Tornado chasing...

'...it had the dark beauty of something very dangerous...'

By DAVID CHRISTENSON
Staff Writer

According to Pampa Mayor Ray Thompson, public cooperation during Wednesday's tornado siege was "excellent."

"Nearly everyone took cover, stayed off streets and out of their cars as requested," Thompson said.

Out on the streets, however, it was a different scene. As a journalist, I felt obliged to cover The Story, but I encountered more than a few folks without those professional obligations — just watching as if the whirling clouds were another break in the television schedule.

The storm began at quitting time, as usual — just when Pampa is ready for recreation, it seems, the sky decides to dump on us.

At about 5:30 I drove home and put dinner on the stove. Just as I sat down to wait for the food and catch part of the Amarillo television news, I heard the storm sirens.

At about 6:05 I walked outside to check the situation. Off in the distance (4 to 5 miles off, as I later learned), I saw the first twister. From my semi-rural vantage point south of the city, it looked pretty tiny. Deceptive appearances.

Minutes later my neighbors ran out of the house, looked west, exclaimed a bit, jumped in their car and drove like mad toward the tornado.

I went back in the house and wrestled with my conscience. At about 6:15 my conscience finally won. I set out to the newspaper office to get a camera.

Or I tried to set out. My street had more traffic that evening than I had seen for weeks. The north lane was full of potential sightseers; the south lane full of potential victims. Most seemed to believe the speed limit was optional during an emergency.

I finally got on the road and headed down Cuyler, with a bit of haste, toward the office. Then I came upon a red light.

Now there is nothing more ridiculous than sitting at a red light, facing an empty street, when the radio is blaring "Take cover. Please take cover."

But I did it, and so did a lot of other drivers I saw that day. On Cuyler, the gentleman in the pickup next to my car took to pounding his steering wheel and swearing when the left turn arrow finally went on. But we didn't budge an inch.

At the office, I picked up a camera, loaded it, slammed it shut. The film would not move. The film preferred to stay in the shelter of the cassette. The film had obviously been sitting next to the police scanner and knew what was going on. I yanked it out, searched through the box, found a roll of film with an eager, ignorant look, loaded it up and went outside.

Nothing seemed to be happening. A weird light was developing in the sky, and the clouds looked like they were getting ready for a free-for-all, but I couldn't see much of anything from Atchison Street.

I decided to hit the road again — against the better judgment of public officials, radio announcers, weather experts and most people with sense.

Please note that I am a recent immigrant from Wisconsin. Sure, we have tornadoes in Wisconsin. But we have them in mid-summer. We have one at a time, usually, and when there is a bad storm week, the tornadoes drop down to visit three or four times, maybe.

We do not have tornado warnings every night. We generally do not jump into our cars and drive toward tornadoes, either. We have plenty of basements up there, in which we keep our $1200-per-year furnaces, and when we hear the bad news, we like to nestle in down below among the home-canned rutabagas, and stay put.

Not so with some Pampa residents, apparently. I witnessed more than one car running a red light on the way to the action as I drove through town the first time. People stood outside businesses, houses and bars — especially bars — to watch. People were driving either very quickly, or very slowly in combination with general rubbernecking.

At least before the real stuff hit. The warning sirens had started up again after their brief rest by this time. The streets were eerie, bathed in gray-green, shadowless light. The clouds were forming a shape something like the underside of a gigantic boot, seemingly just covering the city, with the heel to the east, ready to smash down, hard.

I drove up Somerville to Hobart and cased the area for a

Guatemala

Civilian massacres continuing

WASHINGTON (AP) — A congressional fact-finding team, just back from a five-day trip to Guatemala, claims army massacres of civilians are continuing in some parts of the country despite a sharp drop in government-sponsored violence in other areas.

The team's findings conflict with the Reagan administration's assessment that political violence attributable to the military has virtually stopped in the two months since a coup by junior officers put Gen. Efraim Rios Montt in power.

The three-member team's findings could stiffen congressional resistance to administration plans to resume military aid to Guatemala, where leftist guerrillas are battling for power.

"I am far less inclined to go ahead with resumption of military aid following the trip," said Rep. Stephen Solarz, D-N.Y., who sent one staff aide on the fact-finding visit. The two other aides worked for Reps. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, and Gerry E. Studds, D-Mass.

Harkin said that based on what he's been told, "there seems to be a refocusing of the war on the Indians in the rural areas." He said he is now "absolutely, irreversibly" against military aid to Guatemala.

Even before the trip, the administration was backing away from immediate plans to approve the sale of $2 million in military helicopter parts to Guatemala, moving instead to provide economic assistance. State Department officials said.

One official, who asked not to be identified, said economic aid to Guatemala would be announced "in the very near future" with the helicopter parts sale following in one or two months.

Key members of Congress had urged that the administration provide economic help first as a sign of approval for the reforms begun by the new president, Rios Montt. They recommended withholding military aid until the junta's policies became clearer.

U.S. military aid was cut off to Guatemala in 1977 because of the government's alleged role in hundreds of political assassinations. Rios Montt took power in March vowing to stop the politically motivated killings and wipe out government corruption.

5,000 Tommies dig in for a long, cold winter fight

By The Associated Press
Despite the loss of a second warship and 20 of its sailors, Britain vowed Saturday to regain the Falkland Islands and said it had 5,000 men ashore in a secure beachhead. But Argentina claimed only 400 British commandos landed Friday and said they were "being cleaned up."

The British Defense Ministry said Saturday evening it had no reports of any Argentine attacks and claimed two of its carrier-based Harrier jets "on routine patrol" attacked and severely damaged an Argentine patrol boat "in Choiseul Sound, about 25 miles south of Stanley, the capital of the Falklands."

Ministry officials said "poor" weather on the Argentine mainland reduced the threat of any major air strike "for the time being."

The British Defense Ministry said, "There have been no reports of any Argentine action against the task force or disembarked British forces" and the lull was being used "to continue our consolidation of the position."

In Buenos Aires, the U.S. Embassy stepped up evacuation of non-essential personnel. At the United Nations, Argentine Foreign Minister Nicanor Costa Mendez and British Ambassador Sir Anthony Parsons heard Spain open a Security Council debate on the Falklands by urging the council to bring about a cease-fire, negotiations and peace.

Pope John Paul II appealed for peace and was reported leaving it up to Roman Catholic bishops in London to decide whether the escalation of the South Atlantic fighting should prompt him to abandon plans to visit Britain starting Friday.

The sinking of the frigate Ardent by Argentine jets was announced by British Defense Secretary John Nott, who told reporters in London that about 30 men were wounded in Friday's Ardent attack in addition to the 20 lost crewmen. He said another British warship had an unexploded bomb in its engine room that was later defused, and that three other ships suffered minor damage.

Britain contended it knew the ships would be vulnerable but called it the calculated cost of a landing that Nott described as a "complete success."

The Ardent was the second British warship sunk since the crisis erupted April 2 with the Argentine seizure of the Falklands from Britain. The destroyer Sheffield and 20 of its men went down after a missile fired by an Argentine fighter-bomber blasted the ship in the icy South Atlantic May 4.

Just before the British launched their assault Friday a helicopter ferrying British troops ditched in the ocean, leaving 21 dead. Britain reported two more servicemen killed, three missing and 27 wounded in the Falklands assault itself.

But the British said despite the losses they were back on the islands to stay with a total landing force of 5,000 men, including marines, paratroopers, artillery, engineers, medics and other support personnel. This was twice the number of troops ashore given previously.

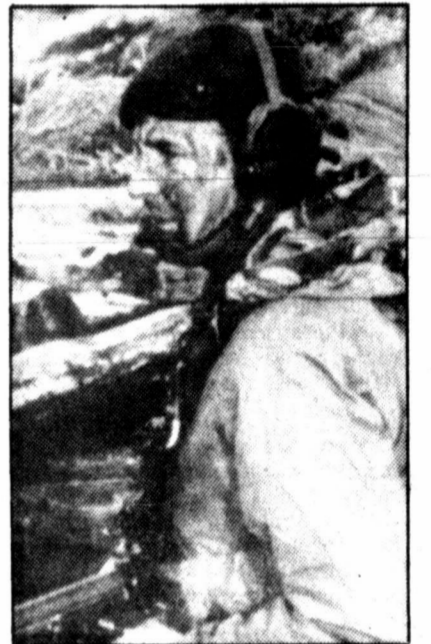

At a Defense Ministry news conference in London, Marine Lt. Col. Tim Donkin said a beachhead of about 10 square miles had been established at Port San Carlos, about 50 miles west of the capital of Stanley.

He said the operation "involves a total of over 25,000 men in ships at sea and something over 100 ships. At a range of 8,000 miles from the U.K.

(United Kingdom) base." He said this includes all elements of the task force and its maritime supply line strung out across the Atlantic. Previous estimates put the total British force at about 5,000 men.

Asked about Argentine claims to have "complete control" of British landing forces, Donkin said the British assault "has not been repelled, nor will it be. We are there to stay."

But Argentina's official Telam news agency said Britain managed to land just 400 troops in the San Carlos area, that they "are completely controlled" and were "being cleaned up" by Argentine forces Saturday.

Judge approves one man's war on drugs

WASHINGTON (AP) — A father whose children's drug addiction drove him to spend tens of thousands of dollars on helping police root out drug pushers has won the sympathy of a tax court judge, if not the Internal Revenue Service.

The IRS had disallowed the nearly $38,000 deduction claimed by Sherman H. Sampson of Mt. Hope, Kan., ruling that Sampson spent the money in his own private war on drugs rather than on exclusively public purposes.

But in a decision written last week, Tax Court Judge William A. Goffe disagreed.

"This is hardly a case of 'Dirty Harry'-type, extra-legal violence directed against 'pushers' in order to exact vengeance," Goffe wrote.

"We are convinced that petitioner's (Sampson's) overriding motivation was to prevent drug abuse from destroying the lives of other people's children, as had occurred in the case of (his) son and daughter."

"Petitioner was thus inspired by a desire to help his community rather than just himself," the court held.

In a telephone interview Saturday, Sampson said his 24-year-old son James was killed in a car accident in Wichita, Kan., six weeks ago.

"It was a head-on crash and it looked like he never saw the other vehicle," Sampson said. "Probably, more than likely, he was on heroin at the time."

He said he noticed 11 years ago that his eldest daughter was addicted to heroin.

Sampson said his daughter has been in and out of institutions and now is living with his first wife in Mississippi.

The daughter is now 37, Sampson said, but he refused to identify her further. Sampson said the two children from his second marriage are untouched by drugs.

Sampson's war began when he helped pay expenses of a TIP (turn-in-a-pusher) telephone line. Soon, he started paying money directly to tipsters.

Upon being elected attorney general in Kansas, Vern Miller, a friend of Sampson, asked him to expand his anti-drug efforts and named him a deputy assistant attorney general.

In hot pursuit?

BUCKLEY, Wash. (AP) — The pursuit was hot but the speed was not when police chased a man in a dump truck for a traffic violation.

The chase covered 15 miles — but it took 37 minutes because the speeds reached only 35 mph.

Buckley Police Chief Art McGehee said the winding, slow-motion chase began downtown after the driver refused to stop for a citation.

Blowing the truck's air horn constantly, he kept going, rumbling along Washington 14 and through residential neighborhoods with two cruisers in pursuit. A State Patrol car even joined in.

Officer Daniel Gillespie pulled in front of the truck at one point, but the truck rammed the squad car and rolled over its left rear corner, collapsing the car, buckling the roof and giving Gillespie minor neck and back injuries.

The truck driver led officers into Enumclaw, where four police cars were there to meet him.

Everest kills only woman on climbing team

PEKING (AP) — Marty Hoey, lone woman member of an American expedition trying to climb Mount Everest, has died in a fall about 2,400 feet below the summit, the official news agency Xinhua said Saturday.

Ms. Hoey fell on May 15 while approaching the expedition's camp No. 6 at 26,600 feet on the 29,028-foot mountain, the world's highest, Xinhua said.

The accident led to abandonment of the group's first planned assault on the summit, the news agency said.

Xinhua said the second and final assault is planned Monday. Word of Ms. Hoey's death was reported by expedition leader Lou Whittaker of Tacoma, Wash., after he descended to the base camp on May 19, Xinhua said.

A message received Saturday in Peking from the China-Everest Rainier expedition said it planned to break base camp on May 30 and reach the Tibetan capital of Lhasa by June 2, arriving in Peking by June 5.

'Dirty money' in sewer leads to arrest

Pampa man, 25, held as armed robbery suspect

By JEFF LANGLEY
Staff Writer

The extraction of about 50 stolen, legible checks, or what police called "dirty money," from a Pampa mobile home's sewer line Saturday evening led to the arrest of a 25-year-old Pampa man for a Friday night armed robbery here.

Police responded to a call at the Crawford C Plus Mart, 304 E. 17th, about 8 p.m. Friday, after a store clerk called police and reported only "we have been hit."

Police Chief J.J. Ryzman said

Saturday that officers at first thought they were responding to a minor traffic accident.

However, upon arrival, officers were informed that an armed bandit had just robbed the convenience store.

A female clerk on duty at the store told police that a man had entered the store, wearing a ski mask and armed with a small-caliber, silver pistol.

She told police the bandit demanded cash and checks from the store's register. The clerk told police she

'But the world got in the way'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Every morning, weekends excluded, the small door at the back of the courtroom opens and John W. Hinckley Jr. walks in, head bowed, looking neither left nor right. His gaze is vacant as he confronts another day of listening to strangers plumb his mind.

He is trailed by a retinue of unsmiling bodyguards and he takes his seat at the defense table without so much as a nod at his parents who sit in the second row. Occasionally, he'll talk to one of the younger members of his defense team. But mostly, John W. Hinckley will spend this day, as he has almost every day since his adolescence, in outward silence.

A strange thing about his trial, about to enter its fifth week, is that the talk is all about Hinckley, the assailant, and not about the president he wounded or about the bubbling, popular press secretary who lost 20 percent of his brain and nearly his life in an awful, bloody, still unbelievable instant.

By his own admission Hinckley shot President Reagan, shot James Brady and shot two law enforcement officers on March 30 of last year. The fact of the deed is not in question; only the state of Hinckley's mind on the day of the assassination attempt is in trial.

As the parade of witnesses passes — 29 so far, including mother, father, brother and sister — Hinckley's face remains a mask.

"We did not know what was wrong, but we knew something wasn't right," said JoAnn Hinckley in a voice laden with emotion, but her son looked away.

"I am the cause of John's tragedy... I wish to God I could trade places with him right now," said John W. Hinckley Sr., weeping into a handkerchief as his son stared at the polished table.

Two self-assured psychiatrists and a psychologist — hired by the defense, which wants to prove Hinckley insane — confidently describe him as a walking smorgasbord of mental diseases.

He's got them all, they say: depression, delusion, schizophrenia. Hinckley is described as being self-hating, suicidal, severely defective, psychotic, mentally ill. He thinks his deed gave him superhuman stature, that he is a special human being, that he is now the most infamous person in the world, the experts contend.

Hinckley is portrayed as being a racist once, imagining himself the head of a new world order. The psychiatrists say that, in his mind, there was a confusion of identity with John Lennon and Lennon's murderer, Mark Chapman.

On the most important day of his life, Hinckley had in his room a novel about a murderer who escaped punishment by feigning insanity.

Hinckley will spend his 27th birthday next Saturday in a cage. It is not likely that he'll be visited by a friend. The last friend he had, he lost in 1975, the psychiatrists say. When that friend was contacted, he hardly remembered John Hinckley.

And coloring it all, is Hinckley's obsession for an actress named Jodie Foster, for whom he literally went on a mission to kill — and expected to be killed.

These revelations are pulled out daily, like the stuffing from a moldy sofa. None of them seem outwardly to affect Hinckley except when his beloved Jodie's rejection of him is mentioned. Then, he simply gets up and walks out, visibly upset. He alternates that emotion with strange detachment, which he daily alternates a tan jacket with a blue one.

All day, every day, there are 100 people in the spectator seats and they all stare at him, not wanting to miss the slightest reaction, or an explosion they all feel sure will come.

Sometimes Hinckley stares back, through eyes that appear red-rimmed, always dull. He never looks as if he'd had a good night's sleep in his basement cell in the courthouse, where he is the only steady boarder.

Sometimes he'll fold his arms on the table and rest his head on them. Other times he'll put them over his head, lean back, and contemplate the ceiling. Most times he faces the witness or slumps in his seat.

This is a man with an IQ of 113, which is bright-normal and puts him in the top 20 percent of men his age; a man who, in his loneliness, turned to writing, poetry, verses such as:

"Not too many days ago,
 "I traveled to see
 "My princess to be,
 "But the world got in the way.

"Not too many minutes ago,
 "I made up my mind
 "To go out and find
 "The reason for staying afloat.

"Not too many seconds ago,
 "I took my own life
 "And ended the strife
 "Of having to live with myself."

The psychiatrists have no trouble finding out about John Hinckley. He became a sponge, they said, who subconsciously soaked up traits from his heroes, fictional and real.

Thus, he acquired guns, like Travis Bickle in the movie "Taxi Driver" and stalked a real candidate like the fictional Travis did.

complied, and the bandit took off on a motorcycle.

A customer in the parking lot followed the suspect to Hi-Land Mobile Home Park on West Kentucky, according to police.

Police said the suspect was merely an acquaintance of a couple who live in the mobile home. Chief Ryzman said while the suspect was in the trailer's bathroom shaving, police managed to warn and move the couple from the trailer.

Ryzman said officers then put the collar on the suspect, who did not offer resistance, according to police.

Police said a mask, gun and $490 were recovered at the trailer during Friday night's arrest.

Since missing checks had not been recovered, and since the couple today

Saturday a stopped - up toilet, police returned to the trailer to examine contents of the mobile home's sewer line.

Officer Michael Wopperer sawed the plastic sewer line in half and began a check of the line's contents. Sure enough, out came about 50 legible checks, taken during the hold - up, police said.

Police said formal charges will be filed against the suspect Monday.

good vantage point. I had lost track of the time. The radio was cutting in and out as the station lost power and regained it.

I stopped on West Street — I think it was West. I was pretty busy looking at the sky. A middle - aged fellow was standing calmly in the middle of the empty street, gazing upward and westward.

"We chatted. He told me his wife had been pleading with him to get to cover, but he said he was just fine where he was.

"I've been close to a lot of tornadoes," he said, "but I've never been hit by one."

I had to leave. Too many trees in the way. I drove north on Hobart, and had my first good scare at a stoplight.

The radio was broadcasting police reports, confirmed and unconfirmed sightings, and there seemed to be a dozen or more twisters out there — and my car started rocking in the wind.

But by the time the light changed, the turbulence was done, and my inner driving mechanism took over.

I had little trouble turning left onto Kentucky Avenue. There were only a half - dozen cars in sight by then. At the intersection of Kentucky and Summer five men stood in the road, watching an outcropping of clouds mix it up to the northeast. This is the place, I thought.

I parked the car, readied the camera, and strolled around watching and waiting. The men there weren't very talkative, but I could tell they were fascinated.

Several women and children peered out from a concrete water culvert in the south ditch of the road. From time to time a pickup raced through — we were in a 40 mph zone — and the men stepped aside to give it two or three feet of extra room.

After a minute or so, I gave up on the northeast system and checked the skies around town. To the north, a wall of rain. To the south, an area of cloudless sky, and beyond that, another shelf of clouds. To the east, something was brewing, and I aimed the camera at it from the center line.

Oops, another car. Two steps out, two steps back, frame it, shoot...

"Hey, look at that one!" one of the men remarked. I turned around, and to the northeast, about two miles away beyond a line of trailer houses, a long, crooked, thin twister was reaching down.

It seemed slow, very slow and delicate. It was hard to believe it was made up of winds that could crush homes, throw cars, uproot trees. It had the dark beauty of something very dangerous.

Three photos later, it broke in half and dissipated. I trotted across the Coronado Center parking lot to try to catch the action in the east. Dozens of people stood in doorways there to watch.

Two men stood exposed on the open asphalt, looking around. When they saw me with the camera, framing them from fifty feet or so, they discreetly walked away. They seemed more concerned about me than about tornadoes.

I went back to the car and drove to a clear area in the lot. I couldn't tell where the "action" was from the static - ridden radio.

From all reports at that time, it looked like most of the trouble was to the north, and the north looked blanketed by rain from my standpoint. I had no inkling of the massive damage that was taking place even then to the east.

Later I discovered I had missed most of the real weather, and personally (not professionally) I am grateful.

Looking up, I saw clouds forming a swirling pattern directly above me. I decided to take the film back to the office then.

Driving back, the streets were nearly empty of vehicles, except for an ambulance passing back and forth on Hobart. I thought about the scattered groups of spectators I had seen everywhere.

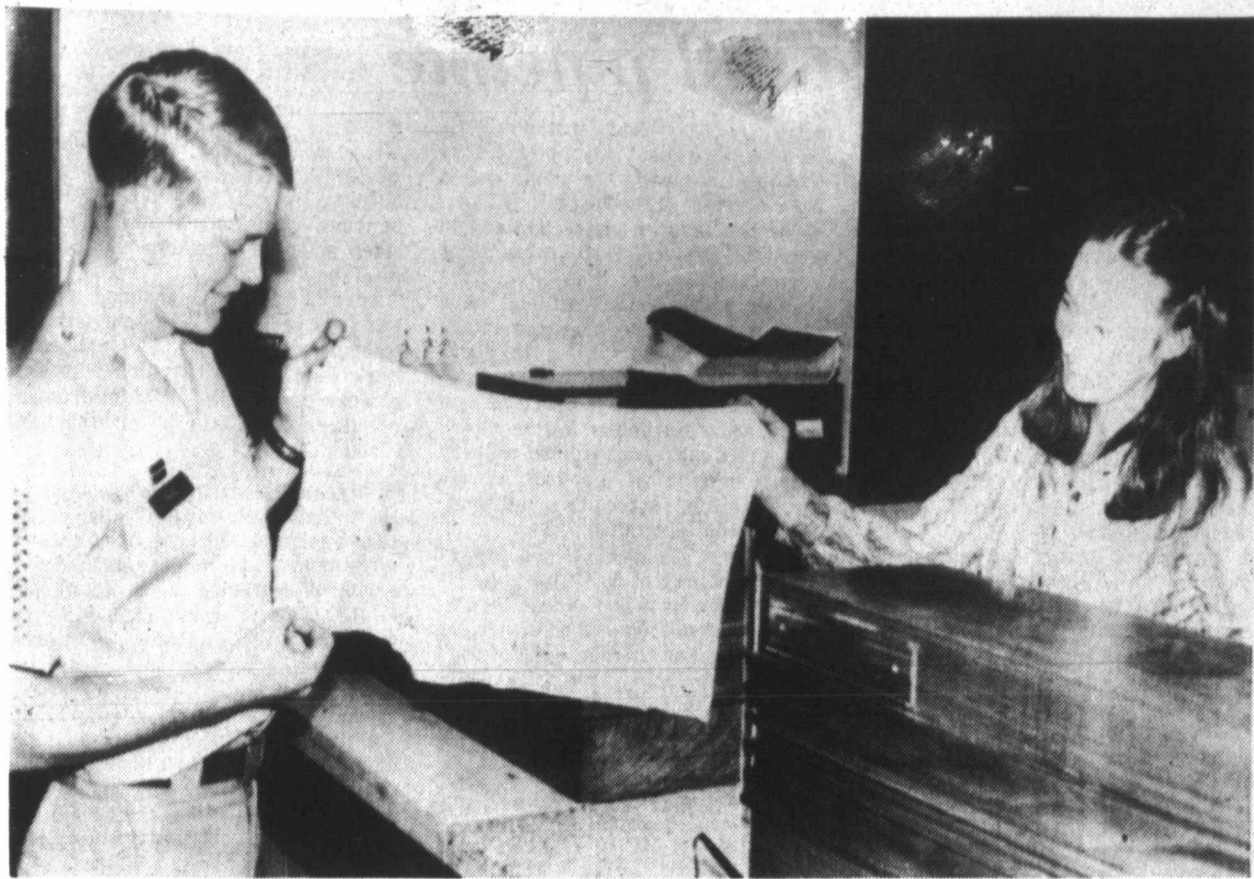

It seems nearly everyone was warned about the danger. It would be difficult to avoid those warnings in a world so completely wired for sound and video.

But many people, myself included, chose to face the danger personally. I had a better reason than most, but the others can be forgiven. There is a strange fascination in watching mortal danger approach so slowly. There is an even stranger feeling that comes from watching nature do its worst, watching quiet clouds turn into killing machines.

It seemed as if most other spectators were having a good time, and I did too. I hope the people who lost homes and businesses in the disaster will forgive us. For a short time, we were in a city quickly and drastically into a kind of war zone. And we were lucky.

But about half - an - hour after I returned to the office, the damage reports began to come in, and the good time was over.

The millions of dollars in losses area residents sustained is another story, already told. And that story is a tragedy.

SHIRT OFF BACK. Charles Rayl, 20, a New Mexico Military Institute cadet from Wellington, Kan., gave the Internal Revenue Service the shirt off his back this year when he was told he owed the government $19.19. He said he was out of checks, so he made his own — from a T-shirt. The shirt cleared a Dallas bank and was cashed by the government. Security National Bank of Roswell teller Jan Anglin is shown with Rayl verifying the cancellation stamps.

Lottery planned for flight slots

DALLAS (AP) — The Federal Aviation Administration will hold a lottery next week to give away 250 of the landing slots held by Braniff International, an action that one official of the bankrupt airline indicates may hamper future efforts to get the carrier airborne again.

Howard Putnam, Braniff chairman, said he was not happy about the FAA decision.

"Those slots are still among our prime assets," he said. "If we hope to fly again, we have to have some slots."

Braniff was granted protection from its creditors under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Act and is attempting to reorganize.

The FAA said it already had allocated 106 Braniff slots nationwide and 250 more would be available through the lottery, scheduled for Thursday.

Among the landing and departure times being held out of the lottery are 50 at Dallas-Fort Worth Regional Airport, about one-third of the Braniff total there.

Although the FAA said that action is designed to ease air traffic congestion, a spokesman for the Dallas-Fort Worth Airport Board said the airport would be hurt by the reduced number of slots.

"The problem is not with the airport, it's with the FAA and their ability to put air traffic controllers on duty," James Street said. "Activity is expanding here and it doesn't make sense to put more controllers in Chicago, where demand is lessening, and cut back in D-FW, where it is increasing."

Street said the airport probably would have little recourse "other than to write a letter and complain."

Since the air controllers' strike last August, the FAA has restricted the expansion of landing slots and banned outright the creation of new slots at the nation's 22 largest airports.

The FAA has been holding monthly lotteries for allocation of whatever slots were vacated by airlines.

When Braniff declared bankruptcy on May 13, some industry observers thought the company might be able to sell its slots. But the Department of Transportation ruled Tuesday that Braniff forfeited the slots when it grounded its fleet.

State wants to relieve prison overcrowding

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — An agency that claims it can save the state prison system money has voted to ask the special legislative session for $4.25 million to divert criminal offenders to probation.

The Adult Probation Commission agreed Friday to use $500,000 it already has to relieve overcrowded state prisons.

The nine-member commission estimated the total of $4.75 million could be used to divert 1,480 possible inmates to probation over the next 15 months.

In March, according to the commission, the inmate population of the Texas Department of Corrections was 33,297, while 84,369 felony offenders were on probation and under the supervision of local adult probation departments.

The commission noted that the TDC has estimated it costs approximately $9.80 a day to house an inmate, while probation costs 92 cents a day for each probationer.

Of that 92 cents, the state's share is 58 cents, and the probationer pays the remaining 34 cents.

The commission also voted Friday to seek $2.2 million from the special session to cover inflation.

Any funding request to the special session depends on Gov. Bill Clements adding it to the legislative agenda, which now only includes repeal of the state property tax. The session starts Monday.

The agency decided to ask the 1983 Legislature for $68.6 million to aid local adult probation departments in 1984-85.

This would be a $46.6 million increase over the current two-year spending period.

"Our budget request is an attempt to help identify those reasonable resources required to protect Texas communities, offer an effective alternative to incarceration, and make the offender, once again, a productive member of society," said executive director Don Stiles.

State representative lands in mud during drunken driving test

HOUSTON (AP) — The drunken driving test, designed to show that 0.1 percent alcohol in your blood makes you a dangerous driver, was done under close police supervision, and officers repeatedly assured participants it was all very safe.

But when Rep. Tony Polumbo, D-Sheldon, tried to maneuver around the safety cones after downing three stiff cocktails, his erratic swerving, the squealing of his tires and the tell-tale trail of fallen cones gave even veteran police instructors a start.

"He's not going to make it!" muttered instructor Mike Bell, who warned others waiting near the starting gate to "take cover."

But before everyone could take cover, the four-term legislator who said he wanted to learn first hand about drunken driving, lost control of his test car, skidded off the concrete track and slid into the mud, where a wrecker had to tow him out.

Now Polumbo says he's ready to seek tougher laws against drunk drivers.

"It made me a lot more frightened to be on the road with a drunk driver," a sober Polumbo said the next day. "I don't drink, and it really threw me for a loop."

The drunken driving test was set up by the Houston Safety Council for Polumbo and two news reporters in hopes of increasing public awareness of the effects of alcohol on a person's driving skills.

Floyd McDonald of the police department crime lab served as bartender and mixed drinks to strengths based on body weight.

After consuming nine ounces of 86 proof Scotch in less than an hour, Polumbo registered 0.158 percent alcohol in his blood on a breath detecting machine.

The legal limit in Texas and most other states is 0.10 percent, meaning if you are caught driving with that much or more alcohol in your blood, you are driving while intoxicated.

Polumbo said he plans to introduce a bill in the next regular session of the Legislature to lower the legal limit in Texas to .08 percent.

The scores of all three participants, as predicted, dropped after they drank 6½ to 10 ounces of liquor on empty stomachs.

But Polumbo, who was more than 50 percent over the legal DWI limit for the test, did the worst as a drunk driver. Scores were based on skill in negotiating curves and making quick stops over a course marked by safety cones on a huge concrete parking lot.

Polumbo had averaged a decent 93.3 for his three runs on the police academy's pursuit driving course while sober. After three "Scotch on the rocks," his average score plunged to 53.3 — not including the zero he got for driving his vehicle into the mud.

Receding waters reveal mystery tombstone

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The receding floodwaters of Shoal Creek recently revealed the tombstone of a former World War II soldier buried in Mississippi, and no one seems to know how the stone got there.

The former wife of Wisdom D. Martin insists the original tombstone is still atop his grave in Kosciusko, Miss.

The tombstone found in Austin is an exact copy of the one above Martin's grave, including birth date, death date and World War II Army rank, the Austin American-Statesman reported Saturday.

The words "PFC U.S. Army, World War II" on the tombstone indicate it was supplied by the Army, which uses its own monument makers, the paper said.

U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen's office has contacted the Veterans Administration in Maryland for records that might reveal any Austin connection.

Rick Harris, who works at a downtown automobile dealership, found the tombstone on May 13 after floodwaters had receded in Shoal Creek.

"We had been moving cars because of the flood, and I just walked over to the creek, and lo and behold, there was this tombstone," Harris said.

He contacted the Bureau of Vital Statistics, and the stone eventually was traced to Mississippi and a woman named Ruth McFadden.

The paper said she was married to Martin when he died of natural causes at the age of 55 in 1968.

"This whole thing has me bothered since I first heard about it," she said. "The only thing I can think of was that maybe the people that make the tombstones made the wrong one, and sent it to somebody and they sent it back. All I know is that the original tombstone is still there."

She said her husband had been a high school principal and math teacher in Kosciusko, a city of 9,000.

"This thing is one bizarre little story," Harris said.

Robbery suspect shot

BEDFORD, Texas (AP) — A 39-year-old robbery suspect was shot to death early Saturday by tactical officers after holding a gun on a female hostage, authorities said.

Charles Edward Hardin was killed about 1:40 a.m. after he refused police orders to surrender and tried to escape with a hostage from a house in this Fort Worth suburb.

A standoff began when Irving police tactical officers and Bedford officers attempted to serve an arrest and search warrant about 12:15 a.m., according to Bedford Police Chief Glen Lightford.

Hardin was wanted on an aggravated robbery warrant issued in connection with a supermarket holdup in the Dallas suburb of Irving, Lightford said.

At about 12:45 a.m., police told Hardin over the telephone to surrender, but he refused.

LOCAL OPINION

Weather watchers did their job

Anyone who was not warned during Wednesday's tornadoes around Pampa must have been unconscious.

Everyone involved in the Civil Defense warning plan did a fantastic job. The radio stations broadcast numerous early warnings — the cablevision interrupt system worked — sirens blared warnings for more than a hour — and law enforcement and civilian volunteers put their lives on the line to keep us informed about the tornadoes' movements.

How Pampa escaped direct hits while at least six confirmed tornadoes danced on the ground around the city is anybody's guess. Just by chance the tornadoes stayed aloft as they moved across the city — businesses and rural residents were not as fortunate, but luckily there were no injuries.

By all odds, at least one of Wednesday's tornadoes should have cut a path of destruction and death through the city.

But, had the tornadoes hit own town, at least injuries and death would have been greatly reduced, thanks to the early warning residents received.

A huge tornado that cut through Wichita Falls a few years ago is a reminder to us about what could have happened here.

The monster twister that hit Wichita Falls looked similar to the huge, wide tornado that lurked stationary on the ground, just northeast of Pampa.

The half-mile wide twister that hit Wichita Falls cut a path of destruction right through business and residential districts. Buildings in an area of town blocks long were not just destroyed — they were gone. A half-mile wide section of that city could not have been more effectively destroyed by a bombing raid.

That tornado killed 43 people in Wichita Falls and 18 in Vernon. Nearly 800 people were injured, many seriously, at the same time. Bleeding and battered victims spilled into hallways of local hospitals, which could never prepare for so many injuries at one time.

Ambulances and blood were in short supply in a hurry, as surrounding communities sent equipment and blood to fellow Texans. Communications — water — utilities were all lost at once.

The same situation could have happened here Wednesday, but the great warning we had allowed most of us to take shelter.

Even though residents received advance warning, there were still sightseers who ignored the pleas to take cover and drove around the city, chasing the twisters.

Maybe they just do not know what a tornado can do. Maybe they do not know that many people killed in the Wichita Falls tornado were driving cars.

But to see what the most destructive power in nature can do, perhaps the sightseers should take a look at the bombed-out Halliburton plant or the rotting cattle carcasses around the area. The 100 or so steers that were snuffed by the storm just as easily could have been Pampans.

"We gave them plenty of warning — what they do after that is up to them," Civil Defense Coordinator Steve Vaughn said.

Most of us were thankful for the warning and took shelter.

And to the men and women who risked their lives to give us warning, we salute you.
GREAT JOB!!

Our public needs nuclear knowledge

The many thousands of Americans who participated recently in Ground Zero anti-nuclear observances provided ample proof of the heightened level of public anxiety over the nuclear arms race. An even more telling measure is the popular support shown in public opinion polls for a bilateral nuclear freeze.

Clearly, growing numbers of ordinary citizens are at least uneasy if not alarmed at the prospect of a continuing arms race in which both the Soviet Union and the United States will acquire more and more nuclear weapons.

Just as clearly, this wave of anxiety is being encouraged by organizations and individuals on the political left, including remnants of the old anti-Vietnam coalition, who are seeking to exploit the nuclear weapons issue for their own ends.

But it would be foolish and wrong to assume that the nuclear freeze movement is nothing more than the product of left-wing agitation and propaganda. Its adherents include lots of people whose personal politics are anything but left or even liberal. Any movement endorsed by evangelist Billy Graham and conservative columnist James Jackson Kilpatrick can hardly be described as left-wing.

Moreover, public discussion and debate of nuclear arms issues ought to be encouraged in a country where public opinion ultimately exercises a veto over defense and foreign policies.

For that discussion and debate to be constructive, it is essential that it rise above the level of polemics and propaganda. Ground Zero activities did provide some opportunity for opponents of the nuclear freeze movement to be heard. Still, it is probably fair to say that most Ground Zero audiences across the country heard only one side of the nuclear freeze debate.

That this was so is doubly unfortunate given the general level of ignorance about nuclear weapons, doctrine and strategy. Films showing the horrors of Hiroshima do not add much to an understanding of what it takes to keep the Soviet Union from exploiting its emerging nuclear superiority in ways that extend Moscow's grasp.

Unfortunately, this message is not going to get through to citizens unless the Reagan administration and those who support its effort to strengthen the American nuclear deterrent try harder to counter a protest that seems both logical and popular.

Why is it necessary for the United States to build more nuclear weapons than it already has? Is the notion of "overkill" a fact or a dangerous myth? Can it really be true that the Reagan administration is proposing to spend $180 billion over the next five years just so that, should doomsday ever arrive, Russian rubble can be made to bounce one more time?

The danger of nuclear war or Soviet nuclear blackmail has increased significantly in recent years. Preventing both requires that the American nuclear deterrent be strengthened in specific ways that will reduce this country's vulnerability to a disarming Soviet first strike.

Agreeing to a nuclear freeze now would stop the defense programs essential to strengthening the nation's nuclear deterrent, surely the most reliable insurance against nuclear war or nuclear intimidation.

But unless the facts that justify the Reagan administration's strategic modernization program get through to the good and concerned citizens now signing up in the nuclear freeze movement, strategic modernization will be cut short and this country's peril will increase accordingly.

By ROBERT WALTERS

WASHINGTON (NEA) — Although Washington Gov. John Spellman is a soft-spoken, middle-aged moderate Republican who bears little physical resemblance to a Roman warrior, he deserves to be honored as a modern-day Horatius.

Horatius became a legendary Roman hero on the basis of his bravery in holding at bay the invading Etruscan army on the banks of the Tiber River.

Spellman has performed the contemporary equivalent of that courageous feat by single-handedly repulsing the Northern Tier Pipeline Co. on the shores of Puget Sound.

Northern Tier is the sponsor of a proposed oil pipeline whose route stretches almost 1,500 miles from Port Williams on the eastern edge of Puget Sound to the north-central Minnesota community of Clearbrook.

The project's promoters claimed earlier this year that various federal agencies and state officials in Washington, Idaho, Montana, North Dakota and Minnesota had issued all but one of the approximately 1,400 permits required to begin construction on the $2.7 billion pipeline.

But Spellman last month rejected the company's application for a Washington construction permit on the grounds that "the record is replete with Northern Tier's failures to support the feasibility of its project."

The governor's principal objection was that "the proposed project constituted a very real threat to Puget Sound, which is a national treasure," because the westernmost 30 miles of the pipeline would have been submerged beneath that body of water without adequate safeguards.

There are, however, numerous other reasons for rejecting the senseless pipeline, which theoretically is supposed to carry crude oil from Alaska's North Slope to refineries in the Pacific Northwest, Northern Plains and Midwest.

There is, for example, considerable evidence that both the supply of Prudhoe Bay petroleum and the demand for it in the regions to be served will be reduced substantially by the time the project is completed, thus making the pipeline an inefficient if not unnecessary boondoggle.

The beneficiaries of the boondoggle would be the select group of major corporations that constitute the Northern Tier consortium and have devised a lucrative arrangement to profit from self-dealing in non-competitive contracts.

One member of the consortium is a subsidiary of Burlington Northern Inc., whose railroad "owns rights-of-way along substantial portions of the pipeline route," according to a Federal Trade Commission study.

On Sept. 27, 1977, the board of directors of the U.S. Steel Corp. voted to join the Northern Tier consortium by investing $3 million in the partnership and lending it an additional $3 million.

On Oct. 3, 1977 — exactly six days later — Northern Tier agreed to purchase from U.S. Steel no less than 600,000 tons and as much as 750,000 tons of the pipe needed for the project.

The FTC found no evidence of any effort to obtain competitive bids, although less than a year earlier Northern Tier had obtained price quotations which "showed U.S. Steel to be priced consistently higher" than two other potential suppliers, Bethlehem Steel and Kaiser Steel.

After U.S. Steel determined that it could not provide the pumping station equipment needed for the pipeline, the consortium solicited the participation of a new partner that could fulfill those requirements, the Westinghouse Electric Corp.

Internal Westinghouse documents show that the company expected to earn a generous 40 percent profit on its investment of $4 million because the firm's "preferred position as a supplier to the project" could enable it "to obtain over $50 million in profitable hardware, systems and services orders."

Thus, it's hardly surprising that spellman experienced "extraordinary attempts to apply pressure to me" and concluded that "a high percentage... certainly a majority" of the $50 million spent to date on the project was earmarked for lobbying activities. "The money was not put into research and development and not put into analysis," he added. "Somebody has a lot of money sunk in a project which is largely public relations." Today in history

Today is Sunday, May 23, the 143rd day of 1982. There are 222 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history: On May 23, 1960, Israel announced that former Nazi official Adolf Eichmann had been captured in Argentina — and would be put on trial in Israel.

Also on this date: In 1618, the Thirty Years War began — as Bohemian rebels triumphed in Prague.

In 1701, Captain William Kidd was hanged in London after being convicted of piracy and murder.

In 1939, the British parliament approved a plan for an independent Palestine by 1949 — a plan which was later denounced by Jews and Arabs in Palestine.

Ten years ago: President Richard Nixon met with Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev for five hours of personal talks in the Kremlin. The two heads of state then signed two pacts pledging cooperation in research on environmental and health problems.

Five years ago: The Supreme Court refused to hear the appeals of Nixon Administration figures John Mitchell, H.R. Haldean and John Ehrlichman after their convictions in the Watergate cover-up.

One year ago: About 25 heavily armed men seized the Barcelona headquarters of a major Spanish bank — taking more than 200 people hostage.

Another vote, another crisis?

By DON GRAFF

Are we ready for another crisis? Ready or not, there are the makings in the Caribbean in the shape of the Dominican Republic's presidential election.

The ingredients are all there: shaky economy and fragile governmental structure, a history of political turmoil and American intervention, and a truculent military leadership inclined to take matters into its own hands if it doesn't like the results of the May 16 voting.

By way of brief review, the republic was making news as a full-blown crisis within recent memory. That was in the 1960s, following the assassination of longtime dictator Rafael Trujillo and the military overthrow of his left-leaning elected successor, Juan Bosch.

Washington responded to the ensuing militant response of Bosch's supporters in the usual Pavlovian fashion. Lyndon Johnson ordered in the Marines to save the country from a perceived communist threat.

They remained until mid-1966, when an election marred by charges of fraud and voter intimidation installed in the presidency a candidate approved by both Washington and the Dominican army.

The surprising part of the Dominican story came later, in 1978 when the 1966 loser, Antonio Guzman, won and was allowed to take office by a reluctant army made well aware of the position of a human-rights-minded Carter administration in Washington.

The Republic did not go to pot or communism and Guzman, true to a 1978 promise, is retiring after one term.

Sporadic violence has marred a campaign in which the candidate of Guzman's own Dominican Revolutionary party, Salvador Jorge Blanco, has appeared to lead a field including on the left wing our old friend Juan Bosch as the entry of the Dominican Liberation Party.

But the real problem is the army, which likes Blanco not much more than it does Bosch and has been arguing its case in Washington.

The response has been mixed. The State Department is on record as being opposed to any interference in the normal election process and willing to work with any freely elected Dominican government.

The Dominicans have encountered a friendlier reception in the Pentagon, however. It has found tangible expression in arms aid, not in alarming quantities in itself but possibly sufficient to give an impression of support. Such impressions, as the Argentine descent upon the Falklands has suggested to some observers, can have unfortunate consequences.

Under the circumstances, the lack of public attention to the developing Dominican situation may or may not be a good thing. With luck, the neglect will turn out to be benign. Spared the intense outside pressure afflicting an El Salvador, the Dominicans may be able to work out their own solution with just enough prodding from Washington to keep them all playing within their own rules.

On the other hand, should the rules be damned, the United States could suddenly be involved in another crisis taking most Americans by surprise.

The best thing of all would be the election and its aftermath demonstrate that some lessons have been learned, in the Dominican Republic and Washington.

There have certainly been enough in recent years to go around.

Bottoming out

By ART BUCHWALD

All the President's men keep saying the recession will bottom out very soon. It is an act of faith with them that, if the people would just have patience, Mr. Reagan's economic plans will work. I was skeptical until I spoke to one of Reagan's advisers. He was in a deep pit and I leaned over the edge and yelled down to him. "What do you see?"

"It seems to be bottoming out," he yelled up.

"How do you know?"

"I can see a light at the end of the tunnel."

"Where is it coming from?"

"The latest indicators," he shouted.

"What do they indicate?"

"Unemployment is going up, which means that inflation is going down. Once inflation goes down, interest rates will fall and the real gross national product should rise."

I peered into the hole. It was all black. "I can't see anything from here."

"You have to be down here where we are to get the picture. The new tax cuts will go into effect in July and then we'll see a complete change. Once we can clear out these inventories, the factories will start humming again, and with the new tax credits and business confidence, we'll get the economy on its feet."

"Where is the economy now?" I shouted.

"It's stagnated down here in the muck and mire, because Congress won't pass the budget the President wants."

"Can you see it?"

"I can't see it. But I can smell it," he yelled up. "It's slippery as all get-out."

"What are you going to do about the deficits in the budget?"

"We can live with them, providing there is an upturn in the economy, and the consumer gets back his confidence, and we have a good recovery in the second half of the year."

"How do you know all those things if you're down there in the dark?" I shouted.

"We know what we're doing. We didn't make this recession. Carter did. The only thing that has surprised us is how deep it is."

"Isn't it politically dangerous for you to be down there so long?"

"It's no fun, because poor people keep falling on you all the time. But the President wants us to report when it bottoms out down here, and then he can go on television and announce it to the people."

He said something else but I couldn't hear it.

"Are you all right?" I shouted.

Finally he yelled up. "Yeh, I just slipped another 10 feet down. We may have to shore up this place with some excise taxes and $40 billion in Social Security cuts."

"If you do that, you're going to have a lot of old people down there with you."

"Well, we can't scrape any more out of the military. So we're going to have to get fill from somewhere."

"How about giving up the personal tax cuts for '83 and '84?"

"The president will never go for it. This recession will never bottom out if we take money away from the people."

"It sounds like you're between the rock and hard place. Can I throw you a rope for safety?"

"No, if I get in trouble I have the Laffer curve to hold on to."

I yelled down something, but once again there was nothing but silence. "Hoover, are you all right?"

A voice came up from the dark: "Yeh, I just hit a slight depression."

"Are you in a depression?" I screamed fearfully.

"No, I though I had stepped on a place that was bottoming out and I didn't see the hole. I'm okay now. I'm holding on to a prime indicator which shows we are on very solid footing."

"Thank God. No recession is worth the loss of a Reagan economist."

Surprises hitting stock market

NEW YORK (AP) — The nasty surprises a recession can bring have been taking their toll on the stock market in recent days.

In March and April stock prices staged a strong rally, as traders marshaled their hopes for the beginnings of an economic recovery by the third quarter of this year.

But since early May about half of the market's gain has been wiped out by a series of jolts.

At mid-month there was the shutdown of Braniff International, and its filing for protection under the federal bankruptcy laws.

A week later, another large and troubled company, International Harvester, repeatedly denied rumors that it was about to file a similar petition.

In between came word that a small but aggressive firm, Drysdale Government Securities, was unable to meet interest payments coming due on some of its transactions.

The principal bank involved in Drysdale Government's dealings, Chase Manhattan of New York, said it would cover the debts, calming fears that the situation would endanger other Wall Street firms.

But as the dust from that affair settled, the stock market completed its second straight week of losses.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials dropped 21.88 to 835.90, after an 11.42-point loss the week before.

The recession's impact on corporate profits has been pervasive. The Commerce Department reported that after-tax earnings in the first quarter of the year tumbled 17.5 percent.

The preliminary signals for the second quarter were gloomy as well. For example, Xerox, a long-time darling of investing institutions, forecast a profit decline for the quarter.

As Gary Wengowski, director of economic research at Goldman, Sachs & Co., put it, "Business reaction to the profit plunge is likely to include: continued liquidation of inventories at near-record rates this quarter, cutbacks in capital expenditures, and additional layoffs to improve productivity."

These forces, Wengowski said, "should offset the beginnings of a consumer spending upturn," keeping the gross national product, adjusted for inflation, from showing any growth in the April-June quarter.

With all that, Wengowski voices the belief that "the recession is still likely to end around mid-year." But he said the ensuing recovery could well falter by next winter because of high interest rates.

Police unable to indentify mystery convict

SEATTLE (AP) — Behind the bars of the King County Jail sits a man whose identity remains a mystery even to those who found him guilty of theft and forgery.

After hundreds of hours of tracking down leads and trying to match fingerprints in 12 states, Canada and England, police and prosecutors have no clues to the identity of the swarthy man. They call him "John Doe." He was arrested Feb. 25 at the Seattle-Tacoma International Airport with a briefcase full of stolen identification. He was convicted of first-degree theft and forgery on April 29.

Prosecutors describe him as a slick-talking charmer who had a cleverly planned scheme to convert a stolen business check for $16,000 into cash and traveler's checks.

"We can prove he's not who he says he is," says police Detective Larry Baylor, "but we can't find out who he is."

"They are the ones who arrested me and convicted me," the mystery man said in a recent interview. "It's their duty to find out who I am. I know who I am."

John Doe's fingerprints have not appeared in the department's computer files.

"It's very possible he didn't get fingerprinted even if he had been charged (before)," said Marilyn Hattori, a King County police fingerprint examiner.

"We ran out of places to look," Baylor said, "and we ran out of leads."

Income gains bigger in city than country

WASHINGTON (AP) — City-dwelling Americans had bigger personal income gains in 1980 than people in rural areas — the first time that's happened since 1976 — but recession kept both groups from doing as well as in 1979, government figures indicated Saturday.

Personal income rose 12.1 percent to a per capita average of $10,153 in the nation's 305 urban areas — known as standard metropolitan statistical areas or SMSA — compared with just 8.7 percent, or $7,556 per capita, in non-urban counties, the Commerce Department said.

Gains had been greater for both categories in 1979 — 12.8 percent for city dwellers and 13.8 percent for rural Americans.

Inflation, as figured by a government index based on personal consumption spending, rose 10.2 percent in 1980, the report said. So, many Americans, especially in rural areas, apparently saw their income gains more than eaten up by higher prices.

The short but steep 1980 recession apparently was the main reason that income gains were smaller that year, both in cities and in rural areas.

Implying that recessions hit rural areas harder, the report noted that of the three times since 1969 that income growth in cities has outpaced growth in rural areas, "both 1974 and 1980 were periods of national recession." City dwellers also had greater income gains than rural Americans in 1976.

Often, when a regional manufacturing plant or big agriculture-related business goes bankrupt in a rural area, there are few alternative jobs for employees thrown out of work, and total income can be quickly affected. Good jobs can be tough to find in cities during recessions, too, but the overall effect sometimes is less evident.

"The national decline in farm income contributed to, but was not solely responsible for, the 1980 smaller increase in non-SMSA counties," the report said.

WHEAT FIELD DAY

We have a Gray - Roberts County Wheat Field Day set for Wednesday, May 26, at 2 p.m. starting at the Wallace Birkes farm, one mile north of Laketon on the west side of FM 748 as you head towards Miami.

The Field Day features demonstrations on spring top-dressing of fertilizer on Birkes' farm. The program moves to the Tom Henderson farm, about one-half mile east of the first stop. Wheat diseases, varieties and date of planting are included in a series of demonstration plots. One of the main purposes of the Henderson demonstration plots is to determine the effect and interaction of varieties, seed treatments, date of planting, and inoculation of seed with bunt (stinking smut) disease organisms.

There will be four Extension Service Specialists on hand to assist in explaining the various demonstration plots as well as assist wheat producers with crop production problems on questions. The specialists include: Frank Petr, agronomist; Bob Berry, plant pathologist (diseases); Carl Pennington, soil chemist (fertility); and Carl Patrick, entomologist (insects).

We think this will be an excellent opportunity for producers to see first-hand the effect of the various production practices mentioned above. The Henderson demonstrations are quite involved and farmers concerned with Bunt in their wheat should make an effort to attend this program. Vernon Cook and I extend an invitation to all area wheat farmers.

BUSHLAND WHEAT DAY
There will be a wheat field day at the USDA Research Laboratory just west of Bushland on Interstate 40 on Thursday, May 27, at 1 p.m.

The highlight of the tour will be a nursery of commercial hybrid wheats being compared to TAM 105 and other varieties of wheat. TAM 105 is the highest yielding and the latest wheat released by the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station. The Irrigated Small Grain Nursery will be shown by Dr. K.B. Porter. The researcher has developed TAM 105 and several other outstanding wheat varieties that are grown on several million acres in Texas, Oklahoma, New Mexico and Kansas.

Other features on the tour will be a dryland wheat nursery, effect of fertility and water levels on six varieties of wheat, limited tillage dryland wheat production systems, cattle grazing, and research with a new herbicide for wheat called Glean.

Growers interested in seeing the latest wheat varieties and hybrids and finding out about new efficient limited tillage production methods for wheat will benefit from the tour. Everyone is invited to attend by Dr. B.A. Steward, resident director of the USDA laboratory.

COTTON PRICE PROSPECTS

The following information comes from the latest issue of the Western Livestock Roundup, a cooperative project with USDA and Extension Services of Western and Great Plains states and headquartered in Denver.

Current fed cattle prices are probably very close to the highest prices of this year. Increased supplies of fed cattle later in the year will likely result in the widening of the marketing margin. Additionally, weightstend to increase seasonally from summer through fall. This will result in even more of an increase in beef production relative to the increase in slaughter.

It would appear that some strength in feeder cattle prices would be warranted given the profitability picture in cattle feeding. However, it likely will take several months of sustained profits from cattle feeding before those profits are reflected in higher feeder cattle prices. With anticipated lower fed cattle prices throughout the remainder of 1982, it appears doubtful that sufficient optimism will be generated to sustain much of an increase in feeder cattle prices throughout the remainder of 1982, it appears doubtful that sufficient optimism will be generated to sustain much of an increase in feeder cattle prices. Prices for 6 - 700 pound yearling steers are expected to continue trading in low to mid - $60 per cwt area throughout much of 1982. Prices for steer calves may increase slightly, but calves are expected to trade in a range from $68 to $73 per cwt over the next several months.

Cancer of the larynx is one of the most treatable cancers. If discovered in time, 9 out of 10 patients are curable. Of these, two-thirds learn to speak again, thanks to a rehabilitation program of the A.C.S. Early detection and prompt treatment can save your life and your voice.

Oilers' Stabler just asking for a fair shot

HOUSTON (AP)—Houston Oilers quarterback Ken Stabler is philosophical about coming into training camp number two behind his former understudy Gifford Neilsen. "Any way you say it, the job belongs to Gifford," Stabler said after being the first player to show up for the team's mini-camp this weekend. "But the chase isn't over yet. I've still got plenty of confidence in my ability. All I'm asking for is a fair shot."

Stabler emerged from his customary low off-season profile and wonders why there should be any curiosity about his activity or if he'll return to the team. "I've just been taking care of business and listening to what people say about me," said Stabler, who religiously avoided working out in off-season training at the Oilers' new facilities. "Just because I haven't been working out here doesn't mean I'm not in shape," Stabler said. "I've been lifting some weights. I jog around the lake close to my home. I've kept my weight down. I feel great." Stabler not only has to take a back seat to Neilsen, he must contend with speculation that he will be waived because the Oilers chose West Virginia quarterback Oliver Luck in the second round of last month's draft. "There's no reason to think that anyone who's involved in the mini-camp won't be with us in San Angelo," the team's training spot, Oiler coach Ed Biles said. "The purpose of this weekend isn't to make personnel decisions, and no team's going to be talking trade right now." Stabler says he's heard the rumors too. "If they don't want me, then they should just call me in and tell me," Stabler said. "Nobody's told me anything. I want to be as productive as I can for everybody on the team. I'm ready to play any role they want me to play." Stabler has thrown 27 touchdowns and 46 interceptions in his two seasons with the Oilers and would prefer to end his career on a positive note. "I know I'm nearing the end of the line," Stabler said. "I'm not saying this season will be my last, though. When I go out, I want it to be with a good taste in my mouth."

White Deer gymnast places at nationals

Bart Thomas of White Deer just missed qualifying for the finals Friday in the National Aero Gymnastics Meet at Rockford, Illinois. Bart, 11 years old, finished seventh in power tumbling and missed the finals by only one position. The top six gymnasts in each event advanced to Saturday's finals. Bart finished 10th in the double-mini trampoline, which was considered his specialty, according to his mother, Bobbi Thomas.

"He wasn't really concerned with the tumbling," Mrs. Thomas said. "He just didn't think he would do that well." Thomas' teammate Jon Beck placed second in the double-mini trampoline to qualify for the finals in the 13-14 age division. Bart competed in the 11-12 age group. Youngsters from all across the United States and even from other countries competed in the meet.

"There was a gymnast from South Africa competing and Bart just couldn't get that someone from that far away would be in the same meet with him," Mrs. Thomas said. Thomas won all four events he entered at the national qualifying meet in Levelland to qualify for the nationals. "We're real proud of Bart," Mrs. Thomas said. "It was quite an experience for him."

Sandies ousted by Coronado, 3-2

LUBBOCK—Lubbock Coronado slipped by Amarillo High, 3-2, Friday to win the bi-district baseball series. The Sandies closed with a 19-9 record while Coronado advances to the regionals Monday at El Paso with a 27-8 record. AHS was held to three hits, two by Tony Ellis and one by Greg Phifer. The Sandies fell to Coronado, 10-7, in the first game Tuesday. Coronado scored a pair of runs in the second inning and one more in the third. AHS tallied one each in the third and fourth frames. Losing pitcher was Mike Williams, who finished with a 4-2 mound record. Richard Smith (10-1) got the win. Coronado had triples by Gary Beard, Jerry Foster and Donald Cristan.

Brother trio qualifies for Indy

INDIANAPOLIS (AP)—Dale Whittington joined his two brothers Saturday in the tentative field for the Indianapolis 500 as nine more drivers qualified for the fastest starting lineup in the race's history. Michael Chandler, who finished 12th in his first Indy race a year ago, churned out a four-lap qualification average of 198.042 mph. Saturday's best effort and good for a tentative start in the middle of the eighth. The nine qualifiers raised the field to 31, leaving two spots to fill for the 33-car, race-day grid. After the lineup is complete, bumping will begin, with each subsequently faster car displacing the slowest of the already-qualified cars one-by-one. But the 31 cars already in the field averaged 197.832 mph, compared with the 33-car record of 192.584 set in 1978. The top 31 last year averaged 190.187. The fourth and final round of qualifications was scheduled from 1 p.m. to 7 p.m. EDT Sunday. Chandler, 24, of Dana Point, Calif., was driving a Chevrolet-powered Eagle entered by car-builder and former Indy-car driver Dan Gurney. The car's engine was the fastest of the so-called stock block (normally aspirated) power plants ever to qualify for the 500. Whittington, 22, of Orlando, Fla., made history when he became the third member of his family to earn a starting spot. Dale and older brothers Don, 36, and Bill, 32, are the first sibling trio ever to qualify for Indy in the same year. Both the older brothers, who have started two previous 500s, were among eight drivers who qualified at more than 200 mph during the first weekend of time trials for the 66th Indy classic. Other qualifiers Saturday included a brother of another already-qualified driver, Jerry Sneva, former Indy rookie of the year and younger brother of two-time pole position winner Tom Sneva, put his brother's 1981 Indy entry, a March-Cosworth, in the tentative field at 195.270. Also, rookie Chet Fillip, making the last of three allowable qualification attempts and putting an Eagle-Cosworth in at 194.879; rookie Jim Hickman, driving a March-Cosworth to a 196.217 mph set; Johnny Parsons, taking over a March-Cosworth for the first time on the previous day and then qualifying it at 195.929.

Celtics whip 76ers to even series at 3-3

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The Boston Celtics, who made Philadelphia's offense and its once-formidable series lead disappear on the same day, are one victory away from completing their second straight miracle playoff comeback against the 76ers.

The Celtics held Philadelphia to a record-low 27 points in the second half Friday night and posted an 88-75 victory to even the National Basketball Association semifinal playoff series at 3-3.

The 76ers, who blew a 3-1 lead in the Eastern Conference finals against Boston a year ago, will suffer the same fate again unless they can beat the Celtics at the Boston Garden in Game 7 Sunday.

"We can't overlook the fact that this is still a seven-game series," Boston Coach Bill Fitch said. "We still have to go home and play hard."

Fitch said he felt no sense of deja vu regarding this series and last year, saying: "I have enough trouble with English without trying French."

Some of the Celtics players said they didn't believe last year's comeback would help them Sunday.

"This game (the sixth) and what happened in the past is history," said center Robert Parish, who scored 14 points and pulled down 13 rebounds for the Celtics. "The only thing that matters is Sunday."

But forward Cedric Maxwell added, "It's not over, but if the 76ers said what they really feel inside, they would say they had lost a golden opportunity to end the series at home."

"I'm so tired of hearing about last year," 76ers Coach Billy Cunningham said. "We're down, but we'll get a good night's sleep, practice some tomorrow and then go up to Boston and try to win."

The 76ers shot only 35 percent for the game, but their offense was especially ineffective in the second half, when they hit only seven of 34 shots for 20 percent.

The 27 second-half points was an NBA playoff low since the league adopted the 24-second clock in 1954. The previous record was 28 points by Los Angeles against Milwaukee on April 7, 1974.

The 11 points scored by the 76ers in the fourth quarter tied the playoff record low held by three other teams. In the final 18 minutes of the game, the 76ers had four field goals, and two of those were on goaltending calls.

Philadelphia guard Andrew Toney, who scored 39 points in one 76ers victory and 30 in another during the series, scored three points and was a nightmarish 1-for-11 from the field.

"Offensively, we couldn't generate anything in the second half," Cunningham said. "When we had good shots, we didn't make them, and the Celtics were very effective at blocking shots inside."

"It hurts. It would have been great to end it tonight," said Julius Erving, who led all scorers with 24 points although he was only eight of 20 from the field. "We had the nice crowd. Now we have to win one on the road at Boston Garden. It will be tough. We know it's all uphill."

The 76ers appeared to be ready to silence talk about last year in the first period as they took a 25-10 lead with 3:42 left on a basket by Toney, but that was to be his only field goal of the game.

The Celtics, who have won an unprecedented 14 NBA titles and are seeking to become the first team to successfully defend their championship since 1969, cut the deficit to 26-20 by the end of the first period.

Boston tied the score four times — at 51-51, 53-53, 57-57 and 67-67 — but didn't take the lead until Parish scored with 7:58 left in the game for a 69-67 edge.

"When we got ahead, I think our guys forgot they were tired," Fitch said.

Indy has another crackup

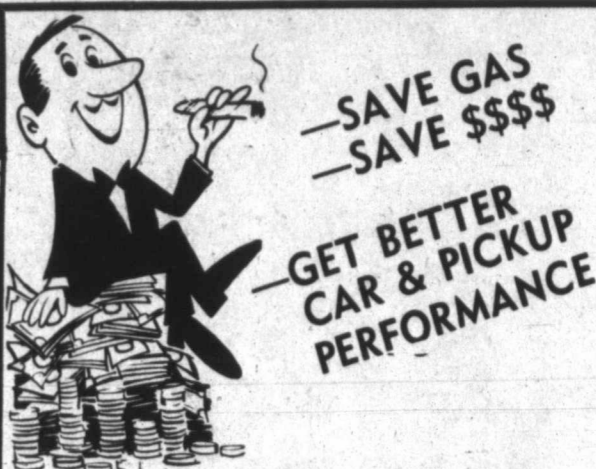

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Rookie driver Phil Krueger suffered a slight concussion Saturday when his race car struck the fourth-turn wall during practice at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway.

He was treated at the Speedway's infield hospital, then transferred to the downtown Methodist Hospital for further observation.

Krueger's crash occurred during a break in Saturday's scheduled qualification period for the May 30 Indianapolis 500.

Krueger, 30, of Fullerton, Calif., lost control of his Chevy-powered McLaren race car as he entered the fourth turn. The car spun 1½ times and slid 420 feet, striking the wall backwards. He then skidded along the wall another 40 feet and spun again 440 feet into the infield.

The car suffered extensive damage to the rear section. Krueger was able to get out of the car without help.

Cowboys' kicker played with hernia

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Dallas Cowboys kicker Rafael Septien says he unknowingly played last season with a hernia, and was not told by club officials he needed an operation until the season was over.

Septien, one of the leading kickers in the National Football League, was in Albuquerque Friday to campaign for Republican gubernatorial candidate Bill Sego. Septien said the Cowboys told him throughout the season that he had a pulled groin, and it was not until the season was over that he was told the true nature of his injury.

"Landry knew I had a hernia," said Septien of Cowboys' head Coach Tom Landry. "They just told me you pulled a groin. At the end of the season, they said, 'by the way, you have to have an operation."

Septien said he underwent an operation for his hernia about six weeks ago. He said the treatments he took during the season for a groin pull relieved the pain.

"In order for me to kick, I'd spend 15 minutes in the sauna. Then, I'd have a massage and I'd have to wear a girdle," Septien said.

The talented kicker said the better his technique was, the less he hurt.

"I was having fun because I was having a good season," he said. "The pain was tolerable, but it was painful."

But despite the pain, the five-year NFL veteran enjoyed his best season.

Payton Jordan, 65 He is the world's fastest old man

By Murray Olderman

PALO ALTO, Calif. (NEA) — Payton Jordan is the fastest old man in the world, which is not a denigration of the word "old." Payton runs 100 yards in under 11 seconds, or slightly more than a second off the time it took him to run the same distance 45 years ago.

Though Payton is 65 years of age, he stands an erect 6 feet, 1 inch tall and weighs the same 178 pounds he carried when he graduated from the University of Southern California in 1938. He has an elegant mane of white hair and a handsome, clear-eyed face that denotes vigor.

A world-class sprinter at USC who missed the Olympic Games because World War II broke out, Jordan retired from competition for more than 30 years while he devoted his life to coaching track and field athletes at institutions such as Occidental College and Stanford University.

Oh, there were times he knew the old burst of speed was still there.

When he was 37 years old, his sprinters at Occidental were mouthing off about his antiquity, so Payton made an "orange juice" bet with them for a 50-yard race. He beat them. The kids, not convinced, bet him another orange juice at 100 yards. Payton beat them again, running the distance without any training in 9.7 seconds.

In 1972, while conducting an Olympic summer training program, he was inveigled into running in an Old Timers Race at South Lake Tahoe, Calif. He won it, breezing, in 12 seconds flat. Next thing he knew, at the age of 55, he was running in Masters events, which dot track and field meets all over the country. And he has been running ever since.

Looming immediately ahead are 14 major track meets that carry through August, and Payton will run in at least eight of them. This past winter, he captured the 50 meters indoors in the San Francisco Games with a time of 6.9 seconds.

In 10 years, Payton has lost only one race while becoming the darling of the geriatric set. That one setback occurred in a special sprint during halftime of an Oregon-Stanford football game, after Jordan pulled a leg muscle while warming up. He holds virtually every world record for the sprint events in all Masters age groups.

He ran 100 yards in 10.7 seconds in 1972, and now does it in 10.9. He ran 100 meters in 11.6 in 1972, and last year turned in a 12.07. He ran 200 meters in 23.6 seconds in 1972, and 25.5 seconds last summer.

If the pro football scouts didn't check birth certificates, they'd sign him up as a defensive backfield prospect, or maybe a wide receiver. Members of those species in the National Football League are considered super-fast if they can run 40 yards in 4.5 seconds. Payton at 65 is in that class without drawing a deep breath.

The fact is, he also had a football background, playing as a blocking back for the legendary Howard Jones on USC Trojan Rose Bowl teams. While in the Navy during World War II, he played left halfback in the T-formation on a St. Mary's Pre-Flight team that had All-American Frankie Albert at quarterback. In his early years at Occidental, Jordan coached football as well as track, and his quarterback was a crew-cut kid named Jack Kemp who went on to become a pro star and a stellar congressman with a yen for tax-cut legislation.

But the milieu of track and field was Jordan's natural environment, one in which he gained national esteem over 41 years — the last 24 of them at Stanford, during which he was also the coach of the U.S. squad in the 1968 Olympics in Mexico City.

He retired in the summer of 1979 because "I wanted to get established in outside things, like television work doing commentary for track meets." And because it was time to move on from coaching while he was still vigorous.

PAYTON JORDAN, 65, former Stanford University track coach, still loves to sprint — despite his age. "I feel exhilarated by competition," he says. "I run because I find stimulation in it."

The track competition in the Masters is a perfect outlet for his energy.

"I feel exhilarated by competition," he said the other morning at Stanford, where he still keeps an office to dabble in some school promotional work. "There has to be a joy in participation. I don't like the masochistic joy philosophy. I run because I find stimulation in it."

Yet he's not one of those fanatics whose daytime uniform is a pair of shorts and running shoes. In fact, he doesn't jog because he feels the pounding causes breakdowns in an older person's physique. And he doesn't even train every day.

"You need more rest before competition as you grow older," he explains. "I train three times a week. I stress moderation. I'm a believer in quality, not quantity. I do lots of flexibility exercises and stretching. I run enough so I have stamina, but it's in segments or intervals. I probably total three miles in a workout."

Except for that one loss, he has never been troubled by muscle pulls, though he has a unique high-stepping style. Compared to most of the older guys he runs with, Payton looks like a lean thoroughbred. And runs like one.

In July, he'll go to the training camp of the Detroit Lions, at the invitation of head coach Monte Clark, to coach the players on reaction and put them through speed drills.

And if one of those young whippers looks at Payton's white hair and the character lines that are beginning to seep into his face and scoffs at the coach's credentials as a running authority, all he has to do is challenge him to a race. He might get the surprise of his life.

Aging hitter How Rick Monday dodges Father Time

By Murray Olderman

LOS ANGELES (NEA) — It was Game Five of the championship series for the National League title, the pathway to the World Series, and the Los Angeles Dodgers were locked with the Montreal Expos in a 1-1 duel as the teams, playing in the Canadian city, went into the ninth inning.

Fernando Valenzuela, the rookie sensation of the Dodgers, and Ray Burris of the Expos were pitching magnificently. But in the top of the ninth inning, in one of those managerial moves that are open to argument, skipper Jim Fanning of Montreal replaced Burris with Steve Rogers, the staff ace and a victor over Los Angeles in the third game of the league title series.

With one swipe of the bat, Rick Monday negated the strategy and undoubtedly prolonged a career that was the verge of extinction. The veteran Los Angeles outfielder, completing his 15th year in the major leagues, pounded a 3-and-1 fastball over the right-center field wall to win the pennant for the Dodgers and send them on to even higher achievement against the Yankees in the World Series.

Until that hit, Monday had pretty well decided that all the travel and travail of being a major leaguer were ended, that he would spend the summers getting better acquainted with his children and that he would concentrate on a new career as a sports broadcaster.

The 1982 season finds Monday still in the royal blue of the Dodgers and still providing pinch hits and an occasional sparkling full game in the outfield, appearances that have to be measured carefully because at 36 years of age he is no longer a full-time player.

That home run was the cause for continuation because it took him from a salary of $175,000 annually to one in the $250,000 range, which is ample reason to play another year. It firmed up his reputation as a clutch player.

"He's a tremendous guy on the ball club," says Tommy Lasorda, the effusive manager of the Dodgers. "He's a real pro, a manager's delight. We've got him programmed as a pinch hitter and a fill-in outfielder since age prevents him from playing every day. But in the six years I've managed him, I've never seen the guy fail to hustle."

Lasorda first became aware of Monday's hustle one night in Dodger Stadium in 1976. At the time — the exact date was April 25 — Rick was in the livery of the Chicago Cubs, playing the outfield, and Lasorda was coaching in the third-base box since Walter Alton was still managing the Dodgers.

A couple of guys clambered out of the stands and raced into the left field area with an American flag. They were about to set fire to the flag, as a gesture of protest, when Monday ran over, prevented the blaze and retrieved the banner. The incident gained national acclaim for the left fielder, and a temporary title of "Mr. Red, White and Blue."

"If I'd have been faster," recalls Lasorda, "I'd have gotten there myself."

The next year, Lasorda was elevated to manager and Monday was traded to the Dodgers. They've been together through three pennant-winning seasons and three World Series, though Rick's career almost ended abruptly early in 1979.

Playing against Houston in mid-April, Monday hustled into foul territory to catch a fly ball, pulled up short to avoid crashing into the fence and tore his left Achilles' tendon. Surgery put him out for the year after 12 games.

"When I first came up 16 years ago," he muses, "if you had Achilles' surgery, it was the end of your career. But the doctors today are doing a lot of things for players. Pitchers get their whole arms re-done."

It was the end of Monday as an every-day performer, but he slid gracefully into a part-time role. Last season, for instance, he hit .315 while appearing in 66 games during the strike-shortened campaign, and 11 of his 41 hits were homers, indicating there was still plenty of muscle in the old bones.

A schoolmate of Reggie Jackson at Arizona State, rangy at 6-foot-3 and swift and able to hit with power,

Monday was the first player selected by the Kansas City Athletics in baseball's first free-agent draft in 1965. He arrived in the big leagues the next year and moved with the A's to Oakland in 1968.

He spent six productive years with the A's but was traded to the Cubs by owner Charlie Finley after a disagreement over deferred bonus money. It was just before Oakland burst into dominance of baseball with three straight world championships. That left some bitterness in Monday. "I could see," he recalls, "that the club was going to be outstanding."

But he continued to have good years in Chicago as a solid pro who achieved a career high of 32 homers in 1976 when he was 30 years old.

Rangers must win or else

FORT WORTH (AP)—The majority owner and two board members of the Texas Rangers baseball club have vowed that the team's tailspin must halt immediately or else.

Majority owner Eddie Chiles, a Fort Worth oilman, insisted less than three weeks ago that executive vice president Eddie Robinson and manager Don Zimmer were secure in their jobs.

But Chiles, breathing fire after watching the Rangers lose 21 of their last 25 games and fall 13 games behind American West leader California, told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram he plans a showdown with Robinson, Zimmer, executive assistant Paul Richards and possibly farm director Joe Klein when the club returns

Monday for a series with Kansas City.

"I've been thinking about what to say," Chiles said. "Don't you think something has to be done? I don't know just what I'm going to do yet. I'm just starting my thinking process."

While Chiles declined to offer any specific action to correct the failing team, board members and minority owners Mack Rankin of Dallas and Dee Kelley of Fort Worth, who lunched with Chiles last week, were more exact.

"I'm about ready to call up the whole Denver (farm club) and swap out with this one," Kelly said. "Everybody's extremely disappointed with this team. It's the worst I've ever seen here."

Rankin said, "I think we've seen enough. We've been more than patient, now it's time to do something."

But Rankin backed away from calling for the dismissal of Robinson or Zimmer.

THE LITTLE RED SCHOOLHOUSE

Dozens of sack lunches boarded the bus at the Wilson Elementary school attached to the hands of Indians, frontier women and cowboys as all three first grade classes set out for the Little Red School House north of Pampa.

The first graders were delighted to step back in time to the early days of one-room school houses and outdoor toilets. The end-of-the-year field trip included a brief history lesson in schools and the lifestyles of early area settlers.

Taking their students back in time were Mrs. Retta Sue Durham, Mrs. Debbie Robertson and Mrs. Dana Chisum. The teachers had all of their students count off for an old fashioned spelling bee. One of the words that stumped the contestants was the number "eight".

Some of the students took advantage of a captive audience and read stories which had been prepared in advance for the special outing. Sack lunches were the dinner fare and all of the students enjoyed refreshments served by members of the Wayside community.

Students who have been sharpening up their reading skills were able to read the historical marker placed at the Little Red School House by the Texas Historical Commission.

It reads: WAYSIDE COMMUNITY. Settlers came to this locality in 1876. The county was organized in 1889. Pioneer School District No. 5 originated by court order in 1890 to serve this area with schools known as Tallhorne, Poole and Wayside taught usually in homes. In 1914, Frederic Foster of New York gave this 2-acre school site to the county. The district bought materials and patrons erected this 28 by 36-foot schoolhouse, painting it red. It soon became the focus for the community — site for elections, church services and other activities, as well as housing the Wayside School. The trustees in 1914 were James A. Poole, J. M. Story and Earl Talley.

Despite enrollment fluctuations caused by droughts, oil booms and other economic factors, Wayside prided itself on scholastic excellence. Beginning in 1929, high school students were transferred by bus into Pampa, Wayside district paying their tuition. In 1933-34, all grades were transferred — an arrangement used until 1950, when Wayside consolidated with Pampa.

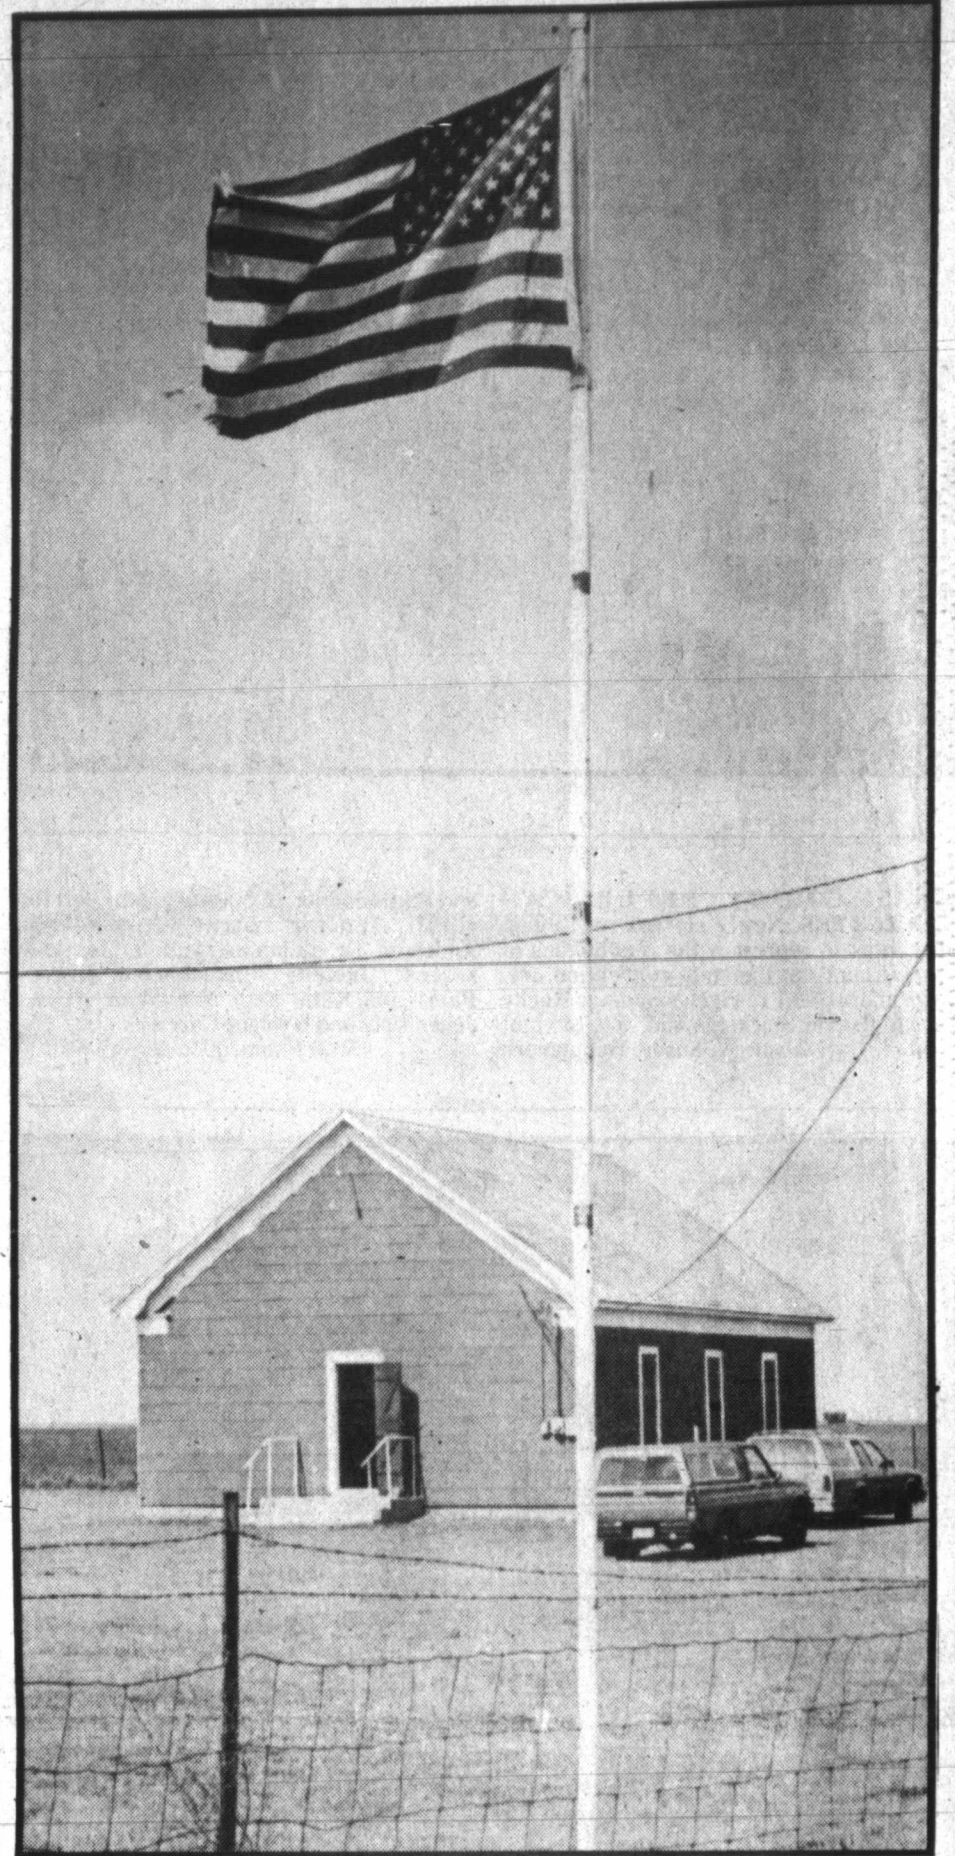

White Deer Land Co., successor to original donor Frederic Foster, then deeded the Red Schoolhouse for continuing community use to trustees Paul Caylor, R. E. Montgomery and J. T. Roberts. Current trustees are C. W. Osborne, J. T. Rogers and Jack Sloan. — 1974

THE LITTLE RED SCHOOLHOUSE now sits empty since the last classes were held in 1934. What was once the hub of the small Wayside Community serving as the meeting place for elections, church services and, of course, school, now only sees visitors on rare occasions sponsored by the present Wayside Community. Reunion set for Little Red Schoolhouse

A reunion for all former residents and students of the Wayside Community has been scheduled for Saturday, May 29 at 5 p.m. at the Little Red Schoolhouse. Participants will enjoy hamburgers, hotdogs and all the trimmings.

Some of the celebrities expected to attend are former students of the Little Red Schoolhouse, Edna Young Taylor and Nada Talley Sparkman; and former teachers Mrs. Grace Morris, Mrs. O. F. Shiffman and Mrs. Joe Massengale of Hoover.

Woody Guthrie: A Life

WOODY GUTHRIE A LIFE, by Joe Klein, copyright 1980, Alfred A. Knopf, Inc., New York, 445 pages, with photographs.

This biography of folk singer and songwriter Woodrow Wilson "Woody" Guthrie is not for fans only. It makes fascinating reading for anyone interested in recent American history, such as the Dust Bowl Days, the massive westward migration of "Okies," the midwestern oil boom of the late 1920s and the Red Scare of the 1940s and '50s, as well as the development of American folk music.

Even if none of this sounds interesting enough, the book captures the reader's attention because of the richness and variety in Guthrie's life: it reads like a crazy quilt of human activity and emotion. The lasting impression is that here was a man who really lived.

Woody was a complex man, with many and varied talents and interests. He often acted almost childlike, yet was capable of intense concentration, dry cutting humor and an infinite array of plays on words. He had a talent for drawing and sign painting, and he loved to read. He was always experimenting with words, and he wrote two books, one an autobiography entitled "Bound for Glory."

Although he was a self-proclaimed Communist, he never officially joined the Communist Party. He did write occasionally for People's World, the west coast Communist newspaper, and he entertained at labor union organizational meetings and other functions, many of which were clearly Communist-supported, throughout his career. In fact, his first rise to popularity was at these meetings, where his songs about political philosophies and the working man's problems and opinions were well-received.

Woody was born in 1912 in Okemah, Oklahoma. When he was 7 years old, fire destroyed the Guthries' new home which had been completed less than a month before. The incident seemed to be the beginning of a long, slow disintegration for Woody's mother, Nora.

Clara, Woody's older sister, set fire to herself some years later during an argument with her mother. Knowing Nora's fear of fire, the 14-year-old did it to frighten Nora, not realizing how quickly it could get out of hand. Clara ran from the house and a neighbor smothered the fire with a blanket, but within hours she was dead.

When Woody was 15, his mother, whose behavior had become steadily more irrational, dropped an oil lamp on her husband while he lay on the couch. A neighbor again came to the rescue when Charley Guthrie ran outside. Charley survived the incident but it marked the final breakup of the family. Nora entered a mental institution, where she was found to be suffering from Huntington's chorea, a rare, hereditary disorder that slowly destroys the brain and nervous system. Charley took Woody's younger brother and sister to stay with relatives and recuperate, and Woody and his older brother were left in Okemah to fend for themselves.

In 1929, after two years of living like a street urchin in Okemah, attending school only occasionally, Woody moved to the Texas Panhandle, where his father had gone to recuperate on a relative's farm outside Pampa. Woody's job was to help his father run a rooming house, and he also worked at a drugstore across the street. He began his public music career in Pampa, as part of a country and folk trio who played for area parties and events.

"Wheat Fields Waving," the chapter which tells of the years Woody lived in Pampa, will be of particular interest to area residents. A word of caution may be helpful here: Don't expect to read compliments about the Panhandle. Civic pride will not mesh very readily with Klein's account of life in Pampa during the Dust Bowl Days and Prohibition.

Woody married Mary Jennings in Pampa in 1933. Soon afterward, his restlessness took over and he began leaving for indefinite periods of time to travel the countryside, riding the rails with hoboes, following the trail of the "Okies" who were moving west.

After going to Pampa for short stays in between longer and longer trips, Woody finally left Pampa permanently to relocate in Los Angeles, where he had a radio show. His wife and children followed, but Mary later left him after they had gone to New York to attend the Communist convention and seek more fame and fortune. She was succeeded by two other wives, Marjorie and Anneke.

Fire struck the Guthrie home again one day when Woody and Marjorie's 4-year-old daughter Cathy was burned in an electrical fire in their New York City apartment. She died in the hospital. Soon afterward, Marjorie gave birth to Woody's most well-known offspring, Arlo, who was to follow in his father's footsteps and build a place for himself in the music world.

Woody served in World War II, and toward the end of his tour of duty, his letters to Marjorie changed in character. He had inherited Huntington's chorea from his mother, and it was beginning to manifest itself in his letters and his altered mental states. His deterioration was evident now, although he continued his musical career for some time. Occasional violence became a part of Woody's personality, and Marjorie finally left him because of it. He entered a mental hospital, where he discovered the cause of his problems, but was later released.

Upon leaving the hospital, Woody headed for California, where he met his third wife Anneke, a girl half his age who idolized him. She had one child by Woody, and gave it up for adoption because by the time it was born, she and Woody were already separated and he was back in the mental hospital, this time for good.

Woody had long been considered a major force in popularizing and shaping the direction of American folk music. He wrote songs that spoke of his politics, his admiration for the working class and his love of America. His most well-known song is probably "This Land is Your Land."

He was the idol who pointed the way for such vocalists as Pete Seeger, with whom he worked in later years, and Bob Dylan, not to mention his own son Arlo. One of the last things Woody did before his death was to listen to a recording of 19-year-old Arlo's popular song, "Alice's Restaurant."

Woody died on Oct. 3, 1967. His family had the body cremated, and Arlo scattered the ashes along a stretch of Coney Island beach which had been a favorite recreation spot. Klein's sources of information include Woody's private papers as well as letters and the memories of others. Since 1969, the University of Pennsylvania graduate has written for Rolling Stone, New York, Esquire and other magazines. He lives in New York City.

One final word of caution: Certain passages of the book contain explicit language and deserve an "R" rating.

So many clubs are winding up their winter - spring festivities in preparation for summer rest and fun and travel. Women's organizations are storing boxes of minutes and proposed plans until September.

One happy, growing group is the Coronado Dance Club, organized over 20 years ago and meeting monthly, fall and winter. Last meeting of the current season was held at the M. K. Brown Heritage Room last Saturday night and was well attended. Dick Morton's orchestra (marvelous, as always, members said) furnished music. It was a dress-up evening with many ladies wearing formals. Quite a few charter members are still active and seldom miss a dance.

Club board members are Rue Hestand, Wayne Robinson and Glynn Bell. Vicki Williams is secretary. Understand it's a really fun club and applications for new memberships are now available. Next dance will be Sept. 11.

Heard that Nell and Arthur Rankin had a beautiful Golden Wedding reception on May 16, hosted by their daughter, Mrs. J. R. Lawley of Houston. Her son, Jeff, was also present for the party. Art is said to be an entrepreneur (Doesn't that sound impressive? Hear Art deserves that designation since he has been involved in many projects in Pampa through the years.) Nell was a Pampa teacher for a long time, much loved by her students. Both have been active in town doings. Mrs. Lawley sent beautiful flowers to her folks' church as well as the reception.

Some of our wonderful people stay "young" all their lives. Proof of this was the excellent Coronado Nursing Center Art Gallery showing held on May 16. One painter, Beulah Edgerton, is 95 years old. How's that for refusing to sit in a rocking chair all the time?

Other painters in the exhibit were Eva Humphries, Martha White, Grace Curtis, Sadie Maul, Alma Kennard, Kate Buchanan, Neva Swygart, and Mae Green. Congratulations to them all!

Hope you saw Bart Thomas of Pampa on TV, not long ago. He was one of five A Crolympic Championships in Rockford, Ill. He's the son of the Steve Thomases. Hope he won top honors. It was his first time to enter world competition.

Always great to have an outstanding Pampans recognized in some special way. Was pleased to read that Putt Powell said C. L. Duniven said Warren Hesse should have been named Athletic Director at West Texas State. Feel sure Warren didn't apply for the job, but isn't it wonderful that so many people in this area recognize his capabilities? He and adorable wife, Peg, have been among our best-loved people for a long time.

National Honor Society honors members in Lefors

The National Honor Society of Lefors High School inducted sophomore, Tana Trusty, into membership at a candlelight ceremony in the auditorium on Tuesday evening.

Tana is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dal Trusty and has attended Lefors High School for 10 years. Her membership was based on scholarship, character, leadership, and service to the school. Other members of the National Honor Society are seniors, Kim Lake, Lisa Moxon, Diana Mathis, and junior, Angela Stanley.

The reception in the library following the ceremony also honored two retiring members of the school staff. Norma Lantz, librarian, has been teaching in Lefors for 33 years and Stella Klein has been dietitian for 26 years. They were presented corsages, engraved silver trays and gold chains with an ingot.

the banquets of this group in Pampa in July.

Any time you hang around older golfers ("older" but not "old", you understand), you hear them talking about this tournament. All seem much pleased that some high-powers players will be here. Jack Williams of Plainview and Bob Giese of Amarillo, both carrying handicaps of only 1, will be here, plus other fine golfers with handicaps of 3 or 4. Not a golfer myself, but understand that's terrific.

Heard that Ed and Margaret Sweet have been entertaining their young granddaughter the last week or so. Margaret gave a coffee to introduce the baby to friends. Understand their son, Jimmy, and wife, parents of the honoree, came too.

Jeff and Kathleen Anderson have had their children home from college the last few days. A talented family. Kay's an excellent pianist, you know, plays for many activities in town. Seems to me she plays for the Lion's annual show as well as for their meetings and one of the Sunday School classes in her church.

Somebody said Sam and Bernice Goodlett are as busy as they are happy and friendly. Both work in the Coronado Community Hospital Auxiliary. He's treasurer and she's historian. Director of this much-appreciated group is Nancy Paronto (wife of Ed), a charming lady with a flock of friends.

Pot pourri: Chris Atkinson's engaging smile... Ab and Pat Conway selecting new home from several possibilities, looking happy with their choice and getting settled there... D. L. and Leona Hale, charming ranch couple who live in town, popular with their many friends... Frankie Mae White's always-flawless hairdo. A great lady. Late husband, Sherman, was one of Pampa's fine judges. Frankie Mae has maintained her dignity, friendliness and sense of humor through the years. Makes you happier to talk to her... Julie (Mrs. Chris) Chitwood, finally off her crutches after the long healing of broken bones...

So many people are tending yards and gardens. Are you? PAM.

Advice to women in business

COLUMBIA, Miss. (AP) — Jo Foxworth, author, public speaker and advertising specialist, gave her "Nine Commandments for Women in Business" when she spoke here recently.

—Thou shalt watch thy language; there may be gentlemen present.

—Thou shalt not match martinis with the men.

—Thou shalt save thy sex appeal for after five, even though thy C-cup runneth over.

—Thou shalt try harder; thou needst not be only No. 2.

—Thou shalt know when to zip thy lip and listen quietly.

—Thou shalt not attempt to hide behind thine own petticoat.

—Thou shalt speak softly and carry no stick except lipstick.

—Thou shalt serve thy lady boss as graciously as thou servest any man.

—When success cometh, thou shalt not get too big for thy bustle.

—Thou shalt not match martinis with the men.

—Thou shalt save thy sex appeal for after five, even though thy C-cup runneth over.

The business world is still male turf, she said, adding that "the men invented business and the men run it. They have no intention of relinquishing any part of their own territory to anybody, regardless of the biology involved, and if we expect to get anywhere in their world, we've got to learn our way around in it."

Miss Foxworth, who lives in New York, heads an advertising agency and communications specialty firm.

The American Cancer Society thanks you.

Your employees thank you.

Their families thank you.

Mending Mature Marriage Overlook criticism

DEAR LOUISE: Did you ever have somebody land on you with both feet, meaning both sides of the meanest, sharpest tongue in town, for something that was none of your fault, not even any of your business?

"It's like this. We belong to a bridge club of older couples. Most of us play for fun, but there's one couple that are fanatics about winning and leave pouting if they don't take home the high score prizes.

"Well, last week this woman was partners with my husband and they went down so bad that it kept her from getting the women's prize.

"I couldn't believe it when her husband cornered me in the kitchen while I was helping the hostess get refreshments. He called my husband stupid, inconsiderate — and I wouldn't repeat what else. He went on an absolute tirade, acting like losing a bridge prize was the end of everything.

"I tried to explain, to tell him that he should have complained to my husband, not to me. But he raved on till I finally walked off and left him ranting.

"Now my husband says to forget it, that we can't break up the club over one man's misplaced, unpardonable tantrum. But I say I can't face that horrible man again, anyway not for a while.

"My husband and I have argued and argued about it, sometimes getting awful upset with each other. Who is right and what should we do? S. T."

DEAR S. T.: You are both right. Your husband is correct in saying forgiveness is a good Christian virtue. But my feeling is that you are right too — because the offender's behavior was uncouth and cowardly. He should have been man enough to air his grievances to your husband.

My suggestion is for you to ask your husband to pass up a few of the get-togethers, give you a little time to recover from the vicious attack. Why don't you go out of town for a few weeks? Or, if you can't do that, make excuses to the next two or three hostesses, saying you are indisposed, which you are — indisposed to tolerate the presence of the boor for a while. You don't want to risk trumping his ace.

The man is beneath your contempt. But it will take a little time for you to reach that conclusion.

I have sometimes had "friends" who fussed at me for things they said Otis should or should not have done at the exact moment they desired some petty consideration. Of course they were totally out of line. I do not, and should not, control my husband's thoughts or actions.

I wish I could say I forgave and forgot overnight. But I'm human. I avoided the unfriendly "friends" until the hurt subsided a little.

DEAR LOUISE: Our grandchildren visit us a lot and sometimes they annoy our neighbors. These people say the kids walk in flower beds and tramp down flowers, but I don't think they do. And I'm sure they never break anything valuable or steal anything. Mostly they just play with their dogs and cats that they always bring along.

"Sometimes, I know, the pets run into the neighbors' yards and the kids chase them. But I say that's natural and ought to be overlooked.

"My husband says maybe we should scold the kids or even tell them they can't come over here any more. But I won't give up our grandchildren, no matter what. What's your opinion? Z. A."

DEAR Z. A.: How many cats and dogs do the children bring? How much time do they, and your grandchildren, spend in the neighbors' yards, instead of playing in your yard where they belong?

If the pets are many, and if they are destructive to flower beds and lawns, the should be corralled. Older couples usually love well-behaved children in the neighborhood. Otis and I have many young neighbors and we adore all of them. They never seem to get out of line.

You'll be doing your grandchildren a favor if you teach them good manners now.

DEAR LOUISE: My husband wants me to work outdoors with him, pull weeds in the lawn and garden, dig dandelions, plant flowers and take care of them, all things like that.

"I say if I do, he ought to help me with the housework. You know, the cleaning and cooking and washing and all.

"We're retired and over 70. We've got lots of time, all there is. I get tired easy and he never seems to notice. I think it's because I'm not appreciated. He says the housework is my job as a wife. Will you tell me what you think? M. J."

DEAR M. J.: Many couples I know share all their tasks since their retirement. They know that work is more endurable, and more fun, if they do it together.

I see no reason why you should not work in the yard or why he should not lend a hand in the house. No job is demeaning to either of you.

Dear Abby

Time to call it quits

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I was married to John in the Catholic Church back in 1956. John disappeared in 1958. He took a ride one Sunday afternoon and never came back. Nobody knows what happened to him. The police looked for him, but after several years they gave up.

I never filed for divorce because I kept thinking that one day John might turn up. He never did and his family say they have no idea where he is. For all I know he may be dead, or married to someone else.

Is there any way I can get a divorce? Or do I need one after all this time? I'd like to start my life over as a single woman, but how can I if I'm still married? I'm tired of waiting. I don't think the pope would have waited this long.

HELP ME IN MISSOURI

DEAR HELP: Your parish priest can help you. In recent years the Catholic Church has become more liberal concerning annulments. I am advised that your marriage could be annulled with very little difficulty.

DEAR ABBY: I'm crazy about the U.P.S. man who delivers the mail to my office every day. He seems plenty interested in me but isn't making any moves. I have reason to believe that he thinks I am not available, but I am.

What do I say to a guy I see for only as long as it takes me to sign his clipboard? I want him to know that I am available and would like to get to know him better.

LUCY IN BUFFALO

DEAR LUCY: You need a pal in the office to help further your cause. You could conveniently just happen to be away from your desk the next time Mr. U.P.S. delivers the mail. Your "co-conspirator" could then say to him, "I think Lucy could be interested in you; would you like me to arrange it?"

...

DEAR ABBY: "Loves Love, Not Sex" and her husband have a communication gap. I used to feel the same way she does and hated every time my husband wanted to have sexual relations. (Notice, I did not say "make love," because it wasn't love.)

My husband was an unkempt, selfish boor who disregarded his partner's feelings as well as the basic rules of personal hygiene. I talked to him, I bought him underwear, soap, deodorants, but to no avail. Gradually, I was so repulsed, I became frigid and gave up. When I could no longer stand the smell, I divorced him.

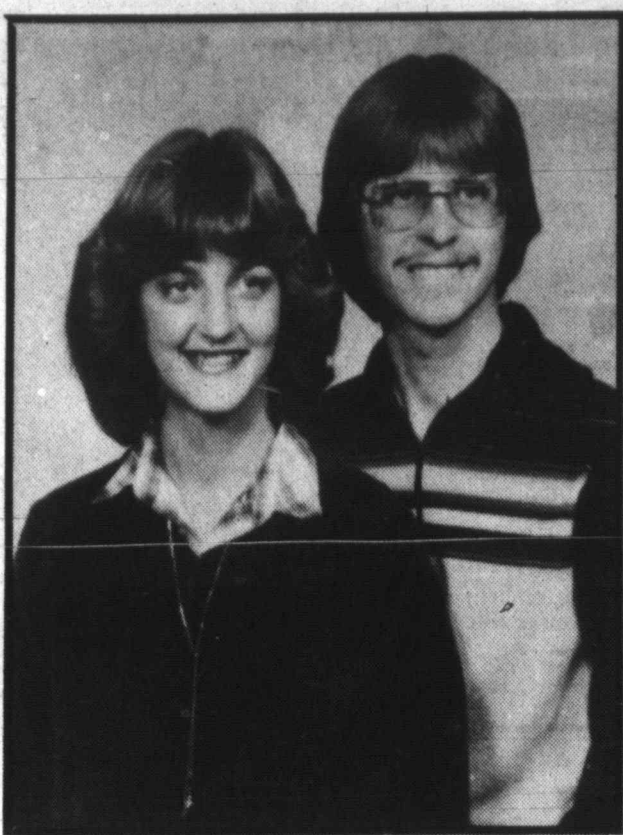

Now I'm married to a man who "makes love" instead of just relieving himself.

Tell "Loves Love" if she really loves her husband she will tell him what she likes and what she doesn't like. And if he loves her he will change his habits to try to please her. And if he doesn't, she had better change husbands.

MAKING LOVE AT 52

DEAR MAKING: It's amazing how many readers (men as well as women) write to complain about their spouses' total disregard for hygiene. And as for lovemaking, the getting is always in the giving.

Do you have questions about sex, love, drugs and the pain of growing up? Get Abby's new booklet: "What Every Teen-Ager Ought to Know." Send $2 and a long, stamped (37 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.

Romance returns

With the beauty and pageantry that has become the chosen manner of today's wedding scene, the modern bride is turning to gowns that fulfill her dreams and reflect her new romantic taste. Priscilla of Boston has captured the new mood of regal elegance and ladylike allure in her latest collection of bridal gowns that have drawn from the royal courts of days gone by. From sumptuous fabrics in sculptured silhouettes to new sleeve emphasis and neckline flattery, the gowns reflect the growing enchantment with opulent and romantic statements.

Influenced by the elegant past of Victorian England and the high spirited silhouettes of the Edwardian period, gowns for this season will dip and sweep in a grand tradition. Laces, pearls, billowy skirts, trains and yards of embroidery will make the bridal gown one to be kept and treasured.

News in Brief

HIGHLAND PARK, Mich. (AP) — A man with a bullet wound in his left arm lost control of his car and hit a school bus, which then crashed into a third vehicle, officials say.

Ray Madison, 27, was pronounced dead following the Friday accident. There were no other injuries.

Police said Madison apparently was driving himself to a hospital for treatment of the gunshot wound when his car slammed into the empty bus. The bus was shoved into a passing car, which crashed into the median. Police said they did not know how Madison had been shot.

MALIBU, Calif. (AP) — Two Los Angeles County sheriff's deputies were injured when their car plunged 300 feet down a cliff early Saturday, according to authorities.

A department spokesman said the two were respondents of a woman screaming in the Santa Monica Mountains. The deputies said the car was going only about 20 mph when it failed to negotiate a sharp curve on the dark, twisting road.

One deputy was treated for minor cuts while the other, John Lofthus, 31, was hospitalized to determine the extent of his injuries.

Sgt. John O'Brien said there were no later reports about the woman. "Rabbits being killed by coyotes sound like a woman screaming," he added.

BALTIMORE (AP) — A 70-year-old landlord has begun serving a 10-day jail sentence for shutting off a tenant's gas service for six weeks during the winter of 1981.

Criminal Court Judge Solomon Baylor said Friday he would consider releasing Lyon A. Miller jail on Monday if Miller's lawyers came up with a plan for him to perform community service. Miller had been convicted of similar violations before, the judge noted.

The case arose when tenant Harvey Litvin refused to pay the gas bill after Miller had the account changed from his name to Litvin's.

JACKSONVILLE, Ill. (AP) — A farmer apparently killed his wife with an ax and then slashed his arms, neck and body and set himself on fire in a murder-suicide, authorities said.

The bodies of Joseph W. O'Meara, 48, a farmer, and Sallie O'Meara, 53, of rural Jacksonville, were found Friday. Morgan County Sheriff Henry Jackson Jr. said. The couple was believed to have died Thursday. Mrs. O'Meara, a secretary, was found in a shed near their home. A bloodied ax was found hanging in the shed.

O'Meara's charred body, which had been doused with a flammable liquid, was discovered near two cigarette lighters.

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is eager to veto "budget-busting" spending bills Congress may pass to combat the effects of the recession, according to sources who met with the president this week.

"The impression I got was that the president relishes the opportunity to veto these bills," a private economist and part-time Reagan adviser said Friday of stop-gap mortgage subsidy and job-creation measures being considered by Congress.

The adviser, who asked anonymity, and other participants at a meeting with Reagan on Thursday described the president as unequivocal in his determination to resist congressional moves to fight the recession with such spending plans.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Financial disclosure statements show that Agriculture Secretary John Block, who has urged fellow farmers to patiently await better times, saw his net worth fall by more than 10 percent last year.

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — The lawyer for entertainer Johnny Carson says a machine that tested the "Tonight Show" host for blood alcohol content was malfunctioning at the time.

Attorney Robert L. Shapiro told Municipal Court Commissioner John Murphy at a hearing Friday that he would prove the testing machine was not working properly when Carson was arrested Feb. 27.

Carson was charged with misdemeanor drunken driving, driving without a license in his possession and failure to have a valid registration sticker on his license plate.

A preliminary hearing was delayed until June 18.

WENHAM, Mass. (AP) — Evangelist Billy Graham says his propaganda is much more powerful than anything the Soviet Union has.

Speaking at Gordon-Conwell Theological Seminary's commencement exercises Friday, the evangelist took issue with critics who said the Kremlin

"Of course they will try to use me for propaganda purposes, but I've got a much more powerful propaganda than anything they have to offer," he said.

Graham also said he hoped that reports were true that there were many Soviet KGB agents in his audiences in Moscow.

was using him for propaganda purposes during his recent five-day trip to the Soviet Union.

"Of course they will try to use me for propaganda purposes, but I've got a much more powerful propaganda than anything they have to offer," he said.

Graham also said he hoped that reports were true that there were many Soviet KGB agents in his audiences in Moscow.

"I hope there were. They were the ones I wanted to talk to," he said.
