Emily Post's TELEPHONE TIPS

A father writes: "I've noticed my teen-aged daughter automatically calls Information if she doesn't know a number. I think this is a bad habit and I'm trying to correct it. What do you think?"

I wholeheartedly agree with you. It's a bad habit for anyone. Most numbers are listed in the telephone book and one should always look in the directory first. If the number is not listed, then, and only then, should one call Information. Telephone people tell me that 3 out of 4 calls to Information are un-

A writer inquires: "Mrs. Post, will you please comment about leaving and taking telephone

If the person you call is not in, leave your name. It's impolite to say, "This is a friend" or "Never mind" when you're asked, "May I tell him who called?" If you take a message for anyone-write it down. It's annoying to be told that someone called, but "I can't remember the name. Anyway, he wanted you to phone him, but I guess he'll call you back."

A young mother wants to know: "Should children be taught to use the telephone?"

> Yes. The telephone is so much a part of our modern living that children should know what it will do and how to use it. That doesn't mean that children should be allowed to rush to answer the telephone every time it rings. The child's training in good usage and good telephone manners should include what not to do, also:

Great Oaks from little acorns grow. Huge doors on small hinges turn, and unspeakable destruction from tiny bombs may come. The importance of little things depends on what's inside them. Moses' rod destroyed the power of Egypt; the jaw bone of an ass slew a thousand; a pebble killed Goliath, and an unknown mother's prayer turned a Prodigal Son into Saint Augustine. 7s your little acorn in a cradle? Feed and shelter that little body with utmost care. Teach it reverence for God and devotion to His church. Wesley, Luther, Peter the Hermit and Dr. Harvey Wiley, were once little acorns. Don't neglect your little acorn ... God expects you to see it through. keep off!" But listen to what Henry Ford II had to say in Chicago. the other day:

Eliminate tariffs and trade barriers to give foreign manufacturers "a fair crack at the American market," he urged. He said it was high time America began to 'practice what we preach" by creating a free market for the world's goods.

Ford acknowledged that his foreign competitors were capturing a larger share of the American market than ever before; but instead of hollering for higher tariffs, Ford said his company will meet all competition "in the market place and not in the halls of the tariff com-

He's quite a guy, is young Henry. A little like his old Daddy.

This tariff business is a legacy of the old Republican party. But it's a thing of easy virtue and it's kept company with the Democrats as well. The "high protective tariff" was a Republican device to protect manufacturers against competitors who could offer American buyers the goods they wanted at a lower price than the American manufacturers were willing to accept.

This was "protection" -- although the buyer of highpriced American merchandise might sometimes wonder what he was being protected against.

About the time the Democratic party began to collect the assorted scummage of Ivy League liberal arts faculties and weld them into a sort of marriage with the labor racketeers to form the New Deal party, the high "protective tariff" moved out of the Republican boudoir and into the chambers of the new party.

The union gang bosses went for high tariffs on the theory that they had to "protect" American industry, which had fallen into their hands in 1932.

At that point, everybody was for 'em, and the consumer's case was lost to the world. Henry Ford's words the other day were like a refreshing breeze after a stiff wind off the rendering

Along the same lines, John S. Coleman, president of Burroughs Adding Machine Co., has called for a reduction or even elimination of these tariff barriers.

He went on to point out the idiocy of sending American dollars overseas to build European industries and then barring the products of those industries from competing in our markets. It's all-ground goofy.

Make no mistake about it. High tariffs and immigration restrictions are largely the work of powerful groups who want to use the force of law to prevent competition.

Why do the unions want the Mexican border closed down? To keep out people who will work, of course. It's that simple - and all the hoopla about Commie infiltration and disease and dope smuggling is rubbish. Get off it, boys - we see you behind the false whiskers and green glasses. You still look like the union czars that you are.

A free market never has existed in America. England came close to it at one time, and it was the Golden Era of her prosperity. But, she sold out to socialism, regulation and "security" - and now she's on the ropes and begging charity (in an uppity way, of course) from her gross and coarse American cousins.

It could happen to us, too - but when we go down the road, there'll be no one left to bail us out.

Nothing can take the place of a free market. There is no alternative except state control. That is the way of Russia. Freedom is the way of America. And Mr. Ford and Mr. Coleman have spoken like true Americans. More power to 'em!

Two Wrongs Make A Right Most people believe that they hink two wrongs do not make a right. But in reality, in certain cases, most people believe that two wrongs do make a right.

This point was brought to my mind after I had given an individual a copy of "The Law" by Frederic Bastiat. A week later I asked him if he had read it and he said he had read the first three pages and then he stopped ponder over the promise of the first three pages. He reasoned that if the premise was not sound, then the rest of the treatise was not worth reading. That is a correct approach to a book.

Now, what was this premise that this man had to think over for days to determine whether or not it was in harmony with natural laws and the Golden Rule?

This premise was that the government or a group of individuals had no moral right to do a thing that the individual did not have a moral right to do and be morally right in a country governed by the Jewish-Christian ethics, where the Golden Rule is regarded as a moral law.

Public School Teachers Believe Two Wrongs Make A Right

No individual would contend that it was in agreement with the Golden Rule for him as an individual to initiate force against another individual to make the other individual help pay for his ideas of education or for anything that the individual did not want to pay for. In other words, no individual would contend that he had a moral right to get things on an involuntary basis. But when individuals join together and call themselves society or government or the state they seem to think, judging from their actions, that they have a moral right to do things that they know are immoral for an individual to do. They are thus contending that the axiom that two wrongs do not make a right is not an axiom and that in certain cases two wrongs do make a right if enough people practice it. That, in reality, is contending that if the majority believes that murdering is right, then it becomes moral for the majority to murder, even if it is immoral for an individual to murder. This is contending that if the majority wants to rob and get things on an involuntary way, it is moral, even if it is immoral for an individual to do it. That is contending that if two people do a thing that is immoral for an individual to do, it becomes right and moral. That is contending that two wrongs do really make a

To me that is an absurdity. If two or more wrongs make a right, then we have no possible method of determining a right from a wrong. Then there is no single standard. Then we are trying to serve two masters. Then, instead of having one God, we have many gods. Then right and wrong are constantly changing, if they can be changed by what the majority believes or when two wrongs make an axiom or principle from which to reason any more than we can measure distance without having an agreed unit of distance. We can have nothing but a babble of tongues or confusion if two wrongs make a right or if the number of people doing a thing determines whether it is right or

It is no wonder we have socialistic and communistic ideas when individuals do not know that multiplying a crime does not make it right and that the number of people doing a thing has nothing whatsoever to do with whether it is in agreement with the Golden Rule. Axioms and principles are eternal. They do not change with time or place or numbers. If this be not so, we are in complete chaos. But every public school teaches must believe that two wrongs do make a right because they cannot contend for one minute that they as individuals have a right to force somebody to pay against his will for their services. Yes, they contend by their actions that the number of people who want others to pay for their services makes it right - make it moral.

It is no wonder we have long periods of unemployment, people are worried about security, have ever mounting debts, dishonest money, when we have men and women calling themselves educators who believe, judging from their actions, that two wrongs make a right.

The columns of this newspaper are open, of course for any tax supported teachers to refute the above.

much, since it is not fair to others to behave unreasonably, no matter what the excuse.

But parents must also understand that these things do happen and they should not worry about the seeming personality change which often develops. When strange behavior on the part of adolescent girls does break out, the parents can often best ignore the outburst altogether, take it calmly and yet continue to be firm about those things which really matter. Adolescence is often not a happy
