Police department looking at EMD program

ARNIE AURELLANO
editor@thepampanews.com

The Pampa Police Department is applying for an Amarillo Area Foundation Grant that will fund a one-year pilot emergency medical dispatch program, said Pampa Police Chief Kelly Rushing during a report to the City Commission Tuesday afternoon.

The EMD program, according to Rushing, will give the police department's dispatchers access to a medical database that will allow them to provide pre-arrival instructions to callers in emergency medical situations.

"After receiving training, what the dispatchers will do is access this software in times of medical emergency... in times where it may not take an ambulance three or four minutes to get there but when it may take 30 or 40 minutes for an ambulance to get there," explained Rushing.

The database will supply the PD's dispatchers with directions to relay to the caller. Those directions, Rushing explained, will help the caller provide necessary medical attention to the victim until emergency medical technicians arrive.

The level of telephone assistance can vary from just simple advice to complete instructions for CPR.

If the AAFG grant is approved, Rushing said, the program's first year — a cost of approximately $33,000 — would be totally funded by the grant.

Rushing stressed that this first year for police dispatch EMD involvement will be a pilot program, mostly so that the department can gauge the number of calls it receives and the added burden placed on its dispatchers. The police department currently has eight full-time dispatchers.

Click it or Ticket now in full force

SPECIAL TO THE PAMPA NEWS

The Texas Department of Transportation's (TxDOT) 9th annual Click It or Ticket safety belt enforcement campaign is now taking place and will run through June 6.

Transportation officials say state laws enacted in 2009 could result in more citations this year if drivers and passengers fail to heed new safety belt requirements.

This year's campaign emphasizes two new laws implemented in 2009: 1) adults in the back seat can now be ticketed for not wearing their safety belt, and 2) children younger than 8 years old have to ride in a child safety seat or booster seat unless they are taller than 4 feet 9 inches.

During the current Click It of Ticket push, law enforcement officers will be out in full force throughout Texas, ticketing drivers and passengers for not wearing their safety belts or not properly buckling up their children.

Fines range from $25 to $250 plus court costs.

TxDOT has been heavily promoting this year's Click It or Ticket program. Last Wednesday, a 20-foot replica of one of Texas's most famous citizens appeared at the Texas Travel Information Center in Amarillo to announce the 9th annual Click It or Ticket campaign.

"Big Tex," well known for welcoming visitors to the State Fair of Texas, appeared at a press conference in Amarillo alongside other safety belt proponents to kick off the drive.

'Smash the Car' set for June 12

dbowser@thepampanews.com

Pampa police officials will be encouraging a little vandalism next month.

During the Burning the Bricks celebration June 12, the police department will have a small red car available for smashing.

As part of a fundraiser for Relay for Life, Pampa's constabulary will be selling turns with a sledgehammer on the car.

"You get one whack for a dollar," said Becky Fulton with the police department. "For $10, you get 12 whacks and a tee-shirt."

The Relay for Life tee-shirts in sizes small to 4X are also available at the Pampa Police Department, Fulton said.

This is the first year the police department has fielded a team, the Chuckwagon Gang, for Relay for Life.

City

In other business:

• Mona Reagan and Jennifer Timmer approached the commission about starting a "trap, neuter and release" program for stray cats and moving animals to no-kill shelters in nearby areas as an alternative to euthanasia. Reagan presented statistics to the commission detailing the effectiveness of such programs in other communities towards reducing the stray cat population, as well as the potential monetary savings such a program would bring to the city. The City Commission gave its blessing for such an initiative to be pursued. Reagan and Timmer spoke to

City Attorney Mark Buzzard after the meeting to ensure the legalities of the program and that exemptions could be issued to city regulations currently in effect.

• Public works official Donny Hooper updated the commission on the progress of the front yard parking ordinance. Hooper said that much of the current work on the ordinance revolves around clarifying vague language.

• The commission approved the entry into a purchasing agreement with a five-year buy-back for a new CAT 826H compactor.

Higher health co-pays for Texas ERS participants

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The board of the Employees Retirement System of Texas has approved higher health care co-payments for participants as medical costs go up.

Board members cited unexpected higher health care costs and underfunding from the Texas Legislature.

The changes approved Tuesday in Austin take effect Sept. 1.

The plan provides health insurance for about 500,000 state retirees and workers and their dependents. The co-payment increase comes as Texas faces a projected budget shortfall as high as $18 billion next year.

Dear Abby...

By Pauline & Jeanne Phillips

DEAR ABBY: Regarding your column of April 12, 2010, and the letter about the man who refuses to file tax returns, your answer was only partially correct. In addition to enrolled agents, tax returns are also prepared by other licensed professionals.

Certified public accountants are regulated by the various states and do a great deal of tax preparation.

Some tax attorneys may prepare income tax returns. The failure to file a tax return could be a crime, in which case the individual would need a tax attorney to represent him in trying to avoid a jail sentence. Communications to tax attorneys may be covered by the attorney-client privilege.

In addition, there are practitioners who are qualified both as attorneys and as CPAs. While many enrolled agents may also be CPAs, or even attorneys, you should not have restricted your recommendation to enrolled agents only. — SYDNEY S. TRAUM, JD-CPA, MIAMI BEACH, FLA.

DEAR SYDNEY:

My thanks to you and the countless other CPAs and attorneys who wrote to correct me. I apologize for the omission. After wading through the tidal wave of mail, I contacted the National Association of Enrolled Agents (NAEA) for clarification and was told:

"There are many outstanding tax practitioners who are attorneys or CPAs, some of whom are members of NAEA. We do not wish to imply in any way that they are less qualified or capable in the field of taxation. We just want to call attention to the profession of enrolled agents and let the public know that they are the only tax practitioners SPECIFICALLY licensed by the Department of the Treasury."

Readers, I hope this straightens out any confusion. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: I was intrigued by the letter from the woman whose boyfriend has refused to file tax returns for eight years. In addition to the civil ramifications of refusing to file the tax return as articulated in your response, it is a federal crime not to file one.

An individual who has the requisite income is punishable for up to three years in prison for failure to file a tax return for each year in which he or she is responsible for filing one. Additionally, it can be construed by the government as tax evasion, for which the maximum penalty includes five years imprisonment for each year in which the tax is evaded. — DENNIS C. KAINEN, MIAMI BEACH, FLA.

DEAR ABBY: My 12-year marriage to someone just like the man in that letter became a financial disaster. Even though I did file separately, I co-signed home, car and credit card loans with him. It has taken me more than 10 years to regain my good credit and restore my dignity.

If she does marry him, he will display immaturity in other areas -- as a husband, a father, an employee -- and she will look back (as I did) and realize what a horrible mistake she made. She should not ignore this important signpost! Please warn her to wake up before it's too late. — BEEN THERE, DONE THAT, ROCHESTER, N.Y.

Dear Abby...

By Pauline & Jeanne Phillips

DEAR ABBY: I am in shock. My brother, "Paul," invited me to lunch yesterday and introduced me to an 18-year-old girl, "Amy," whom he says is his daughter from a woman other than his wife. Naturally, she was full of questions about me and the rest of the family.

I don't know why Paul chose to reveal Amy's existence to me -- and only me -- but I told my brother he needs to share his "secret" with all concerned. I don't think it's fair for Amy to be deprived of meeting her father's side of the family.

I also don't want anyone to get hurt, but Amy has been hurt enough by this secret. I am uncomfortable that my brother has included me in this conspiracy, and I'm not sure how to handle this. Any ideas? — IN THE MIDDLE IN NEW JERSEY

DEAR IN THE MIDDLE: On some level your brother may want the truth to come out, because when a secret is shared it's no longer a secret. So tell your brother that you refuse to be his co-conspirator, and that you feel his keeping Amy isolated from the family is unfair to her. Then give him a deadline to come clean, with the understanding that if he doesn't, you will.

DEAR ABBY: Now that I have found a job after a few months of unemployment, my boyfriend and I are tying the knot. I work in a very small office and would like to invite everyone to bring a date to the reception. My dilemma? I suspect that two of the men in the office are involved with each other, and I'm not close enough to anyone else to inquire.

I have no problem with their sexual orientation, but I don't want to put my foot in my mouth by inviting them as a couple. What would you think of posting an invitation (postcards and e-vites) to all employees and their dates? I ordinarily wouldn't, but being a little "gauche" seems better than being downright rude. I suspect the men downplay their relationship, and I don't want to invade their privacy. Abby, what would you do? — BRIDE WITH A DILEMMA

DEAR BRIDE: I would handle it by inviting each of my co-workers, stating "and guest" on the invitation, and asking for an RSVP. Then, whomever they choose to bring is up to them, and all I'd need to know is how many guests to expect at the recep-

DEAR ABBY: I have been dating "Luke" for about three months. He's a sweet and thoughtful guy who cares about me, and I care for him as well.

My problem is I have never been the kind of person who likes to be touched. It makes me feel tense and uneasy. Luke likes to touch me constantly -- stroking my cheek, rubbing the back of my neck, or kissing my cheeks and forehead.

It isn't that I don't like hugs or kisses, but too much drives me crazy. How do I explain this to Luke without hurting his feelings? — ENOUGH IN THE SOUTHWEST

DEAR ENOUGH: A good start would be to say to him exactly what you have communicated to me. And when you do, tell him to please not take your feelings as personal rejection. Different people have different needs for closeness and affection. Because the constant touching makes you uncomfortable, you and Luke must reach a compromise that's acceptable to both of you -- or you're not the girl for him.

Social security strives to be open book

President Obama has called for greater transparency in government. In response, Social Security has released its Open Government plan, which you can read online at www.socialsecurity.gov/open.

The plan reflects Social Security's commitment to expand opportunities for citizen participation and collaboration, and make open government more sustainable at Social Security. The agency is particularly proud of three flagship initiatives: a Spanish-Language Retirement Estimator, an Online Service Enhancement Initiative, and an Online Life-Expectancy Calculator. These three initiatives support the agency's mission, goals, and objectives, and showcase the value of open government principles.

"I applaud President Obama's commitment to opening the federal government to the people it serves and I am especially proud of the three flagship initiatives we have chosen to implement by the end of this year," said Michael J. Astrue, Commissioner of Social

KIT GRICE

Security.

Social Security's Spanish-language Retirement Estimator will be the federal government's first non-English interactive Internet application — a tool that furthers transparency by offering the Spanish-speaking public an opportunity to get instant, personalized estimates of future retirement benefits. Last year, more than three million people used the English-language version of this popular online service available at www.socialsecurity.gov/estimator.

As part of its Online Service Enhancement initiative, Social Security will unveil a new service-channeling tool that will help people more easily find the information and services they seek on the agency's website, www.socialsecurity.gov. A key feature will be the opportunity to go online to schedule an in-office appointment for those who are unable to use our online services to conduct all of their business.

The agency also is developing an Online Life-Expectancy Calculator — a simple, but important tool to assist the public with retirement planning. Many people substantially underestimate their life expectancy. This new online service will add a measure of accuracy to retirement planning by providing average life expectancies at different ages based on the person's gender and date of birth, and drawing on assumptions provided in the annual Social Security Trustees' report

"I look forward to continuing to translate the values of open government into lasting improvements in the way the agency makes decisions, solves problems, and addresses its challenges," said Commissioner Astrue. "Social Security's flagship initiatives will improve our services and further break down barriers between the American people and their government."

We encourage you to read Social Security's Open Government plan at www.socialsecurity.gov/open.
