Austria Treaty Talk May Open

PARIS, June 12 —UP—The United States, France and Great Britain have formally asked Russia to resume negotiations on the long-stalled treaty to restore Austria's independence, it was announced Friday.

A French foreign office spokesman said the Big Three powers asked resumption of the talks in notes, delivered in Moscow, which will be published simultaneously in Washington, Paris and London at midnight Friday (5 p.m. est.).

Diplomatic circles believed the note was sent in an attempt to sound out Russia's position on the Austrian treaty before the leaders of the Big Three powers meet in Bermuda, probably late this month.

Shortened Version
It was reported in official circles that the Allied note proposed that negotiations be held on the basis of a shortened version of an Austrian treaty.

The Allies drafted this shortened treaty version in an attempt to overcome Russia's persistent objection. The treaty is one to restore Austria's sovereignty and independence. The shortened version consists of those clauses about which there is no basic disagreement between West and East.

Russia has refused to negotiate on the basis of the shortened version, citing various pretexts.

STEVENS CONTENTS

Weapons Offset Cut In Manpower

FORT LEAVENWORTH, Kan., June 12 —UP— Army Secretary Robert T. Stevens said Friday that because of "new weapons and equipment" the Army actually will increase its combat ability despite a 100,000-man cut in troop strength.

Stevens' statement went further than any defense made in the past by administration leaders of the manpower cut imposed on the Army in the coming year. Previously administration leaders have limited themselves to stating that the manpower reductions would not impair the Army's combat strength.

But in a prepared speech before the graduating class at the Army's Command and General Staff College, Stevens said:

"I believe that we will be able to maintain not only our present combat strength, but, because of new weapons and equipment, we will be able to give the nation additional security despite the (manpower) reduction."

Stevens did not elaborate, but an aide said he had no new secret weapons in mind, but only the various weapons developed since World War II and now in production and being supplied to the troops.

The history-making class was a high-ranking one. There was a lieutenant general and four major generals, all Allied officers; 19 colonels, 37 lieutenant colonels, two commanders, 174 majors, one lieutenant commander and 15 captains.

The 59 Allied graduates represented Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, Chile, China, Denmark, El Salvador, France, Great Britain, Italy, Korea, Mexico, The Netherlands, Norway, Pakistan, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Spain, Switzerland, Thailand, Turkey, Venezuela and Yugoslavia.

The President Speaks

"(The school) problem should be solved through private, rather than governmental means. Excessive reliance on government violates the essential principle of our enterprise system. It falls, then, upon American business to assume a greater share for the responsibility for maintaining the institutions essential to our national health."

Almost sounds as though a "News" writer had written the above, doesn't it? But it was President Dwight Eisenhower discussing the nation's medical schools. The medical schools need more money if they are to do their job properly and a campaign to obtain $10,000,000 from industry to help the schools was launched by Ike.

Some have urged that the federal government put up the money and subsidize the schools. Eisenhower, in a letter to the head of the National Fund for Medical Education, replied with the quotation above.

It is obvious even to Eisenhower that government financing of medical education would involve the government direction of how and where the money was spent. The eventual result, as Eisenhower pointed out, would be more and more government dictation of the whole medical care picture — which would set the stage perfectly for socialized medicine.

If, as the President pointed out, there is a danger to American freedom in the government subsidizing medical schools, which, after all, only are attended by a relative handful of students, how much worse is it to have the government control virtually all of the elementary and high schools where the youth of the land during most formative years, are indoctrinated by statism and collectivism?

The worst thing that could happen if the medical schools don't do their job properly is that the products of the schools would be in a position to injure the bodies of those they attend and it wouldn't be long before the public would avoid those medical school products. How infinitely worse it is to injure and cripple the minds of little kids by indoctrinating them with the socialist-collectivist idea that government should have a monopoly in the field of ideas!

Good Queen Bess

The excitement is over, the hysteria cooling off, and Elizabeth, eldest daughter of the late George VI, now in her 27th year, is officially queen of England and the far-flung Commonwealth. We, like most other Americans, wish this charming and beautiful queen a long and successful reign. If the fortune that fell to her predecessors, Elizabeth I and Victoria, is repeated as kindly for Elizabeth II there may come again to the British Commonwealth one of the greatest that created an empire on which the sun never sets.

But Elizabeth is only a symbol, and a paradoxical one at that — a royalist ruler of a group of independent states of which the largest are infiltrated by a philosophy of socialism so strong that even when Tory administrators are in power there is no great evidence of private initiative.

Of course, Elizabeth is a ruler in name only and the fate of her reign lies not in her own hands. The greatness of the Commonwealth will only return if its influential members shake loose the sticky mud of socialism and free the driving force of its citizens to rebuild their own society.

Americans can look upon the coronation of Queen Elizabeth and the whole governmental set-up in England as an interesting picture. We do not hold with rulers, no matter how charming or beautiful or symbolic, and most of us have no brief for socialism although we have been saddled with many of its tenets. Government as it is practiced by the British can have no appeal to truly free men who believe all individuals are created equal and have equal rights and responsibilities. The British have muddled themselves into a quagmire and we can have interest and sympathy with their writings, but in all common sense we should steer clear of the political mess they have brewed.

Good Queen Bess the Second will need a considerable amount of Divine help if she's not to reign over a collapsing empire. We hope she gets it.

A True Patriot

Rarely has a human being been confronted with a choice as heart-breaking as that Valeriu Georgescu of New York was presented with: betrayal of his country or the continued imprisonment of his children behind the Iron Curtain.

Georgescu, a recently naturalized American citizen, was offered this infamous choice by a diplomat from the Communist Rumanian embassy. His two sons, from whom he has been separated for six years, would be returned to him, the diplomat told him, if he would "collaborate" with the Communists. Georgescu chose not to betray his adopted country. He and his wife hope that worldwide publicity given the incident will pressure the Communists to release their children.

All good Americans will join prayerfully in that hope. Georgescu is a true patriot. His courageous action makes the shameful performance of our native born Communists and Commie-lovers seem even more odious by comparison.

BETTER JOBS

By R. C. HOILES

"Forces Affecting American Education"

I want to quote further from the new 1953 Yearbook issued by a department of the National Education Association.

In the last issue we talked about their objections to censorship of textbooks. The whole book would leave the impression that the parents have no right or are not capable of knowing what their children should be taught. Mr. Johnson, author of the chapter on "The Culture Affecting Education" writes:

"Through the strength of our success patterns it is quite possible for men whose lives are wholly unrelated to the process of education to come to power and to assume the role of determining what should be taught and how it should be taught. The professional educator whose business it is to know both the process and the method is not always a match for such opposition. But we should not forget that many other men, who are also at the pinnacle of success, are the firmest defenders of the public schools and the method of intelligence. In recent years, the public schools have received excellent support from just such persons."

Mr. Johnson is referring to the members of the National Citizens Commission for the Public Schools. These members are selected by the National Education Association and have received grants from the Carnegie Foundation, of which Alger Hiss was president.

These members have all been offered $500 if any of them would answer questions to determine whether or not tax supported schools are in agreement with the Golden Rule. Not one of them has accepted. These members are ambitious. They are easily flattered. They are not particularly interested in education or they would be willing to investigate to determine whether or not tax supported schools are in agreement with the great moral laws that develop character, peace and friendship.

All through the book these 34 members of this committee selected by the NEA are eulogized. Most of them are financially successful, although some of them are not even financially successful. I received a letter from one of them, whom the Commission listed as of May 11, 1953, as being a member, and he said he had never attended any of the meetings and had resigned from the Commission quite some time ago. I do not know how many others listed as being members of this Commission have taken no part in it, who are referred to in this book as having reached the "pinnacle of success."

These brass hats of state education who are authors of this book realize that tax supported schools are not accepted as they have been in the past. One author writes:

"It is quite clear that the institution of the school, like other structural institutions of our society, is facing an important crisis. ... Democracy is, however, a fundamental creed which has the broad support of the structure of government while giving direction to the social institutions of American society."

The authors of this book do not explain, however, if this government was based on a democracy and unlimited freedom of the majority, why the Founding Fathers took the trouble to write the Constitution and the Bill of Rights or why they required three-fourths of the state to change the Constitution or why they gave each state two Senators, no matter if some states had 10 times or 1000 times more votes than other states. They just repeat and repeat that we have a democracy.

"Alfalfa" Murray, former Governor of Oklahoma, said that if he had to have a dictator over him he would rather have a dictator of one man than of the majority. His reason was that it was easier to educate one man than it was to educate the majority — and if you couldn't educate the one man dictator, it was easier to kill him.

Yet we are teaching the youth of the land in season and out of season that the American government is a democracy. What a shame!

National Whirligig.. Benson Urged To Enter Barter Deals To Get Rid Of Surpluses

By RAY TUCKER
WASHINGTON—Secretary Ezra T. Benson has been urged by many advisers to enter barter deals with nations for 69,000 bales of cotton. Although the trade was negotiated through and confined to private channels, on and off Capt. Hill, to negotiate old-fashioned barter deals with agriculturally rich nations for disposal of multi-billion-dollar farm surpluses, which are now bursting the seams of all available storage space, including caves, moonballows, U.S. 24 Union Men. ... With heavy harvest just ahead in many major crops, the need for storage facilities has become a grave problem, for producers cannot qualify for government loans unless their commodities are housed properly. The resort to emergency bins and buildings under rent or lease will require additional heavy expenditures. As demonstrated during the Truman regime, if conditions of famine and food and corruption. The acquisition of storage space for lease or rental has become a new source of political wealth.

SUPPORT PROGRAM THREATENED? — Worst of all, from the farmers' viewpoint, the vast government investment in a time of peak taxes and high prices threatens to "blow up the price support program." Their more fanatical leaders remember consumers' indignant reaction to the potato and butter "scandals." They anticipate even louder squawks, if housewives must continue to pay high prices for staple foods when Washington cannot find room to house huge surpluses. It is estimated that the end of 1953 will see federal food inventories of astronomical proportions, totaling to wit: 500,000,000 bushels of wheat, 5,000,000 bales of cotton, 700,000,000 bushels of corn 175,000,000 pounds of butter 3.6 billion pounds of tobacco. The value of this food pile is placed at between $3 billion and $4 billion.

BARTER PROPOSAL ASSAILED — When the barter proposal is assailed as economic heresy and medievalism, advocates note that the conservative Churchill ministry has just approved this kind of arrangement with Brazil. Russia is taking advantage of the device with France, Japan, Finland, Italy, etc. Pending a solution of commercial and monetary difficulties, other nations may do the same. The British-Brazilian transaction has aroused discussion because of its applicability to America's position, in view of our purchases of weapons in so many food-deficient countries. The British firm, the Hawker Siddeley Group, will manufacture 70 Meteor planes valued at about $70,000,000 in exchange for 69,000 bales of cotton. Although the trade was negotiated through and confined to private channels, on and off Capt. Hill, to negotiate old-fashioned barter deals with agriculturally rich nations for disposal of multi-billion-dollar farm surpluses, which are now bursting the seams of all available storage space, including caves, moonballows, U.S. 24 Union Men. ... ## The Doctor Says

By EDWIN J. JORDAN, M. D.

Today's first question describes a symptom which is unusual.

Q — When I walk around a block, my hips ache. I rest and in a minute the pain disappears, but reoccurs in another block. What could cause this? W.N.D.
A — Except for location this is rather typical of a condition known as intermittent claudication. The more common location for intermittent claudication is in the calves of the legs. The cause is a hardening of the blood vessels, with a lessening of the blood supply, so that after a little exertion the tissues do not receive enough blood, start to hurt, and then, following rest, get better.

Whether the condition of which Mr. D. complains is the same or not is, of course, guesswork, and he should be examined by his doctor.
Q — I have read the left testicle is supposed to hang somewhat lower than the right. If this is reversed, is it natural and could it cause sterility?
A — It is correct that the left is usually the heavier, because of a better blood supply. If the reverse occurs, however, there is no reason why it should cause sterility.

Q — Is it possible that breathing paint solvents, lacquer thinners or other chemical thinning compounds could cause trouble?
A — Yes. There have been extensive studies and reports on the possible hazards of chemical lacquer thinners and other similar compounds. Exposure to these substances should be avoided if at all possible.
Q — What does falling of the womb mean?
A — It means that the womb or uterus and perhaps some of the other genital organs are held up in place as they should be. In severe cases repair by surgery is often considered.

Q — I have read the left testicle is supposed to hang somewhat lower than the right. If this is reversed, is it natural and could it cause sterility?
A — It is correct that the left is usually the heavier, because of a better blood supply. If the reverse occurs, however, there is no reason why it should cause sterility.

Fair Enough... Pegler Derides St. Louis P-D For Inconsistency Of Its Policy

By WESTBROOK PEGLER
(Copyright, 1953, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)
This is to abandon Laurence R. Feetham's illusion that the old cavalry carbine which was given to his father by Dr. H. M. Wheeler, of Grand Forks, N.D., was the one with which Doctor Wheeler killed William Stiles, of the Jesse James gang, in the Northfield, Minn., bank robbery of Sept. 7, 1876, and to modify in minor particulars a story which is nevertheless a nugget of good and profitable history.

The Grand Forks Herald interviewed Mrs. Wheeler, who said Dr. Wheeler's gun was still in the family there. Mr. Feetham, now living in Seattle, politely bowed to her as follows: "Let us accept the fact that the doctor's family should know about the gun."
The Herald published a picture of Henry Wheeler, apparently a young man, holding a carbine, with the late doctor's fabulous four-gauge shotgun, which looks like a gas-pipe mounted on a stock, standing beside him. Mrs. Wheeler said the carbine which Dr. Wheeler fired was carried by Charles Dampier, the hotel-keeper in Northfield, from 1861 to 1865 in the Union Cavalry and that it was given to the Wheeler family when Mr. Dampier died. The gun that Wheeler gave the elder Feetham, now treasured by Laurence Feetham and his son, is just another old cavalry carbine.
A large correspondence flowed out of the controversial memories of individuals scattered from Southern Pines, N. C., to Seattle and Las Vegas, Nev. The pure gold of all this is a legend that Wheeler, a poor young man studying medicine at the University of Michigan, showed up for his dissection course in the fall of 1876 with a cadaver all his own to work upon. These articles cost about $200 and when Wheeler nonchalantly remarked to a group of other students that he thought he would go and get in some work at this course, several of them exclaimed: "Did you get one? Where did you get him?"
Young Wheeler said: "I shot him," and was called upon to amplify his grisly account to the dean.
Mrs. Wheeler, as quoted in the Grand Forks Herald, recalled that her late husband and a son of Dampier both were studying medicine at Ann Arbor, and that the two cadavers were left behind by the James gang. "They were told," says the Herald, "that the bodies could not be given away but that they would not be buried very deep. They took up the bodies and shipped them to Ann Arbor."
The one killed by Wheeler was Chief Miller, whose family now went to Ann Arbor and took his body away. However, young Wheeler managed to keep the body of William Stiles, who, it appears from Mrs. Wheeler's memory of things, was shot by A. R. Manning, the man who shot the Northfield hardware store. The Herald's account says Stiles' skeleton was on view in Dr. Wheeler's office until it was destroyed by fire at some date not specified. Apparently young Dampier was out of luck in the shuffle.
Dr. Wheeler had permission to carry a gun for some years after the raid because members of the Miller family had threatened to shoot him.
H. C. Hoffman, of Trail's End Ranch, Oxford, Ohio, said he and Jesse James, Jr., visited Cole Younger, one of three brothers who rode in this and other raids, as he lay dying at Lee's Summit, Mo., in 1916. He and Jesse, junior, bore Younger's pall. Mr. Hoffman writes that Younger gave him the gun he was carrying when he was captured at Madella, Minn., 34 days after the raid. Hoffman gave this gun and other relics of the same chase to the State of Missouri in 1938 and they are now on exhibit in the State House at Jefferson City.
Mr. Hoffman says Stiles, alias Chadwell, lost his head and ran down an alley instead of mounting his horse for the getaway. In this trifling lapse he exposed himself to Wheeler's fire and was killed.
On the point of my observation, that the James gang were rotten marksmen, based on the fact that they banged away regardless and killed only two unfortunate who were sitting ducks, Mr. Hoffman said the James boys and the Youngers "were recognized by old-time experts as having no peers in the use of a six-gun."
Cole Younger told him, "We did not want to hit anyone. However, it was impossible to avoid hitting the cashier at the moment it was kill or be killed." He points out that the gang fired 30 times at Mr. Manning, the hardware man, without even wounding him, the implication being that they didn't want to kill anyone unnecessarily.
To the contrary, we have an oration by Harry B. Hawes, former senator from Missouri, to the Missouri Historical Society in 1939, which was entered in the Congressional Record by Harry Truman a few days later, which both extols and condemns the gang but distinctly says that in the Northfield raid, "the professional deadshots were routed. Amateurs won the day."
The reaction of the press to the scheme by which Gov. Crittenden tempted Bob and Charley Ford, members of the gang, to shoot Jesse in the back of the head for a $10,000 reward, was mixed. The Kansas City Times attacked the St. Joe Herald and the St. Louis Post-Dispatch on the ground that they mourned "the loss of Jesse James as they have no mourning for the loss of the lives of the other men who were with him."

LOOKING SIDWAYS

By WHITNEY BOLTON

Maybe I'd better drop you a note. We've only just met, but I've known your name a long time. You were considerable of a movie star. A little bizarre, a little odd, but good at your job. I used to hear a few strange things about you, but almost everybody in our business is a little strange, so it didn't matter. And, then, the other afternoon, I met you at a party. You met a lot of people and you treated most of them like dirt. You were haughty, r.i.e., inconsiderate and altogether distressing. I wondered what made you that way. I wondered what made you do so many of the things you do. Like that business in St. Louis. You not only went through rehearsals as though they were an imposition, but you left there a day late for your next stock engagement, arriving the morning after what was to have been the first night. And you behaved as though they had no right to protest.
That is purely a matter between an actress and a management, so we won't make much of it. But I think the case of the children is something else. Mainly because children are trusting and so little able to do much about things for themselves.
When it became plain that you were going to be in the East for some months, you asked a literary agent to recommend a boarding school for your children. She gave a lot of thought to the problem and named one. You accepted her advice and entered your children. She was asked to write a note of recommendation and did so, saying that she knew little about you but that you had some stature in show business and your children were bright and charming. What else could she say?
The children went off to school and you started working on a play. A lot of people work on plays. It's no monumental thing. They still manage to pay attention to their homes and children. They manage to live good lives and to give love, to do their domestic obligations. But you didn't. Your children did not once hear from you the entire fall and then, as the Christmas holidays neared, you had not told the school what to do about your children. Not a word. They wired you in New York and Hollywood and a dozen other places. No answers. They tried London and Paris. No answers. They called you at Bermuda, hearing that you might be there in stock. They drew a blank. And they were teased by the plight of your children.
Finally, as the last day was at hand, they remembered the letter from the literary agent and telephoned her. They told her that the school would be closed, without light or heat, through the holidays and what should they do about your children? They couldn't just stay there and starve and have no Christmas. They pleaded for advice and for a hint as to where to find you.
The agent was appalled and told them that you were right here in New York at the hotel at which they had telegraphed you. The agent volunteered to get hold of you. She did. You seemed vague about the problem of the children at Christmas. The children, you felt, would have been taken care of somehow. At last the agent made it clear to you that you had to send for them, to meet them at the train, to give them some kind of Christmas. It wasn't a matter of money. You just didn't have time, you said. But you agreed to give the children a holiday in the tradition. You did. But you were away from the hotel most of the time. They managed a little Christmas of their own and it wasn't much.
And now you go to parties and treat people with rudeness and hauteur. People love you, you say. You act as though their presence was insufferable.

MATURE PARENT

BY MURIEL LAWRENCE

The lightweight navy wool suit costs $69.95. The jacket fits Mrs. G. perfectly. So does the skirt. The suit is exactly what she needs, wants and can afford to buy.

She doesn't buy. As always in these situations, Mrs. G.'s need for her daughter's affection overwhelms her own need for new clothes. So she goes to the store's budget department and picks out a rayon suit that costs $29.95. Though it doesn't fit well, this is not important to her. What's important is that she has money enough to buy Jeanne a pink rayon suit, too.

That evening, Jeanne complains that it's unbecoming. "If you had $29 to spend on me," she says, "I wish you'd let me spend it the way I want."

The next day Jeanne exchanges the pink suit for perfume and two expensive slippers she doesn't need. Jeanne, a girl with an undeveloped understanding of economy, has not felt gratitude to her mother for some years. There's no real reason why she should. Mrs. G.'s habit of denying her needs to indulge Jeanne's wants is not based in interest in Jeanne. It's based in interest in escaping from the guilty, uncomfortable feeling that overwhelms her whenever she considers herself. Unable to consider herself she can feel no true consideration for Jeanne.

It is a perilous thing to deny a child the experience of gratitude. It is response to love. Mrs. G. denied it to Jeanne because she has never grown up to see that both love and gratitude operate in a realm that has nothing to do with the give-and-take of rayon suits, perfume and slippers.

If she could see that all true giving is the support of another's dignity, a revolution would take place in her life. She would be freed from her compulsion to prove she's a "good" mother by the denial of her own material needs.

As it is now, she has no freedom. Her decisions are made for her by a compulsion she knows nothing about. On movie and television stage sets, an actor's movement is rigidly controlled for him by chalk lines his director marks out for him. He submits to them consciously as part of his job. In exchange for this submission, he receives appreciation and money.

But you and I who allow our free movement to be directed by the invisible chalk lines of our self-imposed martyrdom to Jeanne sacrifice our right to self-direction for nothing at all. All we get for our artificial performance as the "self-sacrificing" mother is ingratitude and a rayon suit that doesn't fit.

Love and gratitude are spiritual matters. It is regarding them as material matters that makes spoiled children.

HOMEMADE SHERBET Add 1 package sherbet mix (lemon, orange, or raspberry) to 3 cups milk. Beat with rotary beater until dissolved—about 2 minutes. Pour mixture into refrigerator tray and place in freezing compartment. When mixture is firmly frozen remove from tray to bowl. Break up into small lumps with fork or potato masher. Beat with electric or hand beater until free from lumps but still a thick mush. Return to refrigerator just below freezing compartment to soften.

SUNSHINE SPECIAL — Roll scoops of homemade vanilla, straw berry or black raspberry ice cream in finely shredded coconut. Serve with scoops of sherbet. Fresh fruit sauce or marshmallow sauce transforms this into a luscious sundae. SUNBURST SUNDAE — Put a peach half and pineapple tidbits in bottom of dessert dish. Top with a scoop of vanilla ice cream and garnish with apricot jam. (Sherbet can be used instead of ice cream.) SHERBET COOLERS — Serve chilled fruit juice, fruit-ade or carbonated beverages with a scoop of your favorite flavor of sherbet. Garnish with mint leaves or fruit slices, if desired.

In a magazine article written by a man is this statement: "The phrase 'I'll ask my wife' is undoubtedly the most oft-repeated remark in the American husband's repertoire." The inference is made that those oft-repeated words are proof that women rule the roost. Wives know better, however. They know their husbands often say with pseudo-meekness "I'll ask my wife." But they also know that doesn't mean, "I can't decide anything without asking my wife."

What it really means in nine cases out of ten is: "I don't want to come right out and say 'No,' and luckily I don't have to. I can always stall off a decision with: 'I'll ask my wife.'"

"If I decide the answer is 'No,' then I still don't have to stand behind it. I can say in a man-of-man, you-know-how-to-man tone of voice, 'My wife says No.'"

HE USES THIS ALIBI That gives a man a perfect out! He doesn't have to argue. He doesn't have to explain. He doesn't have to back up his decision with any reason at all. He has asked his wife and she has put her foot down and the matter is settled once and for all. So that is why "I'll ask my wife" is so often said by husbands. It's not said because the poor men are so henpecked they aren't make a decision by themselves. It's said because it is easier for a husband to hide behind a woman's "No" than to come out flat-footedly with a "No" of his own. Since most men use the "I'll ask my wife" advice fairly often it's amazing they fool each other with it. But at least they don't fool their wives.

Not only do these dairy foods make for good eating, but they contribute to your family's health. For they furnish a bundle of nutrients essential in the diets of both children and adults. Dairy products provide these nutrients economically too. So, you get more nutrition for your money when you use dairy products.

During the summer, ice cream and sherbet are favorite dairy foods. You can keep yourself well supplied with these wholesome desserts. Make ice cream and sherbet the easy way—use packaged freezing mix and sherbet mix. All flavored and sweetened, you simply add milk or cream and freeze. (See directions below.) Here are exciting new quick ways to serve homemade frozen desserts at mealtime or refreshment snack-time.

HOMEMADE ICE CREAM Combine 1 cup milk with 1 cup heavy cream. Whip in a deep bowl until light and fluffy—takes about 2 minutes. Add 1 package flavored freezing mix (vanillin, chocolate, strawberry or new black raspberry). Beat one more minute to dissolve. Pour into freezing tray and freeze until firm, but not too hard.

The Best Crowd to Follow... Is the Crowd Going to Church.

"You must not follow a multitude to do evil; nor go with a multitude to prevent justice," Exo. 23:2. What do you see in a crowd? Kings and tyrants have seen riot, rebellion and bloodshed. Jesus saw helpless, oppressed humanity as sheep not having a shepherd. Great crowds always mean some kind of hunger. Don't criticize them, try to understand and help them. When the multitude was hungry, Jesus fed them; when they were confused, He taught them; when sick, He healed them; when in trouble, He helped them. Help your friends by inviting them to church.

Advice To Bridegrooms . . . Hank Finds Out Too Late That Mrs. M. Attends Auction Sales

BY HENRY McLEMORE
If there were a way to send out this column ROS I'd do it. Its message is that urgent.

This is June, the month for marriages, and I would like to have every prospective bridegroom read what I have to say before it is too late and he finds himself traipsing down the aisle to his doom.

My message is this: Young man, before taking unto yourself a wife find out for sure whether or not she likes to attend auction sales. If she does, then snatch the diamond off her finger and flee to the hills, for it is far better to live the life of a hermit in a cave than to share a mansion with a wife who likes to go to auctions.

No matter how many her virtues, this one vice will drag you through torment. No matter if she is as beautiful as a 3-D sunset, can cook pancakes as light as fried clouds, can make a perfect-fitting slipcover for the inside of a fireplace, and likes to do her own washing and ironing, pass her up if she has the ring of the auctioneer's hammer in her ears.

This advice comes from my heart, and was learned first-hand. Only too late did I discover that Mary, who has all the attributes mentioned above, plus a flair for knitting waste-paper baskets, was an auction addict.

When lots of strange objects began appearing around the apartment I wasn't alarmed, and didn't even question her about them. I figured she was stealing them, and let it go at that.

But yesterday, when she came in with a hacksaw, twelve cans of floor wax, a thermos jug (bringing our total to three), a hat rack with a battered size 7 1/2 felt hat on it, and a brick mason's level, the awful truth came out.

Under direct questioning it came out that she had bought these things, just as she had paid out good money for the 10-quart old-fashioned ice cream freezer, the 100 feet of plastic garden hose, the "gun" for spraying fruit trees, and the two-headed canoes paddles.

"Where in the name of Jehovah did you get that hacksaw?" I demanded. "And where did the rest of that junk come from?"

She said she had bought them at an auction, and that she never would have gotten them as cheaply as she did if the auctioneer hadn't known her and known the type of things she liked.

"I paid only seventy-five cents for the hacksaw," she said, waving it proudly.

"What are we going to do with it?" I asked.

"It's perfect for cutting up venison," she said, just as if I shot deer three or four mornings a week.

"What about that brick mason's level?" I asked. "I suppose I can use that to get the deer on a level before I go to work on him with the hacksaw. How much did you pay for it? I'm curious."

"Less than half its worth," she answered. "I'd be willing to bet that you could put your coat on and go out right now and sell it for five dollars more than I paid for it."

I explained that I didn't intend to switch professions and become a vendor of brick mason's levels. I also explained that a bargain isn't a bargain unless you want it or have some use for it.

I must have set her straight pretty well, because she didn't get up enough nerve to show me the Swiss watch she had bought for $3.88 until late at night.

WASHINGTON, June 11—UP—The FBI announced Thursday that its agents in St. Louis have arrested Gordon Lee Cooper, 32, one of its "10 most wanted fugitives."

Cooper is wanted for prosecution on robbery and assault charges. FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover said he was taken into custody by FBI agents at dawn in St. Louis while he was driving a car he admitted was stolen.

The agents seized a loaded sawed-off shotgun which Cooper had under the front seat.

Cooper was placed on the most wanted list on May 11. He has been sought since May 27, 1952, when he broke out of the Butler county jail at Poplar Bluff, Mo., and beat and robbed a deputy sheriff.

The 32-year-old Cooper's criminal career goes back to 1931 when he was sentenced to a Missouri reformatory for burglary and car theft.
