A hospital spokesman reported Graham received burns on his arms. face and neck from the flash fire which accompanied the explosion. The Pampa Fire Department was notified of the explosions at 6:03 p m When the first fire units arrived, the firefighters reported there was no fire in the heavily damaged one - story frame home covered by metal siding. However, neighbors, who said they first thought the explosion was a sonic boom, reported there had been a small fire in the damaged wall of the south side of the home. Neighbors had extinguished this fire - using snow by the time firemen arrived.

But this morning firemen were called back to the damaged house where insulation was smoldering in the attic According to the neighbors. Graham was alone in the house when it

The window, complete with the window frame, had been blown into the front yard by the force of the blast. The explosion had also heavily damaged the south side of the house, splitting it in the middle and buckling it at a sharp angle In addition, portions of the front porch were knocked down by the blast's force. Interior walls of the home were twisted, with ceiling panels and sections of the walls heavily damaged. No estimate had been made of the damage this morning, although firemen initially reported the house as a total loss

Assistant Fire Chief J.D. Ray, who was at the scene Sunday evening, said this morning cause of the explosion had not been determined. Investigation was continuing this morning and Ray said the fire marshall will probably look Winds of up to 70 mph are not uncommon for such storms. Harry Gordon of the National Weather Service office in Kansas City, said today. He said a gale warning was issued for the Northern California coast.

Rainfall from 4 p.m. Friday to 4 p.m. Sunday reached 1.2 inches in San Francisco, 1.6 inches in Oakland and 1.5 inches at San Francisco International

The wind-blown rain turned to snow as it moved to the mountains inland. and a winter storm warning was issued for the the Sierra Nevada because of drifting and blowing snow. A snowstorm from Alaska had dumped 2 feet of snow on the mountains Saturday.

The storm was expected to leave up to 2 inches of rain in Northern California before clearing today, but forcasters said a string of similar storms was building off the coast and probably would batter the area at 30- to 40-hour intervals.

Dorothy Allen, a blind resident of Pampa was given the 'most beautiful Christmas present I ever got' from the Pampa Noon Lions Club last November.

Ed Juenger, sight conservation chairman of the noon Lions Club recommended to club members Allen be sent to Rochester, Mich. to train with and receive a "Leader Dog" similar to a seeing - eye dog. The club readily agreed to fund her trip expenses.

Allen found out about the Leader Dog School in Rochester, operated by Lions International members of Michigan, by contacting the Commission for the Blind in Amarillo, she said.

"Tess", Allen's Golden Retriever, began training with her new mistress on November 24 in Rochester and they both returned to Pampa on December 16. During the training. Allen and Tess spent about 10 hours a day, six days a week together learning what they needed to know to work effectively as a team. According to Allen, the instructors tried to similulate the actual conditions each?

student and dog would encounter. Allen and Tess spent some time in Detroit learning to walk around on sidewalks and in streets, a little bit at a time, she

The Leader Dog School takes dogs when they are a year old. after they have been raised in 4-H homes for a year. The dogs then are spayed or neutered, and trained for four to six months

Blind people who come to the school for dogs are trained for? two days with an empty harness, to get the feeling of having the harness in hand. Then each dog is matched with a blindperson by its personality. Allen said.

Although Allen has been legally blind for seven years, she has lost most of her ability to see over the past two years. she said. "I used to walk into phone poles because I didn't see them." she said, "now I could walk into a building because 1.

Before she got Tess. Allen said she had hurt herself several times because the cane she carried didn't give her enough 'sight" to get around. Now she can go just about anywhere with Tess at her side, she says.

Tess loves to play with other dogs or children when she is not a harnessed, but "when I put that harness on her, she's all business," Allen said. She does sometimes stop to investigate children by the side of the road. Allen said, but then starts off again in the direction she was originally pointed in.

Allen has lived alone in Pampa since her father was put into a nursing home last year, but Tess makes it easier to be alone and blind. And she has friends to help her with the things she can't manage. She says Tess will alert her to visitors if she can't hear the knocking on the door, and also lets her know if anyone is outside who Tess suspects shouldn't be there.

Now that she has Tess, she said, she may be able to do some things she really wants to do but hasn't been able to in the past. She wants to go to school to teach blind and handicapped . children, but must master two more grades of braile before, she can attend other classes. But Tess will make the physicalpart of going to school a lot easier, she said.

WASHINGTON (AP) - The 98th Congress is convening to hear President Reagan's State of the Union Address and go to work in earnest on measures to reduce the federal deficit and rescue the Social Security system.

Man's final appeals to be decided today

HUNTSVILLE. Texas (AP) - Unless last-hour appeals succeed. Thomas Andy Barefoot will die shortly after midnight and Texas will become the first state to execute more than one man since the death penalty was reinstated in 1976.

The hopes of the former oilfield roughneck rested with the Supreme Court and U.S. District Court Judge Lucius Bunton in El Paso. Both were asked for a stay of execution.

Barefoot. 37, was convicted of killing a Harker Heights policeman in 1978. He insists he is innocent and that his execution would be "the most premeditated of murders."

The U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals last Thursday rejected Barefoot's lawyers' contention that a stay was warranted because a trial witness now says she lied when she said a man she saw near the time of the slaying resembled Barefoot.

The court also rejected arguments that testimony from two psychiatrists who had not examined Barefoot was improper.

 Six states have executed one man each since the Supreme Court approved reinstatement of capital punishment. The Dec. 7 execution in Texas is the most recent and was the first time an execution was "carried out by lethal injection

"We were building houses so large that a single person had no chance to become a homeowner." said architect John D. Bloodgood of Des Moines. Iowa. The larger homes were built 21/2 to three to the acre, he said, but the new, small homes are built five to eight to the acre.

Remove government stand for. If they meant remembering to thank your chum's mother for inviting you over to play and not eating cookies barriers to employment

A number of congressional members seem rather upset at their failure to put any presents under the tree in the form of a big make - work program.

But their failure to take certain actions sure to result in reduced unemployment leads one to question the insincerity of their concern for the jobless is to ask our congressmen and federal officials if they support the following proposals:

Elimination of the capital gains tax. Most authorities agree that reducing this tax from 49 percent to 20 percent has been insturmental in the formation of 600,000 new businesses per year. Japan abolished capital gains taxes. Why don't

A minimum - wage differential for youth, permitting employers to hire young people at less than the statutory minimum. This would not be as desirable as eliminating minimum wage laws altogether, but it might be a good start. Hardly a reputable economist would deny that minimum wage laws increase unemployment, especially among minority teenageers. Isn't it time to get rid of this fossil?

Implementation of "enterprise zones," with lower taxes and fewer regulations in the nation's most depressed areas. It would be preferable to declare the whole country an 'enterprise zone.' but again, a selective start would be a politically possible improvement.

Elimination of license requirements for such occupations as barbering and taxi driving. Most such laws are administered on the state and local level. Might the federal Justice Department be doing jobseekers a service if it applied antitrust laws to these statutes which, after all. created artificial monopolistic situations in certain Repeal of the Davis - Bacon Act. This 1931 law requires workers on projects with a scintilla of federal funding to be paid the highest prevailing union wage, when there are plenty of people who would be willing to work for less. It costs taxpayers, worsens unemployment in the construction industry and has the effect of denying nonunion workers (especially minorities) entry - level training and experience.

Erasure of government regulations that create barriers to job development. One example is in trucking, where outmoded federal regulations have frozen many who could do the work out of the interstate trucking industry

An end to the federal monopoly on delivery of first - class mail. This would open up immediate opportunities in intra city business mail, with even greater expansion of private services (and job opportunities) a real possibility in the long Repeal of Labor Department regulations that discourage 'cottage industries." Remember the knitters in New England who ran into hassles doing work at home because of laws passed to protect union shops in New York City? Those absurd laws are still on the books, still discouraging creating creation of jobs. The existing maze of rules, many passed at the behest of special interests seeking government protection from competition, have made it much harder than it has to be for people who are willing to work and people who need work done to get together in a mutually agreeable manner. In a time of recession and high unemployment, these artificial structural barriers are almost - well, crul and unusual punishment From the perspective of some politicians, the program outlined here has a drawback. It does not generate more revenue or more power for government. Indeed, it, acknowledges that government power is an important part

The ordinary citizen, however, is entitled to wonder whether elected officials who spurn such a realistic package are demagoguing unemployment on behalf of a hidden agenda of increased authority and higher taxes. What of the compassion and morality of people who would increase their own power and feather their political nests by exploiting the genuine misery and hardship of people who can't find jobs?

I'm glad I've lived long enough to experience a cycle. They tell us the age of manners abandoned with scorn during the '60s and '70s has returned. I couldn't be more

When I was a kid, my mother used to always say, "Now mind your p's and q's." I minded them and her, too. But that type of behavior became almost obsolete.

To this day, I don't know what the letters "p" and "q" in their living room, I adhered to them.

In time, I took p's and q's to mean not being rude and asking things, like, "Does your mother dye her hair?" or lying across the dinner table or waving a fork while talking. Later, I learned that mannerly people knew how to plain white paper and send thank you's for gifts and dinner But p's and q's weren't limited to table etiquette and thank you notes. The major thrust was how to be considerate, respectful and avoid hurting another's feelings - even if it meant swallowing a snide remark or not telling the unvar-security in dealing with others. We each knew what was expected of us.

However, many of the niceties and the orderliness went out when the "me" generation came in. Manners were considered fakery and etiquette an imposition incompatible with naturalness and honesty. It became "in" to be natural in dress, eating habits, posture and conversation.

Contempt for conformity often replaced courtesy and self preoccupation replaced politeness and consideration.

Many adults, myself included, had difficulty enduring the new disdain. Once, when I complained about the lack of thank you's, I was told, "It is hypocritical for the giver to expect anything in return. If you do, that is your problem.

I ignored it when people I knew well commandeered my bread and butter plate and leaned their knife against it, instead of across the rim, but I couldn't help shuddering at teeth-picking in public.

Now, hurrah! The counter-revolution has begun. Manners are staging a comeback. An old pattern is being recycled. At the forefront of the movement is Washington Post writer Judith Martin, author of the immensely popular syndicated column "Miss Manners." She opposes total naturalness, saying, "Two-year-olds eat naturally, and that's not polite." I love her for declaring that the main techniques of childrearing are "one, example, and two, nagging. It's an unbeat-

Courses in etiquette for youngsters as young as 5 are cropping up all around the country

There are even workshops for business executives. A woman who teaches "Good Taste in Business" claims her course spares execs from bungling opportunities for success, such as the man who lost a $300,000 job offer because he ordered his turbot medium-rare.

I never thought I'd live to see the day a local newspaper would devote an entire page to an author in town to give a "Dress for Success" seminar at $30 a session.

Even a non-conformist like Stewart Brand, editor of the iconoclastic journal, CoEvolution Quarterly, has had second thoughts about manners. He told an interviewer recently, 'My generation threw out courtesy back when we were throwing out hypocrisy. It's clear that simple courtesy ... is the main glue holding society together.

When asked if the "Uncommon Courtesy" course he originated is a "finishing school," he replied, "No, I think what we are doing is more like a starting school

Bravo, Brand! I know it's unmannerly to boast, but he should know there are some of us who kept our manners while others, all around us, were losing theirs. (NEWSPAPER ENTERPRISE ASSN.)

Infant formula dispute

By Robert Walters

WASHINGTON (NEA) - Nestle, the world's largest producer of infant formula, appears to be slowly moving toward resolution of a long and bitter global dispute over its sales, marketing and promotion practices.

Since the late 1970s, the company has been sharply criticized by members of Congress, religious organizations, consumer groups, labor unions and the medical profession. Nestle's aggressive promotion of infant fomula in less developed countries, those critics allege, deprives children of the benefits of breast-feeding and, in some cases, endangers their health.

For years, the company resisted proposals for reform and refused to even discuss the issue with critics whose allegations against Nestle became increasingly strident. As a result, the feud senselessly escalated into a highly emotional and seemingly irreconcilable confrontation.

But Nestle has become far more conciliatory under the leadership of Helmut Maucher, installed two years ago as chief executive officer of the multinational food company.

Late last year, Maucher agreed to meet with Edward Baer, a member of the board of the Infant Formula Action Coalition, a Minneapolis-based organization which has been aggressively promoting a boycott of Nestle products since mid-1977. That meeting was "the first between the head of the company and an active boycott organizer," notes Baer.

They are definitely getting much better." adds Rick Hoye, who runs the boycott organization's Washington office. But there are still mixed signals, especially from middle management, and there are real problems in the field."

Cynicism about Nestle's position on the issue dates back to 1978, when the company first promised to "abide by any uniform code of conduct which comes out of" a World Health Organization conference on infant feeding practices.

But Nestle then sought to undermine efforts to strong International Code of Marketing of Breastmilk Substitutes at the WHO conference and to gain formal approval of that document at the May 1981 meeting of the World Health Assembly, held under the auspices of the United

In March 1982, the company announced with considerable fanfare that it was promulgating "comprehensive new policy guidelines ... (which) spell out in detail exactly how Nestle subsidiaries and agents are to apply the WHO code.

But that loophole-riddled document was only a restatement of earlier, discredited policies. The executive director of UNICEF, another U.N. agency, expressed "serious misgivings" about Nestle's commitment to abide by "the true spirit and intent of the code.

In May 1982, the company established a 10-member Nestle Infant Formula Audit Commission chaired by Edmund S. Muskie. a Washington lawyer and former senator and secretary of state.

Last October, Muskie's commission announced that the company had finally agreed to meaningful revisions of its marketing procedures to conform with most of the objections raised by UNICEF and other critics.

One important indicator of the company's belated effort to resolve the dispute: Nestle's executive vice president flew to Washington from the firm's headquarters in Vevey, Switzerland, to unveil the new marketing guidelines.

The conflict still has not been fully resolved, and the boycott coalition says it has evidence that Nestle has sought to thwart the passage of strict infant formula marketing laws in the Philippines, Sri Lanka and Zimbabwe. In addition, the organization claims that Nestle employees continue to violate the firm's own regulations in the Philippines, Indonesia, Thailand, Malaysia, India, Brazil, Guade loupe, St. Martin and elsewhere.

In a rare display of good will, however, Baer says he has received assurances from Nestle's top executive that the company is truly committed to "an honest and good faith effort to follow the letter and spirit" of the international code

The dangers in thinking

NEW YORK (NEA) - Ever hear the story about the teacher who had to leave her classroom for some reason? "I'll be gone a few minutes," she warned the students,

"and when I come back, don't let me catch any of you The incident may have occurred in New Jersey, to judge by recent events there. The state legislature not long ago passed a law requiring all New Jersey public school students to observe a "minute of silence" at the beginning of each school day. Nothing in the law required students to pray during that silent minute; they were equally free to engage in thoughtful introspection or, for that matter, to spend the time contemplating how to put a large wad of used chewing gum on the teacher's chair. But Gov. Thomas Kean vetoed the law anyway, declaring he was afraid it was unconstitutional as merely a sly attempt to circumvent the prohibition against prayer in the

The legislature promptly repassed the law over his veto, and the American Civil Liberties Union has now hauled the New Jersey school system into court to have the law invalidated on precisely the ground specified by Gov. Kean in his

There are two separate types of objection to school prayers, but it is hard to see how either of them can apply to a mere "minute of silence.

One is the objection that any form of prayer, no matter how bland and seemingly innocuous, may, or at any rate might, be offensive to some student's religious beliefs. By refusing to participate, the student in question would to that extent be ostracizing himself from the community, and might well suffer social penalties - from having fun poked at him to far more serious sorts of discrimination.

But even where the form of prayer is entirely acceptable to everyone involved, the American Civil Liberties Union and similar critics have opposed such prayers anyway, on the ground that America's public schools simply have no business, in view of the constitutional separation of church and state, prescribing conduct that implies the existence of a deity.

That is why the New Jersey legislature's solution is so ngenious. It prescribes no conduct implying the existence of a deity, let alone any communication addressed to Him. All

You might feel better tomorrow. it requires of students is a minute of silence, and all that can regitimately be inferred from that requirement is the proposition that people benefit from an occasional brief pause in the day's occupation.

Surely that is not an unreasonable proposition. Most of us get up slightly later than we probably ought to, and spend the day racing from pillar to post. An enforced moment of contemplation - even of blank vacuity - would be a healing experience in our hectic lives. It would at least give us a chance to review our objectives for the day, or (if this concerned us more) to consider our own behavior. If, despite more than two centuries under the enlightened reign of secular humanism, we still suspected that our lives are related to, and perhaps even governed by, the imperative of some external being, we could undoubtedly use the silent minute to acknowledge that fact.

But it is preposterous to argue, as the ACLU is doing, that such a minute of silence can have no other meaning. And that contention reveals, rather strikingly it seems to me, how terrified the anti-prayer forces secretly are of the religious impulse whose public manifestations they are so determined to resist. There used to be an old Temperance ditty

We don't smoke, because we think That those who smoke are apt to drink.

The ACLU's version is far more insidious We don't think, because we say That those who think are apt to pray. (NEWSPAPER ENTERPRISE ASSN.)

GLORIA GILBERT

A glimpse of two winners

By DEE DEE LARAMORE Lifestyles Editor

Gloria Gilbert, 20, the current Miss Texas, has participated in beauty pageants since she was a child, beginning with the Little Miss contests. Also, at age 6, she began to learn ventriloquism, a difficult accomplishment for one so young.

For six months, Gilbert and her ventriloquil friend. 'Homer' have toured as Miss Texas representing the state at pageants, programs and for schools.

Friends say Hommer is Gilbert's alter ego, she says. He gets away with everything. "He's onery, rude and obnoxious and people love it." Gilbert explains. "If I said the things he does, people would be offended. If he picks somebody out of the crowd and says something rude, they're embarrassed to death and they love it being the center of attention.

Her interest in ventriloquism began when she was about 6 years old after she saw Sheri Lewis on television. "I thought, now that looks like fun. Then the next Christmas my parents got me a Mortimer Snurd doll," Gilbert said.

Later she began using her ventriloquist act as her talent in the Little Miss contests. "Everybody sang, danced or played the piano, but nobody had a ventriloquist doll; this was something different," she said.

Gilbert is still attending North Texas State University on scholarship money she won in the Miss Texas pageant. She said she is undecided about her future right now. At first, she thought she would become a professional ventriloquist, like Sheri Lewis. "There's not that many female ventriloquists."

After her recent taste of six months of living out of a suitcase, however, Gilbert is beginning to wonder if the show business life is really what she wants

"I'm such a farm girl," explained Gilbert, whose hometown population is about 500 when she's home. "I think I might hate being away from home that much. But anyway, I'm going to wait to make any decision like that until after the next six

Gilbert is majoring in radio, television and film at college, so she said may decide to direct her career in that way.

As Miss Texas, Gilbert spends much of her time attending pageants and other events as the state's representative. "You get tired physically from all you do, but then you get out in ront of the crowd and come alive again," she said.

"It's been the best six months of my life," she said. "And I think the next six months will be too.

"I just feel like I'm at home," says Susan Powell, Miss America 1981. The tiny, 23 - year - old brunette was in Pampa this weekend to emcee the 1983 Miss Top O' Texas Scholarship Pageant at M. K. Brown Auditorium Saturday evening.

Powell is originally from Elk City. Okla., but currently lives in New York City pursuing a career as an opera singer. Her aunt and uncle, Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Gowdy, are Pampa residents, a fact. Powell says, that adds to her relaxed state of mind while in Pampa.

"I've been here before many times to see my aunt and uncle, and Madeline Graves taught my cousin dance. I remember seeing her tutus in the closet," Powell recalled, a spark of laughter in her eyes.

Two years after her reign, Powell, dressed in a red velvet and boots, credits her time as Miss America as a definite boost to her entertainment career.

"I can say I would have eventually been where I am now, but not so soon. Miss America is a tool. The title doesn't get the job, but it gets a foot in the door," she said. "The prestige helps. People are curious to see what Miss America is like.

When asked if she felt "like a body" as she made so many appearances as Miss America, Powell commented, "People kept telling me I ought to feel exploited. I, as an individual, never felt exploited. There have been other situations where I feel 10 times exploited as I ever was as Miss America."

As an example, she pointed out soap commercials or advertisements for blue jeans "that all they show are women's rear ends.

Recently, she auditioned as a model for designer jeans. Powell noticed immediately that all the cameras were set quite low. "I asked somebody why the cameras were set so low and then I knew why. In comparison, I felt more humiliated than I ever have before."

For Powell. Miss America pageants were a way to pay for her college and professional training, but she points out other contestants may have many other reasons for entering.

Her one piece of advice to persons thinking of competing in the pageants would be to "stay an individual within the structure of the pageant.

"It takes too much effort to be someone or something you think you should be," she explained. "I think the reason I went so far was because I never compromised who I was. So the key I think would be remaining an individual.

In New York Powell is training for the part of Musetta in the opera "La Boheme" to soon be presented in the Reno, Nev.

Dear Abby

Starry-eyed daughter can't see fiance's flaws

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I have read your column for years and finally need some advice. My 20-year-old daughter is planning to marry a man who dated her for several months before telling her he had a pregnant wife and two

How do I tell her that this sorry excuse for a man will never be more than the liar he has shown himself to be? How do I tell her she will never be able to trust him, or to look at herself in the mirror after she sees his wife and

How do I tell her she deserves more? She says she "loves" him. Or am I the one who's crazy?

HEARTSICK MOM

DEAR MOM: You aren't crazy. Your daughter is. ("Love" is a mental condition that renders its victims temporarily blind to that which is clearly visible to everyone else.)

You can talk from now until your voice gives out, but the more you point out his faults, the more ferociously she will defend him.

Sorry, Mom. Some people have to learn the hard way. Just stick around to pick up the pieces.

DEAR ABBY: My mother-in-law cannot sit down to a meal without smothering everything she eats with hot sauce, jalapeno pepper, ketchup, Tabasco, A-1, you name it - if it's hot and spicy, she loads it on. She even uses it

This offends me because I work hard to prepare tasty meals when she visits. Of course, I don't say anything, but my problem is that my 13-year-old daughter has picked up this habit, and I am trying to break her of it. My mother-in-law says, "Let her eat what she wants." I want to break my daughter of this habit because I'd like her to learn to appreciate the taste of food, and if she smothers everything with hot sauce, it will all taste the Also, I'm afraid too much hot sauce can harm her health.

Am I wrong to try to get my daughter to lay off the hot sauce? Or should I let her eat what she wants? HOT AND BOTHERED

DEAR BOTHERED: Your reasons for trying to get your daughter to lay off the hot sauce are valid. And yes, an excess of spicy stuff could be hazardous to one's health.

DEAR ABBY: My husband is a 30 year career naval officer. Recently at a dinner party the subject of the high cost of medical care came up. I mentioned that the Navy had provided me with the best medical services free.

A woman in the group (not Navy) said, "Yes, our tax dollars go to pay your doctor bills!" Not wishing to create a scene, I said nothing at the time, but how I wanted to speak my piece. May I get if off my chest to you, Abby? Many others need to hear it:

My husband and I are grateful for the many privileges we have had because of his career in the Navy. Therefore, you will never hear us complain about the long separations; having to cope with alien customs and languages in foreign lands in unsanitary conditions, often without hot water, air conditioning or central heating; losing precious heirlooms through theft and breakage due to constant moving; leaving friends and family behind and often risking our lives - even in peacetime.

It is regrettable that some begrudge us free medical

Please be reminded that my husband - a kind, intelligent, patriotic officer - spent 30 of the best years of his life earning a comparatively small income, working for the American people to make their country a safer place to

Dr. Lamb

Surgery for hemorrhoids?

By Lawrence Lamb, M.D.

Counselor's

Getting to know someone

Corner

DEAR DR. LAMB - I've had a hemorrhoid since I was 15. Recently I had my first baby and it made the hemorrhoid much worse. It's not so painful now as it is an annoyance and uncomfortable, it is so large. I would like to know how you feel about surgical removal. I am dreading any more chil-

Also, should I use stool softeners? Are they as harmful as laxatives? Sometimes I have a bowel movement only once a week and I have gone as long as a month with only one. Is this harmful to your system?

DEAR READER Hemorrhoids are really varicose veins of the rectal Anything that compresses the veins above the area involved will cause the veins to become distended because they cannot empty properly. It is just like placing a constricting watchband around your wrist and watching the veins pop out over the back of your hand.

When a woman has a baby the pressure in the pelvic puts pressure on the veins above the hemorrhoid area. They can't drain and will pop out. Having chil-dren definitely does contribute to hemorrhoids and can make those already present

If the hemorrhoid is small and not too troublesome the doctor usually prefers to wait to do surgery until a woman has completed her family. He gets better results that way, making both him and his patient unusually large or associated with other problems, then it might be well to correct the hemorrhoid even though future pregnancies are expected. Whether surgery. injections or even rubber bands are used to eliminate the hemorrhoid depends entirely on whether it is internal or external and any associated abnormalities

Constipation can contribute to hemorrhoids, particularly if it leads to straining during a bowel movement Stool softeners may indeed be helpful and are not the same as chemical stimulating laxatives. However, you do have an abnormal function of your bowels and should see a doctor for an examination and management program.

DEAR DR. LAMB - I thought I had hemorrhoids but the doctor said it was a fissure. He gave me some cortisone suppositories which helped the irritation. I had two refills and now he tells me there is no help for me, to take sitz baths as often as I can. I'm doing so but it's been a month and the pain is still there. Is there any help for me that you know of? I am 70 years old and have had no bleeding

DEAR READER - A fissure in the anal area is often thought by the patient to be hemorrhoids. It causes pain and itching and can cause some bleeding. The fissure is literally a crack or tear in the skin. It can be associated with painful bowel move-

Some fissures can be successfully treated with conservative measures, usually used to reduce pain and spasm of the anal sphincter. Superficial fissures often heal during such treatment. Others are more chronic and deeper and may be treated with surgery. If your doctor does not feel he can help you after this length of time, I suggest you try to see a proctologist.

DEAR DR. LAMB - I am confused about sugar. As an athlete I have learned about the advantages of carbohydrate loading. There is no question in my mind, I have more endurance and do better if I make it a point to increase my intake of sweets for three days before a vigorous athletic event. If I am running and have not loaded up on carbohydrates before the event, I'll be exhausted. Otherwise I can run five or six miles and still feel great.

As you know, the Russians used this to train their Olympic athletes. My question is, if sweets are good for athletes and improve their performance, why do you read so much about how harmful sweets are? If they are able to increase a person's energy, what are all these stories about fatigue from sugar and how can carbohydrates be harmful?

DEAR READER Congratulations. I see you can think for yourself rather than being taken in by propaganda and unproven

You are absolutely right Carbohydrates are essential to endurance athletes. Why? Because a major source of muscle energy comes from muscle glycogen. It is a slow process to build up the stores of glycogen in the muscles. Muscle glycogen is a combination of glucose molecules sometimes called animal starch.

The two teams will meet in Super Bowl XVII next Sunday. and that's all that matters now.

"What happened back then doesn't mean anything. It's meaningless at this stage," linebacker A.J. Duhe said Sunday after the Dolphins stopped the New York Jets 14-0 to win the American Conference championship and a Super Bowl berth. 'This time, everything will be on the line," added Duhe, who intercepted three Richard Todd passes and returned one of them 35 yards for a touchdown to key the victory. "This time. it's for what we've all dreamed of.

The Dolphins and Redskins will tangle for the NFL crown in Pasadena, Calif., 169 days after Miami launched the exhibition season with a 24-7 pounding of the NFC champions.

"We're packing our bags, going to Pasadena," said Duhe. "Redskins, we're going to meet you there on the 50 (yard-line) and I hope it's a helluva game and we're going to be the world champions - hopefully.

The trip to the title game is the first for Miami since Coach Don Shula's team defeated Minnesota 24-7 in Super Bowl VIII. Washington's last appearance was in Super Bowl VII, when the Redskins, then coached by George Allen, dropped a 14-7

If the Dolphins haven't gained respect throughout the league during a 10-2 campaign, then at least they have that of the Jets. Sunday's victory was Miami's third over New York this Miami became the first team to beat another three times in one season since the Green Bay Packers did it against Shula's Baltimore Colts in 1965.

The Dolphins accomplished the task with a swarming defense - ranked No. 1 in the NFL during the strike-shortened season — that shut down a high-powered offense for the second straight week. The club's five interceptions tied a playoff Miami's offense struggled early, but still managed to hold the football for better than half the game in a steady rain that left the Orange Bowl turf a muddy mess.

Miami limited the Jets to 139 total yards - lowest in an AFC title game since Pittsburgh held Houston to 142 in 1978 - and literally stopped Freeman McNeil, the NFL's rushing king, in-

McNeil, clearly bothered by the soggy turf, gained just 46 yards on 17 carries after gaining 202 in a first-round playoff victory over Cincinnati and 101 in the Jets' semifinal triumph over the Los Angeles Raiders.

Todd, meanwhile, completed only 15 of 37 passes for 103 yards. He was sacked four times for losses totaling 26 yards.

Dolphins' defense worries Gibbs

WASHINGTON (AP) - Bobby Beathard, general manager of the National Football Conference champion Washington Redskins, was up before dawn to call an old friend to say he hoped they could get together in Pasadena next week for the

And later Sunday, Miami Dolphins Coach Don Shula gave Beathard his answer as the Dolphins trampled the New York Jets 14-0 in the mud-caked Orange Bowl.

Beathard was director of personnel and Shula the coach of the Dolphins in 1972, the year Miami capped a 17-0 season with a 14-7 victory over the Redskins in Super Bowl VII.

Redskin Coach Joe Gibbs said he was enjoying Saturday's 31-17 victory over the Cowboys until he sat back Sunday afternoon to watch the Dolphins-Jets game and get an idea what to look for next Sunday

"They (Miami) have a well-balanced team," Gibbs said. will take an excellent defense to win.

In his brief two-year tenure in Washington, Gibbs has come up empty in two meeting with the Dolphins.

While the Redskin defense has surrendered just four touchdowns in playoff victories over Detroit, Minnesota and Dallas, the defense has given up 1,021 yards.

Offensively, Gibbs said the Redskins would continue to count on fullback John Riggins to carry the load in the Super Bowli 'Until somebody stops John we will let him carry the ball.' Gibbs said.

The 33-year-old Riggins, getting his first shot at a Super Bowl ring after 11 years in the NFL, has moved down the opposition in the playoffs. He gained 140 yards against Dallas on Saturday to become the first runner in NFL history to gain over 100 yards in three straight playoff games. In the playoffs: he has touched the ball on half of the team's offensive plays and accounted for 42 percent of the Redskins' offense, gaining 444 yards on 98 carries

Fan swings at White after playoff loss

DALLAS (AP) - Police in Washington, D.C., say that Cowboys quarterback Danny White could press charges against a Redskin fan who took a swing at him in the waning moments of Dallas' bitter 31-17 trouncing.

But that could do little to erase some sad memories of the championship game Saturday which dashed the Cowboys' hope of representing the NFC in Super Bowl XVII.

For White, who suffered his third straight loss in an NFC title game as starting quarterback, the game had its own unique disappointments.

Man. I was really disappointed," Cowboys coach Tom Landry said. "I was really hoping he (White) could have a good game. And the fact he couldn't play was even worse. White suffered a concussion in the game before the half in a jarring sack by Dexter Manley. And White was attacked off the playing field as well as on.

A Washington policeman said he witnessed the Redskins fan's attack on White at RFK Stadium. The attack occurred during the chaos of the last 12 seconds of the NFC championship contest, after Joe Theismann went to one knee on a fourth-down play with 12 seconds left and ran off the field with the ball

Afterwards, most players then went to their locker rooms and fans began streaming out of the stands. The attack injected a bizarre note into the game that still had Cowboys fans shaking their heads in disbelief, after the White's replacement, Gary Hogeboom, was accidentally hit during the struggle that ensued and a third player was tackled by a fan, officials said.

Cowboys spokesman Greg Aiello was told of the attack on White by Washington police officer Thomas F. Grimes. Kicker Rafael Septien said White threw the fan to the ground after he took a swing at the quarterback.

The officer tried to hit the fan with a night stick but hit Hogeboom instead, witnesses said Hogeboom said the officer's night stick swung wildly as we was trying to protect him, and he was struck in the right thigh. "It was an accident." Hogeboom said. "It didn't hurt." He said that White really didn't know what was going on when he threw the fan to the ground Grimes gave Aiello his card in case White wanted to press

The fight occurred as NFL officials were retrieving 11. players from each side to finish the game.

Eleven Cowboys trudged reluctantly onto the field to finish play in the face of a 14-point Redskins lead. Wide receiver Drew Pearson took the final snap at quarterback, with Hogeboom lined up at wide receiver.

'I took the snap on the last play." Pearson said. "I couldn't do anything. The Redskins defensive line made sure. They told me before I took the snap that I'd better not go anywhere. I said, 'Don't worry. I'm not going anywhere. Pearson fell on the ball.

team that had wanted a Super Sunday so badly failed to get it. Borg burns out at 26; retires with $75 million

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) - Bjorn Borg, who reached the top of the tennis world at age 23 and dominated Wimbledon as nobody ever has, says the game is too much work and too little fun for him to go on playing in world-class competition. So. Borg says, he's retiring at age 26 after ten years on the tour in which he earned an estimated $75 million in prize money and endorsements.

Borg as he left his hotel en route to the airport Monday confirmed the retirement reports that had been appearing in recent days, and added, "My last tournament will be in Monte Carlo," at a tournament which begins March 28 and runs through April 3.

He said he would continue his involvement in the game. a remark Lennart Bergelin. who discovered Borg at 14 in a junior tournament in Sweden and coached him to the heights, explained meant that the Swedish star would play some exhibition matches. He is scheduled to play in the Suntory Tennis exhibition April 9-10 in Tokyo.

Borg made it clear, though that he would not be playing again at Wimbledon or in the U.S. Open.

The reason was explained in a report in Kvallsposten, a Malmo. Sweden tabloid by Arne Reimer, a Swedish reporter close to Borg

Borg has played little competitive tennis since he lost to McEnroe in their battle for the U.S. Open title in September, 1981. The Open was the one major title that eluded him in a 10-year career that included six French Open crowns and the unprecedented five straight

Radioactive tracks are sought by ships and planes; more to come

WASHINGTON (AP) - U.S. ships and planes with radiation detection gear are looking for signs of a Soviet py satellite that fell from orbit. howering some pieces into the Indian Ocean while leaving its nuclear fuel ore still spinning toward a mid-February burn-up. @

But an alert by the Federal Emergency Management Agency is over, called off 49 minutes after the nain body of the out-of-control Soviet ocean surveillance satellite hurtled into he Earth's dense atmosphere Sunday at about 5:21 p.m. EST

In a message to officials in all 50 states, the agency said "the public should be advised that protective action n connection with Cosmos 1402 are no onger necessary and thus the alert is

Emergency teams ready to fly to the scene of impact, should it have fallen ithin the United States, were disbanded

Dr. Richard Wagner, a top Pentagon nuclear expert, said any radiation from metal fragments surviving the burn-out of the satellite would remain in the immediate area where they landed

Wagner, nuclear adviser to Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, said it is "awfully hard to know" whether the main part of Cosmos 1402. estimated to weigh about 8.000 pounds, had burned up entirely on re-entry

The Pentagon said. "We do not know at this time whether any portion of the satellite reached the Earth's surface

Colonel Robert O'Brien, a Pentagon spokesman, said U.S. observers on the British-owned island of Diego Garcia reported seeing a 40-second "burn" in the sky about six minutes before Cosmos 1402 hit the heavy friction of the

Apparently, the satellite burned red hot as it dropped toward the final stages of a space voyage which lasted nearly five months

A Pentagon official pinpointed the re-entry at about 980 nautical miles (1.127 statute miles) southeast of Diego Garcia, where the United States maintains a naval base

The official Pentagon statement placed the impact area at about 25 degrees south latitude by 84 degrees east longitude.

Wagner said it is possible that "a few big pieces came in through the atmosphere.

Asked in a telephone interview if radioactive fragments would hurt fish life in the remote waters, he said they would have "no effect at all."

Air Force Lt. Colonel Mark Foutch said U.S. planes and ships carrying radiation detection equipment would be moved into the area

They "have been instructed to watch for increased levels of radiation in the atmosphere." the Pentagon said. The death of the main part of Cosmos 1402 left in orbit a small piece containing 110 pounds of enriched uranium fuel, which powered its ocean-scanning radar. The Pentagon said this portion probably will come down into the atmosphere in mid-February and burn up.

Pentagon experts said the larger part that fell Sunday also was radioactive because it had been bombarded for months by nuclear particles.
