Reagan pledges to ease loan limits to aid housing industry

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, declaring that "housing is one of our highest social priorities," told a real estate group today that his administration will ease guidelines to help potential homebuyers qualify for FHA mortgages and take other measures to help the ailing industry.

Reagan made his comments in a speech to the National Association of Realtors at the hotel where he was shot a vear ago Tuesday

While Reagan asked his audience to support his economic program, he also announced a few measures to help them out. Reagan said:

-The Labor Department is removing · barriers to "free a flow of critically needed funds for housing from pension He said more than $500 billion is invested by pension funds, but only 10 percent of that amount currently is invested in mortgages.

-He will ease guidelines "to expand the number of potential homebuyers qualifying for FHA mortgage loans.

While conceding that "something has gone very wrong." Reagan said that budget-busing bailouts will only aggravate the interest rate problem the underlying problem in the housing

White House counselor Edwin Meese III had hinted that the administration was prepared to retreat from its February budget proposal when he said last Friday that "some changes are necessary because during the time the budget has been up there (on Capitol Hill), the potential deficit has grown.

The president originally forecast a fiscal 1983 deficit of $91.5 billion. The administration since then has raised the figure to $96.4 billion. And the Congressional Budget Office, whose figures are accepted by Republicans and Democrats in the House and Senate, says the deficit under the

But David R. Gergen, White House assistant for communications, said Saturday that Meese's comments should not be interpreted as an indication that Reagan has relaxed his opposition to altering the budget

The administration has maintained that the president will not tamper with the reduction in income tax rates that took effect last year or with its proposed 18 percent increase in defense

Speakes said Sunday that Reagan would say "we're listening" to budget suggestions advanced by members of Congress, "but we're not retreating from our basic principles.

Unlike a year ago when the administration and Senate Republicans worked side-by-side to cut more than $30 billion from anticipated 1982 spending, there are continuing differences this year stemming from the anticipated record deficit. The Senate Budget Committee begins work on the budget on Tuesday.

Republicans and Democrats agree there is almost no support for the budget submitted by the White House because of the projected deficits.

Columbia is waved off; will try again Tuesday

WHITE SANDS MISSILE RANGE. N.M. (AP) - Space shuttle Columbia, scheduled to return from its ambitious third test flight, was "waved off" today just 39 minutes before deorbit as desert winds whipped the gypsum sands across Northrup Strip, 141 miles below.

"I think we ought to knock this off," John Young, commander of Flight 1, told Mission Control after taking a NASA jet aloft to test the skies.

OK, John, we copy and we concur. "Sorry about that guys," Young said. Another attempt to bring the ship home was set for Tuesday - and at Kennedy Space Center in Florida. ironically, the weather was simply miserable there today and for the past Astronauts Jack R. Lousma and C. Gordon Fullerton, who were in no danger, were informed of the decision at 11:02 a.m., MST. They were to have landed at 12:27 p.m. on the gypsum floor of New Mexico's Tularosa Basin.

The shuttle, the first craft to make runway landings, is the first American spacecraft held in space because of bad weather below. In bad weather, the old space capsules would simply shift descent paths and land in calmer seas

On Northrup Strip, in the hours before scheduled landing, strong winds got even stronger throughout the morning. With sand swirling across the runway and winds gusting above, Young first recommended a shift in runways, then he said forget it.

"There are about two miles visibility on runway 17. Runway 23 is covered up with sand. I think we ought to knock this off," he said.

Mission Control quickly announced 'We're waving the landing for today. Lousma and Fullerton were briefly none the wiser. They were out of touch, destined to spend another day in space.

When Joe Engle, the flight 2 commander gave them the news. Lousma said, "OK. Well, we've had a good drill.

After they had donned their pressure suits for descent, Mission Control's Steve Nagel told Lousma and Fullerton:

"The forecast is for the winds to pick up, and we will have to watch it all the way to the deorbit burn. There is some probability of a waveoff, but we don't anticipate that." On the strip, winds were whipping sand and visibility on the ground was difficult. Most spectators kept to their cars.

Lousma and Fullerton were to end

Conviction of Amarillo police officer upheld

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court today rejected the appeal of a onetime Amarillo, Texas, policeman convicted and sentenced to death for the 1975 killing of a teen-age girl.

The justices left intact Jim Vanderbilt's conviction and death sentence for the April 1, 1975 murder of 16-year-old Katina Moyer.

His appeal had contended that Vanderbilt did not receive a fair trial. Prosecutors said Vanderbilt, formerly a city police officer, abducted the girl in her mother's station wagon while she waited to pick up her mother. Vanderbilt resided a few blocks from the school where Katina's mother, a school teacher, worked their 7-full-day, 3-million-mile journey with a supersonic tour of America's scenic Southwest and wheels down on one of two runways that form an X on barren Northrup strip. Now the flight plan has to be redrawn with a descent to Cape Canaveral.

'We look forward to coming back.' commander Lousma radioed before he and Fullerton retired Sunday night.

Despite a number of nagging technical problems that kept them on their toes, the astronauts said a safe landing would give them "a 100 percent mission." They appeared relaxed and ready on Sunday, conducting final scientific tests, troubleshooting a couple of the minor problems and testing systems needed for the fiery

The space travelers originally were to have flown Columbia back to Edwards Air Force Base in California where it landed after its first two flights. But rain flooded the runways there before Lousma and Fullerton were launched, and touchdown and tons of equipment were shifted 800 miles to the east, and a makeshift base sprouted for 500 technicians flown in.

Otherwise, the re-entry routine was almost the same, starting an hour before landing with a 21/2-minute firing of two rockets that slow Columbia's 17.500-mile-an-hour speed by 187 miles an hour. The ignition will start the rocketship on a descending path that skips north of Australia, over the Pacific north of Hawaii, across the California coast, Arizona and New Mexico.

The astronauts, if they have time, could see such scenic beauties as California's Big Sur, the Mojave Desert, the Grand Canyon, the Rocky Mountains and the Colorado and Rio Grande Rivers.

They would have no trouble spotting the missile base, nearly 100 square miles of very, very white bright sand surrounded by an expanse of brown desert pockmarked by dull-green mesquite, yucca and other scrubbrush. The runways are outlined in asphalt with a broken black line running down the middle of each.

During a week in space, Lousma and Fullerton advanced the shuttle solidly toward its intended assignment as a transporter of military, commercial and scientific space cargoes. After one more test flight in June, it is to begin operational flights next November, hauling up two commercial communications satellites

"This flight has taken us a gigantic step toward an operational vehicle." Hutchinson said.

The flight got off to a good start with the ship taking off on March 22. NASA had set that date three months ago and was determined to keep to it to show potential customers that the shuttle can be counted on for reliable on-time launches.

Among other pluses, the crew:

- More than doubled Columbia's time in space

- Successfully tested the ability of the the ship's robot arm to snare and lift a payload in the cargo bay. The Canadian-built device is vital to the shuttle's eventual mission of placingsatellites in orbit and retrieving them

- Subjected the ship to several thermal stresses by exposing different portions to the temperature extremes of space and measuring the effects. The response shows that the thermal. extremes are not as critical as we' thought," flight director Harold Draughon said. "It doesn't get as cold or as hot as we thought."

- Performed a variety of scientific tasks: processing medicines, studying the sun; assessing the ship's environment: observing the growth of plants and the behavior of insects in weightlessness

"Among the in-flight problems:

- Thirty-seven heat-resistent tiles were either lost or damaged, apparently during launch, but NASA said their loss would not affect the craft's ability to re-enter the atmosphere. Hutchinson said this problem will receive a lot of post-flight attention because it was a big surprise.

- Three of the four primary S-band data downlink radio loops were lost. But the flight continued smoothly with the remaining one and three backup

Doctors are hoping to stimulate hunger of cancer-eating cells

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) - A once-promising method of killing cancers with microscopic drug capsules has proved disappointing, but it may spawn a technique to turn the body's healthy cells into cancer-devouring "garbage collectors," researchers say.

Scientists now say every approach tried to deliver anti-cancer drugs to tumors in small spheres called liposomes has been a bust.

It was hoped the capsules would ferry toxic drugs to a cancer cell and degrade after entering the tumor. It would thus release deadly doses of the drugs directly onto the cancer but keep it away from healthy tissue and avoid or reduce the side effects that anti-cancer drug therapy often has.

Despite the publicity liposomes have attracted since the mid-1970s as a potentially revolutionary system to fight cancer, their performance in the body never matched their test-tube potential, said Dr. George Poste. research director of SmithKline and French Laboratories in Philadelphia. "I think the targeting of liposomes to tumor cells is a lost cause," Poste, one of the pioneers in liposome research, told an American Cancer Society science writers' seminar here Sunday.

The capsules, made of fatty materials similar to cell membranes, are eaten by the body's defense system before they can reach the cancer cells. Poste said. But the very reason liposomes fail as miniature anti-tumor missiles may give them a new role in fighting cancer.

The liposomes could not reach the intended cancer because almost all cells soon after they were injected into These white cells, termed the "garbage collectors of the body." eat dead cells, foreign particles and other debris, he said Another researcher, Dr. Isiah J.

Fidler, of the National Cancer Institute's Frederick Cancer Research Center in Maryland, has found that the white cells, or macrophages, will destroy virtually any type of cancer cell when stimulated by certain chemicals.

For unknown reasons, macrophages do not attack cancer unless activated by these chemicals. But the synthetic chemicals that spur macrophages in the laboratory are water-soluble and frequently pass through the bodies of ' test animals before they can do their job, Fidler told the seminar.

Reagan said to back nuclear talks

Announcement of support for expected that Reagan would be making S.-Soviet negotiations aimed at a gradual reduction in nuclear armaments is expected from President Reagan this week, according to administration officials.

Reagan, one official said Sunday, probably will follow the suggestions in a bipartisan resolution that eight senators introduced last week.

That proposal, whose backers include Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., and Minority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., calls for the administration to "propose to the Soviet Union a long-term, mutual and verifiable nuclear forces freeze at equal and sharply reduced levels of forces.'

The administration official, who asked not to be identified, said, "We'll probably endorse that proposal. Another official, who also asked that "a major new initiative." but that he would address the nuclear weapons issue because "he recognizes many are concerned about arms control.' The president is likely to be dealing with the theme at his news conference this week, which probably will be Wednesday. A time had not been announced for the conference.

The resolution introduced by the group of eight senators, which was first proposed by Sens. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., and John Warner, R-Va., is designed to allow the president to acknowledge the growing national concern over the arms race while still dealing with the Soviets from a position of strength.

The administration rejected Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev's March 17 offer to freeze deployment of medium-range nuclear missiles in the European part of the Soviet Union. saying the Soviet move didn't go far . The Brezhnev announcement was widely seen as the latest attempt to counter NATO plans to begin deployment of 572 medium-range Pershing II and Cruise missiles in Western Europe in 1983. Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr., appearing on NBC's "Meet the" Press," Sunday, said the Brezhnev proposal in effect called on the United States "to quit while you're behind."

Reagan always has insisted that there be verifiable reductions in nuclear weaponry.

Reagan has rejected another proposal being sponsored by 20 senators and 154 House members which_ urges an immediate worldwide freeze on nuclear arms. That, says the administration, would put the United States at a disadvantage to the Soviet

Texans help Salvadorans hide

DALLAS (AP) - In the tradition of the 'underground railroad' network that helped Vietnam war resisters flee to Canada during the 1960s, a coalition of Texans is helping Salvadorans trying to flee their country, the Dallas Morning News reports.

The informal network involves Quakers. Catholics and other Texans trying to help the Salvadorans get around U.S. immigration policy that denies the refugees politcal asylum, the newspaper said Sunday "These (Salvadorans) are suffering people, and if our country's laws are unjust and immoral, then it behooves us in the Quaker spirit to do what is just," said a Quaker spokesman in Corpus Christi who asked The News not to publish his name.

The network has evolved in the last year the newspaper said. It gives legal aid to . Salvadorans already apprehended and sanctuary to those who have avoided detection by the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service, the newspaper said.

'There are a lot of people so concerned about the plight of these people that they do have their homes available (for refugees), and if I asked for that support, there wouldn't be any trouble in getting it. I would have any number of names," the spokesman said.

No estimates are available on the number of Salvadorans helped by the network, but it probably runs into the hundreds, the Quaker Sister Linda Hajek, a Catholic nun in Dallas, said an organization she helps has been in touch with about 30 Salvadorans during the past six months.

"What we want to do is try to help them as much as possible legally, which is difficult because the government doesn't grant political asylum too easily," she said.

Paula Kuzmich, a spokeswoman for the Bureau of Human Affairs of the State Department, said politicial asylum is granted only to those who can show fear of persecution because of race, religion or political affiliation

More than 6,000 Salvadorans asked for asylum last year but only four met the State Department criteria in 1981, said INS spokesman Duke Austin.

Dr. Chad Richardson, professor of sociology at Pan American University in Edniburg, said the Texas network offers help ranging from providing a meal to arranging transportation northward from Corpus Christi, Houston or Dallas.

As each of the more than 4,000 bills and resolutions is introduced in the 1983 Legislature, it will be transmitted into the computer and stored in the memory bank.

This does away with the tedious and difficult task of typing out each bill, duplicating it and then storing the various copies in appropriate filing drawers. Under the new system, if a change or amendment needs to be made in a bill, it is called up out of the computer memory on a video display terminal, the changes are made and then restored to the memory. If copies are needed, a touch of a button provides a clean copy of a bill that can easily be duplicated.

Donations of land

Interior Secretary James Watt, Peck's Bad Boy of the Reagan administration, is in hot water again.

Sen. Charles Percy, R - Ill., and others on Capitol Hill are in a proper stew because Secretary Watt, through something called his Good Neighbor Policy," is playing Santa Claus to Western cities, counties, and states with highly valuable federal lands. Moreover, the senators have uncovered evidence of gross mismanagement of federal lands by the Interior Department's Bureau of Land Management

Consider an infuriating example in Las Vegas. While the BLM has been trying in vain to sell 91 parcels of scrub desert property five miles outside of the city for an inflated $15,000 an acre, it offered 160 acres alongside the fantastically expensive Strip worth at leat $18 million to Clark County for $2.50.

The senators have discovered numerous instances where federal lands turned over to cities and states for park and public uses were subsequently sold or leased to private enterprises for large profits. Indeed, the Office of Management and Budget testified earlier this year that, in violation of federal law, more than half the federal land donated to states and localities is never put to promised uses. Thus far, nobody has

Sen. Percy estimates that 900,000 acres of federally owned land in the West, which adjoin towns and cities, are worth at least $2 billion. He believes the time is overdue for a much stricter accounting of BLM

With a deficit of about $100 billion, it's nothing short of ridiculous for the Interior Department to give away federal lands that could be sold for those adjoining the Strip in Las Vegas are not Mr. Watt's to donate to Clark County. These are asssets held in trust for all of the American people. These lands should not, of course, be permanently frozen. Their disposal for public use by local jurisdictions is one thing. But it is something altogether different when valuable federal property is sold for private development without proper compensation to the U.S. Treasury. Clark County, Nevada, and other such areas seeking free federal lands for private development should not be endowed at our collective loss.

Money alone cannot produce good soldiers

continued existence, people and societies throw all their resources into the fray. But when facing winter after winter of a cold war of attrition. we are mindful that in the long run national security depends not only on armaments but on economic vitality. Defense expenditures necessarily pose an economic sacrifice for Americans, but must be managed in present circumstances so as not to sacrifice out chances for economic

President Reagan has proposed a record $215.9 billion defense budget for 1983, a 13 percent increase from last year, after allowing for inflation. In the face of severe cutbacks in social services and a spiraling overall budget deficit now predicted at $98.6 billion, this defense budget faces criticism in Congress from representatives of both parties and all parts of the country.

A strong national defense is a priority for America. That does not mean that the Pentagon should get every program it wants. Increased training, ammunition and funds for conventional forces should take priority over untested weapons systems. At a time when fiscal austerity is demanded of the civilian sector, some cuts must be made in the military budget.

Strength in arms, like victory in battle, is not dependent on money alone. Leadership, preparedness and quantity of weapons are crucial. As the defense debate rages, here are suggested changes that would not cost the government more money. but might improve defense dramatically.

Technological innovation is becoming an inreasingly costly part of defense expenditures. We can design more advanced weapons than the Soviets, to offeset our smaller number of soldiers. But the Russians build greater numbers of medium technology weapons. Which would previal in battle: higher technology or superior numbers? James Fallows, in his book

"National Defense," says that the search for the magical weapon that can destroy many times its number has produced fewer weapons at greater cost and lower reliability. The advanced F - 15 fighter is about four times as costly as the F - 5 medium - technology fighter. The F -5 can fly 2.5 sorties a day, and the F-15 only one. Thus, for the same price, the U.S. could build 1,000 F - 5 fighters and only 250 F - 15s. In combat, that would mean 2,500 sorties a day by the F - 5, compared to 250 F - 15 sorties, a differential of 10 to 1. Is the F - 15 10 times as good as the F - 5? One analyst claims the F and that may be the nub of our problem."

Economic conditions

By ANTHONY HARRIGAN It isn't easy to arrive at a balanced view of the nation's economic situation. There are marked regional differences in economic activity.

If one visits Denver, Colo., one encounters an economic boom. New skyscrapers are being rushed to completion to meet the needs of oil companies and other enterprises doing business in the Rocky Mountain states. Workers are pouring into the city from

In New England, business is doing pretty well. Massachusetts, with many small, high technology companies, is getting along nicely.

Elsewhere, there are major problems. The old industrial heartland - around Toledo, Ohio, for example, is suffering as the auto industry continues to contract. Few political leaders in either party seem to recognize the extent to which recession in this area and industry are made in Japan. They aren't loud in calling for fair trade on the part of the Japanese.

The South is hurting in this recession, partly because it is now tied more closely to the national economic system than it was a decade or more ago.

People in the housing industry have been hit hardest of all. One substantial dealer in building materials told me. 'We are losing from $150,000 to $175,000 each week in sales, which is about one third of our business." He said that he has "laid off approximately 75 people since Nov. 1, has sold 25 trucks, has cut time on another 20 to 30 people, and we still are not doing good." For this businessman and others in a similar situation, the country is in a depression, not a recession picture of despair and ruin. They attempt to portray President Reagan as an uncaring individual who has denied poor people the most basic help. This is a cruel distortion of the real situation. The "safety net" is certainly in place, considering that the proposed federal budget authorizes 95 million subsidized meals every day and food stamps for 19 million people

This is more than a safety net; it is welfare on a scale that must be reduced. One reason Ronald Reagan was elected President was that a majority of the voters wanted the welfare state to be reduced in size, nor simply to have its growth slowed.

Many people have excessive expectations of federal aid. Students at American Unviersity in Washington reently protested planned cutbacks in student loans. There's no reason why the taxpayers should provide such loans. If the fees at American Univesity and other expensive institutions are beyond a student's capacity to pay, he will have to attend college at a state or community institution. No one has a right to subsidized education at an Ivy League college or other costly private

The liberals, who are creating such a furor over the economy, haven't any answer to the nation's economic problems. They can't prime the pump. as they have done in the past. The money isn't available for the pump priming. This means the nation will have to struggle through its current difficulties and lower its expectations; It won't be fun, but it is necessary.

Many people will have to accept lower wages and benefits. The administration and Congress will have to act to prevent dumping of goods on the American market by foreign producers who seek to export their employment problems. Much deeper cuts will have to be made in the federal bureaucracy.

In time, business inventories will be depleted and require replenishment. production will revive, bringing the nation out of recession. It will be a very slow, protracted process, however.

Men and women are the greatest resource of our military, and must not be forgotten while the Pentagon pursues ever more expensive arms.

good soldier. When veterans talk about heroism, they speak of the love courage and commitment who stuck bond of loyalty. Field commands were seen as necessary for promotion, not as opportunities for leadership. The pressure to move up service has sacrificed many devoted soldiers. The Pentagon is the largest bureaucracy in Washington and is policies. Managers have desks behind the lines. Fighting has always

A newspaper cannot tell the military how to do its job. But it can pass on the advice written by instructor Dandridge Malone on a blackboard at the Army War College: "Management is the 'physics' of things, but leadership is the 'chemistry' of people. When, in war, men must die (and in war, some must), they can't be managed to death ... they must be led there. 'Sacrifice' has an honored place in leadership, but not in management . .

Your child, age one...

By PAUL HARVEY If your child is between one and three, be careful

Modern medicine has been fascinated by what happns to us before we are born and during infancy - but has neglected until recently much understanding of what happens between the first and third birthdays.

Those two years in child development may be most important of all.

Harvard's Professor Jerome Kagan, having studied the least and the most "civilized" of humans, is convinced that the transition from infancy to early childhood, the period betweent he first and third birthdays, is crucial.

It is then that language and speech are acquired; this is the time of most significant cognitive development. Self - awareness and gender identity emerge — and the first moral standards and social standards are

At ages 1 through 3 we first learn right from wrong, empathy, pride, shame and self - consciousness.

When you hear a mixed - up adult say, "My parents rejected me," what he may mean is that his parents imposed standards beyond what he could meet. And while the influences during this second 24 months of a child's life are not indelible, they are a powerful push in Dr. Kagan believes if we are ever to succeed in "preventive mental health," in anticipating aberrant behavior, this is the time frame we must study more

By PAUL HARVEY

His conclusion is confirmed by half a dozen researchers in this field; that child abuse or neglect or malnutrition during the first year may have comparatively little lasting effect, but the next two years, for better or worse, the human personality is more firmly

Significantly, this is the period when in "civilized" societies — class differences first appear.

The best predictor of school performance and delinquency during adolescence is the social class of the child's family.

So more knowledge of this period might alleviate this problem. Most psychologists in recent years have blamed "environment"; that's too

Now it is apparent that psychological, biological and social variables all contribute to the development profile.

As psychologists demonstrate more interest in this 1 - through - 3 period, the least we can hope for is improved nursery schooling. The most we can hope for is to learn therapeutic intervention at a time when love and hate and achievement and violence are

Mending Mature Marriage

Adjusting to the pains of age

"DEAR LOUISE: We're getting real discouraged, W and I. We can't seem to endure all the health problems we have developed the last few years. I hope you can tell us if you other people who have difficulties like ours — and what they do about it.

"We're old and sick. Well, not really old, only 69 and 71. But we've got more than our share of things wrong with us and it upsets us real bad, all the time. We hardly ever get down sick killing him too. but we're always ailing somehow. And it's a real bad nuisance.

"We get too many colds. We can't have salt because of our blood pressure. We have so many allergies between us that we can't eat much. What he can eat, I can't - and the other way around. I cook two menus for us every meal.

"We don't get our much because we feel so bad. We just sit home and yell at each other. And that's no fun. Are there a lot of older couples with health troubles like ours? How do they manage to stay happy? Or do they? B.L."

DEAR B.L. I don't know any couple our age who doesn't have aches and pains part of the time. But, in most cases, they So you must put our more strength of character than most of do something about it. They exercise regularly, in health spas or at home. They take cold shots, which cut down or eliminate colds. They don't mind doing cooking for each other's special diets. They take physicals at least once a year, to be sure they are getting the medical attention they need.

But some of them, like you, refuse to adjust to their present lives and thus make themselves and each other miserable.

I have my problems — allergies too numerous to mention, metatarsalgia (extremly painful toe) — and all the small nuisances of asthma, hay fever and sinusitis. I could sit around and worry myself into insanty about them. But, years ago, I said to myself, "If this is as good as I'm ever going to feel, I'll accept it and have a happy life anyway."

That's what I've done. I know a lot of people who have done the

of you.

Stop feeling sorry for yourselves. Get out, go shopping, visit friends, take up hobbies. Don't talk about your troubles. Don't talk about your troubles. Don't talk about your troubles. even think about them. If you are feeling as good as you ever will, accept it and live with it without complaining. You can. I know - because I do.

"DEAR LOUISE: Can grief kill you? I think it's doing it to me. And my crying all the time is upsetting my husband, so it's

"We've had family losses in the last year that nobody should ever have to live through. My sister died eight months ago. Then F's uncle that we were real close to, died. Two months ago our son was killed in a car wreck.

"It seems like it's more than we can stand. I don't want us to lose our minds or turn into house - bound skeletons that never go anywhere. But how can we avoid that? C.V.

DEAR C.V.: You can avoid ruining your own lives by forcing ourselves to accept your heartbreaking losses. You have indeed suffered more tragedy than most people do in a year. This will require a realization that each loss makes you more able to endure the next one. The first death is a family is usually the worst tragedy, I have heard people say. The second one causes grief too - but you have learned how to cope with it or you should have. If a third loss occurs, you cry again - but the tears do not last as long nor hurt you as much as the deaths

We bounce back from sorrow more easily when the hurt hits us a second time. Our minds have learned to deal with loss. This may not be true of extremely weak personalities - but most of us aren't in that category. We are strong enough to survive succeeding blows because we have been forced to deal with heartbreak before.

Your greatest consolation is that your husband is still alive If you concentrate on ailments, large or small, they can and with you. Don't let grief destroy your happiness together. consume you. Dear Abby

DEAR ABBY: I chuckled over the letter from the 68-yearold man whose doctor told him that men die young as a result of being denied sex. Your response stating that the doctor's statement was too simple was certainly correct, but probably an understatement.

In this monastery (where we don't get any at all), the last monk to die was 89; of the last five to die in the last couple of years, four were in their 80s. The fifth, who died at 67, had been a married man with children and had entered the monastery late in life after the death of his wife. I am afraid that some doctors confuse their personal opinions with the scientific facts, and tend to tell their patients what they think the patients want to hear.

Watson makes his way back to top of golf heap

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. (AP) -That Watson fellow is back again.

He was displaced as golf's leading light last season, but Tom Watson - determined to reclaim the role he relinquished so reluctantly - is again at the top of the heap, the only double winner of the season.

"It's a great feeling," Watson said after he'd subdued a game and gritty Frank Conner on the third hole of a sudden death playoff Sunday for the title in the Sea Pines-Heritage Classic.

The victory was the 27th of his American tour career, was worth $54,000 from the total purse of $300,000 and tied Watson for 12th place on the all-time tournament winning list with Henry Picard and the Walter Hagen.

Perhaps most importantly, however, it sends him into the Masters as a winner again. This was his last competitive start before he defends his title in the first of the year's four major tests of golfing greatness at Augusta, Ga, starting April 8.

"I'll be going in there sky high," said Watson, who scored his latest victory on a routine, two-putt par on the third hole of a sudden death playoff against a one-time tennis pro who has yet to win in eight years on the golf tour.

playoff," Watson said of the stocky, 36-year-old Conner. "He's a good player and he hung in there. I know how he feels. I've lost playoffs myself."

He's won them, too, including two this season. The first was against Johnny Miller in the Los Angeles Open.

Watson and Conner each finished the regulation 72 holes with 280 scores, 4-under par on the Harbour Town Golf Links that was made more difficult that usual by 25-mile per hour winds and temperatures that dipped into Watson, who once had a two-shot lead, ran into a patch of trouble beginning on the 13th hole and bogeved two of the next four. And Conner, playing behind him, finally caught up with a 35-foot birdie putt on the tournament's 71st hole. Watson played the last round in par 71, Conner in 73.

The first extra hole went to pars, Watson missing a 5-foot putt that would have won it, and Conner scrambling. The next was parred routinely by both and on the third Conner made the mistake that cost him the tournament. He pulled his second shot to the left of the green. Watson put his approach some 12 feet from the flag.

Roberts traded for Dunnegan and the San Diego Padres.

CLEARWATER, Fla. (AP) - Utility infielder Dave Roberts planned to join the Philadelphia Phillies here today after being traded by the Houston Astros for minor league pitcher Steve Dunnegan.

Roberts, 31, came to the Astros as a free-agent in 1980 and can catch and play any infield position. He has compiled a .240 average with 49 home runs and 206 RBI in seven major league seasons with the Astros, the Texas Rangers

"He's exactly what I'm looking for," said Phillies manager Pat Corrales. "He's going to be a backup catcher and can replace (third baseman) Mike Schmidt in an emergency," said Corrales, who managed Roberts in 1979 when both were with Texas.

Dunnegan, 21, a three-year pro, was 10-13 last season with Peninsula in the Class A Carolina League. He was the Phillies' 16th pick in the June 1979 draft.

ELECT JOHN TRIPPLE HORN!

Familiarity marks NC-Georgetown match

NEW ORLEANS (AP) - Though they haven't played each other this year, there is a feeling of familiarity between North Carolina and Georgetown, who meet tonight for the NCAA basketball championship.

That's due in large part to the friendship of the coaches and the relationship of two particular players.

North Carolina's Dean Smith acknowledges that Georgetown's John Thompson "knows our philosophy and I know his philosophy" after working together on the gold medal-winning U.S. Olympic team in 1976.

Their relationship goes back long before that, though, to a time when Smith met Thompson while trying to recruit players at Thompson's St. Anthony high school in Washington, D.C.

'John is one of my personal friends in college coaching," Smith acknowledges. "But whether John was in or out of college coaching, we'd stay in touch.

"It was at the 1958 NCAA convention," he said. "I had decided to add a young assistant to my staff. I was sitting around with Carnevale, who had coached at North Carolina before going to Navy and I asked if he knew of a good prospect. Carnevale said that "Bob Spear, who had been his assistant at Navy and was head coach at the Air Force Academy, was high on one of his young aides.

"I asked. What's the guy's name?" McGuire related.

"Smith - Dean Smith, Spear replied, 'Smith — Dean Smith.' I said, 'I've heard of John Smiths and Frank Smiths, but who ever heard of a Dean Smith?

A clean-cut, fresh-faced young man not long out of kindergarden at the University of Kansas, Smith checked in at the Southern institution.

In 1961, when McGuire decided he wanted to try his hand in the pro game, he recommended his raw assistant as successor.

The chancellor, Dr. William Aycock, demurred. McGuire had built North Carolina into a recognized power and the chancellor felt
