Coal Production Ceases As Miners Quit Work

Lewis Calls for Memorial to Dead

PITTSBURGH—(AP)—About 437,000 soft and hard coal miners stayed away from work today.

Their work stoppage halted coal mining east of the Mississippi and forced the nation's industry to begin eating up its stock of stored coal.

The diggers started a two-week voluntary layoff in answer to John L. Lewis' call for a memorial to dead and

The Roundup Club came through the Plainview Boxing Tournament with one champion, two runners-up, and were second in the race for the team champion is Leon Kelley, who won the title in the heavyweight division. But it took two Golden Gloves champions to stop the other two Rounduppers who advanced to the finals.

In the 112-pound class, Elmo Sams, a hardened veteran and present champion of the Lubbock regional Golden Gloves at that weight, scored a second round knockout over Jimmie Bennett. I was recently invited to state my position on compulsory tax supported education at a meeting at Anaheim, Calif., of the Alpha Chi field chapter of the Phi Delta Kappa, a national honorary educational fraternity.

my positions and the reasons for them and then turn the meeting over to the audience to ask me questions on what I was advocating or opposing. As the title of the organization indicates, it is a local chapter of a national fraternity whose requirements for membership are that the individual must have had certain standards of grades in his college work and have had a good standing in his college. So the group suppos-edly represents the leadership in the education field. I am not sure, but I think that most of the members in this local chapter are engaged in schools and colleges supported by taxation.

In explaining the purpose of my talk, I said that I believe with the prophet Ezekiel that if I saw a group doing something that would destroy them or others it was my moral duty to warn them. If I did and they continued to do the things that would destroy themselves and others, their blood would not be on my head. I would have a clear conscience. On the other hand, if I didn't them warning, because it might be unpopular or it might cost me money, and they went ahead and destroyed themselves and others, their blood would be on my head and I could not have a clear con-science. Believing as I do, I contend that tax supported schools in-stead of being a service to humanity and our country are one of the obstacles to putting principles into operation. I was oblig-ed to talk frankly to them even if it was not pleasing to them for the time being. In fact, I believe that they are teaching the exact oposite of the principles on which this government was formed. Believing this, there is nothing else for me to do to save my own self respect and esteem take the unpopular stand that I do against compulsory supported education. I told them that if we were to exchange ideas that we must do as Voltaire said, "Define our terms." And then in order define our terms and have words that have any precise meaning we must do as Lord Kelvin said: When you can measure what you are speaking about and express it in numbers, you know something about it; but when you cannot measure it, when you cannot express it in numbers, your knowledge is of a meager and unsatis-factory kind."

I told them that if I could not define and reduce to numbers and measure and compare and reduce to axioms each question they asked without contradiciting my-self in 120 words or one minute's time, then I would admit that my knowledge was "of a meager and unsatisfactory kind." The premise of my talk was son to do something, that people doing the same thing did not make it moral neither did nor the state doing that thing that was immoral for each and every individual to do make it moral. I explained that I was certain that I as an individual had no right to initiate force against any other individual or group to something from him or without his or their consent. I also stated that neither did any do anything that each and every individual didn't equally have a right to do. I as an individual would have no moral right to use compulsion against any other individual to get support for my deas of education. Therefore, unis moral for two people or a subdivision of the state to do things that it is immoral for each and every individual to do, it is for a subdivision of the state or the board of education or the state to coerce and compel citizens, of the state to pay for a school system that they want to use and that they believe will destroy the operation of our form of government. For a board of education to compel peo-ple to buy something that they ing as it would be for an individ-

POPULATION SHIFTS (The San Diego Union)

A factor in our economic situation which seems to be generally ignored by politicians and even by many able economists is the shift is the housing problem. The other is living costs.

While the average movement of population from farms to cities for the country as a whole is calculated by the United States News and World Report as only 7 per-cent, the distribution has been such as to have the two-fold effect of creating congestion in ur-ban industrial centers, while at the same time reducing the number of food producers and in ing the number of nonproduction consumers.

A surprising thing is that the greatest migration from farm to city has not been in the industrial East or the mid-Atlantic areas, but in many of the leading agr but in many of the leading agri-cultural states. Where the total farm population in New England, for instance, has gained 12 per-cent since 1940, Minnesota shows a loss of 9 percent, Missouri of 16 percent, Colorado of 22 percent, with the Mountain states averaging 16 percent.

In the South Atlantic, East South Central and West South Central areas the shift to the cities has been general, farm losses rang-ing from 17 percent in Florida to 3 percent in Louisiana. Although the West Coast has been encing a strong movement toward industrialization, farm population has gained an average of 10 per-cent, with California showing a farm increase of 14 percent.

This general migration from farm to city, while due originally to the unprecedented wages in war industry, was augmented by the inclination of men in the armed forces to take up post-war life in the cities of the industrial areas instead of returning to rural or village life Although farm prosperity has never been so great in our history as in the past seven or eight years, it is possible that farm labor has failed to enjoy a satis-Mrs. Maurice Upham and baby factory share of that prosperity, with the result that hundreds of thousands of agricultural workers have chosen industrial employ-ment, with larger compensation, shorter hours and more agreeable ing his parents, Mr. and Mrs. P. This transition is a natural development and one which is not amenable to any sort of legislation. But it is a factor which should be understood and properly ed by all students of ing and living costs.

following up Anglin's killing, would you?" asked Lay. He toyed with the tall glass of beer that glinted before him on the bar. John Henry's pulse raced. "Why? Do you think this is the place for it?"

"I didn't say that. I was just surprised to see you without your wife.

"Convenient," said Lay and took sip of beer. He put his glass down and gazed through the archway at the midday turbulence in the other room. "Yeah," he said plied shamefacedly and as if continuing a conversation "it's illegal, all right, Conover. But in a hopped-up town like this there's some things a cop has to keep his eyes closed about. It's not as if it was my department." He looked at John Henry and "Here's to and spun the girl sharply around to face him. "Now snap out of it, Faye," John Henry grated. "You had a reason for bringing me out here. What was it?" Faye's sleek braided head nodded slowly. "Gotta have words. Gof something I wanna tell you," she whispered.

"What is it?" . Fave Jordon looked around cautiously. "Too many people, Everybody's listening."

"Okay. We'll go back to the car." Still holding Faye's left arm firmly, he opened the heavy doo next to the slot machines and pushed her out into the dimness of the entrance hall. The closing door sliced off the light and the ed moan of conversation with one swift stroke. . . . TOHN HENRY put the concealing drape back in place. The sudden change from glare to gloom made his head feel funny.

Faye had prowled away down the long corridor. She opened the door to what appeared a combi-tion library and den.

"In here," she whispered.
He followed her in. The room was stuffy. John Henry went across to the open window that broke the wall of books. No air at all seemed to enter the library.

Faye had closed the door and was peeking back into the hall through the keyhole.

"What are you looking for?" he asked. The carpet tilted a little while he focused on her. He self and it moved away. Faye got up and walked toward him.

John Henry squinted. She was walking up hill and she got farther away. Then there were two of her, a dozen, a whole roomful.
