Traditional Rum Eggnog For Holiday Parties

A really authentic eggnog has always called for rum. This happy combination has endured since Early American times as a symbol gracious holiday hospitality. S. S. Field, author of The American Drink Book says, "Rum is to an eggnog what holly and plum pudding are to Christmas." The tempting eggnog, above, is shown in a 1725 silver Monteith bowl. In those days bowls were "large enough for a goose to swim in" and "open house" eggnog parties from Christmas to New Year's Day were the most festive celebrations. Today's hostesses can make old-time eggnogs or use a new short-cut recipe.

For the traditional holiday eggnog (20 servings): 12 egg yolks, 1/2 lb. sugar, 1 qt. milk, 1 bottle (fifth) gold Puerto Rican Rum-any brand, 1 ot. heavy cream. Beat yolks with rotary beater until light. Add sugar. Continue beating until creamy. Stir in milk and rum. Chill 3 hrs. Pour into bowl, fold in heavy cream, stiffly whipped. Chill 1 hr. Top with

We Both Win

If you like quiz programs, try this one for size: What European country has the lowest living index and the highest wage scale . . . has the soundest currency in the world . . . has never asked U. S. taxpayers for a dollar under the Marshall Plan or any other aid program?

If you need hints, it's about one-tenth the size of California. It has no minerals, no coal, no oil. It has only enough tillable land to support its population three months of the year. And with 1-500th of the world's population, it carries on 1-50th of the world's tradefor cash.

It's Switzerland, of course - the country that last year bought 194 million dollars worth of American goods, and sold us 164 million dollars worth of precision machinery, textiles, cheese, watches and watch movements the country that spent $48 per capita for American food, automobiles, tobacco, drugs and most everything you can think of, while Americans spent 92 cents per capita for Swiss products.

There is no mystery about the dependence of the Swiss on export trade for their very existence, but the heated discussions in this country over tariff rates have failed to reveal OUR dependence on these Swiss goods. The large American watch industry created by the import of Swiss watches and movements is a prime example. The 58 million dollars worth imported in 1952 not only filled a consumer demand, but supported a 300 million dollar U. S. industry devoted to assembly of the movements and production of finished time-pieces. Also concerned were America's 30,000 jewelry stores, which depend on watch sales, repairs and attachments for nearly half their business.

The statisticians figure we do all right since, on a dollar basis, the Swiss watch business means 85 cents for us and 15 cents for Switzerland.

We hope the Randall Commission, appointed by President Eisenhower to work out a new foreign trade and tariff policy, has the patience to dig to the bottom of all these import-export situations and recommend revisions only where they are needed.

Remember the popular song of long ago: "I miss my Swiss,

My Swiss Miss misses me . . . "? We wouldn't want it to come true.

Whole-Men Wanted

"There is a growing fear in the United States that we are facing as great a danger from internal as from external attack," says Gilbert W. Chapman, president of Yale & Towne. Over-emphasis of narrow technological training, at the expense of broad cultural education, he thinks, is filling the nation's industries with single-trade specialists instead of the well-balanced citizens that top business management must have.

Mr. Chapman believes industry must "redefine job qualifications for specialists." In fact, he would have American business take a fresh look at the whole field of higher education, especially since the large private donors on whom the universities once depended are practically extinct, and corporations are taking their placesto the extent of sixty million dollars last year. In the past, he says, industry gifts have had too many strings, have been too widely "ear-marked for special purposes and for research in applied sciences." More of this money, he thinks, should be given for liberal arts, or given unconditionally to the colleges.

In summing up his position in a guest editorial in the Saturday Review, Mr. Chapman says: "Great crises of history are caused by economic pressures, originating in the desire of man, good or evil, to better his standard of living. These crises can only be conquered by moral force. Never before in history has mankind developed the power to destroy itself. The need for stamina and strength to control this threat can only be met by the enlightened moral and spiritual education of our youth. The specialist must also be a humanist."

In other words, we've gone overboard in teaching our youth more and more about less and less. Perhaps we should forget atoms long enough to remember that "the greatest study of man is man himself."

Monsterous Law

This about a law that grew up to be a monster. Way back in the middle 1920's there was a drastic drop in farm prices. Some farmers gave up and moved to the cities. And people began to wonder where food would come from if all the farmers left the land.

So, in 1929, a special session of Congress created a special low - the Agricultural Marketing Act - dedicated to helping farmers to stay on an equal footing with other industry.

Low interest loans, and government encouragement of private farming groups to study better marketing methods were the techniques prescribed.

There were no giveaways in the original law, nor in the minds of the lawmakers. Today, two "Deals" and many laws later, "farm relief" hangs on the neck of the taxpayers like a golden

Bargaining

By Paul L. Poirot

INSTALLMENT XIV

Efforts at government wage control in the United States have proven unsatisfactory; and, of all peomost conscious of that failure. Such control interferes with production. It robs individuals of the incentive ployers to pay higher wages for added service. Freezing wage patterns tends to freeze production in all lines of industry, which has the effect of stunting the growth of the economy. Such wage control destroys the market process of that market wage which best satisfies both the employee and his em-

These are some of the reasons why governmental wage control doesn't work. And in a rising market, at least, employees generally seem to understand the value of the flexibility afforded through bargaining. If this lesson can only be retained, so that employers and employees will also recognize the advantages of wage flexibility in a declining market, then it may be truthfully said that the American people have made progress toward the prevention of mass unemployment. All that is necessary is that the employer and the employee cooperate to find a wage which is agreeable to both. Bargaining Representatives

Any employer or any employee who feels that he is personally unqualified to gauge the conditions of the market owes it to himself to seek the services of a qualified bargaining representative. And a qualified bargaining representative will be one who understands that his job is to find the right wage level - the one which just clears the market without bringing compulsion against a single person, provide many of the material blessings available to American consumers today. And some of this bargaining has been of a "collective" nature in the sense that one party to the bargain has spoken in behalf of a number of coopera-America has not been bargaining men for their consideration. at all, but a king of compulsory collectivism which prefers coercion

The Eternal Struggle Life always has been a strug gle. Always, some of the people have had to work in order that they or anyone else might live. A whole society of nonworkers is inconceivable. The great social problem has been to determine how the products of human effort are to be shared within the society. And closely related to this problem has been the matter of encouraging as much production as possible.

Throughout most of the world's history, the popular answer to these questions has been: "Might makes right." Issues were decided by force, by the power of military might, or by the political force of majority will. Rarely, as in America's past, have individuals been allowed to decide these matters for themselves, in the market place, competing and bargaining for the necessities and luxuries of life. Though material abundance and luxuriant living have been the results of competitive bargaining in America, the people of other nations seem reluctant to practice such freedom. And, indeed, we in America seem to be abandoning our own individual rights to bargain, in a backward flight to the old system of determination by force.

The modern backward trend in this country probably is not deliberate so far as most of us are concerned. We would not consciously abandon the private enterprise system which has afforded so many blessings. But we are slipping backward, and will continue to slip until there is a renewal of understanding of individual rights and responsibilities under a system of competitive bargaining which functions according to the willingness of individuals to respect the lives and the private property of one another. There must be self-respect of such a high quality that a person is willing to compete peacefully with his neighbor, each using his own skill and his own property as the means of producing or trading for the things

Professional men and business men and other working men all must realize the inherent dangers of binding themselves into special unions as a means of acquiring political power over other persons and other groups within the society. For when any one group becomes powerful enough to sway a whole society by force, then that force is the effective government of the society. The goal of government, no matter how nobly constituted, is to govern. A government with the power to govern in small ways seems bound to seek additional powers. Apparently it can't help itself; it is incapable of limiting itself in the struggle for power. The limitation can come only from the outside. The early American concept was that individuals, in their desire for independent lives and in their respect for private property, would keep the government within bounds. Those who promote and condone the principle that might makes right can have no logical quarrel with the methods which dictators employ. All such methods lead to the same end, and the fighting is simply to determine who will he the man in charge of that slave society. Such issues will be resolved by fighting unless individuals voluntarily choose to work and live according to the peaceful alternative of competitive bargain-
