

UPTON CLOSE:

Why Should We Share Secret Of the Weapon?

A History-Making Decision President Truman has listened to his practical military advisers rather than his "internationalist" and "liberal" secretaries, and decided to keep custody, "until the world is more trustworthy," of the atomic bomb—meaning that we will keep the advantage we have so far by way of technique in making the bomb.

This is no doubt one of man's great history-making decisions. We are to pay for British acquiescence in the atom with a five billion dollar gift loan. The persons who most bolstered the President to make it are Admiral Leahy, General Marshall and Secretary of Navy Forrester.

From this point on, Russia and "liberals" and "Marxists" who follow in her train and adjust their ideologies to Moscow's hard-fisted power politics—will either subside into an attitude making the best of our decision, or they will only pretend to do that while continuing to undermine our decision, or what is most likely they will openly become hostile, impudent and challenging.

From this date on, in other words, Russia must take her place as a second-rate war power in the world as we all work out the shape of the world from that basis, or else all pretense of Allied unity breaks wide open. Watch for developments!

The first thing to be tried by those who disagree with the Truman-Atlee decision will be a smear technique feeling at the United States because our scientists produced the atomic bomb. But in whose hands on earth could this deadly instrument be safer than in ours? If we actually do possess a secret in this ghastly thing, why should we further share it with nations whose histories are strewn with bloody conquest and rank imperialism? Already we in effect are assuming the burden of seeing that our friends the British whom we admit to joint ownership of the bomb, will use it only righteously. That is quite a responsibility, considering that the British empire was founded on and is still maintained by use of superior weapons.

History shows Russia to have been a swashbuckling marauder from the time the Tartars swept through South Europe until the Soviet Union smothered little Finland, the Baltic and the Balkan states. Through the centuries of Peter the Great, Catherine, Ivan the Terrible, the Romanoffs, Lening and Stalin, the story of "Holy," and now Bolshevik Russia, is one of pillage, carnage, conquest persecution and slaughter.

Perhaps out of their own guilty conscience, Russians now suspect us. Where there is suspicion there must be fear. Well, what do they fear? Do they consider that we have gone out for conquest? That our policy has been imperialistic? That we have sought to force our form of government on other nations? That we have sent swarms of trained propagandists to poison the minds of other peoples against their own governments and ways of life? We have given freely of our life and treasure to save from disaster the national life and governmental systems of the very nations which now suspect us and have asked nothing in return. At present, we are non-belligerent—Unless they call our support of Chiang Kai-shek and Zionism belligerent. Maybe it looks that way to them.

But wouldn't it seem safer, in a wild mob, to have a solitary pumpkin in the hands of a conservative who doesn't want loot from anybody than to issue the high-powered weapons to a lot of international gunmen definitely out to get this or that? Why should the security council of the United Nations be a more proper custodian of bomb knowledge than the United States? The security council is loaded with national members who, for centuries, have figured they couldn't shake hands with one another and break even. That council embodies a thousand years of rivalry, jealousy, suspicion and hatred. A fine custodian of a bomb that, scientists say, could destroy the planet in a few hours!

All this is predicated upon the theory that, in the atomic bomb, we really have a secret. Suppose we are mistaken. Suppose the story that Sweden can make it is true? Suppose Russia and other countries already have the know-how or are about to have it. So, what? If they already have it, or can get it, why all the talk? In that event, if all hands should lose their data cards into the security council, it would be merely handing over the works to themselves. What a ludicrous business! Another thing—if these other nations have the secret we have nothing to share with them. Then, why are they suspicious of us?

So, let the United States be the sole custodian. Let the other nations turn over to us all their atom-ic findings to date, their experimenting machinery, and their scientists. Let all the countries of the world then enter into solemn non-aggression pacts with one another and with the United States, as umpire. Let the various councils of the United Nations function as boards of mediation in international disputes. But—here's the punch line—in the event the councils failed and war broke out let's have the United States authorized, by previous common agreement, to drop a few atomic bombs on both belligerents!

We have got to find some machinery to implement President Truman's decision, until "the world becomes more trustworthy!" Under this plan, my countrymen,—and it's as sound as any I've heard about—war would become most unpopular. So would the United States. As an international referee, we would be hated on all sides, but we are, anyway—so why not make it 100 percent in the interests of world peace?

"I say to his majesty now, the greatest contribution he can make to his country is to give all his influence to try to bring back Greece to a healthy and prosperous state with the aid which we and the United States are giving," Bevin declared.

He added that he had preferred to let Greece have her trials and errors "but I could not see her go down economically."

Resuming the two-day debate on foreign affairs, Bevin said: "If any great power is suspicious of Great Britain, I invite them to tell me frankly what their suspicions are, and I will frankly face them."

In an apparent reference to Russian opposition to the formation of any western European bloc, Bevin said, "suspicion or no suspicion, I cannot help it if people have groundless suspicions. We shall not showdown" with Japan while this country's strengthened its defenses, adding that he "concurred completely in the view that no ultimatum should be delivered to Japan."

KRA PENINSULA

4. He revealed that most of the information this government received indicated the Japanese would concentrate attacks on the Kra peninsula and the Dutch East Indies. 5. He disclosed that at the Atlantic conference President Roosevelt had agreed with Prime Minister Churchill to take "parallel action" in informing Japan that in the event of further aggression they would be forced to move defensively.

SHORT TESTIMONY

Committee members were cautioned in advance that because of his health, Hull could not testify more than 45 minutes at a time. There had been doubt that he could appear at all. Hull said in his statement that the original Japanese move into southern Indo-China was the "over act" that so changed the Far Eastern situation that it became a question no longer of this country's avoiding the risk of war but of making "a definite and clear move in self defense."

NIP ASSETS FROZEN

That act, he said, brought about the July 26, 1941 order of President Roosevelt to freeze Japanese assets in this country.

Hull noted that at the Atlantic conference of the President and Prime Minister Churchill in August, 1941, "Mr. Churchill had informed President Roosevelt that the British government needed more time to prepare for resistance against a possible Japanese attack on the Far East."

"This was true also of our defense preparations," Hull said. "Furthermore," he went on, "President Roosevelt and Mr. Churchill had agreed that the American and British governments should take parallel action in informing Japan that, in the event the Japanese government should take further steps of aggression against neighboring countries, each of them would be compelled to take all necessary measures to safeguard the legitimate rights and interests of its country and nationals and to insure its country's safety and security."

Mr. Roosevelt gave the Japanese ambassador this warning on August 17, but agreed at the same time to continue negotiations. He and the President knew that the Japanese were "unreliable and treacherous," Hull said.

Accordingly, they continued to talk with the Japanese in the hope that, at least, "the conversations would give our army and navy time to prepare."

The former secretary said that as early as November 7, 1941, he told the cabinet that "relations were extremely critical and we should be on the lookout for a military attack anywhere by Japan at any time."

He added that Ambassador Joseph Grew cabled warnings November 3 and 17 "of the possibility of sudden Japanese attacks which might make inevitable war with the United States."

"The whole issue presented," Hull said, "was whether Japan would yield in her avowed movement of conquest or whether we would yield the fundamental principles for which we stood in the Pacific and all over the world. x x x They were armed to the teeth and we knew they would attack whenever and wherever they pleased."

On November 25, he said he told the war council, consisting of the President, secretaries of state, war and navy, the army chief of staff and the chief of naval operations, that "the Japanese military were already poised for attack."

At a November 28 meeting of the war council, Hull said he pointed out that there was "practically no possibility of an agreement being achieved with Japan." He reiterated, he declared, that it was up to the army and navy to safeguard national security.

Hull said that from the very outset of the prewar talks with Japan he estimated there was "not one chance in 20 or one in 50 or even in 100 of reaching a peaceful settlement."

used a share of them." Top officials believe that neither in Prime Minister Attlee's conversations here nor otherwise has the subject of sharing the bombs with Britain ever come up.

MAIN POSSIBILITIES

What will happen to the bombs now being made here? Three main possibilities are foreseen by persons in position to make competent guesses:

1. Some of the weapons actually will be used in experiments to determine the effects of atomic explosives on battleships, submarines, possibly surface fortifications, and the like.

2. The rest will be held in storage under President Truman's "sacred trust" policy until the United Nations see what they can do about the problem given them.

3. After that, and depending on results, the bombs may be demanded and their explosive material devoted to peaceful industrial uses.

Facts FOR THE VETERAN

LIFE INSURANCE

(Elery B. has been discharged from navy service. While in the navy, he subscribed for $8,000 National Service Life Insurance. Premiums for this insurance were paid by allotment during his active service. Almost six months had passed before he remembered that he had paid no premiums on his insurance since his discharge. Now he has a good job and he wants to continue his government insurance.)

When Elery was discharged, his insurance was paid to the end of the month in which his discharge occurred. Future premiums are due on the first of each month and should be forwarded to the Veterans Administration. If the premium is not received during the 31-day period, the policy will lapse if the veteran dies while the policy is in lapse, no payments will be made to the beneficiary.

Elery's policy is lapsed, but may be reinstated without physical examination upon submission of the proper form, provided he applies for reinstatement within six months from the date of discharge and his physical condition is the same as on the last day his policy was in force. His own statement as to his physical condition is sufficient to satisfy the Veterans Administration.

If he had delayed filing his application for more than six months after discharge, he would be required to furnish evidence of good health to satisfy the Veterans Administration. A physical examination would be necessary.

Red Cross home service secretary usually have a supply of the forms necessary to this reinstatement. They will aid the veteran in completing these forms and will advise him of the amount of the premiums which should accompany the application for reinstatement. In this case, two monthly premiums will reinstate the policy.

The Pampa chapter of the Red Cross, whose office is located on the top floor of City Hall, is prepared to give your counsel and assistance with reference to benefits available to veterans and their dependents.

for the defense. Dodd linked German industrial leaders and Schacht, former reichsbank president, directly to the Nazi party even before the election which resulted in Hitler becoming reichschancellor in 1933 with an affidavit from Georg von Scholtzler of the I. G. Farben firm.

Scholtzler said that Schacht "acted as kind of a host" at a meeting in February, 1933, of Hitler, Krupp, Albert Vogler, chief of the steel combine, and other industrialists.

Hitler warned the industrialists of the dangers of communism. Scholtzler's affidavit declared, and after the Nazi leader left the room "Schacht proposed to the meeting the raising of an election fund, as far as I remember, of 3,000,000 reichmarks."

Schacht, who protested in a recent interview that he had little to do with German rearmament, listened earnestly and jotted down notes as the affidavit and other documents were introduced.

One letter signed by the reichsbank president and sent to Hitler Jan. 7, 1939, said: "From the beginning the reichsbank has been aware of the fact that successful foreign policy can be attained only by the reconstruction of the German armed forces. The reichsbank therefore assumed to a very great extent the responsibility to finance rearmament in spite of the inherent dangers to the currency."

Another of Schacht's letters told of risking inflation in order to give the army all the funds it needed to assure a "successful foreign policy."

Another affidavit read by the prosecutor was signed by Emil Puhl, a director of the reichsbank, who said Schacht has created a fake organization called "Metallurgische Forschungs Gesellschaft," presumably a research fund into which armaments funds flowed and then out against to munitions makers, clocking the German rearmament program.

The prosecutor read from the diary of former Ambassador William E. Dodd the statement that Schacht admitted to the American envoy in September, 1934, that the Hitler party was absolutely committed to war and that the people were willing.

Farm Prices

are kept and export subsidies are eliminated.

The Byrnes and Anderson speeches indicate an administration preference for the first course. It would be supplemented by international collaboration designed to stabilize prices at levels fair to both farmers and consumers and to divide world markets among producing nations so as to prevent cut-throat competition.

Recent developments indicate that the administration may receive strong support from some farm groups on a revision of price policies. Albert S. Gooss, master of the national granee, came out last week for a "modernized" formula for determining farm price goals.

On the other hand, there is strong opposition in congress to proposals which would have the effect of reducing farm prices. That opposition is led by Chairman Thomas (D-Okla.) of the senate agriculture committee, and Rep. Pace (D-Ga.) in the house of representatives. Both are sponsoring bills which would establish higher farm price goals.
