SHATTERED DREAMS Drill helps teens see dangers

Every five hours someone is killed in an alcohol-related traffic crash in Texas.

Shattered Dreams was played out on the street in front of Pampa High School this morning to illustrate to students the horror that can result from drinking and driving.

The program is presented once every three years, just before prom and graduation, to enhance student awareness of driving while intoxicated, without having to learn through real personal tragedies.

Students played the roles of the dead and injured in the Shattered Dreams program, which started with a mock alcohol-related crash. Pampa police, firefighters, LifeStar, Guardian EMS, Texas Department of Public Safety, and the officials from the Gray County Sheriff's Office participated in the event.

The car wreck was only the first part of the Shattered Dreams program, which Pampa High School puts on for the students, mostly seniors, every third year. The goal of the program is for students to understand the real effects that drinking and driving can have on a life.

PRMC best in panhandle in preventing surgical infections

BY RACHEL STENNETT
 rstennett@thepampanews.com

Pampa Regional Medical ranks the best at preventing surgical infections among the three highest volume hospitals in the Panhandle, according to a new Consumers Union report.

At least 100,000 patients were at risk of developing an infection after surgery because they did not receive the appropriate prevention interventions, according to the report. Cutting Surgical Infections published on their website www.stophospitalinfections.org/infection_prevention/.

The data cover surgeries between July 1, 2007 and June 30, 2008.

The consumer advocacy group studied hospital performance on three process measures—as reported by the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services through its Hospital Compare web site. The report said that performance standards are judged by the following three categories: patients are given an antibiotic one hour before surgery, the right drug is used, and the antibiotic is discontinued within 24 hours after surgery.

According to medical professionals, giving patients antibiotics right before surgery helps to boost the patient's ability to fight off contamination during surgery that could lead to infection. Studies show that patients given antibiotics either more than one hour before or after the first surgical incision is made experience higher rates of infection compared to those who are given antibiotics within one hour before surgery begins. Pampa Regional Medical Center successfully performed this procedure 99 percent of the time according to the report. Two Amarillo hospitals performed at 85 percent and 87 percent compliance. The national average is 90.8 percent.

PRMC ranked in the 97 percent for compliance in the area of using an appropriate antibiotic to fight protection during surgery. Choosing the appropriate antibiotic is critical because it must be effective in preventing infections caused by bacteria likely to be present around the surgical site. Antibiotic selection varies PRMC cont. on page 3 ing mock death, complete with a LifeStar helicopter landing at the scene and students arrested on scene, the program deeply affected many students, as they watched on with horror at the wreck.

Streets surrounding Pampa High School were closed to stage the drama. Two cars were donated by towing companies for the head-on collision, and arrests were made on spot.

A Justice of the Peace pronounced the time of drill "death" for student actor Breanna Alberacht. In the scenario, Alberacht and John Luke Covalt were driving a vehicle when a second vehicle "driven" by Hailey Neis collided with it. Neis and the other "passengers" in her car, Victoria Campbell, Madison Wilson, and Jeremy Busse were all pretending to be drinking at the time of the accident.

As the mock incident progressed, Campbell was transported to Pampa Regional Medical Center by Guardian EMS, and Covalt was airlifted from the scene to a hospital by LifeStar.

The crash launches the Shattered Dreams two-day long program. Other components of the program include mock obituaries, a mock memorial/assembly for students, and student/parent retreats. The program emphasizes the results of alcohol-related crashes in the United States and ultimately, what life can be like for those who drive after drinking, whose actions effect innocent victims, their friends and families.

Throughout the rest of the school day, "The Living Dead" portion of the program will continue in many classrooms. A group of pre-selected students will be contacted in class every 15 minutes and pulled out by another student dressed as the Grim Reaper. The student returns to class with white face paint, and a Shattered Dreams T-shirt and is not allowed to speak the rest of the day.

The program will continue through the evening with retreats for parents and students involved in the program. Students write letters about their experiences and involvement in Shattered Dreams, some of which will be read tomorrow at the mock memorial and assembly.

ies depending on the type of surgery, but guidelines for appropriate antibiotic selection have been developed by the Centers for Disease Control. Hospitals in Amarillo ranked at 89 percent, 91 percent compliance, and hospitals across the nation averaged 95.4 percent.

The third criteria presented to prevent surgical infections is not to continue antibiotics beyond 24 hours after the end of surgery. The prolonged use of antibiotics can be associated with other complications and can encourage antibiotic resistance. Pampa Regional out-performed the national average and the other area hospitals on this measure.

"We are fortunate to have a dedicated and talented group of healthcare professionals at Pampa Regional Medical Center. Our surgical team works diligently to limit surgical infections. Successfully adhering to these three criteria is a big reason PRMC has a low surgical infection rate," said Todd Lorenz, CEO of Pampa Regional Medical Center.

Jennifer Black, Infection Control Nurse at PRMC adds, "Pampa Regional Medical Center not only out-performed their counterparts in Amarillo in the report but also maintains the lowest surgical infection rate as well. We strive to offer our patients a safe environment where they can be assured of receiving quality care."

Pampa Regional Medical Center is a 115-bed acute-care community hospital serving a population of approximately 65,000 residents in the Texas Panhandle. Glo-Valve wins again, meets also undefeated Rotary Friday

Three Glo-Valve Service pitchers held Clarendon to 1 hit and two unearned runs as Glo-Valve came away with a 12-2 win Monday in Pampa Optimist 11-12 Cal Ripken League competition.

Ryan Powell won his fourth game of the year. He gave up no runs or hits, struck out three and walked one in two innings. Casey Martindale pitched the third inning and was touched for a hit, a walk and two unearned runs. Colton Thompson handled the fourth inning striking out three and hitting a batter.

Chance Douglas with two hits, two runs, two RBIs and three stolen bases led Glo-Valve's offense. Right behind him was Powell with two hits, three RBI, a run scored and two steals. Thompson added a run, a hit, two steals and three RBI.

In the bottom of the first inning Aaron Allen got things started for Glo-Valve by reaching base on an error. He stole second and third and took home on a ground out by Powell. Brody Gaines singled, stole two bases and scored on Douglas' first hit. A pair of thefts followed by a walk to Martindale and a dropped sacrifice fly by Zach Hill allowed Gaines to come home. Douglas and Hill executed a double steal putting them in position to score on a single by Thompson. Thompson stole two bases and tallied on a throwing error. Glo-Valve led 6-0.

Allen led off the second inning with a walk. He stole second and hurried home on Powell's first hit. Powell stole two bases while Gaines was drawing a walk. Martindale and Hill reached base on errors which allowed Powell and Gaines to score increasing Glo-Valve's lead to 9-0. Clarendon came alive in the third inning. With one out Joe on an error. Both runners moved up on a passed ball and scored on a single to right field by Bryce Hetley.

Jaramillo walked. He moved to second when Charles Mason was safe

Glo-Valve got one of the runs back in the bottom of the third.

Erick Kuehne and Jason Velasquez walked. A double play after an infield fly left Kuehne at second. He hustled home on a single by Powell making the score 10-2.

In the fourth inning Martindale doubled, stole third and scored on a hit by Douglas. Douglas stole two bases and made the final run of the game when Thompson grounded out.

Hetley, who started a 1-6 double play, had the outstanding defensive play of the game for Clarendon. Israel Osborne caught a fly ball in right field for another Clarendon defensive gem. Allen, with a caught stealing and a fine catch of a high pop foul, had Glo-Valve's best defensive plays.

Glo-Valve improved to 6-0 and will play undefeated Rotary Friday at 7:45 p.m. The Pampa Optimist Youth Club is a Pampa United Way agency.

Dear Abby...

By Pauline & Jeanne Phillips

DEAR ABBY: My wife, "Carrie," and I have a vacation home in Florida. Occasionally Carrie goes down there for a week or so with her best friend. While she's away, I miss her badly and can't wait for her to call so I can hear her voice. The problem is she doesn't seem to miss me.

Sometimes she "forgets" to call or acts like she doesn't want to talk to me. When she gets home she says, "Of course I missed you," but it's different when she is off having fun and I'm the one stuck at home.

Carrie says it is normal for someone on vacation to have fun and be busy, and it shouldn't matter if I'm not on her mind. Please tell me -- do I have a problem, does my wife have a problem, or do WE have a problem? -- LONELY HUSBAND IN MINNESOTA

DEAR LONELY HUSBAND: When a man says he feels neglected, and his wife forgets to call him when she's vacationing without him (and puts quotation marks around the word "forgets") and uses a phrase like "stuck at home," which implies resentment, then the answer to your question is you BOTH have a problem. Also, it appears you are extremely dependent upon your spouse and could benefit from developing some outside interests or male friends of your own.

DEAR ABBY: My best friend of more than 20 years has a boyfriend in prison. They started out as pen pals and quickly "fell in love." He was convicted of kidnapping and committing a sex crime against a woman. He will be released from prison soon, after completing his 15-year sentence, and plans on moving in with her.

Neither my husband nor I want to get to know this man, visit him in their home or entertain him in ours. My husband is adamant about never socializing with them.

I care deeply for my friend and want her to be happy, but I think she's making a huge mistake. How can I continue this friendship? -- BEHIND THE EIGHT BALL

DEAR BEHIND: You can't. And when she asks you why you have withdrawn from her life, you are going to have to give her the reason. The idea that you can maintain a friendship with this woman and exclude the man who's living with her is unrealistic, and the sooner you recognize that fact, the better off you'll be.

DEAR ABBY: My father-in-law died unexpectedly a month ago. At his memorial service we were given numerous sympathy cards, some of which contained cash or checks. Is this commonplace? I asked other family members; they all said they hadn't heard of such a thing.

What are we supposed to do with the money? We don't know if there is a particular custom involving monetary donations. If you know, please advise. -- PERPLEXED IN WASHINGTON

DEAR PERPLEXED: Giving money to the family of the deceased may be a regional custom. It is done to help the family defray the cost of the funeral or other expenses.

Unless individuals prepare in advance for "the unexpected," their survivors can be caught flat-footed when a death occurs. Bank accounts can be frozen until the estate is settled, and it can take some time for insurance money to kick in. These donations can mean that the family has rent money or even money for food and can be very meaningful.

Cheney at center stage attacking Obama

WASHINGTON (AP) — To the chagrin, perhaps, of Republicans looking to rebuild the tattered party, Dick Cheney has grabbed the spotlight.

The recurring theme of the once-reclusive and largely unpopular former vice president: President Barack Obama has put Americans in danger of a new terror attack by promising to close the Guantanamo Bay prison and banning torture of terror suspects.

When Obama took office, former President George W. Bush went quietly to his new house in Texas, slipped intentionally into anonymity, honored protocol by staying silent about his successor.

But Cheney, widely remembered for heading to undisclosed secure locations at times of national crisis and for working invisibly behind the scenes, has done just the opposite.

Most recently he took a shot at Colin Powell, Bush's first-term secretary of state, a retired Army general, former chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and lifelong Republican who endorsed Obama's candidacy.

Through a spokesman, Republican National Committee chairman Michael Steele declined to discuss Cheney or his remarks, which have dominated cable news political debate and talk radio since the former vice president spoke out most recently on Sunday.

In the CBS television interview, Cheney reprised his charges that Americans were less safe because of Obama's actions.

"I think to the extent that those (Bush administration) policies were responsible for saving lives, that the administration is now trying to cancel those policies or end them, terminate them, then I think it's fair to argue — and I do argue — that that means in the future we're not going to have the same safeguards we've had for the last eight years," Cheney said on CBS.

White House spokesman Robert Gibbs on Tuesday dismissed Cheney's comments, saying there has been "agreement across party lines that Guantanamo Bay has not made us a safer country."

And, Gibbs said, Obama had decided long ago that the real danger to the United States was from the Taliban and al-Qaida operations in Pakistan and Afghanistan. "The best way to keep this country safe is to go at the terrorist threat, something that the previous administration didn't do," he said.

What's up? "This is not the same level of control and discipline Cheney's exercised over the last 40 years," said John Baick, professor of history at Western New England College in Springfield, Massachusetts. "I think it grows out of a deep sense of hurt and betrayal."

Cheney seemed even more exercised after Obama released memos detailing how "enhanced interrogation" became a tactic used during the Bush administration.

Some contend Cheney has gone public because the Obama White House has cast so much blame toward the Bush administration for difficulties "inherited" both at home and abroad. That, the theory goes, gave Cheney the right, in his mind, to fight back, and very publicly.

"But it could be that Cheney really sees a threat out there, believes the policies were right and feels he would be negligent in remaining silent," said Paul Sracic, political science professor at Youngstown State University in Ohio.

Others believe Cheney is trying to protect his reputation when the history of the Bush administration is written.

"He sees himself in a position where his legacy is called into question, and he wants to get his story out before history gels," said Jim Riddlesperger, professor of political science at Texas Christian University.

While Cheney's public assault on Obama breaches Washington etiquette, his remarks about Powell were particularly unusual.

When asked on CBS if ultraconservative talk radio personality Rush Limbaugh had been right in saying the Republican party would be better off without Powell, Cheney responded:

"Well, if I had to choose in terms of being a Republican, I'd go with Rush Limbaugh, I think. I think my take on it was Colin had already left the party. I didn't know he was still a Republican."

As Republicans seek to broaden their appeal by creating a proverbial "big tent" after dismal showings in the past two national elections, siding with Limbaugh shows Cheney is "not an institution builder," Baick said. "He's not erecting tent poles. He's knocking them down. In terms of building the party, the remarks about Powell were over the top."

Perhaps. There is a certainty: Glee among Democrats who are only too happy to see Cheney and Limbaugh, given their narrow appeal, flood into the Republican leadership vacuum.

Analysis: Pope faced high bar to please Israelis

JERUSALEM (AP) — Even if he had said all the right things about the Nazi genocide of 6 million Jews, the German-born Pope Benedict XVI would have had a hard time winning over Israelis on his visit to the Jewish state.

His background as a German who served under the Nazis, the Roman Catholic Church's history of anti-Semitism, his predecessor's extraordinary outreach to Jews and a series of public relations gaffes — not to mention a long-standing dispute over the conduct of the Holocaust-era pope — created formidable obstacles for Benedict to overcome in his relations with the Jews.

So, it was not surprising that Israelis criticized the pope for failing to apologize for Catholic wrongdoings during a speech Monday at the country's national Holocaust memorial.

"The thorough preparations for his visit to Israel, the complex traffic and security arrangements, and the millions of shekels that were earmarked for his hospitality evaporated as if they did not exist thanks to a speech that was missing one word — 'sorry,'" said the lead editorial of the Israeli daily Haaretz on Wednesday.

Regardless of whether Benedict deserves the criticism, it's clear he miscalculated the impact of what he chose to say and not say at the memorial.

The apology Israeli critics said was so sorely missing from Benedict's speech Monday at Israel's Yad Vashem memorial has actually been made by the pontiff in the past.

In an audience with Jewish leaders at the Vatican earlier this year, Benedict recalled a prayer by his predecessor, Pope John Paul II, at the Western Wall in Jerusalem asking for God's forgiveness for the treatment of Jews and said "I now make his prayer my own."

Benedict's speech at Yad Vashem contained a powerful pledge to never forget the victims' names and a poignant allusion to the "joyful expectation" of victims' parents anxiously awaiting the birth of their children.

"What name shall we give this child? What is to become of him or her? Who could have imagined that they would be condemned to such a horrible fate," the pope said.

Shortly after he said all this, however, the top two officials at Yad Vashem said they found the speech lacking because it failed to specifically mention the words "murder" or "Nazis" and left out the exact figure of 6 million Jews killed — in addition to the absence of a John Paul-like apology.

The speaker of Israel's parliament, Reuven Rivlin, criticized Benedict for coming off as detached,

"as somebody observing from the sidelines." Tom Segev, a prominent columnist and Holocaust historian, characterized the pope as "restrained, almost cold."

Even Rabbi Arthur Schneier, a Holocaust survivor and a leader in interfaith relations, saw the speech as problematic despite his overall praise for Benedict.

"We should not be focusing just on an omission that took place at Yad Vashem, as painful as it might be," said Schneier, who joined the pope on his visit to the Western Wall on Tuesday.

Benedict has been warmly welcomed at every stop in Israel and the Palestinian territories and has been praised for his unequivocal calls for unity among religions.

Judges say volunteers make a difference in children's lives

A new survey states that judges rely heavily on the opinions of Court Appointed Special Advocates™ (CASA) when hearing cases about abused and neglected children.

"I am gratified but not surprised at the results, said Janet Watts, Executive Director of CASA of the High Plains.

"CASA volunteers represent the best interest of foster children in court, added Watts." CASA volunteers are everyday people that step forward to help judges make the very difficult decisions and speak up for the best interest of the child in court. The volunteers get to know the child and talk to everyone involved in that child's life from doctors to teachers to parents."

The survey, conducted by the University of Texas at Austin, showed 94% of all the judges surveyed said when CASA is involved; the odds of a positive outcome for these children go up. 97% of the judges said the personal knowledge that CASA brings to the legal processing helps their decision making.

Judge Phil Vanderpool, who hears child abuse and neglect cases in 8 judicial districts and 21 counties in the Panhandle, added, "CASA volunteers are the most independent persons in child abuse and neglect cases. They are invaluable in keeping the focus in the best interests of the children for which they advocate. Their focus on the child is invaluable and enables judges to make better decisions which lead to better outcomes for the child. CASA of the High Plains provides excellent support for volunteers. I urge any person who desires to make a positive difference in the life of a child to contact CASA of the High Plains."

Last year, CASA of the High Plains served 149 children in the eastern Texas Panhandle.

"A CASA volunteer is the child's voice and hope in the courtroom", said Watts, "we urge any citizen interested in making a difference in a foster child's life to visit becomeacasa.org."

DAILY HOROSCOPE

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Friday, May 15, 2009:
This year, others often look up to you as a leader and/or someone in authority. The respect given might feel good, but on another level, it will demand a certain amount of diligence. At times, this respect could feel like a burden. In the long run, listen to your instincts. You might not choose to share everything you know. Often you will say little. If you are single, give yourself a year before declaring you are in a relationship. People you meet this year might not be everything they seem. If you are attached, share more of your feelings. You will learn that your sweetie doesn't intend a lot of what he or she does or says. AQUARIUS pushes you into the limelight.

The Stars Show the Kind of Day You'll Have: 5-Dynamic; 4-Positive; 3-Average; 2-So-so; 1-Difficult

ARIES (March 21-April 19)  Meetings reveal more than you want to hear. Knowing which direction to head in evolves to a specialty. Understanding others helps point to the correct path. Tonight: Find your friends. TAURUS (April 20-May 20)  Take a stand in a situation. Don't compromise as a result of a loved one or another person's reaction. Allow more for creative insights. You might feel as if you always have to take the lead. Tonight: A must show. GEMINI (May 21-June 20)  Seek out experts and don't worry so much about doing something differently. Listen to a friend who always seems to care and points in a new direction. Take off early rather than lapse into daydreaming. Tonight: Forget the tried-and-true (for now). CANCER (June 21-July 22)  A partner or several individuals demand all your attention. You might not complete everything you need to, but you will understand where others are coming from. Flex and don't get uptight about this change of events. Tonight: Togetherness counts. LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)  Others seek you out, without you needing to do anything dramatic or adding the Leo asset of charisma. Clearly others see you as much more than you realize. Share your enjoyment of understanding new ideas and concepts. Tonight: So many invitations, you might have a hard time choosing. VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)  Your ability to move past the obvious earmarks your plans. You could get through a lot of work if others would let you focus. Consider screening calls and closing your door. Be wise about how long you isolate yourself. Tonight: Celebrate TGIF with several friends. LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)  Don't think even for a moment that someone isn't noticing your attitude and broad smile. Your love of life and the moment could make a big difference. Initiate conversations that you have been putting off. You might not have the answers right away. Tonight: Kick up your heels. SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)  On some level, focus is already on your home life. Check out an investment or project carefully. A co-worker lets you know more of how he or she admires your abilities. If possible, consider doing more work from home.
