $30,000 or more — including the students' and parents' salary, interest and dividends — will have to pass a needs test to be able to get one of the subsidized loans.

The Guaranteed Student Loan policy office in the education department gave the following examples. All apply to a family of four:

—At the public college costing $3,873, with one child in college, the maximum loan for a student with family income of $30,000 is $1,373; those from families below the $30,000 ceiling can borrow $2,500. The minimum loan of $1,000 is limited to those with income between $30,000 and $33,875. Families earning more than that figure are ineligible for the program.

—If both children attend that public college, each can borrow the maximum $2,500 if the family income is no more than $31,375; each can borrow the minimum $1,000 if the family income is no more than $47,625.

—At the private college costing $6,885, with one child in college, the student can borrow $2,500 if family income is less than $37,875; the cutoff for the minimum $1,000 loan is $46,375.

—With both children attending that private college, each can borrow $2,500 if the family income is less than $57,626. The cutoff for the minimum $1,000 loan is $79,375.

—If the student attends one of the dozen or so elite private universities where costs are more than $11,000 this year, then: —With one child in the college, the student can borrow $2,500 if family income is no more than $56,375. The student can borrow $1,000 if income is no more than $66,625.

—With both children in $11,000-a-year colleges, each is entitled to the maximum $2,500 loan even if family income exceeds $100,000.

Some 3.6 million students have taken out loans totaling almost $8 billion under the program in the current fiscal year. They pay no interest while in college, and only 7 percent or 9 percent afterward.

Twins' deaths ruled suicide, family disagrees

By DAVID TOMLIN
Associated Press Writer
COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — One day last June, twin sons of a well-to-do Columbia doctor sat down together in a bedroom of their spacious home, held loaded guns to their heads and pulled the triggers.

The coroner called it a double suicide and indicated that the boys were depressed. There was talk of a "suicide pact." Gossip whispered that the 16-year-old twins might have been disturbed or felt, in some way, neglected.

But the boys' father, Dr. Thomas C. Rowland, and the rest of the family reject the coroner's verdict. In their view, the shootings could only have been a horrible accident.

"This is not a case of a rich society doctor who's been neglecting his children, so they shot themselves," Rowland says. "Those boys were loved, and they knew they were loved."

To outsiders, the known facts surrounding the shootings make the family's accidental death theory hard to accept.

"There's no other way I could have ruled," says Richland County Coroner Frank Barron III. He noted that the boys' bodies contained no traces of drugs or alcohol.

Lewis and Elliott Rowland were sitting in Lewis' room on June 9 with guns pointed at their heads. Elliott a 30.06-caliber rifle from his own collection and Lewis a .357-magnum pistol from his father's dresser.

Lewis, a sensitive boy with a severe congenital eye disorder that made him legally blind, had made a weak suicide attempt in early 1980 with a bottle of aspirin.

Elliott, all his life, had assumed heavy responsibility for helping Lewis cope with his handicap. He had trouble enjoying himself if Lewis was unhappy, a feeling that Lewis was said to have encouraged.

The Rowlands and friends of the boys insist suicide would have been out of character for both. They cite evidence of their own.

Lewis was right handed, but he shot himself with his left hand. His right hand had held a beer.

Then, cartridges were missing from the revolver's cylinder.

"I always kept five shells in that pistol, but there were only three in it after the tragedy, one of them fired," says Dr. Rowland. "We've never found the other two."

To the Rowlands, this suggests that Lewis removed two bullets and intended to place empty chambers so that he could frighten Elliott by feigning a suicide attempt. Instead, they say, he placed the empties to the wrong side of the hammer.

Both boys had made calls minutes earlier to friends to make plans for the evening. But mostly, the family's refusal to accept the suicide idea stems from their knowledge of the boys' character and relationship, as they see it.

Fraternal, not identical, twins, the boys always had the best of everything from the day they were born.

Family friend Strom Thurmond sent them playful notes shortly after their birth. Maids did heavy housework so their mother could spend more time with them.

Later, there were private classes at Heathwood Hall Episcopal School, lessons at Mrs. Sloan's dance academy, membership in the Cavaliers social club and countless other rites of passage in upper-middle class Columbia.

At home in one of Columbia's most prestigious neighborhoods, there was a swimming pool and plenty of indulgence.

The only thing that kept the twins' lives from perfection was Lewis' eye problem, which became apparent several weeks after he was born.

"He had ocular albinism," says Dr. Rowland. "He didn't have failing eyesight, as one newspaper put it."

Rowland says ocular albinism deprived Lewis of all but his peripheral vision. Special glasses corrected his vision to 20-200, but Lewis couldn't play baseball or tennis, and he couldn't drive. His eyes also tended to wander, since they couldn't focus, and this, combined with his efforts to maneuver objects into his peripheral vision sometimes made him look a bit strange.

"But he did not have a degenerative disease of the eye," Rowland says. "He was not depressed because he was slowly going blind, in other words. He had the same defect he was born with, and he'd really learned to adapt to it pretty well."

The family concedes that Lewis may have had too much help adapting.

"We treated him differently because of the eye problem, and I think the other children learned to because we did," Rowland says. Son Tommy, now 22, and daughter Mary, 20, knew Lewis needed special attention and provided it.

But the main burden fell on Elliott, who began worrying about his brother's disability very early.

"Elliott knew it in a way, from me, almost from the time he was a baby," says his mother, Isabelle Rowland.

By the time they were 3 years old, Elliott was laying out clothes for both twins each day, something he continued to do for years.

Elliott was also first out of the twin stroller and insisted on pushing Lewis, establishing a pattern that would persist until their deaths.

"That was really Lewis' disposition," Rowland says. "He would happily ride along as long as somebody would do for him. He was perfectly happy to be pushed along and coddled, and we probably did too much of that and didn't realize until the 9th grade that Lewis needed to be self-reliant."

The twins were virtually inseparable until they were 11 or 12. Then Elliott took up hunting, which Lewis didn't like and couldn't have done anyway. Lewis became immersed in music and his record collection. He had natural ability on the piano. He wrote songs and poetry.

Both liked sports and both played football, Lewis confined to the line because of his eyesight.

As they began taking different directions, Lewis tended to sulk whenever Elliott went off without him, the family says. Elliott began to organize his brother's social life as well as his school studies.

It was Lewis who finally gave the Rowlands a chance to break up what they considered an increasingly unhealthy relationship for both boys.

Failing badly at Heathwood Hall, Lewis asked to be sent to Blue Ridge School in Dyke, Va., which specializes in helping academic underachievers. The twins' older brother, Tommy, had spent a summer there and liked it.

Lewis enrolled in the fall of 1979, and both boys seemed to do much better apart. Lewis improved his grades and learned to get along on his

Reagan to reduce defense spending

LOS ANGELES (AP) — President Reagan will slice up to $30 billion off his military spending buildup and may have to go even deeper to balance the budget by 1984, a top White House aide says.

White House chief of staff James A. Baker III said in an interview Monday that the cuts in planned increases in the defense budget are necessary to make additional reductions in social programs politically palatable.

Administration officials have said Reagan must find at least $74 billion in savings in fiscal 1983 and 1984 to fulfill his pledge of balancing the budget within three years — a task already made harder by record interest rates that are driving up government spending and by a sluggish economy that could cut revenues.

Cutting $30 billion from defense programs would leave $44 billion more to be found in social programs.

Baker said Reagan would propose $20 billion to $30 billion in defense cuts in 1983 and 1984 — between 4 percent and 7 percent — and could seek more reductions.

Baker gave no indication what programs would be affected by the cuts and deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said separately that Reagan will get further information on the defense budget later this week.

Reagan has called for spending more than $1.6 trillion over the next five years, the largest military buildup in U.S. history. The administration's most recent plans call for defense outlays of $225 billion in fiscal 1983 and $254 billion in 1984.

Baker said Reagan's 1982 defense budget is $48 billion higher than former President Carter's fiscal 1981 defense proposal, a difference of 19 percent after adjusting for inflation.

Using that 1981 budget proposal for comparison, Baker said he believes Reagan will be able to fulfill his commitment to increase defense spending by 7 percent — even after the cuts.

The Washington Post, meanwhile, reported today that Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger has ordered the military services to prepare detailed lists of programs that would be delayed, forces that would be cut and purchases that would be stretched out if Reagan's five-year defense spending program is cut.

Quoting Pentagon sources, the newspaper said the Defense Resources Board met Monday to compile the lists into one that could serve as a guide in any presidential budget decision.

The Air Force said it would have to phase out old B-52D bombers and close two Strategic Air Command bases if its planned 1983 budget were cut by more than $3 billion, according to the Post.

The newspaper also said the Air Force, citing high maintenance costs, indicated that it might have to begin phasing out its old Titan II intercontinental missiles if $12 billion a year were cut from its budget.

To accommodate Reagan's goal of a balanced budget and increased military spending, social programs have been reduced by $35 billion for fiscal 1982, which begins Oct. 1.

Rep. Peter Peyster, D-N.Y., said Monday that "reliable" sources, whom he refused to identify, have told him the administration will seek additional reductions in "nearly every education program" for 1982.

Peyster, a member of the House Education and Labor Committee, said the administration wants to reduce federally guaranteed loans for college students by another $300 million, National Direct Student Loans by $100 million and Pell Grants for needy college students by $300 million.

Aid to libraries would be cut an additional $100 million, education for the handicapped $250 million and a food program for women and children $300 million, he said.

Those programs were cut at least 20 percent by the budget ceiling signed by Reagan last month.

Edwin Dale, spokesman for the White House Office of Management and Budget, refused to discuss specific spending levels but said Peyster's list does not represent further cuts.

He said the administration will ask Congress to appropriate less than the full amount authorized by the budget ceiling in cases where it exceeds Reagan's original proposals outlined in March.

Widow dies before last wish granted

HUNTINGTON, W. Va. (AP) — Dr. Donald Klinestiver was on the witness stand when his electronic beeper went off. As the judge waited, the doctor phoned the hospital to learn it was too late for the court to rule on his patient's last wish: to end her suffering.

Pupils are dilated and fixed. This is an indication of brain death," said the note Klinestiver handed the judge when he returned to the bench.

The hearing Monday was called by Cabell County Circuit Judge D.B. Daugherty to decide whether Golda Yoder, a 76-year-old widow, should be granted her wish to be unplugged from her respirator and die.

After receiving Klinestiver's note, the judge granted the request, but the doctor said later he thought his comatose patient would have died in a day or so had the machine been allowed to run.

"I removed her respirator at 9:26 p.m.," Klinestiver said. "There was a cessation of cardiac activity at 9:35."

Mrs. Yoder's death ended her struggle with a life made painful by terminal cirrhosis of the liver. Six of her seven children fought to keep her alive by artificial means.

Services boost pay to air controllers

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Air Force and Army are boosting re-enlistment bonuses for air traffic controllers to a maximum $16,000 in an attempt to keep them from being hired away by the government as replacements for striking civilian controllers.

The Navy, which already pays re-enlistment bonuses of up to $16,000, may consider larger bonuses after assessing the strike's impact on its corps of enlisted controllers, officials said.

The military services have assigned 810 of their nearly 10,000 controllers to help the Federal Aviation Administration cope with airplane traffic in the wake of the Aug. 3 walkout and subsequent firing of more than 11,000 civilian controllers.

Military officials say they are concerned that many of the 1,600 veteran service controllers whose enlistments are due to expire within the next 13 months may choose a civilian career paying considerably more than their military jobs.

FAA controllers earn an average $34,000 a year, while a married Air Force technical sergeant with eight years of service now draws about $15,500 a year, including about $4,500 in tax-free housing and food allowances.

If the Air Force sergeant re-enlists as an air traffic controller for five more years, he or she would qualify for a $16,000 bonus, which is about $7,000 higher than the maximum bonus paid previously.

Officials said bonuses may vary, depending on the controller's rank, length of active duty and other factors.

The Army, meanwhile, is offering a new enlistment bonus of $5,000 for recruits who would be trained to become air traffic control tower operators. It also has boosted the enlistment bonus for prospective radar controllers from $3,000 to $5,000.

The Air Force and Navy said they have no plans for enlistment bonuses to attract potential controllers.

Meanwhile, as the strike entered its fifth week Monday, the Federal Communications Commission reported that it still was receiving complaints about bogus radio transmissions to airliners but had not been able to track down any of the phantom operators.

Student activities don't come free here

PITTSBURGH (AP) — High school football teams will soon be defending the athletic honor of Lions and Tigers and Bears across the land. At halftime, marching bands will swarm on the gridiron in high-stepping splendor.

Off the field, math club members will twist Rubik's Cubes, and choruses will begin practicing for Christmas concerts.

Extracurricular activities are the icing on America's academic cake. In most communities, they are taken for granted.

But in suburban Bethel Park, students this year will play for the first time, kids who want to participate in various activities are being charged users' fees.

"Why? Our taxes are very high and we're trying to do anything we can to avoid raising them further," athletic director Joe Lodge said.

"Some school districts have flat out eliminated their extracurricular activities because they simply don't have ways to fund them," he added.

Lodge was referring to Massachusetts, where voters approved Proposition 2½ last November. That tax-cutting measure has reduced municipal revenues by $500 million this year. In the schools, non-academic activities and courses are bearing the brunt.

"We're trying to avoid that panic situation. We thought it would be a good idea to get a jump on what appears to be a trend," Lodge said in a telephone interview.

The fee varies with the activity. Football is the most expensive at $35 per student. Boys' basketball is $32, girls' volleyball $10. Most non-athletic programs, like the astronomy club and the student newspaper, cost a nominal $1 or $2.

Lodge said the amount of equipment and supplies used was the criterion for setting the rates.

Frank Lavalle, director of business affairs, said Bethel Park spent about $265,000 on non-academic activities last year. The figure includes salaries and supplies.

The fees will bring in an estimated $15,000 to $18,000.

"That was enough to be significant, but not so much in an opening year that it would be outrageous," Lodge said.

The Bethel Park School District, which has a student population of 6,400, is located in an affluent community in the rolling hills south of Pittsburgh.

Parents look upon the district's education and recreation program with pride. The school also expects in athletics. The football team, 9-3 last year, was the western Pennsylvania runner-up in its category. The basketball and baseball teams won their conferences and both the boys' and girls' swimming teams won the state championships last year.

The new fees have caused hardly a ripple among students, probably because most parents are picking up the cost. But even among the adults, there's been little negative reaction, school officials said.

"I can understand what they're trying to accomplish," said John Stille, president of the Bethel Park Athletic Association, a local booster club.

"It's a sad thing when people work all their lives and can't afford to stay in their homes when they retire because of the tax structure. I'm not convinced my elderly neighbors should have to pay for my son to play football. But on the other hand, I'm concerned that they may want more and more in fees later," he said.

Jim Treher, president of the Bethel Citizen Association, a loosely organized civic group that keeps a sharp eye on taxes, is delighted with the idea.

"If we want these extravaganzas every Friday night for football and the debating society and so on, that's fine, but I don't think citizens should have to pay for that," he said.

Education is big business in Bethel Park. The district budgeted $19.4 million in 1980 and plans to spend $20.6 million this year. The 1981-82 tax rate is a hefty 69.5 mills, up by 5.85 mills in 1980.

That means the school tax bill for a typical homeowner with a house valued at $100,000 will be about $1,750, Lavalle said.

Lodge said the new fees haven't caused any drop in the number of students reporting for fall sports.

Photographer injured

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — A 23-year-old newspaper photographer remained in serious condition Sunday with multiple injuries suffered when she was hit by an airplane taking off from a freeway.

J.B. Hazlett of The San Antonio Express-News was photographing the plane shortly after midnight Saturday on Interstate 37, where it had made an emergency landing earlier Friday night, police said.

She was struck by the tip of one of the plane's wings. The plane wavered from one side of the freeway to the other after hitting Ms. Hazlett, but managed to take off safely, witnesses said.

Ms. Hazlett remained in the intensive care unit of Southeast Baptist Hospital Sunday after surgery to remove her spleen and part of her liver, hospital officials said.

"The doctors say her condition is pretty shaky," said her father, Clyde Hazlett, a Corpus Christi stockbroker.

The Federal Aviation Administration was investigating the accident.

Witnesses said most media representatives were gathered north of the plane. But Ms. Hazlett was south of the aircraft when she was hit, officials said.

Authorities said the woman told witnesses she was going to walk down a few yards from the low-winged Mooney single-engine plane to get a picture from a different angle as the craft took off.

The pilot of the plane, Henry F. Bryant, 47, of San Antonio, declined comment.

Bombing incidents at a glance

By The Associated Press

Here, briefly, are the major explosions that caused death and destruction throughout the world in the past three days:

LIMA, Peru — Explosions caused some damage but no injuries at the U.S. Embassy and the residence of U.S. Ambassador Edwin Corr early Monday, an embassy spokesman said. Police reported explosions at about the same time at two industrial plants.

RAMSTEIN AIR BASE, West Germany — An explosion rocked the street outside the headquarters of the U.S. and NATO air commands Monday, wounding 20 Americans and West Germans, officials reported. West German authorities said it appeared to be the work of terrorists who planted a bomb beneath an automobile. The blast came against a background of mounting anti-American sentiment among some Germans because of U.S. defense policies.

BEIRUT, Lebanon — A bomb damaged an empty jetliner and halted traffic at Beirut's international airport Monday during violence marking the third anniversary of a Shiite Moslem leader's disappearance. Assad Nasr, the president of Middle East Airlines, said the bomb was thrown at the plane by unknown attackers, causing substantial damage.

TEHRAN, Iran — An explosion Sunday at the Tehran building that houses the prime minister's office killed President Mohammad Ali Rajai and Prime Minister Mohammad Javad Bahonar. A spokesman for Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini said a total of seven people died and 15 were injured in the explosion and fire that followed. Tehran Radio said four were killed, however. No group claimed responsibility, although there was speculation it was the work of the Islamic-Marxist Mujahadeen Khalq underground organization that opposes Khomeini's fundamentalist regime.

NABLUS, Israel — A bomb exploded Sunday under a cigarette stand in the occupied West Bank city of Nablus, Israel Radio reported. The broadcast said a young Arab girl was killed and 16 Palestinian Arabs were injured.

Nixon bust returns to the public eye

WASHINGTON (AP) — A marble bust of Richard Nixon, tucked into an out-of-the-way Senate anteroom for the past two years, is in a new spot where more visitors can see it now that Republicans are in power.

But Elliott Carroll, assistant architect of the Capitol, says the move had at least as much to do with aesthetics as it did with politics.

Carroll said Nixon's bust was one of 10 that were moved about a month ago at the request of the Senate Rules Committee, headed by Sen. Charles McC. Mathias Jr., R-Md.

He said the Senate Commission on Arts and Antiquities concurred in the changes.

The Nixon bust was one of several in the Senate Reception Room, an area just off the floor that is frequented by lobbyists but visited by relatively few tourists. Others included the busts of John Nance Garner and Henry Wallace, who served as vice presidents under Franklin Roosevelt.

The Nixon bust's new location is near a bank of elevators in a corridor through which many visitors pass on their way to the Senate gallery. The Garner and Wallace busts were moved to a corridor on the other side of the Senate chamber.

Carroll said the Rules Committee and the Antiquities Commission felt the reception room had a cluttered look with the busts in it.

As a result of the moves, busts of all vice presidents from Charles Dawes, who served under Calvin Coolidge, to Lyndon Johnson are now in the corridors that ring the Senate chamber.

By tradition dating to 1886, the Senate has a bust made of each vice president, constitutionally the Senate's presiding officer.

The Nixon bust had been placed in the reception room when it was brought out of storage two years ago after a delay of several years, at a time when Democrats controlled the Senate.

The Nixon bust is by Italian sculptor Gualberto Ricchi. An earlier version by Ricchi was rejected by the Nixon family in 1967 on grounds it was a bad likeness. By the time Ricchi completed the second version, Nixon was president and decided the bust should not be installed until he returned to private life. Installation of the bust was apparently delayed further by the emotions aroused by the Watergate scandal that forced Nixon's resignation.

Work plan has nurses standing in line

DALLAS (AP) — Hospital administrators battling a nationwide nursing shortage are keeping an eye on one Texas hospital where nurses are waiting in line to participate in a plan developed at an Ohio tire manufacturing plant.

Baylor Medical Center's "Two-days Alternative" scheduling plan, put into effect about nine months ago, "has come of age," said Christy Rossett, director of the hospital's nurse recruitment office.

Under the plan, nurses have the option of working two 12-hour weekend shifts and getting paid as if they had worked a full 40-hour week, she said. Nurses who work during the week are on the job Monday through Friday with every weekend off.

"We are delighted with it," Mrs. Rossett said. "It's such a simple plan, but it has been so very successful."

The weekend program — dubbed the Baylor plan by hospitals across the country where it has been adopted — was the brainchild of a Baylor administrator who read a magazine article about a similar plan developed at an Akron, Ohio tire manufacturing plant.

"He thought it would work just as well for a hospital and it has," Mrs. Rossett said. "Now, we have a long list of nurses waiting to work weekend evenings (a higher paying time period) and only one or two openings on days."

One of the biggest complaints from nurses concerns inflexible hospital scheduling, she said. "This plan allows nurses a more flexible lifestyle."

Months after the program was put into effect, "our (registered nurse) vacancy rate has dropped from 15 percent to less than 5 percent," Mrs. Rossett said.

The weekend plan seems to attract nurses who are going back to school and those with small children, she said. The nurses who work during the week "usually have a more active social life and enjoy having the weekends off."

Many experts view the Baylor plan as a viable way of fighting what has become a critical shortage of nurses across the country, said Nancy Perrin, spokeswoman for the American Nurses Association.

"Nationally, there are about 100,000 vacancies for RNs, and that figure is a year old," she said.

Nurses today are better educated and more demanding than they were years ago, Ms. Perrin added. "Many institutions — like Baylor — are coming up with inventive ideas for making the profession more attractive."

In Texas, there are openings for 11,000 to 12,000 registered nurses, said Clair Jordan, spokeswoman for the Texas Nurses Association.

"The biggest boon (in dealing with the shortage) seems to be flexible scheduling," she said.

A study done by the Baylor Medical Center, a non-profit, private 1,275-bed hospital, showed that 42 percent of the nurses originally signing up for the weekend program were previously unemployed, Ms. Rossett said. Another 8 percent were working for nursing agencies and 50 percent transferred from other hospitals.

"One of our goals was to draw more nurses (who were not working) back into nursing," she said. "It seems we have accomplished that."

The Baylor plan has attracted the attention of hospital administrators, nurses associations, medical journals and other experts looking for ways to deal with the current shortage of nurses, she said.

"When we first implemented the program I was getting at least 20 calls a day about it," she said. "I still get a lot of calls daily about the program."

Several hospitals across the country that have adopted the Baylor plan include: Rush-Presbyterian-St. Luke's Medical Center in Chicago; Washington Hospital Center in Washington D.C.; Hollywood Medical Center in Hollywood, Fla.; and Kettering Medical Center in Kettering, Ohio.

But Baylor officials are quick to warn hospitals to view the two-days alternative "as THE answer to the nursing shortage," Ms. Rossett said.

Even Baylor, which its successful weekend program, is developing other methods aimed at attracting and retaining nurses.

It's too soon to write Kellogg's epitaph

KELLOGG, Idaho (AP) — It's too soon to write Kellogg's epitaph.

The obituary was written in Houston, Texas, last week, but the town isn't dead yet.

The scruffy mining community of 3,400 was jolted last week when Gulf Resource & Chemical Corp. announced it planned to close the century-old Bunker Hill lead, zinc and silver mine by year's end.

The mine employs 2,100 people.

Idaho Gov. John Evans made an emergency trip to Kellogg to provide moral support. He said closure would mean the loss of 10,000 jobs and $10 million a year to the state of Idaho, but he promised to help in the search for a new buyer.

There was still no buyer, Sunday and today a meeting was planned to draw up strategy for closing the mine.

There have been no layoffs yet. The "Gravy Train" has carried three shifts of miners in and out of the Bunker Hill mine each day since the announcement was made.

The glow in the smelter's blast furnaces has yet to go out and a steady flow of lead-laden smoke still pours into the air.

Silver Valley residents may have to watch the mine die a slow death — and because they are used to an economically healthy town and economy — that death watch has been hard to accept.

"We're not dead! We're not even sick," said Bob Douglas, vice president of the Kellogg Chamber of Commerce. "We've got a cold and we're going to get over that cold."

In the union halls, bars and local government offices, the attitude is the same. They tell you Tom Mix will ride into Troubled Valley.

And if a "white knight" isn't found to take over operation of the mine, employees say they will buy the mine themselves.

Evans promised the state "cannot and will not accept" closure of the state's second largest industrial employer.

Despite the optimism, some are more cautious. Dale Lavigne, the businessman and mining executive appointed to head the Silver Valley Economic Recovery Task Force, said:

"There are still people who think that tomorrow morning they're going to wake up and find Gulf has changed its mind. But their losses are real. When the price gets right, maybe someone will buy it."

However, Bunker Hill has been "seriously" for sale for more than two years — and even during the height of the 1980 "silver boom," there wasn't a buyer in sight.

The company made a good profit in 1980 because of high silver prices, but officials say that was one of only two "good" years Bunker Hill has had since it was purchased by Gulf in 1968.

The average return on investment during most years was approximately 3 percent — hardly enough to keep pace with inflation and the rising costs of things like labor and energy.

Gulf has blamed low metals prices for the mine's dismal financial picture, but those low prices are tied to national economic problems.

Lead and zinc — Bunker Hill produces 20 percent of this country's primary lead and zinc — are used largely in the automotive and housing industries. Slumps in those two industries have put thousands of workers in unemployment lines.

Bunker Hill had 14,000 tons of lead stockpiled at its plant in mid-July.

And the company has had trouble getting zinc concentrates — 75 percent of it was imported from overseas to the Bunker refinery.

Gerald Turnbow, vice president of employees and public relations for Bunker Hill, said Japan, the Philippines, Korea and western Europe all competed with Bunker Hill for those concentrates.

"And they can underbid us every time," he said.

In a report to Gulf shareholders earlier this year, Robert H. Allen, chief executive officer, said U.S. consumption of lead in 1980 fell 23 percent below that of 1979, while consumption of zinc fell 15 percent.

At the same time, salaries and wages at Bunker Hill rose 15 percent, electric power was up 23 percent and natural gas cost 49 percent more in 1980 than in 1979.

On top of those increases came the "non-productive" costs of complying with federal, state and local regulations issued by agencies like the Occupational Health and Safety Administration and the Environmental Protection Agency.

Last fall, OSHA cited Bunker Hill for more than 100 violations and fined the company $85,000. Bunker attorneys were later able to get those fines reduced "substantially," Turnbow said.

In 1976, Bunker Hill spent $14 million to build the two 700-foot smokestacks that tower over Kellogg. The strategy was to reduce lead levels in the air immediately surrounding the smelter and Kellogg by sending the pollutants higher into the atmosphere where winds could dissipate them.

So there was more to Gulf's decision that low metals prices. "I don't know if you can say there was a last straw, but if the people don't support industry, industry can't support the people," said E. Viet Howard, former Bunker president turned Sunshine Mining Co. chief.

"In theory, all parties carried some responsibility. Bunker Hill's management could have been more brilliant, the federal agencies could have been more lenient and Congress could have passed more enlightened (tax) laws."

Idaho's Silver Valley has had a 95-year tradition as a mining and metallurgical resource to the country, Howard said.

Infant falls into waterfalls

NIAGARA FALLS, Ontario (AP) — Police have been posted along points of the Niagara River to watch for the body of a 2-month-old baby boy who slipped from his mother's arms and was swept over the Horseshoe Falls, authorities said.

Dunia Sayegh, 28, told Niagara Regional Police that she suffered a dizzy spell and dropped her son, Hesham, while standing at the railing at the brink of the 186-foot-high falls.

The baby fell close to shore, making it unlikely he would have escaped being dashed on the rocks at the bottom of the cascading water, Sgt. Ted Corkery said.

Mrs. Sayegh, of the eastern Toronto borough of Scarborough, was visiting the falls with relatives when the incident occurred about 1:45 p.m. Saturday, police said.

She was examined at the Greater Niagara General Hospital after the incident and was released without treatment when no cause of dizziness was found, according to a hospital spokeswoman.

Mrs. Sayegh and her husband, Rafic, have two other children — a boy and a girl.

Dear Abby

Child's whole story is missing a chapter

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Should a child be told that he is adopted? When my husband (I'll call him Jim) married his first wife, he adopted her 3-month-old illegitimate son who had been fathered by a man who didn't want to marry her. (Jim was aware of all the facts.)

That marriage ended in divorce three years later and Jim married me. The little boy (I'll call him Billy) lives with his mother, but we have him every summer. Billy is now 7, and he thinks Jim is his real father. There are a few people in town who know the whole story—including who Billy's real father is. (He's a respected citizen, now married with children.)

I think Billy should be told that he is adopted. And if he becomes curious about who his real father is, he should be told that, too. His mother refuses to tell him. Jim says he doesn't want to tell him, and I am certainly not going to.

Should we just keep our mouths shut and hope that Billy never finds out?

HAVING DOUBTS IN N.C.

DEAR HAVING: No, Billy should be told the truth when he's sufficiently mature to handle it. His mother should tell him. If she refuses, Jim should. Billy should not hear about it from outsiders, and he surely will since "a few people in town know the whole story."

DEAR ABBY: I just read about the hostess who resents it when guests ask for a "tour" of the house. Here's the flip side of that one: Hostesses who ask their comfortably seated guests if they want a "tour" of the house.

Being polite, you can hardly refuse, then you have to "ooh and ah" about every piece of wallpaper, carpet and object art in the place.

It's not bad the first time, but in one particular case, I'm invited there at least once a year, and I've already seen it. What then?

BORED WITH TOURS

DEAR BORED: Politely decline. With all that "oohing and ahing," you'll never be missed.

DEAR ABBY: In all my 63 years, I've never written to an editor, nor have I ever written to an advice column, but I recently read an item in the newspaper that I think deserves national publicity, and I can think of no better way to get it than through your column. I hope you print it.

RICHARD P., EAST PALATKA, FLA.

DEAR RICHARD: I, too, found the item very inspiring, and here is my edited version:

"Officials at Forest Hills High School in Ocala, Fla., said they had never seen anything like it. Miss Houng Le, 18-year-old valedictorian of her graduating class, drew tears and a standing ovation from her audience when she said:

"My family and I fled Southeast Asia six years ago because we were pro-U.S.A., and had we remained, we would have been executed.

"I owe my very presence on this stage tonight to you and this wonderful country. When we could no longer prevail against our enemies, you accepted over 100,000 of us to your shores, gave us freedom, a new start and a new nation.

"There are some things worth dying for. The freedom you have here is one of those things. I have come to appreciate the United States as the greatest nation on earth. She is worthy of your fullest loyalty and greatest sacrifice.

"Treasure her. Love her. Defend her!"

Most fire deaths occur in homes

QUINCY, Mass. (AP) — There appears to be a trend toward lower fire - death rates in the home, but residential blazes continue to be the No. 1 cause of fire fatalities in the United States, according to the annual survey of the National Fire Protection Association.

Residential fires were disproportionately responsible for fire fatalities in 1980, says the report, "Fire Loss in the United States during 1980," published in "Fire Journal," NFPA's bimonthly magazine.

Of an estimated total of 6,505 lives lost from fire in 1980, residential fires claimed 5,446 victims, and over the past four years, residential fires have accounted for approximately 78 percent of all deaths by fire.

But on an optimistic note, Michael J. Karter Jr., senior NFPA statistician and author of the report, notes that 1980 residential fire deaths are down 5 percent from 1979, with the number of residential fire victims decreasing a total of 11.2 percent between 1977 and 1980.

"This may be the result of increased use of smoke detectors and home fire - safety education efforts," said Robert W. Grant, president of NFPA, an independent non-profit, technical and educational organization dedicated to protecting lives and property from fire.

"We are particularly encouraged to see this trend toward fewer fire casualties in the home," said Grant, "but the home fire problem is still by far our leading area of concern. We urge all homeowners to install smoke detectors and practice exit drills with their families to reduce this tragic problem."

The data for the 1980 survey figures were gathered from a sample of 2,469 fire departments protecting 76.5 million people, or 34 percent of the U.S. population.

BLUEBERRY TART

My variation of a delicious fruit dessert.

Pastry, recipe follows
3 large egg yolks
1-3rd cup commercial sour cream

¾ cup sugar
¼ cup all-purpose flour
3 cups fresh blueberries

Make Pastry Shell. Wash blueberries and dry on paper towels. Beat together the egg yolks, sour cream, sugar and flour until blended. Spread blueberries in the Pastry Shell; pour the yolk mixture over them. Bake in the preheated 350-degree oven until browned — 1 hour. Cool on a wire rack. Loosen edges and remove side-wall. Serve at room temperature. Pass a shaker of confectioners' sugar. Makes 8 servings.

Dr. Lamb

Self-treatment's dangers outweigh savings

By Lawrence Lamb, M.D.

DEAR DR. LAMB — My mother practically lives on antacids. I don't know how many she takes but a box disappears very quickly. And she uses several different kinds. I have suggested that she should see a doctor but she says it is just too much acid and the doctors would just give her an expensive prescription for the same thing she can buy herself.

Is there any danger from taking all those antacids, even if you can buy them without a prescription? Is there a difference in the pills and if so what one is best?

DEAR READER — There hasn't been a pill invented yet that is safe for everybody on all occasions. The biggest danger here is the same you have with many pills people can buy for themselves — the patient may be self-treating the wrong thing. Anyone who requires the regular use of antacids to prevent complaints of indigestion deserves a medical examination. She may have a hiatal hernia — or even a cancer of the stomach. Fortunately these are more rare today. She could even have gallbladder disease.

There are a lot of problems associated with antacids. Some authorities have been concerned about the possible relationship of aluminum (found in aluminum cookware) and possible brain cell changes of the type seen with aging, but you will absorb much more aluminum from antacids that are made with aluminum preparations — and a major portion of them are.

Magnesium in antacids can be a real problem. After age 50 people don't eliminate magnesium as easily from the kidneys and they may accumulate a high blood level which causes magnesium toxicity. The symptoms are those of confusion and senility. Because many older people are the very ones who get overloaded with magnesium in antacids and laxatives, the danger is that someone will be thought to be senile when in fact magnesium toxicity is present.

I am sending you The Health Letter number 10-4, Use and Abuse of Antacids, which you might want your mother to read. Others who want this issue can send 75 cents with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it to me, in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, NY 10019. It includes a list of the ingredients in commonly available preparations and their effects.

DEAR DR. LAMB — Can an eight-hour open heart surgery cause a complete personality change in a person? The surgery was done 10 years ago on my husband at age 40. There wasn't a sweeter and nicer husband or father on this earth before that time. Then five years ago at age 45, he had a complete change in his personality, morals, habits and everything. He became a non-caring, non-feeling, heavy drinker and started dating very young girls.

Four men had the same surgery about the same time. Two have died and one has been in the hospital for a nervous breakdown. They were all about the same age.

DEAR READER — Don't blame it on the surgery. It is true that many patients do develop a postoperative psychosis after major surgery. That can be open heart surgery or other operations. But that change would have been immediate and not five years later. Your husband may be reacting to his life stresses or be in need of psychiatric counseling. Depending on which came first, the alcohol may be a cause or a result of his problem.

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

For nearly a decade now, parents have been trying to lure their children back to the traditional life... four years of college, marriage, a house in the suburbs and babies.

It was all so simple. If you know children at all, you know that all you had to do was to make the price on these things out of their reach.

Did you ever see a kid who would eat crab legs BEFORE he found out how much they cost? Or is interested in a sport until he saw the price tag on the equipment? Or play a musical instrument until he discovered there was only one harpsichord teacher in the state?

It's the way kids are raised. If it doesn't have a price tag on it, it can't be worth much.

From the looks of the latest figures, I think we've seen the last of the college drop-outs who wanted time to "find out who I am." Now that tuition, room and board are $10,000 a year with no signs of leveling off, I predict colleges and universities will be jammed.

I think we've seen the last of the flower children nomads who lived in communes (and flew first class) and believed the best things in life were free: indulgent parents. The price of an average home on the West Coast is $86,000 and still climbing.

As for babies, according to a report from Parents magazine, it costs a quarter of a million dollars to raise a child to the age of 18, not counting catsup. There is no counting to believe the cost will stabilize.

Without knowing it, what we have done is to give to our young people the poverty they so desperately need... the old American dream we all talked about and worked for, but was always out of our grasp. It's never been out of theirs before. The struggle has been missing from their lives.

I look forward to the next ten years, when this generation returns to the Ozzie and Harriet experience. What we're going to see is a return of graduates with pride on their faces... young marrieds working at staying together while they share their responsibilities, and young parents determined to give their children everything they didn't have. And the cycle begins again.

Bleach found in Taiwan shrimp

By TINE CHOU Associated Press Writer TAIPEI, Taiwan (AP) — Tiny dried shrimps — a Chinese delicacy — have caused a big headache to Taiwan's "Ralph Nader," but have also helped him gain popularity and respect.

Chai Sung Lin, 45, recently created a storm of controversy after he discovered many dried shrimps sold in Taiwan contained fluorescent bleaching agents which could cause cancer.

His finding has sparked alarm and concern among consumers as well as fishermen who claimed they suffered great financial losses because of unsold fresh shrimps as a result of the discovery.

Lined shrimps, a delicacy in themselves and an important ingredient in Chinese cooking, are made from fresh ones by exposing them under sunlight. Chai, a professor of demography, said some of them were injected with fluorescent bleaching agents to prevent them from spoiling.

Chai, who founded Taiwan's Consumer Foundation, financed by private donations, in November 1980, stressed that fresh shrimps contain no such chemicals but his finding frightened people away from eating even the fresh ones.

Government officials dismissed the finding on grounds of insufficient scientific evidence, and accused Chai, the first person in Taiwan to launch a vigorous consumer protection campaign, of "disturbing social stability and human confidence."

Chai countercharged that authorities have disregarded consumers' safety and insisted that the testing was conducted by qualified chemists.

He said the sole purpose of his campaign was to "warn consumers of life-threatening products and food before it's too late," adding that he had no intention of creating social instability.

But a spokesman of Taiwan's National Health Administration charged that Chai's finding was "merely preliminary," and said that careless announcements could cause "unnecessary alarm" among the public.

He said that further examinations by his organization had shown that no dried shrimps sold in Taiwan contained fluorescent bleaching agents.

However, many people in Taiwan have ignored the Health Administration's finding and preferred to believe in Chai. As a result, sales of dried shrimps have been drastically reduced.

Despite controversies, Chai declared that he had won the "battle of dried shrimps" because he had aroused consumers' awareness of their rights. Letters by the hundreds and telephone calls poured into his foundation to express support and encourage him to continue his fight for consumers.

Additionally, many newspapers and periodicals have heaped praise on him and his work, and one magazine dubbed Chai "Taiwan's Ralph Nader."

The issue of dried shrimps was not Chai's only battle for consumers. He has won several minor skirmishes. They include banning of harmful cosmetics, outlawing contaminated cooking oil, and stopping the sales of stale bread.

Oilers back Stabler in gambling probe

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Oilers officials are continuing to rally to support controversial quarterback Ken Stabler, who is under investigation by the National Football League's security staff for possible associations with gamblers. "As I read the story, it implicitly says all investigations into the matter proved inconclusive," Oiler General Manager Ladd Herzog said Monday. "Thousands of innocent people are investigated all the time by various agencies. Unfortunately, Kenny makes national headlines because he's a famous football player." Herzog referred to a Sunday report by the New York Times that linked Stabler with convicted bookmaker Nicholas Dudich of Perth Amboy, N.Y. Oiler head coach Ed Biles said he supported Stabler fully and added it was time for "someone to put up or shut up." NFL Executive Director Don Weiss confirmed the NFL was investigating Stabler's acquaintances and also that the Oiler quarterback had been watched while he was with the Oakland Raiders. The Times said the investigations proved inconclusive. "As far as the Oilers are concerned we were aware of an investigation, but we also knew that it turned up no evidence of impropriety on anyone's part," Herzog said. "I'm afraid Kenny's a victim of his own stardom." Stabler, 35, made headlines in mid-July when he announced his retirement after an illustrious 11-year career. Stabler just as dramatically came out of retirement last Wednesday by signing a two-year contract that will pay him a reported $750,000. Herzog said the timing of the story "absolutely stinks" and implied it might be an offshoot of Oakland Managing Partner Al Davis' dispute with the NFL. Davis made a significant contribution to the Times story.

Jays get revenge on Jenkins in 3-0 victory over Rangers

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — The Toronto Blue Jays got the revenge Monday night — not Ferguson Jenkins. The Texas Ranger right-hander had said he was going "head-hunting" against the Blue Jays, whom he termed a team "anybody could beat." Instead, the Blue Jays followed the seven-hit pitching of Dave Stieb to a 3-0 victory over the Rangers and Jenkins, who had beaten them 2-0 last week in Toronto. "Some of Jenkins' statements were ridiculous and they really got us pumped up," said Stieb, the Blue Jays' All-Star pitcher who is now 7-9. "You just don't say that anybody can beat us because you don't even have to play the game to know that any team can win," said Stieb, who perplexed the Rangers a week ago with his inside pitches. "He said he wanted to go head-hunting." "Well, Jenkins made several mistakes and one of them was not following up on what he said he was going to do." Jenkins, now 5-7, was chased in the eighth inning on Jorge Bell's double, a bunt single by Al Woods, a single by Garth Iorg, a sacrifice fly by Danny Ainge and catcher Ernie Whitt's squeeze bunt. "I'm not going to say anybody can beat the Rangers," said Stieb. "I want to give myself a little credit. They have a tough team to shut out." The Blue Jays left 13 runners stranded and the bases loaded three times as Jenkins struggled with six walks. Toronto turned three doubleplays behind Stieb as the Rangers got only two runners to second base.

Astros make it five in a row

HOUSTON (AP) — For Houston Astro pitcher Don Sutton, a nine-hitter might not be that much to get excited about. But don't tell the Astros' bullpen. Sutton, 7-7, recorded the Astros' first complete game of the second half Monday as Houston downed the New York Mets, 6-1, for the Astros' fifth consecutive win. "We definitely needed it," said reliever Joe Sambito. "It couldn't have come at a better time. Dave Smith and Frank LaCorte needed the day off more than I did, since they pitched the last three days in a row." "I could have cranked it up, but I'm glad to get the rest." The Astros' relievers greeted Sutton with their own standing ovation after he recorded his third complete game of the season. Sutton struck out eight, tying a personal season high, and walked one, but says the key was a three-run first inning by the Astros. "They gave me some runs early, which gives me the luxury of being able to get ahead of the hitters," Sutton explained.

British smokers kick the habit in face of savage taxes

LONDON (AP) — After puffing doggedly through years of alarming reports on the risk to their health, hundreds of thousands of British smokers have kicked the habit in the past six months — persuaded by savage tax hikes.

Tobacco company executives, reporting a 10 percent drop in sales, say this time smokers are sticking to their resolution.

A survey in the Guardian newspaper described it as "the biggest and most abrupt change in national smoking habits since cigarettes were introduced at the turn of the century," and estimated that 2 million of Britain's 17 million adult smokers have quit.

Their will was stiffened by two 1981 tax increases. In an austere March budget, the Conservative government slipped an extra 14 pence — about 26 cents — on the tax for a pack of 20.

It followed with a 3-pence increase in July, about 5 cents, sending the tax up 30 percent in six months and the average price of a pack to the equivalent of $1.75.

The tobacco companies, which report falling profits, are due to add an additional 2 pence in the fall.

The Treasury collects 75 percent of the retail price. It will get an estimated $7.4 billion this year. At that rate, in just two years British smokers will pay the equivalent of their country's bill for the U.S. Trident nuclear missile system, which costs $12 billion.

"I think any industry which has to carry this kind of burden is bound to be worried," said a spokesman for the Tobacco Advisory Council, which represents manufacturers.

Britons now pay up to three times more for cigarettes than do other Western Europeans. Smoking is considered the single biggest cause of premature deaths, killing at least 50,000 Britons a year, mainly through heart disease and lung cancer.

Since the mid-1960s the Department of Health has been reeling out statistics and eminent physicians' reports. It's been backed by compulsory health warnings on packs and "voluntary" agreements with tobacco corporations to curb advertising, including a six-year ban on television ads.

Even so, cigarette consumption has fallen only gradually until now, but smokers' determination to quit has been aroused as never before by Chancellor of the Exchequer Sir Geoffrey Howe. The downturn is most marked among the professional classes — only 21 percent now smoke. A 1980 government survey indicated that 39.5 percent of adult Britons smoked.

Herbert Bentley, assistant managing director of Imperial Tobacco, the largest British manufacturer, said this month there was no sign of recovery in consumption. He estimated the overall drop for the year will be 8 percent to 15 percent.

Bentley estimates total sales of 107 billion cigarettes this year, compared with 121.8 billion in 1980. Retailers report a run on packs of 10 instead of 20s.

David Simpson — director of the independent, government-financed anti-smoking organization Action on Smoking and Health, known as ASH — has been skeptical of sales figures, maintaining that tobacco companies have reported slumps in the past to drum up government concern about increasing unemployment.

But now, Simpson said: "We are really quite thrilled. We are fairly optimistic there is a real change, which will be a lasting one as long as the chancellor moves to keep prices up."

Both sides question each other's statistics. The Tobacco Advisory Council says people conceal or underestimate their smoking in answering surveys. "This is understandable, because they're made to feel guilty about it," the spokesman said.

Unashamedly in favor of smoking are members of a 2-year-old pressure group called Forest. Its initials stand for Freedom Organization for the Right to Enjoy Smoking Tobacco, and it says its annual budget of $93,000 comes from 5,000 memberships and from the tobacco companies. "People are being forced to give up by prices, and it's damnable," said Forest's full-time director, retired Anglican church administrator Geoffrey Evans, a portly 50-year-old who smokes 40 cigarettes a day.

"Our slogan is 'More Ventilation and Less Legislation.' We're sick of the growing tendency by government and other self-appointed busy-bodies to interfere with our rights as individuals to enjoy smoking."

Evans also questions statistics, especially the Health Department's estimate of the annual death toll from smoking.

"Where does this stuff come from?" Evans asked. "If you believed all you read about what causes cancer and heart attacks, you'd wonder why half of us are alive at all."

Cost of college to soar

NEW YORK (AP) — Students face a record jump in college costs this school year, says a survey released today by the College Board.

The increases follow a decade of relative price calm, when tuition and other expenses were increasing more slowly than the national inflation rate, said Joe Paul Case of the College Scholarship Service, the board's financial aid division.

Tuition and fees, room and board, books and supplies and transportation and personal expenses will go up 13 percent to an average $6,885 at private four-year schools, the survey said.

At public four-year colleges, the survey said, student costs will rise 14 percent to $3,873.

The survey of 1,160 four-year universities and colleges has been taken each year since 1970 by the College Scholarship Service.

Case said the increases, with President Reagan's cuts in student loans, "indicates that many parents and students will be asked to cover more of the bill than in the past."

Case said the sudden increases have been delayed because "colleges have worked hard at keeping costs down as well as generating new incomes (and) have been particularly successful during the past five years when inflation was unrelenting."

But Case said the board expects prices to rise less sharply in the 1982-83 school year because "college costs mirror fluctuations in the economy a year or so after they appear in the prices of consumer goods and services as measured by the Consumer Price Index."

The survey found Bennington College in Vermont leading the way as the nation's most expensive college, with a year of fees at $12,030.
