HEART BROKEN. COWPOKE RIDES INTO 'SUNSET'

ARDMORE, Okla. - (AP) young Oklahoma cowboy, disappointed in love, rode off the heart-broken hero of a Western refrain.

Nineteen-year-old Basil Ford wrote a long note to Jimmie Hill, queen of the Ardmore Roundup Club, and sealed it in a blue envelope.

Then he put on his chaps and boots, saddled his horse, and rode away to the old homestead where his father and mother had first lived in Oklahoma. They found him there six hours later, dead from the bullet he sent ripping through his heart from his 30-30. His horse was tied to a tree. "I've always told you I couldn't live without you," he wrote to Jimmie. "It seems I can't go on.

The American Way

ALL IS NOT LOST By George Peck
Are you pessimistic about the future of America? What leads me to ask this question is that in recent months I have received let-ters from and had conversations with men and women of all walks of life who unashamedly admit they have thrown up their hands, who are convinced that this America of ours, the envy of all the world, has reached its zenith and is now on the toboggan slide. These pessimists maintain that we have no new frontiers to be exploited; they point to our huge Federal debt which they claim can only be wiped out by repudiation; they state there is no real leader-ship in either of our two major political parties; they see no escape for this nation from socialistic planners. And peering through their dark glasses, they vision commun-ism spreading over the entire world and the inevitability of its finally fastening its deadly clutches on the United States. It is true that socialists and communists are busy; that real leadership in our two major political parties is at a very low ebb; that our Federal debt is staggering, but this nation has weathered storms on previous occasions. Had past generations listened to the wailings doubtful that the United State would ever have gotten started, most certainly this nation would not have scaled the heights that it

Our eternal thanks go to the optimists of past generations who heeded not these mourners. Thank God for the millions of Americans who now refuse to be swayed by present-day pessimistic prophecies who, though gravely concerned about our problems, still believe that the only thing that can stop America's forward progress, is for us to give up the struggle.

Some years ago in one of my col-umns, I retailed the story of the two frogs who fell into the crock of cream. It seems fitting to reneat that story now because it is tout medicine for the morale in limes like these; it is the perfect answer to those among us who look at America's future through dark-colored glesses.

The one frog, you will recall, was a pessimist, with little or no intestinal fortitude. He could not leap out of the crock and after struggling for a short while, said to himself, "What is the use? In the long run I am going to drown anyway, so I will quit struggling". So saying, he drowned. The other frog was an optimist.

(Truth, London, England) It was a foregone conclusion, except to the professional heralds of the new dawn, that the Foreign Ministers' Conference in Paris would resolve no major problem confronting the world. The pro-ceedings have been even more deold of reality than the futile meetings of the past. Neither Mr. Bevin nor Mr. Acheson could really have supposed that the Russians would be prepared to withdraw the Iron curtain from the Elbe to the Polish frontier that the Bonn Constitution might be extended to embrace the whole of Germany. Mr. Vishinsky for his part, despite the benefits which Western statesmanship has been heaping upon the Soviet Un-ion for the last eight years, could scarcely have supposed that the Western Allies would consent to base their policy upon the Potsdam Agreement, which Russia from the start has systematically dishon-Even had there been irrational hopes entertained on either side they could surely have been put to the test during the preliminary talks held in Washington, or by a simple diplomatic exchange of views. As is suggested this week in a Truth leading article, wherein the subject is discussed in its wider aspects, it would seem that the sole agreement reached was for the conference to be held, to meet Russian wishes, in return for the lifting of the Berlin blockade. The question thus arises as to what the Kramlin thus arises as to what the Kremlin hoped to gain from the discussions. Disconcerting as such an idea might be to Messrs. Bevin and Acheson, the probability is that the Russians had no desire other than to keep them happily arguing while in the

And if you are one who has been "selling America short," why not turn over a new leaf by resolving here and now to renew your faith in a nation that always in the past has overcome what looked like insurmountable obstacles. Such faith made us the world's greatest nation; similar faith exercised now greater heights in the future. Stop will enable us to climb to even being a pessimist; keep on swimming; all is not lost.

Bea heard the hissing voice her ear, felt the strength of Mollie Stark's hands. They staggered back into the main corridor of the cave, wrestling. Bea swung the rifle by the barrel, sent it skidding down smooth stone. For a second light from the fire glinted on stood and then the rifle was engaled by darkness.
