The Pampa News celebrates its 75th year of publication

By MARILYN POWERS

The Pampa News celebrates its 75th anniversary today and to mark the occasion, conducted an open house from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m.

The News was established on April 6, 1907 as the Pampa Weekly News, published every Friday by the News Printing Co. Its first permanent home was at 322 W. Foster, where it remained until it was moved in the early 1950s to its present location at 403 W. Atchison.

The News remained a weekly paper until 1925, when it began publishing daily. It had been preceded by Pampa's first newspaper, the Pampa Crony, published by Crony Printing Co. The News did not go unchallenged as Pampa's only newspaper. Rivals at various periods of the paper's history included the Pampa Advocate of the 1930s, published weekly by J.B. Miller and Sons at 115 S. Ballard, and the Daily Spokesman, both of which ceased publication.

Subscriptions to the Weekly News were $1 per year at first, and an advertisement in a 1913 issue offered the Weekly News plus the Semi-Weekly Farm News for $1.75 per year.

The first subscriber to the Weekly News was Pampa pioneer farmer and stockman L.H. "Lem" Greene, who died July 14, 1921 in Amarillo. He and another early Pampian, Scott Keahey, operated a draying business during the town's establishment. The press on which the News was first printed had been moved from Miami to Pampa by Greene and Keahey.

In 1936, the paper was sold to R.C. Hoiles of Santa Ana, Calif. to become part of his group of Freedom newspapers. Hoiles, an advocate of the free enterprise system, based the editorial policy of his newspapers on the Libertarian philosophy, which holds that man functions best and attains his highest goals when responsibly free from government restraints.

Hoiles was born in 1878 in Alliance, Ohio and began his lifetime newspaper career at the Alliance Review in 1898. He entered the publishing field in 1919 with the purchase of two-thirds interest in the Lorain (Ohio) Times Herald, which he later sold. In 1927 he became sole owner of the Bucyrus (Ohio) Telegraph-Forum, the original paper of the Freedom Newspapers, Inc. group.

Leadership of the Freedom group, of which the News is still a member, passed from Hoiles to his elder son, Clarence Harrison Hoiles, who developed the organization into today's group of 31 daily newspapers published in 12 states with a combined daily circulation of over 800,000. C.H. Hoiles, a past president of the California Newspaper Publishers Association, died Dec. 31, 1981 in Santa Ana, Calif. at the age of 76.

One of the major changes at the News in later years was the conversion from the linotype, or "hot type," form of printing to the offset, or "cold type," method on Nov. 1, 1970. The conversion enabled the News to publish more quickly with fewer operators, and also made photographic reproduction and the paper's general appearance cleaner and clearer. When the paper was established, a flatbed press had been used until the rotary linotype was bought when the paper moved from Foster to Atchison Streets.

In the fall of 1978, a computer system was installed at the News to speed up the typesetting process. The Harris system of video display terminals installed at the News eliminated one step of the process, enabling reporters and editors to typeset newspaper stories directly instead of typing them and then having them set by a typesetter.

The News receives copy and photographs from the Associated Press wire service. Pampa News circulation is 7,993 daily and 8,714 on Sundays to 11 area towns, including Alanreed, Canadian, Groom, Lefors, McLean, Miami, Mobeetie, Shamrock, Skellytown, Wheeler and White Deer.

In addition to its own paper, the News also prints the McLean News and was printer of the Miami Chief until it closed recently. The News currently has about 50 part- and full-time employees.

Recent honors include five awards won at the Panhandle Press Association meeting, held this weekend in Amarillo. The awards were second place in Special Editions and third place in Editorials, Advertising Initiative, Sports Photos and Lifestyles.

Publisher of the Pampa News is Louise Fletcher, who assumed the post on Feb. 1, 1980 after having served as business manager.

Heavy snow hits Midwest, Mideast

By ANDY O'CONNELL
Associated Press Writer

An April blizzard hit the Northeast today with 60 mph winds that built 15-foot drifts, shutting down schools and businesses and disrupting travel. Residents of New York City and New England braced for an "unheard of" foot-deep springtime snowfall.

In many Midwestern communities, buried under up to a foot of snow by the same storm, people awoke to the coldest weather ever so late in the season.

Six of the 10 major-league baseball opening games scheduled for today were postponed by the threat of unseasonably cold weather and snow in New York, Detroit, Milwaukee, Chicago and Pittsburgh.

With about half a foot already on the ground by late morning in many areas, residents of Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey and southern New England were told to prepare for the deepest snow ever in April.

"A blizzard is unheard of here in the month of April," said an advisory from the National Weather Service in New York City. "We have had two 10-inch snowfalls in April in the past — in 1915 and in 1975 — but blizzard conditions were not met during either of them."

Veteran New York newscaster Jim

Donnelly of WCBS, commenting that he had never heard such dire winter weather warnings in his city, added this note:

"On this date in 1909, Admiral Robert Peary reached the North Pole. Today, the North Pole came to us."

The blizzard tore into northwestern Pennsylvania with winds gusting to 65 mph, piling drifts 15 feet high and paralyzing travel in what state police Cpl. Dennis Donovan described as a "whiteout."

The New York State Thruway was closed west of the Buffalo suburbs because of the wind-whipped snow.

"We definitely have a blizzard in parts of Pennsylvania and New York, with winds of 50 and 60 mph," said Nolan Duke of the National Weather Service in Kansas City.

Snow from the approaching blizzard hit New York and Boston just before dawn, snarling rush hour traffic, closing most schools and numerous businesses, and causing countless accidents.

"Road conditions are terrible," said Massachusetts state Trooper John Ross at the Framingham barracks near Boston. "There are numerous multiple-car accidents and injuries everywhere. We're going crazy."

One pileup on Interstate 495 near Marlboro involved 50 cars and another on Route 128 involved 15 cars.

The weather service said all weather stations in Iowa this morning reported record lows for the date, and in most cities it was the coldest ever so late in the season. Cedar Rapids, Burlington, Bingham, Ottumwa and Waterloo all set records for the month of April.

The reading of 19 at Springfield, Ill., and 11 below at International Falls, Minn., also set April records.

With temperatures dipping below freezing from the Texas Panhandle to New England, dozens of cities reported record lows for the date, including Boise, Idaho, Cincinnati, Duluth, Minn., Indianapolis, Lincoln, Neb., Little Rock, Ark., Kansas City, Mo., Moline, Ill., Nashville, Tenn., Omaha, Neb., Peoria, Ill., Rochester, Minn., St. Louis, Mo., and Sioux Falls, S.D.

Ohio today, authorities evacuated some residents along the shore line of wind-blown Lake Erie.

The storm dropped up to 9 inches of snow in Chicago and caused flooding in Indiana.

At least five people were killed Monday as the storms whistled from Iowa to Ohio, bringing lightning and 45 mph winds that whirled the falling snow and churned up 15-foot waves on Lake Michigan.

Thatcher refuses to quit over Falklands invasion

By The Associated Press

British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher today refused to resign over her handling of the Falkland Islands' crisis.

Asked by opposition Labor Party legislator Robert Croyer in the House of Commons whether she was "considering an early resignation" because of Argentina's seizure of the islands, she declared:

"No. Now is the time for strength and resolution."

She also announced a total embargo on the import of Argentine goods effective at midnight tonight.

In Brussels, her government asked the NATO allies to put economic pressure on Argentina, including a ban on arms sales and the withholding of export credits.

Mrs. Thatcher's foreign minister already has resigned, and she had been expected to face calls to quit in the House of Commons and be questioned about intelligence reports received in advance of the Argentine invasion Friday.

Reports in The Times and Daily Telegraph quoted intelligence sources in Buenos Aires as saying Mrs. Thatcher's government knew of an imminent attack on the Falklands in the last week of March "and yet they chose to ignore it totally."

Fears that Mrs. Thatcher might be forced to resign caused panic selling on the London Stock Exchange for the second day.

At one point shares lost nearly $5.25 billion in value before a midday recovery. Just before the close, the Financial Times industrial index was down 11.5 to 548.4. The British pound fell 2 cents to just under $1.75, its lowest point since 1977.

Stock values dropped $4.4 billion Monday, the biggest one-day loss of the year.

The Argentine government flew reinforcements to its invasion force in the Falklands after a British fleet sailed to try to retake the South Atlantic islands and the rich offshore oil fields believed around them.

Three C-130 transports carried more troops, guns and equipment to the windswept, treeless islands 250 miles east of southern Argentina that the Argentine navy and a force of several thousand troops seized last Friday.

The Argentine public appeared little disturbed by the departure Monday of the first section of a British armada of 40 warships, far stronger than Argentina's entire navy, that is scheduled to reach the Falklands in two weeks.

The British navy also took over Britain's second largest cruise liner, the 43,975-ton Canberra, for use as a troop carrier.

A blackout air raid drill was scheduled Wednesday night in Comodoro Rivadavia, the south Argentine city closest to the Falklands. And red crosses were painted on the roofs of hospitals there and in other south Argentine ports.

But a secretary at a Middle Eastern embassy in Buenos Aires said Argentine employees laughed when the staff began stockpiling flour, coffee and other staples.

President Reagan again urged Britain and Argentina to settle their dispute without bloodshed, telling reporters in Washington he didn't think control of the islands justified the use of force.

Reagan said the United States is "ready to do anything we can" to help its two friends reach "a peaceful resolution of this with no forceful action or no bloodshed." But he refused to say what he would do if Britain and Argentina went to war.

Argentine Foreign Minister Nicanor Costa Mendez told the Organization of American States in Washington Monday that his government was considering invoking the Inter-American Reciprocal Assistance Treaty of 1947 against Britain. It calls for the signers, among them the United States, to respond to an attack on any American state as though it were an attack on themselves.

A State Department spokesman said earlier that it was "premature" to say whether the United States would feel obligated to support Argentina if it invoked the pact.

British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher responded to the gravest crisis of her three years in office with a pledge to reclaim the Falklands by diplomacy or by force.

Argentina may invoke the Rio Treaty in Falklands crisis

WASHINGTON (AP) — Argentina, hinting at a move that could further complicate the United States' delicate position in the Falklands Island dispute, is raising the possibility of invoking a 35-year-old treaty pledging Western Hemisphere nations to defend each other against attack.

President Reagan and the State Department, meanwhile, continue to urge a negotiated settlement and refuse to say what the United States will do if the British attempt to recover the islands by force.

Argentina seized the Falklands, in the South Atlantic about 300 miles off the Argentine coast, last Friday. The islands had been under British control since 1833, but Argentina had continued to press a claim for them.

Britain sent a large fleet steaming toward the islands Monday.

Argentine Foreign Minister Nicanor Costa Mendez told the Organization of American States in Washington Monday that the possibility of invoking the Rio Treaty of 1947 "is under study by my government."

That pact, also known as the Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance, provides for American states to come to each other's assistance if attacked. It was signed by the United States, Argentina, and all

"We have to regain the Falkland Islands for British sovereignty," she said on television.

"We are assembling the biggest fleet I think that has ever sailed in peace time... We know what we have to do. There are many ways of achieving that objective. Let's hope it's not the worst one..."

"Failure? The possibilities do not exist," she concluded, quoting Queen Victoria.

Mrs. Thatcher named former Defense Secretary Francis Pym to replace Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington, who resigned under fire Monday because he failed to anticipate the invasion. But she rejected the resignation of Defense Secretary John Nott, saying he must remain while the forces under his ministry prepared to fight.

Criticism of Carrington was fueled by reports in two British papers, quoting "intelligence sources" in Buenos Aires, that summaries of the invasion plan were sent to the Foreign Office two weeks ago and were ignored. A correspondent for The Times of London said it was not clear whether the plans were discovered by British agents in the Argentine Defense Ministry or "sources available to the United States."

Two opinion polls indicated the majority of the British people were ready for battle.

In one, 70 percent of those questioned favored the Royal Navy sinking Argentine ships and risking British lives if necessary. In another, 942 electors were asked to choose between relying on force or diplomatic pressure, and 53 percent chose force.

The British governor of the Falklands, Rex Hunt, returned to Britain with 77 marines from the island garrison and contradicted Argentine reports that only one of the invaders was killed and two were wounded before the marines gave up.

Hunt said the vastly outnumbered British force killed 15 Argentines, wounded 17 and took three prisoners in a 3½-hour battle. He said there were no British casualties.

The other nations of North and South America except Canada.

State Department spokesman Dean Fischer refused to say whether the United States would feel obligated to come to Argentina's aid under the 1947 pact.

"At this juncture the question is premature," he said.

Costa Mendez referred to the treaty as "an instrument within this system which is very delicate and which should be used with great prudence, but which is and has been a fundamental element in the same system."

He said Argentina would consult with all other American governments before doing anything about the treaty.

Haig defends nation's nuclear policy

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. today strongly defended the U.S. policy of nuclear deterrence, declaring that no other measure can restore a strategic balance with the Soviet Union and reduce the risks of nuclear war.

Haig spoke one day after President Reagan declared he hoped to meet with Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev this summer to discuss global reductions in nuclear weapons.

Haig attacked the concept of a global freeze on nuclear weapons, as urged by a group of senators and a growing number of communities around the country. Such a freeze at current levels "would perpetuate an unstable and unequal military balance," Haig said.

"It would reward a decade of Soviet military buildup, and penalize the United States for a decade of unilateral restraint," he said.

"Such a freeze would remove all Soviet incentive to engage in meaningful arms control designed to cut armaments and reduce the risk of war," Haig said.

Speaking before Georgetown University's Center for Strategic and International Studies, Haig said those who advocate a buildup of U.S. nuclear forces in the name of deterrence and future arms control share the same moral values as those who advocate a nuclear freeze.

"By maintaining the military balance and sustaining deterrence, we protect the essential values of Western civilization," Haig said.

"In failing to maintain deterrence, we would risk our freedoms, while actually increasing the likelihood of also suffering nuclear devastation."

Reaffirming his opinion that the Soviet Union has an edge over the United States in nuclear weaponry, Reagan suggested Monday that he and Brezhnev address a United Nations disarmament conference and meet afterward to discuss "arms reduction" and "arms control."

The president told reporters he was not suggesting "a full-blown summit conference" between the leaders of the two superpowers.

"I think that if he (Brezhnev) is here and we both bring up (arms control), I think it would be well if he and I had a talk," Reagan said.

Meanwhile, Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. scheduled a speech today on U.S. nuclear arms policy before the Georgetown University Center for Strategic and International Studies.

The U.N. conference, focusing on what Reagan called "one of the most important things facing us," is to meet

Compromise on budget hinted

WASHINGTON (AP) — After nearly two months of stalemate, President Reagan and House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. are hinting at progress in the search for a bipartisan alternative to Reagan's red-ink budget.

"I look forward to progress being made as soon as they (members of Congress) come back from the Easter recess," Reagan told reporters at the White House Monday. "That's why we're negotiating so fast."

The president added that a summit meeting with congressional leaders "will be part of the procedure before we finally arrive at a budget."

White House Chief of Staff James A. Baker III, White House congressional liaison Kenneth M. Duberstein and key Republicans and Democrats from the House and Senate already have been holding a series of meetings on a possible compromise.

But prior to Monday, Reagan had been consistent in defending the spending plan he submitted to Congress Feb. 8 and insisting that White House aides were attending the private meetings only to listen and report back on congressional opinions.

On Capitol Hill, O'Neill, D-Mass., told reporters Monday. "There really is a possibility we can work some things out...There is a little progress being made from what I can gather."

The speaker declined to discuss specifics, but he said that while "the president is still in cement about his tax plan of last year...they're (the administration) offering everything else under the sun."

Asked if he were in a similar, uncompromising position on any subject in the negotiations, O'Neill replied:

"At the present time, Social Security."

O'Neill added that Reagan appeared to be "not as hardened on defense as he was" and there may be some movement on the issue of reducing the president's planned military buildup.

A White House source who asked not to be quoted by name tried to temper Reagan's remarks by saying "no breakthrough is imminent."

The source added that the president's comments should not be interpreted as a call for an immediate summit. "I think all he was saying was before the process is over, there will have to be a meeting of the minds at the highest level," the source said.

Congressional sources, who also asked to remain anonymous, said the White House and congressional negotiators hope to have a compromise proposal ready in the next several days to present to Reagan, O'Neill and Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr.

Under terms of the private talks, any of the three can veto whatever agreement the negotiators have worked out, although Baker is said to be prepared to accept any compromise that the Republican president and Democratic speaker agree to.

Meanwhile, the sources said, the negotiators have been studying a possible compromise that would call for total tax increases of $115 billion over three years to help trim deficits. That compares to the $34.1 billion in Reagan's original spending plan.

Volcanic ash prevents aid to victims

PICHUCALCO, Mexico (AP) — A 30,000-foot pillar of ash-filled smoke spewed by the volcano El Chichonal again prevented the parachuting of food to 5,000 stranded villagers whom some officials now give little chance of survival.

"It's practically impossible for those people to still be alive," an army officer involved with relief operations said Monday. The three eruptions last week killed 21 people and injured more than 500 in other areas.

The villages on the slopes of the 4,340-foot volcano have been cut off since El Chichonal began erupting March 29 and blocked the mountain trails leading to them. Between eruptions, the volcano is sending up hot ashes continuously, blanketing the countryside for miles around.

Dr. Rigoberto Garcia, chief of the Chiapas state medical service, said he could not say whether the trapped villagers of the San Francisco Leon district were still alive.

The government began planning last week to drop paratroops with food to determine the situation in the villages. But the operation was delayed again Monday because of the hazard posed by the tower of ash-filled smoke still pouring from the volcano, said Defense Minister Felix Galvan Garcia.

El Chichonal, part of the Sierra Madre range in southeast Mexico, is on the border between Tabasco and Chiapas states.

A large-scale operation was underway to evacuate 60,000 people from accessible areas. They included 20,000 from the district that includes Pichucalco, 22 miles from the crater; 30,000 from the Teapa area between Pichucalco and Villahermosa, the Tabasco state capital 14 miles farther away, and 10,000 from other areas.

The mayor of Pichucalco, Manuel Carballo, said all but 2,000 had been transferred from this area. He said many of those remaining were sheltering in the town hall, considered the safest building in the district.

Most of the houses have roofs of thatch or flat thin metal that are not expected to withstand the weight of the accumulating ashes and other volcanic debris.

But some peasants were refusing to leave their homes while other were trying to return to their villages to recover possessions left behind.

Said Pedro Martinez, a farmer walking toward his home in the direction of El Chichonal: "Our house is there. Our animals, our life. What are we going to do in the city?"

Woman survives five days in snow

TAHOE CITY, Calif. (AP) — Five days after avalanches smashed down on a ski resort, killing seven people, a gloved hand reached out of the snow where rescuers were digging in a wrecked, snow-packed building.

Anna Maria Conrad, 22, a ski lift operator at Alpine Meadows resort, was suffering from serious frostbite when she was found Monday, and she had a black eye and bruises. But she was very much alive.

"Miracles do really happen," said her father, Gene Conrad, a U.S. Forest Service researcher. He said his daughter looked "fantastic, just absolutely fantastic, black eye and all."

Miss Conrad, who survived by eating snow, said she heard her rescuers earlier in her captivity and shouted to them, "but they didn't hear me."

"It was frustrating when they left," she said, but "fantastic" to be found. "It was just total isolation," she said.

Miss Conrad, a recent graduate of the University of California at Davis, was trapped Wednesday in a space about 2 feet high and 5 feet long when snow crashed through the second-story wall of a three-story ski patrol building. The avalanche that hit the building was among several during storms that brought more than 12 feet of new snow to the Lake Tahoe basin, 200 miles east of San Francisco.

Miss Conrad was apparently saved by a bench, which protected her from a wall that was pushed in and over by the snow, said resort spokesman Marshall Lewis.

"I was walking in the locker room," Miss Conrad told reporters. "I didn't know it was an avalanche until today." She said she apparently blacked out for a while.

About 24 hours after the avalanche, rescuers shouted Miss Conrad's name and came near her, said rescuer worker John Kudrma. "We were three feet from the air pocket" when the search was delayed due to worsening weather and the danger of new avalanches, he said.

Miss Conrad and her boyfriend, Frank Yatesman, 22, of Santa Cruz County, Calif., had gone to the ski patrol building to get their cross-country skis, Lewis said.

Yatesman's body was found earlier in the search. Also killed were Beth Morrow, 22, a ski resort employee; Dr. Leroy Nelson of Eureka and his 11-year-old daughter Lauri; David L. Hahn of Los Altos, and Jeffrey James "Jake" Smith, 27, of the Lake Tahoe area.

The body of Bernie Kingery, a 40-year-old avalanche expert and the last of those listed as missing, was discovered near the ski patrol building.

His body was found about 2 1/2 hours after rescuers, alerted by a search dog, saw Miss Conrad's gloved hand push out from the snow.

Infant formulas must be checked for nutrients

WASHINGTON (AP) — The infant formula industry has been ordered to run frequent tests on the nutritional quality of its products to ensure that they provide children with an adequate diet.

Food and Drug Administration spokesman Wayne Pines said Monday that the new regulations, which will take effect 90 days after they are published in the Federal Register, would cost the industry $2 million initially and $1.3 million a year thereafter.

Under the new rules the tests would have to be run during the manufacturing process and during the shelf life of the products.

The FDA's announcement of the new regulations follows the recall last month of two types of infant formula, manufactured by Wyeth Laboratories of Philadelphia, that lacked or were deficient in vitamin B-6. Absence of the nutrient in a child's diet can lead to convulsions and has been associated with some cases of brain damage.

The regulations were mandated by a 1980 law that was approved after another infant formula recall. The FDA and its parent agency, the Department of Health and Human Services, had been criticized in Congress because of the delay in issuing the new rules.

Rep. Albert Gore, D-Tenn., the leading congressional critic of the way the department has handled the regulations, said in a telephone interview that the rules were "watered down" to suit the industry.

He also charged that the department has not set a date for publishing the regulations because they have not yet been approved by the Office of Management and Budget. "The cumbersome review procedure established in this administration has yet to produce regulations to implement the law," Gore said.

There are about six U.S. manufacturers of infant formula, which often is the only source of nutrition for growing infants. The industry is a $550 million-a-year business.

Health and Human Services Secretary Richard S. Schweiker said the regulations represented "an important protection for infants" and that 90 days was "a reasonable time frame" for manufacturers to implement the new rules.

Tornado cleanup is continuing

PARIS, Texas (AP) — Mourners traveled in long processions to pay a final tribute to their dead, while the living toiled to rebuild lifetime's of work shattered by the fury of a tornado.

Funerals were held Monday for five of the eight people killed by a tornado that injured at least 200 others, destroyed 480 homes, damaged 397 others so severely they were unfit for habitation and left about 2,700 people homeless.

Services for Judy Harrington, 24, and her 7-week-old son, were scheduled for today. A funeral for the eighth victim, Dorothy Dean, 41, is pending.

"They went out to meet their eternal God in the fury of the tornado which swept through our town," Rev. Charles Cox said at the double service for Ora E. Spangler, 74, and her daughter Martha Jo Landers, 51.

The minister told mourners the women have "stepped into a world where no sorrow can touch them."

The Rev. Earnest McCool, in his eulogy for Mrs. Landers, said the two women valued friendships and religion.

"I knew them as 'Granny' Spangler and Martha Jo," McCool said. "We never even thought about it, but we knew that someday we must face death."

He said the women were now in heaven, "a place where the sun is always shining, where there's no storm clouds, no fear."

Family members wept throughout the 30-minute service. Later, a 42-car procession followed their bodies to burial at Evergreen Cemetery.

Mexia drownings trial begins

DALLAS (AP) — Law officers who arrested three teen-agers at a celebration of Texas blacks' freedom from slavery were probably frightened of the crowd and wanted to transfer their prisoners quickly, a defense attorney suggests.

Former deputy sheriff Kenny Elliot, former reserve deputy Kenneth Archie, who is black, and probation officer David Drummond are accused of negligent homicide in the drownings of the three teen-agers.

The charges carry maximum penalties of one year in prison and a $2,000 fine. Blacks — including a group that picketed outside the courtroom Monday — have protested the charges, saying the trio should have been indicted for felonies.

Opening testimony Monday at the misdemeanor trial focused on whether the officers' forced them to load the youths into a small boat and take off across Lake Mexia the night of June 19, 1981.

"Over the years, few people had taken an affirmative step to patrol this troubled area," said Elliot's defense attorney Charles Newlin of Houston, referring to the annual three-day party held at Booker T. Washington Park on Lake Mexia. "Deputy Elliot took the affirmative step."

Newlin suggested the gathering was marked by rowdiness, drug use, and excessive drinking, and that white officers feared to intervene, although they met at a cabin command post across the lake to be ready if violence broke out.

Former Mexia policeman William C. Groth, however, testified that the gathering of deputies was mainly a social event, and that he had heard of little trouble at the celebration across the water.

"At least we know that Kenny Elliot was in a somewhat precarious position as a white deputy, don't we?" Newlin asked. "If you try to make an arrest with milling groups of blacks, a lot of drinking and use of drugs, wouldn't that put a little fear into your bones?"

"Maybe if he went over there at 2 in the morning, but this was early. It was before midnight," Groth said. "Before (today), I've always heard about the fantastic relationship the deputies had with the people out there."

"It's kind of like, they (the celebrants) are having a good time across the lake, and the deputies are having a get-together themselves," Groth said.

Outside the courtroom, Dallas lawyer Larry Baraka, who is assisting the prosecution, said Juneteenth is a "festive occasion for both sides" without a history of serious trouble.

Federal judges rule on map

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Dallas-area voters will select congressional nominees on May 1, as scheduled, and under a plan that should help Democrats, according to a federal court order.

A divided three-judge federal panel ruled Monday that the map it drew for the four Metroplex districts should be used, even though the U.S. Supreme Court said the judges never should have drawn the plan.

The decision delighted Democrats and prompted Republicans to think about one more appeal to the Supreme Court before the May 1 primaries.

The districts also will be used for State Board of Education primaries in the Dallas-area. The boundaries for the state's other 23 congressional districts have been set and approved by the courts and federal officials. Those elections also are set for May 1.

"I'm very, very disappointed because the Supreme Court clearly said this was the improper plan," said Chet Upham, Texas GOP chairman.

Judges William Wayne Justice of Tyler, Sam Johnson of Austin and Robert Parker of Beaumont got involved after minority plaintiffs challenged the plan drawn by the Legislature.

That plan, backed by Republican Gov. Bill Clements, probably would have changed District 5 in Dallas from a Democratic seat to a Republican seat. It also would have given a black candidate a good shot at unseating U.S. Rep. Martin Frost, D-Dallas.

The map was altered by the judges, who came up with a plan that probably protects Democratic interests.

However, last week the Supreme Court said the panel had no right to redraw the Dallas-area map because the Justice Department approved those districts as drawn by state lawmakers.

The high court left it to the panel to decide which boundaries should be used on an interim basis for this year's elections, and whether the May 1 primaries should be delayed.

Johnson said the judges unanimously decided not to delay the primaries. However, Parker wanted the plan drawn by the Legislature — which favored Republicans — used for the elections, Johnson said.

Johnson and Justice voted in favor of the court-drawn plan.

Beyond the utility row

The latest bit of demagoguery about utility rates is just one more piece of evidence that the present utility structure is weak and unsatisfactory.

Utilities such as water, electricity and gas have been decreed by the government to be "natural" monopolies and given the legal power to function as such. Since monopolies tend to charge monopolistic prices, wise government caretakers have sought to control that tendency by establishing a regulatory agency to control prices charged by the utilities. For some politicians the system is wonderful; the utility companies make a terrific target for anybody who wants to score a few cheap points in an election campaign. But for most consumers, the system stinks.

For starters, utility rates are calculated in such a way as to guarantee a certain rate of return on investment. This creates an incentive for utility companies to overinvest in capital facilities. If they spend a million a year with a 10 percent rate of return, their "profit" will be fixed at $100,000. If they spend $10 million, they'll get a profit of a million, whether the investment was really needed or not. Cost overruns? Bring them on, the ratepayers will pay, and they'll have no choice. You can't change electric companies the way you change grocery stores.

In a sense, then, regulated legal monopolies have it made. But, as usually happens with regulatory schemes, sooner or later the bitter gets bitten. Until about the 1960s, because of technological improvements and economies of scale, the costs of producing electricity were declining. Utilities thus benefited from lengthy and complex hearings before regulatory agencies, for these lengthy hearings postponed rate decreases. For a number of reasons, including fuel price increases and lack of competition, the economics of electricity generation have turned around; utilities are now asking for increases to finance investment in new facilities. But the hearings poke along at the same slow pace, often complicated by intervention from environmental and consumer groups. The result is that utilities find it difficult to make rational, up-to-date investment decisions, and are finding it increasingly difficult to attract new investors.

Are there alternatives? Sure there are. The most viable one is to introduce competition into the system.

Competition in utilities? But they're natural monopolies, aren't they? Wouldn't competition create wasteful duplication and chaos?

No. In last October's issue of REASON was an extensive article on competing electric companies. It turns out that 23 cities in the United States have more than one electric company competing for customers and — surprise, surprise — rates are significantly lower in those cities than in comparable cities afflicted with legal monopolies.

Duplication of facilities? Yes, there is some. In Lubbock, Texas, the two electric companies have wires on different sets of utility poles. One company shares poles with the phone company and the other one shares with the cable TV company.

The key to low rates is competition. The two companies in Lubbock have to compete for customers. They find ways to reduce costs and cut waste. For example, one of the electric companies built a coal-fired generating plant for one-third of what it costs the monopoly utilities in other parts of the country. It's amazing the ways you can find to save money when your basic incentive is to keep costs down rather than to keep them up.

Although some neighborhoods in London once had competing water companies, that system is now a municipal monopoly, and we have so far not discovered any instance of side-by-side competition in water in the United States.

There are alternatives to the present system, however. A firm in Colorado manufactures a system that recycles and purifies all household water, permitting people to use an initial supply over and over (with occasional small additions). The system is used mainly for new or remote developments, but as the technology is improved, it could have more urban applications.

In areas with abundant water supplies and rainfall, wells and cisterns are routinely used by individuals to get water. They would not provide a solution for most of Southern California, but more decentralized water districts, or renewable franchises based on competitive bids from prospective suppliers, might be workable. (New operators could assume an existing delivery system.) Of course it would be helpful to recognize and systematize private property rights in water, and dismantle the present crazy-quilt patterns of government-enforced privileges and subsidies.

By CHARLES D. VAN EATON

It's impossible to live in Michigan and not be exposed to the automobile industry and the stream of commentary which flows from its principals — labor and management. Local television news and newspapers have, of late, featured some auto executive or United Auto Workers official on an almost daily basis. From both elements of the industry the volume of misinformation has been astounding. It's almost as if both can't, as the old saying goes, "see the forest for the trees"; they talk in vague generalities without ever coming to the point.

A prime example of this was given recently by a Detroit television anchorman. The gentleman almost went into a mystic trance while he was commenting on a statement made by Lee A. Iacocca, chairman of Chrysler Co. Iacocca, who is obviously this particular anchorman's personal hero, has said that if the federal government would only give a $1,500 tax credit (not a tax deduction, mind you, but a tax credit) to every person who purchased a new American-made car, it would completely restore the industry to a condition of full employment. Furthermore, Iacocca said, the cost to the government in foregone tax revenues would be more than made up by reduced federal spending on welfare and supplements to state unemployment compensation funds.

The Detroit anchorman couldn't understand why the people in Washington wouldn't see the truth in Iacocca's argument and act on it immediately. In addition the anchorman was convinced that the Chrysler chief's statement was further evidence of his genius and one more reason why he ought to be running things in Washington in place of the dimwits who are there.

What neither Iacocca nor the raptured anchorman bothered to say was why a $1,500 tax credit for new car buyers would restore the industry while an across-the-board cut of $1,500 in the price of every new car wouldn't. From the new car buyer's perspective a direct price cut would generally be preferable: its benefit is immediate rather than delayed until after the taxpayer has spent a considerable time giving what amounts to an interest-free loan to the government in the form of income tax deductions from his paycheck. For those whose income tax liability would be less $1,500 to begin with, a price cut of that magnitude would clearly be preferable.

So, if $1,500 is the magic number, why don't the automakers simply reduce the price of all new cars by that amount? Because they can't do it without substantial wage and work-rule concessions from their union employees and substantial price concessions from their suppliers, most of whose employees are also union people. And the unions, particularly the UAW, are not prepared to give more than cosmetic concessions at this time.

Iacocca is very near the mark with his $1,500 figure: a price break of that magnitude would probably not be immediately undercut by the Japanese firms because it approximates the maximum cost advantage they now enjoy. But why does the man from Chrysler avoid telling it like it is? In proposing a tax credit, Iacocca is asking the aggregate of taxpayers — including those who are not currently in the market for a new car and those who prefer imports over domestic brands — to subsidize the current pattern of wages, benefits, and work rules imposed on the domestic industry by the union which controls its work force. Why not tell the truth — that the union has priced its members and their employers out of the market?

There is probably not a single topic which has been more thoroughly researched in economics than the effect of union wage structures on the level of employment and the incomes of non-union workers. Study after study indicate the same: unions have reduced employment in the industries they organize about 10-15 percent and have forced wage reductions of about 4 percent below market levels for non-union workers. The sustained contraction of the American auto industry over the past decade (it's not the result of the recession — the problem was there before the recession) is primary evidence of excessive union power and bureaucratic industry management: both have lost touch with reality.

Iacocca's failure to tell the truth — that a $1,500 cut in price is needed and will require whatever cost concessions are sufficient to realize that level — is further evidence of a terrible truth: what unions cannot win in the marketplace they will try to win in the political arena, and they will be joined by the corporations their unrealistic behavior has crippled. Iacocca is asking for a political solution to a problem of the UAW's and the firms' own making. He's looking in the wrong place.

If it weren't for the fact that so many people were involved, the whole matter of the industry's suicide could be dismissed as a footnote in economic history. But it's too important: people in Michigan and part of Ohio, Indiana, and California are hurting. Never mind all the rhetoric about all the hard-won union victories of the past which must not be given up now — the past is past. It's the present that matters.

Time to sugar-off in Vermont

By OSCAR COOLEY

Just about everyone has a sweet tooth, and a special favorite is maple sugar, which is made at this season in the northeast. As an old sugar-maker in Vermont, I can hear the sap go "drip, drip, drip" in the buckets hung on the trees and the wood-fire crackle in the arch. I can smell the boiling sap and see the steam rising from the sugar-house.

Whether the farmers do it the same way now as 60 years ago I do not know but I suspect they do, for Vermonters are slow to change. But they probably burn oil now, and haul the sap with a tractor. Some even pipe it from each tree to the sugar-house.

Every farmer has a sugar-bush of a few hundred, perhaps 1,000, hard maples. The sap is sweet only in early spring, as the snow is melting and the trees are awakening from their long hibernation.

In that season there was little else of a productive nature the farmer could do, for the winter's work of cutting firewood and hauling manure was over and the spring's work of plowing and planting could not yet begin. To make sugar, a cash crop, was a good use of his time.

First, each tree was tapped by boring a 3/4-inch hole, about 1 1/2 inches deep, and driving a metal sap spout in with a hammer. The bucket was then hung on the spout. On a big tree we sometimes hung two buckets, or even three. Don't worry about those holes bored in the trees; after the spout is withdrawn they quickly heal up.

During a good run of sap — and there were several such runs in a favorable season — the buckets would fill with sap within a day or less and would run over unless gathered.

Gathering sap was hard work, for the gathering pails when full were heavy and often had to be carried in deep snow. You went from tree to tree, pouring the sap from the buckets into your pails. When they were full, you carried them to the horse-drawn sled on which the gathering tub was mounted. It was common to carry the pails on a neck-yoke, carved out of wood and fitted to your shoulders.

When the tub was full, it was hauled to the sugar-house, and the sap was piped into a big storage tank, from which it flowed into the evaporator to be boiled down into syrup.

All of this had to be done without delay, for maple sap deteriorates if allowed to stand more than a day or two.

The evaporator was a long pan, made to fit over the arch, and was divided into compartments. The sap entered at one corner, its flow being governed automatically by a float, and circulated from one compartment to another, boiling furiously and giving off a dense cloud of steam. Standing at one end of the arch, one could hardly see a person standing at the other end.

When the sweet stuff arrived at the far corner, it was slightly brown, sticky and sweet.

To be standard, maple syrup must weigh 11 pounds to the gallon. The operator can use a hydrometer, dipped in the boiling syrup, to be sure it is the right richness, but we determined this by dipping up some of the hot syrup with a flat scoop or dipper and letting it drip from the straight edge: if it aproned, or came off in sheets instead of mere droplets, we knew it was ready to syrup-off, that is, to pipe off the fire and into a container, often a 10-gallon can.

Maple syrup contains a small amount of nitre, or "sugar-sand," which grinds between your teeth. This we removed by putting the hot syrup, as it flowed from the boiling pan, through a felt strainer.

Maple syrup often sold for less than $1 a gallon, but that was an era when the dollar had much more purchasing power than it does now. Men worked for as little as $1 a day. If father could make 200 or 300 gallons of syrup a season and sell most of it, keeping enough for the family's pancakes, he considered it profitable. And what would we put on our pancakes if we made no syrup?

Although Vermont is the state most noted for its maple sugar, much of excellent quality is made in other states such as New York and Northeast Ohio, as well as in Canada.

Tora! Tora! Tora!

Every time Secretary of Defense "Cap" Weinberger goes abroad, I get the willies. The success of every mission seems to be based on how much American military equipment he can give or sell to the country he visits, as well as his ability to persuade the head of the state he is drinking tea with to build up his armed forces.

I don't mind when Weinberger does a selling job on a Third World power, but I start shaking when he puts pressure on a country like Japan to get its military act together.

This is what Secretary Weinberger has just done on a trip to Tokyo. He wants the Japanese to rearm and become a military power to be reckoned with.

To those of us who served in World War II, memories die hard when it comes to allowing a powerful Japanese defense establishment. And the way things are going economically for them and us, we're taking a big chance letting them return to their old ways.

For argument's sake, let's assume that the Japanese buy the Weinberger proposal, and, with their fierce competitive spirit, technological robots, and dedication to quality control, they manage in a few years to build the biggest and best army, navy and air force in the Far East.

At first, the Pentagon is overjoyed, as the Japanese relieve them of the financial burden of keeping American troops in Korea, Japan, and Okinawa.

Now a new President of the United States is elected, and under great pressure from American manufacturers decides to embargo all Toyota automobiles, and Sony television sets. A summit meeting between the President of the U.S. and the Premier of Japan at Guadalcanal produces harsh words.

The President warns the Premier that he has ordered U.S. submarines to sink any Japanese ship loaded down with Toyotas, on sight, and not to pick up any surviving spare parts.

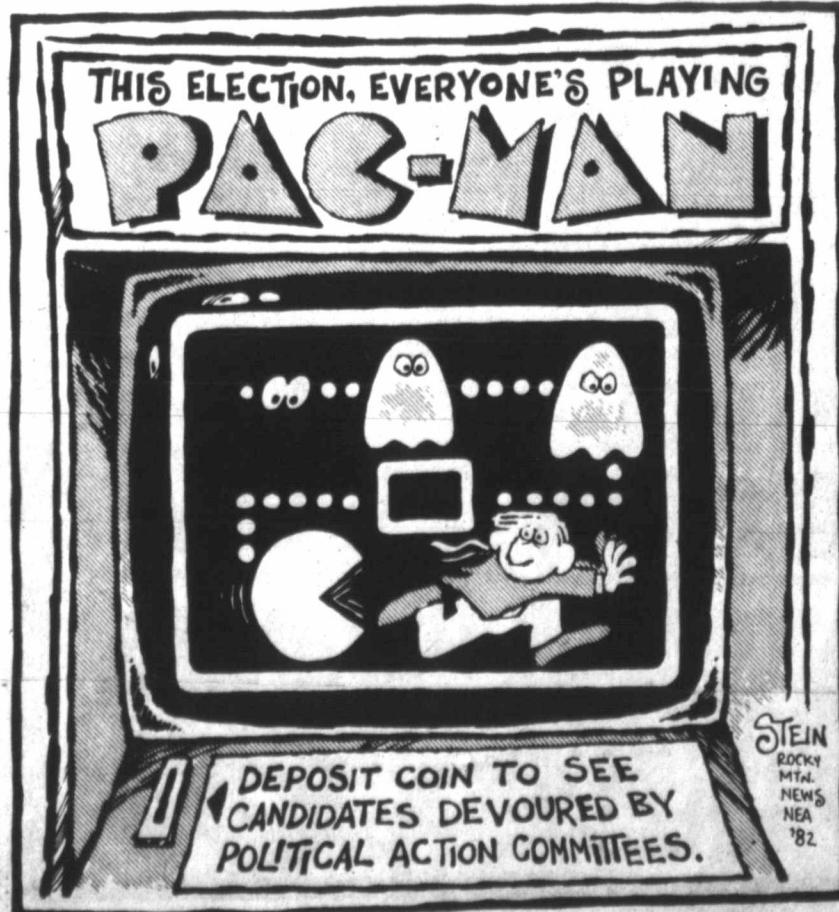

The Japanese Premier tells the President the survival of his country depends on shipping automobiles and TV sets to the U.S., and future shipments will be escorted by warships. The President returns from his trip and orders all Seiko watches sold on the West Coast to be rounded up and sent to internment camps in Utah.

The Premier of Japan disbands his cabinet and puts a new military clique in charge of the government. He orders them to start flooding the Philippines, Singapore, Hong Kong and Burma with jogging shoes and sweat bands.

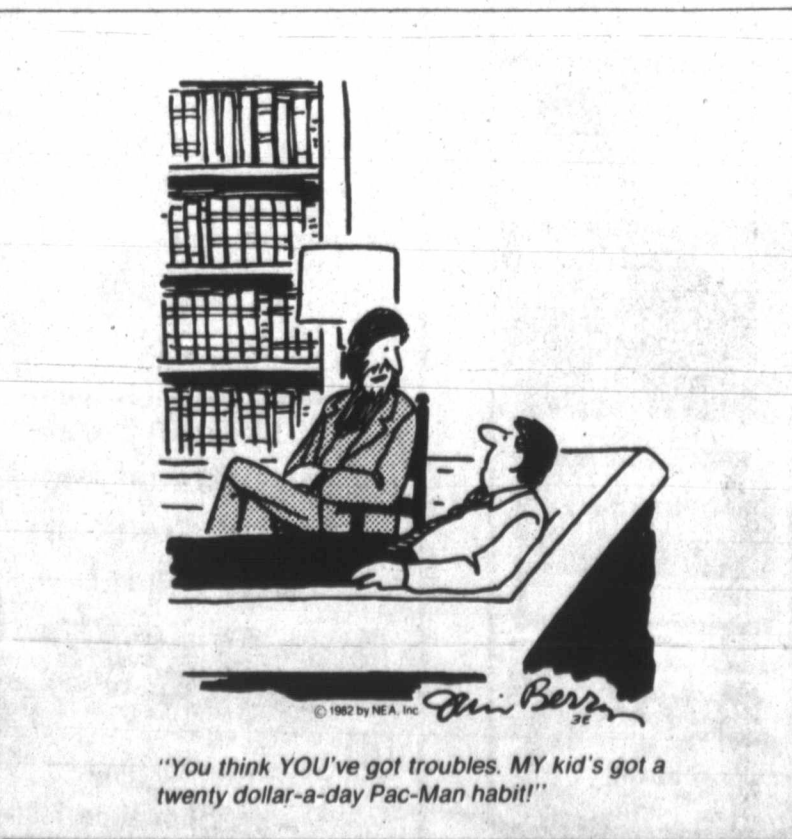

U.S. intelligence manages to break the Japanese naval code and discovers that the Japanese also have plans to land 100,000 Toyotas and 50,000 Sony Betamax machines on Okinawa. They also intend to invade the U.S. Army PX there with thousands of Japanese instant cameras that could destroy the Polaroid and Eastman Kodak companies overnight.

The President calls in the Japanese Ambassador to the United States and warns him that if the Japanese plant as much as one computer chip on Okinawa it will mean war.

The Japanese Ambassador assures the President that his country has no intention of invading Okinawa with its products, but at the same time says that unless the U.S. lifts its embargo, his government intends to dump 10,000 Honda motorcycles on Wake Island.

Jerusalem lauded him, critics reviled him

EDITOR'S NOTE — In keeping with the lyric quality of much of Scripture, a five-part Easter series, rendered in cadence, continues with this second installment on Jesus' entry into Jerusalem. Slight variations are made in some Scripture quotations but without altering substance.

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

From atop the eastern hill he rode, on a burro young and tame, and he met a welcome astoundingly warm, a burst of sheer acclaim.

His apostles walked along amazed, at the fervent chants and glee, and the people shouted, distributing palms. "Hosannah! Blessed be he!"

He espied the Temple spires below, and his tears came blinding hot. "O Jerusalem!" how he'd yearned to assuage, but always "you would not."

They descended down that winding path, in the air a swelling hymn, but some watchers shrewdly assessed with disgust. "The world's gone after him."

So he reached the capital extolled, by a cheering, hopeful throng, but resentment struck a discordant note, which lanced that soaring song.

As he moved about the teaming town, in efforts to fulfill wants, he observed that minions dispatched by the chief, injected jibes and taunts.

An inflammatory "demon," they jeered, he is "leading people astray." But he eyed them coolly, the stone that they held. The hazers stayed at bay.

For a lot of others sympathized, and believed his claims sufficed; they remarked "he's good" and suspected he's more. "Do rulers know he's Christ?"

There were others, too, perplexed, unsure. And just "where'd he get such wit?" If he's "the one whom they seek to kill," it doesn't make him quit.

"You shall know the truth, it'll make you free," he declared for all to heed, and he also stressed "if the Son makes you free, you shall be free indeed."

Some accusers dragged a woman there, and flung her down half nude, for the law demands that adulterers die. "Just what do you conclude?"

Mistrial declared

HOUSTON (AP) — A judge declared a mistrial in the case against a landlady who allegedly gave a cup of tea laced with the toxic herbicide Paraquat to a pregnant tenant.

Jurors deadlocked 8-1 in favor of acquitting Flor Munoz, 49, of involuntary manslaughter, forcing State District Judge I. D. McMaster to declare a mistrial Monday.

He surveyed the mob, their stones in hand, and he heard the woman moan. Then he sternly said that whoever's not sinned, "Let him first cast a stone."

So they glanced about, embarrassed, stumped, in a silent, rattled funk, and with lowered eyes they discarded the stones, which fell down plunk-by-plunk.

As they wandered off he gently knelt, and he told her not to cry, to avoid the sin but none's left to condemn, and also, "Nor do I."

A respected scholar came at night, to preclude official scorn, for Nicodemus desired to get clear, on how to be "reborn."

It was something Jesus talked about, a conundrum many miss. He insisted one must be "born anew," to qualify for bliss.

So the "wind blows where it wills," he said, and you hear but cannot say, just from "whence it comes" or to "whither it goes." The spirit moves that way.

That the ones of faith forever live, of eternal fabric spun, he declared that "God so much loved this whole world, he gave his only Son."

Thus the "Son was sent into the world," to reverse the fix it's in; the objective isn't to damn but instead, to "save the world through him."

For the "light has come into the world," in its painful, darkened night; but he said that those who pursue what is true, transmit that very light.

Of the sick, the jailed, the hungry poor, he portrayed in simile, that as others do to the least of all these, they "also do to me."

In the markets, Temple, squares and streets, and beside the pool and wall, there were questions, homage and roundabout jabs, and he essayed them all.

Some dissembling lawyers threw a curve, just to put him on the spot; by demanding whether a person should pay the tax to Rome or not.

You're a teacher skilled, they flattered him; you're courageous, candid, bright, but they knew that either a "yes" or a "no," would brand him left or right.

He discerned the trap and showed their coin, with the Caesar image thereon, and said give to Caesar whatever is his, to God his whate'er own.

As support for him and ardor swelled, while around the people pressed, the authorities were consumed with alarm, and ordered his arrest.

But the guards returned to no avail, and confessed they feared the swarm, for there's "never a man that has spoken like this." Arrest would stir a storm.

The regime of Pilate's foreign rule, with its military spread, had collaborators in local affairs, and picked the Temple's head.

With their purviews linked, their aides in touch, it was Pilate's canny game, to allow his puppets to front for his plans, while he avoided blame.

But the ministry of Jesus grew, in that conquered, tense domain, and the people spat when the troopers went by, to show their keen disdain.

Yet they flocked to Jesus, spread his name, however much maligned, and some doubters brought to his notice a man, who since his birth was blind.

To attend him Jesus took some clay, which he wet and pulverized, and applied it over those atrophied lids, and said "Go wash your eyes."

So the man complied, surprised by sight, and in shouting leaps he ran, so enthused his friends were in doubt it was he. But look, "I am the man!"

Though the powers quizzed him long and hard, he insisted stubbornly, that Jesus rubbed on the "clay and I washed"; though "blind, I now can see."

So they called the act a breach of law, as it fell in Sabbath limits; it's a "sin" they charged but in joy he replied, that God was surely in it.

The most searing barbs that Jesus hurled, were at sham and pious pride, at the "hypocrites" like the "whiteswashed tombs," which shine, but rot inside.

They neglect the prime ideals of faith — to be just, forgiving, true; and they "strain a gnat" but they "swallow a camel." It's "woe, blind guides, to you!"

From the Temple porch, he stormed inside, and he whirled a braided lash, as he wreaked commercial disorder and flight, of poultry, vendors, cash.

Don't make this "house a marketplace!" he exclaimed in high chagrin, for "my Father's house is a house that's for prayer," and not a "robbers' den."

The officials fumed for punishment, at this flagrant episode, and from Pilate's fort to the chief of the priests, the direful words echoed.

So the civil council duly met, in a state of riled todo; it was plainly fact he "performs many signs," just "what are we to do?"

If they let him go ahead, they said, he'd convince the countless hosts, and the Roman troops would strike and suppress, and take away our posts.

But the priestly primate intervened, in an accent flat and dry, that to save the nation it's better of course, that this "one man should die."

So they laid their plans in league with Rome, to avoid the public glare, to solicit tips on the place he retires, to grab the fellow there.

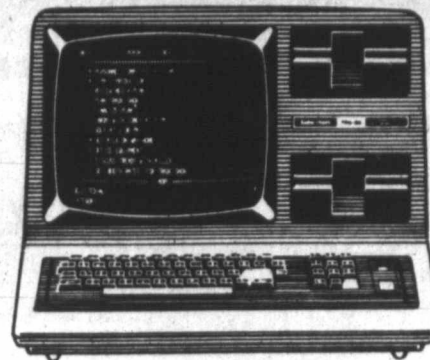

In the meantime Jesus preached unchecked, with his banner wide unfurled. "I'm the way, the truth and the life," he said, "the light of all the world."

On the eve to mark the Paschal meal, for some restless, quiet searce, he withdrew his men to the house of a friend, perhaps to sup in peace.

For the best cutting job, use the right saw

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

When we think of a hand saw, we usually think of the ordinary crosscut or rip saw. There are many other hand saws that make special cutting chores a lot easier when a power tool is not required or not feasible.

For cutting metal, the hacksaw is your No. 1 ally. The most common type is that in which the blade is attached inside a rigid frame. The blade can be tightened or loosened to the desired tautness, usually by means of a wing nut.

In cutting with a hacksaw, one hand is held on the handle, the other on the front part of the frame. Since the cutting is done on the forward stroke, pressure is exerted when moving the saw that way, with no pressure on the backward stroke. The forward pressure is light for light materials, heavy for heavy materials.

A coping saw, which roughly resembles a hacksaw, can also be used for cutting metal, but it must be thin metal. Its chief use is for cutting curves in wood and plastic. Like the hacksaw, its frame takes blades of various sizes. The teeth of the saw may point either away from or toward the handle. If they point away, the cutting takes place on the push stroke; if toward the handle, the cutting occurs on the pull stroke.

The compass saw and the keyhole saw look somewhat alike, with the latter having a smaller and narrower blade. It was originally used principally for cutting holes in doors for locks, but now is used for various kinds of cutting holes and curves in close quarters. The compass saw is used for very much the same kind of work, but usually of a more sturdy nature. It is especially useful in cutting holes and curves necessary for the installation of plumbing fixtures.

A flooring saw at first glance might appear to be a regular crosscut saw, but there are actually several differences, the most important being that it has teeth running up and around its reverse-curve toe. It can be used to make a starting hole in a floor. After this has been done, the saw is taken over so that the regular teeth can be used to complete the cutting.

Similar to the coping saw is the jeweler's saw. Almost any kind of material can be cut with it merely by changing blades to suit the type of work.

Whenever it is necessary to cut tenons, rabbets and dados — not done as much these days as in the past — a dovetail or cabinet saw is the choice. It is something like a backsaw, which has a stiffened rib along the back of its thin blade and is useful for making precision cuts. The backsaw is especially good for making square or angular cuts with the aid of a homemade miter box.

A must for a gardener or anyone who has to shape small shrubs or cut back flowers is a pruning saw. Light-duty jobs require one-hand pruners. However, even the long-handled lopping shears can be used only on fairly thin wood. While you can use ordinary crosscut saws on branches and the like, they tend to stick and clog. There is less of this with a pruning saw because it has coarser teeth.

All saws will cut more easily and more accurately if you keep them sharp. Also, if you keep the blade of the saws coated with a little oil when not in use, rust will be prevented.

No pain to replace window pane

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Q. — I always seem to have trouble putting on the putty when I have to replace a broken window pane. I have no broken pane to replace right now, so I thought this might be a good time to learn how to handle the installation of the putty. Do you put the putty around the edges of the new pane or do you put it into the channels?

A. — Place the putty into the channels first. To do it, first take a chunk of the putty or glazing compound and roll it between the palms of your hands so that it resembles a pencil. Place the putty into one channel sash, then another, and so on. When all the putty is in the sash, carefully install the pane of glass. Now take the glazier's points and push them into the sash. When that has been done, go through the same procedure with more putty and cover the edges of the pane. Shape it to match the putty on similar panes of the window or a nearby window. When everything is all set, trim off the excess putty. The putty can be shaped neatly with a putty knife, after which you will have to do a bit more trimming. Read the label on the putty or compound can to determine whether that type of product can be painted immediately or later — that is, providing you intend to paint it.

Q. — We want to install wall-to-wall carpeting over our living room floor, which is regular hardwood flooring. However, the floor squeaks a bit when walked on in certain areas. It has been suggested that I put down some plywood or hard-board before installing the carpeting and this will eliminate the squeaks. Is this so?

A. — No, although there is a slight possibility that it will do so if the squeaks are emanating from the top or finished floor. Generally, the squeaks are coming from the subfloor because of a separation between that floor and the beams. In that case, you will have to try to eliminate the noise in the same way you would even if you weren't putting down carpeting. Drive nails into the squeaky spot, hopefully where the flooring strips across the beams, after first making pilot holes. Drive the nails in pairs, separated by a couple of inches and at an angle so that the points almost touch inside the wood. If you don't make pilot holes first, the nails are likely to bend in the hardwood.

Step saving efficiency

Is This Trip Necessary?

Making a kitchen a more efficient place in which to work doesn't necessarily require a major remodeling job. It may be as simple as moving the refrigerator.

The refrigerator door in an average household is opened 65 to 100 times a day, according to a large retail chain's research studies.

Locating the refrigerator so the door opens toward the work area eliminates walking around it to reach inside. This makes each trip to and from the refrigerator about three feet shorter—a savings that adds up to approximately 42 miles of walking every year.

Dear Abby

Potent letter on impotence

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: A 75-year-old woman wrote to say that when her 77-year-old husband was 30, due to a bungled operation, he had lost all desire for sex, but over the years they had experienced an intimacy that would not be believed by the present generation that thinks all there is to marriage is sex. She said, "When we cuddle up in each other's arms on a cold winter night, we achieve a more lasting closeness than the couples who make love for three minutes, then leave each other to go sleep in separate bedrooms."

Abby, when I read that, I cried. How I wish I had what she had. I love my husband, but I feel closer to him when he just holds me until I fall asleep than when he makes love to me, rolls over and goes to sleep with his back toward me.

Sometimes I pray that he will become impotent. To me, cuddling and holding expresses genuine "love." The sex part is just selfish animal gratification.

I am 20, and I think the younger generation is changing because most of my girlfriends say they don't like sex any more than I do. Some women just hide it better.

Abby, impotent men have as much going for them as the men who aren't. And if they can't find a woman to love them for who and what they are, tell them to come to Arkansas.

LOVES LOVE, NOT SEX

DEAR LOVES: Thanks for a potent letter.

DEAR ABBY: I've been meaning to write this letter for a long time — 10 months to be exact — because that's how long I've been sober. I'm 34 and didn't even start drinking until I was 26.

I didn't know I was an alcoholic until I read the "test" in your column, and after answering the questions truthfully, I realized I was.

You said that Alcoholics Anonymous was the best, so I went to a meeting, and what I found there was exactly what I needed. The open discussions helped me to see the light.

My sincere thanks for helping me to save myself years of misery. About A.A.'s spiritual program: There may be lots of people like myself who aren't religious at all, and might shy away from A.A. because they don't believe in any kind of "God." But if they go, they'll find a new kind of faith. Please keep telling people about A.A., Abby. Some people make it on the third or even fourth try!

SOBER AND LOVING IT

DEAR ABBY: Thanks for writing. I know I sound like a broken record plugging A.A. as I do, but if only one person is helped today, it will be worth space in my column. A.A. is in your phone book. There's a chapter near you. It doesn't cost a dime, and could be worth a million.

DEAR ABBY: "Lacking Love and Hating It" blames his wife because he had a heart attack. He claims his doctor told him that withholding sex causes sexual tension, which in turn causes heart attacks in men. I can't believe a doctor would make such a statement. As though men were the only ones with sexual tension!

"Lacking Love" should take a good long look at himself. I'll bet he's a slob who smells like a brewery, abuses his wife, then gets mad because she's not in the mood to make love. There are a lot of men like that around. You see them every day in the corner bars complaining because their wives are "cold."

CONFIDENTIAL TO FEELING STUPID IN SARASOTA: Don't ever hesitate to ask a question because you're afraid you might sound "stupid." There are no stupid questions. Only stupid mistakes.

...

Problems? You'll feel better if you get them off your chest. Write to Abby, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038. For a personal reply, please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Fight fungi called mold

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Moisture, so necessary in our lives, also is necessary in the lives of the simple plants belonging to the group known as fungi. Without moisture, these plants, called molds, cannot grow. And when the particular molds that cause mildew cannot grow, they will not discolor or destroy fabrics, wood, paper and anything from which they can derive nourishment.

Rule No. 1 for the prevention of mildew, therefore, is to get rid of the dampness that, in conjunction with certain other conditions, enables mold to flourish. These other conditions include warmth, lack of ventilation and little or no light.

Where do all these conditions exist? Very often, in basements, crawl spaces, closets, draperies, rugs and on shower curtains. They exist, also, in many other places, among them damp clothes rolled up for ironing. If you have a hamper for soiled clothes, as most houses do, don't put damp articles into it. The combination of dirt, dampness, lack of light and little ventilation almost insures mildew.

Not to be overlooked in the effort to control dampness is condensation. This occurs when warm, moist air settles on a cold surface, which can be a window, a wall, a pipe or anything else in and around a house. That is why the excessive moisture caused by cooking, laundering and bathing will condense on something cold in a house where there is inadequate ventilation.

When this happens, the warm, moist air must be permitted to escape or it must be trapped. It can be pushed outside via an exhaust fan, vents or even an open window or it can be captured via a dehumidifier.

Outside drainage must be sufficient to keep water from leaking into basements through openings or porous materials. In houses without basements, the trouble is caused when moisture arises from the ground in crawl spaces. The remedy usually is to spread a layer of polyethylene plastic film or heavy roofing paper on the ground in the crawl space, keeping the edges airtight by overlapping them and keeping them in place with sand.

Inside the house, air circulation is important in clothes closets and other confined areas susceptible to dampness. Hang the clothes loosely so air can go around them. Be sure all clothing is dry before it is hung in the closet. Air out the closet frequently by opening the doors, especially during continued wet weather. Get a bag of one of the dehumidifying agents that absorb moisture, among them silica gel, activated alumina and calcium chloride.

Most department and hardware stores and home centers carry them. Some persons burn a small electric light continuously inside a closet to prevent mildew, but if this is done, you must be especially careful that the bulb is a sufficient distance from the clothing to avoid the danger of a fire. If you use one of the chemicals, read the instructions carefully to determine whether the bags can be dried and used again and the manner in which they should be dried.

Sometimes, despite all your efforts, there are musty odors on cement floors or tiled walls and floors in bathrooms.

Chlorine bleach, the kind sold in grocery stores, is effective. Use one-half to one cup of the bleach to a gallon of water. Rub, then rinse with clear water and wipe dry as quickly as possible. Keep windows and doors open until everything is thoroughly dry to the touch. Work quickly on plastic and asphalt surfaces to avoid spotting the surfaces. There are also some products made just for removing mildew, but read the label first to be certain it can be used on the particular material you are cleaning.

Mildew on the outside of a house occurs for the same reasons it does indoors. Therefore, avoid placing shrubbery too close to the house. After a rain, it keeps the wood or other house material damp for a long time. It also prevents sun from getting to the area. A good point to remember always is that the sun is an enemy of mildew.

(Do-it-yourselfers will find much valuable material in Andy Lang's handbook, "Practical Home Repairs," available by sending $1.50 to this paper at Box 5, Teaneck, NJ 07666.)

 by bernice bede osol

Your chances for advancement are likely to be better this coming year in the field you are already in rather than in another. Do a good job and make yourself indispensable where you are.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Beware of tendencies today to rationalize or to postpone tasks that require immediate attention. What you fail to do will cause hardships later. Find out more of what's ahead for you in the year following your birthday by sending for your Astro-Graph Mail to Astro-Graph, P.O. Box 489, Radio City Station, N.Y. 10019. Be sure to include birth date.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) You could be exceptionally curious today and eager to pry into the confidential affairs of a friend. It's best you don't. What you learn may displease you.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You'd better tie a string around your finger today if you promise to do something special for your mate. There's a chance you may forget and cause disappointment.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) At work today, make doubly sure your directions to others are clear and explicit. Confusing commands will impede production.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Don't let your extravagant whims get the better of you today and cause you to buy things you can't afford or may not even need.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Normally you're quite detail conscious. When you begin something you usually carry it through, but today these splendid qualities may desert you.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Your compassionate instincts will be easily aroused today and, should others need your help, you'll be there to aid them. Do so without making them feel obligated.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Be very careful today if you're with friends who haven't been doing as well as you have lately. Do nothing that could make them feel inferior.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Flattery will not accomplish your purposes today, but sincerity will. Forgo trying to butter-up others in order to satisfy your needs.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Be extremely careful today that you don't let something told to you in confidence slip out to the wrong party. Keeping secrets may be tough.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Take nothing for granted in financial or commercial situations today. If you're careless, there's a possibility you'll make mistakes.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Rather than being indecisive, it is sometimes better to take action even if it isn't under optimum conditions. Don't look for excuses or delays.

O'Connor opinion is attacked by liberals on Supreme Court

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court's liberals are accusing the court of "sheer demagoguery" in their first full-scale attack on an opinion authored by Justice Sandra Day O'Connor.

Justice William J. Brennan, writing for himself and fellow liberal Justice Thurgood Marshall, called Justice O'Connor's rationale "sentiments in reasons' clothing."

The comments came as the pair criticized a decision trimming state prisoners' rights to go to federal court to try to overturn their convictions.

Justice O'Connor, writing for the court's majority, answered Brennan by calling one of his statements about a key fact in the case "incomprehensible."

The nine justices often disagree in their opinions, claiming that their attacks on the others' stances are never personal.

For example, just a month ago Chief Justice Warren E. Burger and Justice John Paul Stevens wrote out their strong, but politely worded disagreements over the standards for admitting lawyers to practice before the high court.

The liberal wing generally saves its harshest criticism for the court's two leading conservatives, Chief Justice Warren E. Burger and Justice William H. Rehnquist. Justice O'Connor has only been on the court since Sept. 25, 1981.

Brennan disagreed with O'Connor's assertion that the passage of time and other factors may bar a second trial, and may lead to the state criminal defendant's virtually automatic freedom, once the first conviction is set aside in federal court.

In the disputed case, the Supreme Court on Monday reinstated the convictions of three Ohio men, ruling that their successful federal court appeals should have been barred.

By a 7-2 vote, the justices ruled that state convicts most often cannot get into federal court when raising constitutional issues not pursued in state courts.

Her opinion attracted four other votes. Justices Harry A. Blackmun and Stevens agreed with the result, but chose not to join her opinion. In other action Monday, the court:

—Ruled unanimously that candidates on the campaign trail enjoy broad free-speech rights even when making promises they cannot keep.

Shuttle goes home today

WHITE SANDS MISSILE RANGE, N.M. (AP) — With their work on the ground wrapped up, NASA technicians bolted the space shuttle atop a jumbo jet and hoped for fair weather for the Columbia's return to Kennedy Space Center in Florida.

"It's mounted and ready to go," Harry Silipo, a project engineer with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, said Monday.

The forecast was good for today's takeoff, in which the coupled aircraft was to depart Northrup Strip from the same runway the Columbia landed on a week ago.

Alex Paczynski, NASA's senior engineer here, said there would be a stop at Barksdale Air Force Base near Shreveport, La., for refueling before the jet continued to Kennedy. The spacecraft was scheduled to arrive in Florida at 4 p.m. EST.

"We don't want to land it at night, so we're leaving as early as possible Tuesday morning," Paczynski said.

The shuttle's return to its liftoff point was scheduled a day sooner than originally planned, despite gusting desert winds that twice halted ground operations.

On Thursday night and Friday, a storm as powerful as the one that delayed the Columbia's return from space March 30 hit the 100-square-mile gypsum flat, kicking sand into the air and stalling the assembly of a 40-foot-long fiberglass tailcone that later was attached to the shuttle. The blowing sand caused respiratory problems for some of the workers, who wore goggles and masks.

On Sunday night, the winds again picked up, stalling the "mating" of the shuttle and the jumbo jet by five hours.

Sampson wins Wooden award

SALISBURY, N.C. (AP) — The Los Angeles Athletic Club has voted Virginia's 7-foot-4 All-American Ralph Sampson as this year's John Wooden Award winner, given annually to its college basketball player of the year.

Others receiving awards Monday night were Will Grimsley of The Associated Press, who won his third straight national sportswriters' award, and NBC's Dick Enberg, who won the national sportscasters' award for the fourth time.

Ray Scott, the television voice of Penn State University football and basketball network and a play-by-play announcer for the Minnesota Vikings, was inducted into the National Sports Writers and Sportscasters Association Hall of Fame.

Sampson, a junior, is the first non-senior to win the award in its six-year history. He could not attend the ceremony because his plane was grounded by bad weather in Charlottesville, Va.

The prize is named for retired UCLA basketball Coach John Wooden who guided his teams to 10 national basketball championships.

Other winners have been UCLA's Marques Johnson, North Carolina's Phil Ford, Indiana State's Larry Bird, Darrell Griffith of Louisville and Danny Ainge of Brigham Young.

This year, Sampson averaged 15.8 points, 11.4 rebounds and blocked 99 shots while leading his club to a 30-4 record. The Cavaliers were eliminated by Alabama-Birmingham in the NCAA tournament's Midwest Finals.

Baseball tryouts today

Tryouts for the 1982 Little League and Farm League teams will be held today, Wednesday and Thursday, starting at 5:30 p.m. at Pampa Optimist Park.

Players must be 10, 11 or 12 years old as of July 31 to participate in the little league program.

There will be a $10 charge for each player, which covers a cap and little league insurance. Each player should bring his birth certificate, and, if possible, a ball glove. All players must attend two of the three sessions to play in either league.

Dennis Mashburn paced Pampa with an 85, followed by Paul McIntire 87, Cliff Baker 86, David Fatherey 95, and Derick Dalton 95.

For Pampa B, Craig Chapin was the leader with an 89. David Snuggs had an 89 while Clay Jett, Ryan Crosier, and Reid Sidwell each had a 96.

Shane Pinckard shot a 92 for the top round in singles play. Tascosa's Marc Gilmour was medalist with a 79. Amarillo High's Jeff Cranford followed with an 81.

The next round is scheduled for April 16 at the Greenbelt Lake Golf Course in Clarendon, and the final round is slated for April 23 at the Pampa Country Club.

Monday's round was originally set for Saturday, but was postponed because of high winds.

Mazzilli homesick for New York

NEW YORK (AP) — You CAN go home again ... and that is Lee Mazzilli's immediate problem.

Less than a week after his tearful trade from the New York Mets to the Texas Rangers, Mazzilli finds himself back in his home town where the Rangers were to open their season today against the New York Yankees.

"The last few days haven't been easy and coming back is making it harder," Mazzilli said Monday after the Rangers' workout at Yankee Stadium. "I thought I was getting over the emotional part of the trade, and then to come back here ...

"It's been tough. It'll take a couple of weeks to get used to it — not so much the physical part, but emotionally and mentally. There are a lot of things going through my mind.

"The life style will be the toughest adjustment — not going between the lines and playing, but going home after a game and being by yourself with no family around all the time and no place to go."

A native New Yorker, Mazzilli was the Mets' first pick in the June 1973 free agent draft. He was billed as the hometown hero who would help lead the Mets out of the wilderness. His picture appeared in subways and buses as part of a campaign to restore interest in a club which has floundered since its 1973 National League pennant.

But Mazzilli lost his center field job last year to rookie Mookie Wilson — center field is the glamor position in New York — and, as a left fielder, suffered through a .228 boo-filled campaign after batting .250, .273, .303 and .280 in his first four seasons and filling the bill as the teeny-boppers' heartthrob.

But the Mets' acquisition of George Foster pushed him out of left field, as well, and he doesn't have the arm for right field or the temperament for the bench.

Mazzilli agreed it was a trade that had to be made and was stunned when the best the Mets could do was obtain a pair of the Rangers' promising minor league pitchers.

"If I sit for a day's rest I go nuts," Mazzilli told a throng of newsmen which would have done justice to a Reggie Jackson. "If I wasn't playing regularly I'd really go buggy. I always thought I'd always be a Met. It was tough leaving. You play in an organization for nine years and it grows on you. I'm gonna miss the fans. Hopefully, they'll never forget me.

"You hear rumors about a trade, but you really don't want to believe it's gonna happen until it happens. It took so long. It was drawn out until almost the last day and you start to wonder if they have any idea of making a

Orvis promoters NFL strike talk

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent
SALISBURY, N.C. (AP) — "Look at me. I'm all dressed up in a suit," said the giant of a man on the podium. "But this is not me."

"I am 35 but still a child. I'm like any other athlete, pampered in high school and college. My life is athletics. I love it. But, unlike what a lot of people think, it is not all castles."

Herb Orvis is a 10-year veteran of the National Football League, a 6-foot-4, 255-pound monster of a man who plays defensive tackle for the Baltimore Colts. Before that, he was with the Detroit Lions for five years.

Newsmen remember him as a sulking, brooding fellow who always appeared suspicious of the press. He shunned interviews. He always appeared to be harboring some hangup which he was reluctant to talk about.

But now he was letting the words flow like a babbling brook.

As an official spokesman of the NFL Players Association, he was joining Ed

Garvey, executive director of the union, in presenting the players' labor relations plight to the public.

His audience was a discriminating one — members of the National Sportscasters and Sportswriters Association, gathered here for their annual awards bash.

Orvis was joining Garvey in explaining why the pro football players felt they were entitled to 55 percent of the gross revenues of the NFL member clubs — a figure estimated to be $25 million each.

Multiplying that by 28 clubs and you get an overall pot of $600 million, of which the players want $330 million.

"Why not?" argued Garvey, a slick talker. "The players are the show. If the Rolling Stones hold a concert in an auditorium, they take 90 percent of the receipts. Ed Asner, president of the Screen Actors Guild, tells us that actors get a big percentage of the gross. Football players are no different than any other kind of performers."

It's a rather strange concept — a more or less socialistic plan and in open defiance of the American free enterprise or even the sports free-agent system.

While almost everyone, even the NFL, agrees the players deserve a bigger cut of the spoils — football ($83,000), basketball ($215,000) and hockey ($125,000) — few seriously believe the owners can be made to accept the players' demands, which would make the players virtual co-managers.

Thus, football appears faced with the proverbial irresistible force colliding with the immovable object.

"We're going to strike," Orvis insists. "We are going to be well-organized. We are going to win. This is going to be our last shot."

Under the players' plan, the money taken from the clubs' gross revenues would be funneled into a grant pot from which players would be compensated according to experience, performance and value of production.

Cold weather turns baseball into winter sport

By JOHN NELSON
AP Sports Writer

The 1982 major league baseball season, free of any strike threat for the first time in four years, remains literally under a cloud that threatens to turn the nation's pastime into a winter sport.

Four of the 10 openers scheduled for today were postponed by the threat of unseasonably cold weather and snow. Several other games were endangered by a cold snap that gripped the nation.

The season began Monday afternoon in Baltimore and Cincinnati. The Orioles defeated Kansas City 13-5 and the Reds succumbed by a 3-2 score to the Chicago Cubs in a game shortened to eight innings by rain.

"And they call us the boys of summer?" Montreal pitcher Charlie Lea asked rhetorically — and a little incredulously — Monday, not long before the Expos' season opener was postponed until Wednesday because of the prospect of a winter storm warning in Pittsburgh.

Today's remaining National League openers had San Francisco at Los Angeles, the New York Mets at Philadelphia, St. Louis at Houston and Atlanta at San Diego. Snow and freezing temperatures were in the forecast for Philadelphia.

In the American League, Toronto at Detroit, Cleveland at Milwaukee and Boston at Chicago were postponed until Wednesday by cold weather. Snow already had begun to fall in Milwaukee Monday afternoon, and the Detroit and Chicago forecasts called for temperatures near freezing.

Texas at New York and Seattle at Minnesota also were on the AL schedule. The Twins' game was not in jeopardy because of the opening of the new Hubert H. Humphrey Metrodome in Minneapolis, but the New York game faced the prospect of snow. The biggest winners Monday may have been neither the Orioles nor the Cubs, but rather major league umpires. In a joint announcement with baseball, the lawyer for the umpires' union, Richie Phillips, said major league umpires had signed a four-year contract that represented an average salary increase of 60 percent.

"The terms of this contract reflect recognition of the contributions umpires make to this great game," Phillips said in New York.

Under the agreement, top salary for an umpire was increased from $50,000 to $75,000. In addition, league presidents now will have the right to assign umpires to the playoffs and World Series on a merit basis rather than on simple rotation.

"We have the best umpires and now we will have the best of the best working the special events," Phillips said.

Astros open against Cards

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston's Nolan Ryan goes to the mound today against St. Louis' Bob Forsch as the Astros and the Cardinals open their National League seasons.

Ryan was 11-6 in last season's strike-shortened season including a record fifth career no-hitter. Forsch, brother of former Astros pitcher Ken Forsch, posted a 10-5 record last season.

Houston has lost in the playoffs to Philadelphia and Los Angeles the past two seasons and again will try to reach the World Series with a strong pitching staff and mediocre hitting.

The Cardinals of Manager Whitey Herzog hope to challenge Montreal in the NL Eastern Division with a strong infield including Ozzie Smith at shortstop and Keith Hernandez at first base.

Despite Houston's reputation as a weak-hitting team, Manager Bill Virdon says the 1982 team will be improved.

"We hit .257 last year, which isn't bad," Virdon said. "I think we're capable of .265 or even .270 this season."

Virdon calls the 1982 Astros the best team he's had since coming to Houston in 1975.

"We haven't scored many runs this spring, but that's normal for us," Virdon said. "I am a little disappointed in the number of wins, but wins vs. losses in spring training is no indication of the type club you've got. I'm more concerned with preparing for opening day."

Umpires agree on new contract

NEW YORK (AP) — The only strikes the umps will be calling this season will be on the batters in front of them.

Just a few hours before the call of "Play ball!" was heard Monday in Baltimore and Cincinnati, the Major League umpires' union and the American and National leagues agreed on a new four-year contract which, according to union attorney Richie Phillips, "places umpires in the top one percent of all salaried employees in this country."

The minimum annual salary, $18,000 under the old contract, is now $26,000 and the maximum, previously $50,000, is $75,000.

The agreement also will permit the league presidents — Lee MacPhail of the AL and Chub Feeney of the NL — to assign umpires to the playoffs and World Series based on merit, rather than the rotation system used in recent years.

"We have the best umpires and now we will have the best of the best working the special events," said Phillips.

He and the two league presidents reached the agreement around sunrise Monday after a 12-hour bargaining session and about 10 hours before home plate umpire John Kilber threw Cincinnati Manager John McNamara out of the Reds' rain-shortened 3-2 Opening Day loss to the Chicago Cubs.

"In the first year, salaries will increase an average of 40 percent, and over the four years of the contract, the increases average 60 percent," Phillips said. "In some categories, the increase is more than 100 percent over the term of the contract."

"The terms of this contract reflect recognition of the contributions umpires make to this great game."

CINCINNATI (AP) — Keith Moreland drove in two runs with a home run and a single, and Bump Willis added a solo homer to power the Chicago Cubs to a 3-2 eight-inning victory over the Cincinnati Reds in a rain-shortened National League opener.

The Cubs and the Reds, two revamped ballclubs, launched the 1982 season under gloomy April skies.

Former baseball commissioner A.B. "Happy" Chandler was honored before the game for his upcoming introduction into the Baseball Hall of Fame. Space shuttle astronauts Joe Engle and Richard Truly presented the first ball, flown on Columbia's second mission last November.

BALTIMORE (AP) — Four home runs, including a grand slam by Eddie Murray, powered the Baltimore Orioles to a 13-5 victory over the Kapsas City Royals in the American League opener.

NEW YORK (AP) — Major league umpires agreed to a new four-year contract which will raise their salaries to a top of $75,000.

The agreement, announced by Richie Phillips, attorney for the umpires' union, and Lee MacPhail, president of the American League, was reached in a 12-hour bargaining session which began Sunday night and ended early Monday morning, TENNIS

MONTE CARLO, Monaco (AP) — Sweden's Bjorn Borg moved into the second round of the $300,000 Monte Carlo Grand Prix Tournament with a 6-4, 6-3 triumph over Spain's Fernando Luna in a match marking his first tournament competition in five months.

In other action, Italy's Adriano Panatta defeated Australia's Paul McNamee 1-6, 6-2, 7-5; Peru's Pablo Arraya posted a 3-6, 7-6, 6-3 victory over Jimmy Arias; Thierry Tulasne of France beat India's Ramesh Krishnan 6-1, 6-4;

Marriage that was made in classifieds falls apart

DALLAS (AP) — A 31-year-old woman says a fairy-tale marriage conjured out of a classified advertisement became a nightmare that will now end in divorce.

"I thought I'd found a dream. What I got was a nightmare," said Judy Culbertson Stern, 31.

Harold Stern of Dallas, who advertised for a wife and received hundreds of responses, married her six days after his search began. She now says "there are no such things as fairy tales" and wants a divorce after two months.

"Let's face it," Mrs. Stern said. "I was swept up in the glamour of it all."

"Stern, 43, who has been married before, said he "just happened to pick the wrong girl" in his one-day courtship.

"I'm still a romantic," he says. "I'm going to look for someone else. I'm going to place another ad. I'm going to try again."

Mrs. Stern married him on Jan. 30 — six days after she read in a newspaper article that Stern had placed a classified ad for a wife.

"Wife wanted," he wrote. "That means marriage, that also means immediately... This is no long courtship, 2-3 weeks, then marriage."

Both had been married before. On Thursday, Mrs. Stern went before a Dallas County justice of the peace to try to get a peace bond against Stern to bar him from coming near her.

A hearing has been reset for May 3, after Stern did not appear in court and a warrant was issued for his arrest.

"I grew up to believe in 'happily ever after,'" said Mrs. Stern, a leasing agent for a car-rental company. "I should have known better. I was married before and it didn't work."

"But I was tired of coping and I pictured this man standing beside me for the rest of my life," she said. "I can't believe I was so dumb."

She complained that the couple didn't have a place to live their first week of marriage.

News in Brief

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department is abandoning efforts to use certain evidence in the trial of John W. Hinckley Jr., accused of shooting President Reagan and three other men.

The government asked Monday for a speedy trial date after a U.S. Court of Appeals ruled prosecutors could not use questioned oral and written statements. No trial date has been set.

The oral evidence is a statement given by Hinckley to law enforcement officers March 30, 1981, the day he shot Reagan and the others. The written evidence consists of handwritten notes taken from Hinckley's cell last July.

Hinckley has pleaded innocent by reason of insanity.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Atlantic Richfield Co. officials say their decision to stop honoring credit cards will save consumers money because the company is reducing the wholesale price of gas by 2.3 cents.

The company said Monday the 2.3 cents in a year would equal the $73 million that the company lost running the credit card operation. Arco last month announced that it would no longer honor credit cards held by 3 million customers after April 15.

George Babikian, Arco's marketing vice president, said fewer than 1 percent of the card holders have written letters complaining about the company's decision.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal government has drawn up new regulations requiring the infant formula industry to perform additional tests on the nutritional quality of its product.

The Food and Drug Administration, which published the rules in the Federal Register Monday, said they take effect in 90 days.

Last month, two types of infant formula, manufactured by Wyeth Laboratories of Philadelphia, were recalled because they lacked or were deficient in vitamin B-6. Absence of the nutrient in a child's diet can lead to convulsions and has been associated with some cases of brain damage.

The regulations were mandated by a 1980 law that was approved after another infant formula recall.

LONDON (AP) — President Reagan's visit to London in June will be marked by a major demonstration against deployment of nuclear weapons in Europe, says a leader of the British anti-nuclear movement.

Monsignor Bruce Kent, general secretary of the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament, said the movement is not anti-American but wants to show Reagan the depth of feeling in Europe against nuclear arms.

MELISSA MACKEY

High school editor wins district awards

Melissa Mackey, senior and editor of the Little Harvester, qualified for regional competition in two journalism writing events. She will compete at the Regional Meet in Lubbock on April 17. The literary events are held on the Texas Tech University campus. Melissa won first place in headline writing and second place in editorial writing, to qualify for the Regional Meet. This is the second year Melissa has qualified for regional. Her junior year she qualified in editorial writing and feature writing and was an alternate in news writing. Her sophomore year she was an alternate in headline writing. In the contests students are given a specific topic to write on and a time limit. "It tests the student's ability to think and write under pressure of a deadline," said Ms. Mary Ann Woosley, journalism advisor at Pampa High School. "I think Melissa has a good chance of going to state competition. She has proven her abilities on the newspaper and in the contests for three years now." Melissa is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bill Mackey and the granddaughter of Mr. and Mrs. James McCune. The district competition was held March 27, in Canyon at West Texas State University.

Man surrenders after threatening hostages

SPRINGTOWN, Texas (AP) — An ex-convict demanding the release of a state prison inmate, money and transportation out of town and threatening to blow up the post office where he held two hostages surrendered after four hours, authorities said. Dennis Bruce Kuykendall, 28, will appear today before U.S. Magistrate Alex McGlinchey to answer charges in an FBI complaint that alleges Kuykendall assaulted, intimidated and interfered with federal officials and used a telephone to make a threat. The complaint was filed Monday by FBI Special Agent Lawrence Connelly. Neither hostage was injured. Postal clerk Audrey Williams was released shortly after the incident began Monday and Postmaster Raymond Robison walked out when the man surrendered four hours after the ordeal began. Negotiations with a man who held officers at bay for four hours were drawn out because the demands for release of the hostages changed several times, said FBI Special Agent Gary Penrith.

Flights are cancelled

HARLINGEN, Texas (AP) — At least two airline flights into the Rio Grande Valley today have been cancelled because of a volcanic ash cloud in the Gulf of Mexico, officials said. A spokesman for Southwest Airlines said today's 6:45 a.m. flight was cancelled. Israel Gonzales Jr., Southwest assistant manager here, said all overnight flights were cancelled due to the hazard posed to aircraft engines by the ash. Other Southwest flights could arrive on schedule if the ash cloud moves eastward as was earlier predicted, Gonzales said. An American Airlines flight due at 10:50 a.m. today was also cancelled, officials said. The ash cloud moved northward across the Gulf of Mexico from a volcano southwest of Mexico City, the National Weather Service said.

BEDWETTER

LET THEM HAVE A DRY BED

The greatest gift you can give a bedwetter and the rest of the family, too, is an end to this serious problem, and make no mistake, bedwetting is serious. It can cause complicated psychological problems that last a lifetime. It's so needless because bedwetting, when not caused by organic defect or disease, can be ended. Send for our free brochure, "Bedwetting — What It's All About and How To End It", a report by two medical doctors. No obligation.
