According to Nicholas Fenner of the National Weather Service in Amarillo, Pampa got two and a half inches by 10 a.m.

That's over twice the snow output in Amarillo, which by comparison received just shy of an inch.

Pampa's street department responded by having most city streets cleared before noon. Donny Hooper, Pampa's public works director, commended city crews for ably anticipating and handling the cold weather.

"Of course, preparation is very important to the people that are in the street department," Hooper said. "It's something they stress there, and it helps for us to have someone who retired form the Navy that actually did meteorological work while he was in the Navy." WEATHER cont. on page 5

Free trees to reforest Bastrop

BASTROP (AP) - A Central Texas city has announced plans to give away about 2,000 trees to help reforest the community devastated by 2011 wildfires.

Free young trees will be available Saturday in Bastrop, where wind-driven fires that started Labor Day weekend left two people dead and destroyed more than 1,600 homes. The Texas Forest Service says about 1.5 million trees were killed.

The state agency, which is co-sponsoring the giveaway, said Tuesday that the trees are for residents of Bastrop, about 30 miles east of Austin, and others affected by nearby wildfires. City officials say a maximum of four trees are available per household.

Dead woman is college student

EDINBURG (AP) - Police at a South Texas university to reject the partial deal, have confirmed that a woman found dead on campus was an 18-year-old high school student in the area.

University of Texas-Pan American officials said in a statement Tuesday that the woman's identity was being withheld "because of the nature of the incident." No further explanation was given.

The university says a relative of the woman contacted campus police Monday, the same day the body was found. Investigators are awaiting autopsy results. The woman was enrolled in the Edinburg Consolidated School District.

Construction workers found the woman near the bottom of an outdoor staircase at the campus science building

UTPA officials said the building would remain closed Tuesday.

Texas primary date in doubt after deal talks stall

PAUL J. WEBER Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO (AP) -Texas is all but certain to have an even later say in choosing the Republican presidential nominee after what at first looked like a breakthrough deal in a bitter dispute over redistricting maps ended with wide rejection of the proposal.

That left the date of the Texas primaries in limbo Tuesday, a day after a court-imposed deadline for the state and minority advocacy groups to compromise came and went that everyone could agree on for the 2012 elections. A San Antonio federal court had told both sides to reach a deal by Monday or see the April 3 primary date pushed back a second time. The Texas attorney general's office appeared announcing an agreement with some of the groups, shadowed by other prominent black and Hispanic organizations blasting the deal.

The court also appeared as U.S. District Judge Orlando Garcia urged talks to continue toward "a general agreement between all" parties. Now the date of the Texas primaries is in doubt again.

Republicans feared that another delay could prevent Texas voters from helping decide which GOP candidate challenges President Barack Obama in November. Republican and Democratic party leaders have said an April 17 vote may be possible absent a deal if the

The advocacy groups are suing the state, alleging that the Republicanignored the state's burplaintiffs that signed off on it. Late Monday, his group and six of the other nine plaintiffs filed court briefs formally opposing the plan.

Vera said talks had halted, adding: "There's no agreement, and there's nothing to talk about."

In a written statement late Monday, Abbott didn't acknowledge the judge's order but said his office "has worked with a wide range of interest groups to incorporate reasonable requests from all parties" without compromising the will of the Texas Legislature. He has said a primary likely couldn't be organized before April 17. When asked earlier Monday if he was happy with the proposed compromise, Abbott said "it's a step in the right direction." He said failure to reach a consensus wasn't for a lack of trying MALDEF attorney Nina Perales said the maps put forward by Abbott came very close to what her legal. Since Texas is one of nine states with a history of racial discrimination, the Washington court or the U.S. Department of Justice must pre-approve any changes to state election laws. A ruling in that case isn't expected for at least another month.

The stakes are unusually high because the nation's second-largest state is adding four congressional seats - and the way they are divvyed up could be pivotal in determining which party controls the U.S. House.

The Texas Legislature got the first crack at drawing new maps for Congress and the Statehouse, but their plan was quickly challenged by Cuellar and minority groups.

If the court rejects the compromise, the judges could split the primaries into two elections - one for the presidential race, and a later one for state and congressional elections that are at the mercy of where map lines are settled. A split primary would

Suit seeks end to RCC's pay

AUSTIN (AP) - A former Travis County judge is suing to stop the salary the state is paying to Railroad Commission chairwoman Elizabeth Ames Jones.

Austin lawyer Bill Aleshire alleges in a lawsuit filed in Austin on Monday that Jones' move from Austin to San Antonio makes her constitutionally ineligible to continue holding her office. He says Jones is violating a requirement of the state constitution that Railroad Commission members live in the capital city.

Jones moved to San Antonio to challenge incumbent state Sen. Jeff Wentworth in the Republican state Senate primary. Her campaign spokesman, Patrick Isenberg, tells the Austin American-Statesman that the lawsuit is a political stunt that shows Wentworth fears facing Jones in the primary.

Ex-pilot faces porn charges

HOUSTON (AP) - A former commercial pilot in Texas faces up to 20 years in prison in a child pornography case involving millions of images.

Federal prosecutors in Houston say 47-year-old Todd Steven Ewanko of Humble pleaded guilty Monday to distribution and possession of child pornography. Sentencing has been set for May 7.

Ewanko formerly was a captain with Colgan Air Inc., doing business as Continental Connection. He was suspended following his July 2010 arrest and has remained in custody.

Officers who searched Ewanko's home seized several computers. Prosecutors say the equipment yielded millions of images and videos related to child pornography.

SA officers under investigation

SAN ANTONIO (AP) - Seven South Texas police officers have come under investigation over their handling of a wreck involving an off-duty sergeant and his patrol car.

San Antonio police Chief William McManus on Monday declined to name the officers and says they are not facing charges at this time.

McManus says the sergeant, who apparently had been drinking, has been put on administrative leave over last Thursday's accident. The patrol car struck a highway wall. The other six officers are on administrative duty.

McManus says there was an attempt to take the sergeant home and remove potential evidence from the vehicle. An officer who was not present but did not participate in the alleged cover up reported the incident.

Toxicology results have not been released. The patrol car had minor damage.

state legislative districts.

Texas Attorney General mistically introduced the partially agreed plan earlier Monday. It had the American Legal Defense and Education Fund, one of the largest groups that sued the state.

Under the proposal, Hispanics would control two of four new congressional seats that Texas was awarded following the 2010 census, which reflected the state's population boom in the last decade. But apart from MALDEF and Democratic U.S. Rep. Henry Cuellar of Texas, most others involved in the lawsuit said the proposal fell far short of a fair compromise. Luis Vera, an attorney for the League of United Latin American Citizens, scoffed at the new deal and accused the state of overselling the number of

It's unusual when a reporter sympathetic to a politician writes a story that makes his subject look bad. But Ryan Lizza of The New Yorker has now The first time was in an article last April on Obama's foreign policy in which he quoted a "top aide" (National done this twice.

Now, in an article based on leaked White House memos marked up by Obama, Lizza has done it again.

Contrarian liberal blogger Mickey Kaus sums it up: "The president's decision-making method -- at least as described in this piece -- seems to consist of mainly checking boxes on memos his aides have written for him.

A $60 billion cut in the stimulus package? "OK." Use the reconciliation process to pass the health care bill? A checkmark in the box labeled

The alternatives Lizza describes Obama as considering are for even more spending and government control, such as a much bigger stimulus package. mentions He just in passing MICHAEL that Obama "had BARONE decided to pursue health care reform" as well as the stimulus package - a choice that inevitably made bipartisanship harder to achieve.

Box-checking Obama in a liberal cocoon

At one point Lizza does quote Obama writing on a memo, "Have we looked at any of the other GOP recommendations (e.g., Paul Ryan's) to see if they make any sense?" Another president might have looked at Ryan's proposals himself or might even have called him on the phone.

George W. Bush, in contrast, worked with Democrats -- and someone pays any attention to.

ALL I SAID WAS

LEADER

His personal interactions are limited to his liberal Democratic staff -- and to the rich liberals he meets at his frequent fundraising events. He has held more of these than George W. Bush, who in turn held more than Bill Clinton.

Two decisions in particular seem tilted toward rich liberals. One was the disapproval of the Keystone XL pipeline from Canada, even after it survived two environmental impact statements.

Obama says he wants more jobs and to reduce American dependence on oil from unfriendly foreign sources. The pipeline would do both, and is endorsed by labor unions. But Robert Redford doesn't like Canadian tar sands oil. Case closed.

The other astonishing decision was the decree requiring Catholic hospitals and charities' health insurance policies to include coverage for abortion and birth control. Here Obama was spitting in the eyes of millions of death for the slaying of college student Dru Sjodin. Rival Palestinian leaders signed an agreement on a power-sharing government at Saudi-brokered talks in Mecca.

According to Lizza, Obama prefers getting information and making decisions by staying up late and reading memos rather than meeting with people -- a temperament that's a liability because face time with the president is one of his major sources of political capital

Lizza's reporting undercuts the stated thesis of his article: that Obama sought to bring bipartisan governance to Washington, but was foiled by Republicans' partisan intransigence.

Évidence that Obama ever seriously considered Republican approaches is minimal in the New Yorker article.

times even talked with them -- on his education plan, his tax cuts and the Iraq War resolution. He even tried. unsuccessfully, to negotiate with them on Social Security

And on Obama's failure to reach a "go big" budget agreement with House Speaker John Boehner last summer, Lizza presents only the White House talking point: "conservative colleagues rebelled, and Boehner withdrew." He doesn't mention Republican claims that Obama upped the ante, demanding more tax increases.

Lizza's White House sources apparently didn't leak any memos about some of Obama's more recent actions, but his article provides a jumping off place for understanding them.

As in Chicago, Obama seems to live in a cocoon in which Republicans are largely absent, offscreen actors that no

Catholic bishops responded predictably by requiring priests to read letters opposing the policy. Who's on the other side? The designer-clad ladies Obama encounters at every fundraiser. They want to impose their views on abortion on everyone else.

Obama fundraising seems to be lagging behind its $1 billion goal, and Democrats fear Republicans are closing the fundraising gap. So Obama seems to be concentrating on meeting the demands of rich liberals he spends so much time with.

Primaries: Building the party and shaping the platform

If the goal of the primary process not be elected based on the is simply to nominate a candidate, essentially to nominate the man or woman most likely to win in the end, then this primary season should be declared over. Clear the stage, and give it to Mitt Romney. Newt Gingrich's promise to go the next 46 notwithstanding, you couldn't find anyone in Vegas to give you ballpark odds on his winning. And forget about Ron Paul or Rick Santorum. They never had a chance.

But that's not the only thing this process is about. If elections were only about picking winners, there would never be more than two people on a ballot -- and sometimes, in "safe" districts, not even that. Independents would be limited to Vermont. Third parties would be told to take their message somewhere else.

Now, I can certainly make the argument that in general-election contests voters shouldn't "waste" their votes on candidates with no chance of winning. I still remember the fights I had with Ralph Nader supporters back in 2000, trying to convince them that the message they wanted to send would elect George Bush

And I can certainly make the case that the two-party system, whatever the flaws of the two particular parties, ensures that a candidate will support of an ideologically extreme minority (as everyone's favorite example Hitler was), and that a fractured result would effectively give such power to a small minority (as everyone's other favorite example the ultraorthodox have sometimes wielded in Israel). But the Constitution protects the rights of losers to run and voters to support them. Ballot access must be afforded to every candidate who can show enough support not to win but to be counted. Elections are about electing people, but that's not all they are about. And nowhere is this clearer than in the selection of party nominees for president.

Political parties are nowhere mentioned in the Constitution, but in a series of landmark decisions, the Supreme Court has upheld their power to control the nominating process, even against a majority will expressed by state legislatures. The party can limit participants to registered party members, even where the state demands that it be open to all. The party can deem that delegates be bound to vote for the candidate whose slate they ran on, even when state law provides that they should be free to cast their vote to nominate whomever they please. The purpose of these contests, the Court has recognized, is not simply to nominate delegates or choose a candidate, but to build the party and shape its platform.

That, win or lose, is exactly what Gingrich is likely to accomplish in these next few months it he stays the course. Under the rules of the Democratic Party, much debated, states are prohibited from holding winner-take-all contests, making it more difficult for the winner to win and far easier for a loser to hold sway. While the Republican Party does not enforce that rule across the board, most of the states that will be holding caucuses and primaries do. So even if he loses, Gingrich will pick up significant representation. And even putting aside the numbers, if he does stay in the race, it all but assures that his more conservative ideology will influence where both Romney and the party end up.

Maybe that will help the Democratic president in the end. Selfishly, I hope so. But there certainly have been cycles in which the Republicans benefited from long races. It doesn't mat

Hooper was referring to Ed Turner, the city's public service superintendent.

"Ed has a great amount of experience when it comes to weather," Hooper continued. "He is always trying to stay ahead of the storms and make sure everything's prepared and ready to go. We're always proud of those guys. They did a great job."

Hooper added that the city's street team was ready to go at 6 a.m. Crews laid down sand at several intersections to help traction and returned later to plow the snow from the roads.

"Their object is to hit the schools before the traffic starts at the schools, so obviously they're going to start early," Hooper said. "Sometimes, if they know we're going to get a heavy snow, they'll start at 4 a.m. ... Even though it was just two inches, it was a wet snow and it had a little bit of ice underneath it, and I think they did a great job."

Tuesday's weather appeared to be a midweek aberration, according to Fenner, with mild weather expected for the next few days.

Reverse painted lamp from early 1900s

Q: Enclosed is a photo of an electric lamp that belonged to my husband's parents. It stands approximately 14 inches tall, has a reverse-painted, dome-shaped, glass shade and a metal base. There is no manufacturer's mark, and it is in excellent condition.

I hope you can give me more information on our lamp.

A: Your lamp was made in the first quarter of the 20th century. There were many lamp manufacturers who made similar lamps and didn't mark them. The base is pot metal with a bronze finish.

Your lamp would probably be worth $200 to $400.

Q: This mark is on the bottom of a porcelain teapot that I have. Written in the mark are the words "Hand Painted \rightarrow Reg. U.S. Pat. Off. — 911" and a blue crown. The teapot has a white, swirled, raised design and is decorated with small purple violets and green leaves. There is gold trim on the handle, spout and finial. It is in perfect condition.

What can you tell me about my teapot?

How do you feel God's presence?

"You should always read the Bible when you're bored or don't want to play," says Katy, age 8. "God is always around you whatever you do. If you were sad, God will still be with you."

Most people, and especially children, would never think of reading the Bible when bored or sad. We go for entertainment, recreation or food. Katy, if you can see boredom or sadness as a signal to read the Bible, you are wise beyond your years.

One of the best ways to sense God's presence is to look for him in providential circumstances. We should live life the way we read a good mystery novel, looking for clues. We know that God is always at work. Our challenge lies in tuning our spiritual senses to what he is doing in any situation.

"I sense God's presence when I feel cared about and loved," says Alan, 10. "But during the bad times, it's hard. The only way I can do it is to put a Bible in my hand. It is great to have God's light in dark places.'

In a great trial, it's easy to start a pity party. We think our problems are unique and no one understands.

Think again, says the apostle Paul: "No temptation has overtaken you except such as is common to man; but God is faithful, who will not allow you to be tempted beyond what you are able, but with the temptation will also make the way of escape, that you may be able to bear it" (I Corinthians 10:13).

When temptation comes, God will provide an escape; however, you have to take it. If you're a diabetic with an addiction to chocolate, your escape might be to avoid going into the candy store at the mall. Saturate your mind with Bible promises and examples of how heroes and heroines of the faith have faced great temptations and overcome.

After experiencing combat, a young Winston Churchill said, "Nothing in life is so exhilarating as to be shot at without result." Coming through a great trial successfully can greatly boost your confidence in God, as you sense his presence under fire. Everyone wants to live in that place of triumph where we proclaim boldly, "If God is for us, who can be against us?" (Romans 8:31).

CARY

KIDS talk

about GOD

"I remember one time, I was hurting very badly inside," recalls Cecile, 10. "My grandfather had just died. I thought I couldn't go on. I thought of this verse: 'I can do all things through Christ who strengthens me" (Philippians 4:13).

"After remembering that verse, I sensed God's presence. After that, I was able to have God's presence without thinking of my grandfather's death.'

Who could be afraid of death when the great Shepherd is walking by your side as promised in Psalm 23:4?

Ashley, 10, also lost her grandfather, but says: "I definitely sensed God then. I was sad that I would not see him again, but I was happy he was in heaven." Ashley can receive even more comfort from knowing she'll be reunited with her grandfather in the next life, where death will no longer intrude.

Think about this: We can't control the nature or the timing of our trials, but we can control what we do before a crisis hits.

Memorize this truth: I Corinthians 10:13, quoted above.

Ask this question: If we don't nurture a sense of God's presence during the good times, do you think we'll experience his presence during the bad?

Most people in Pampa will be hoping for a Harvester basketball victory against Perryton Tuesday. A group at First United Methodist will be really hoping for that - and that Pampa scores a lot — as it hosts a "Nothing but Net" challenge to raising money for Imagine No Malaria.

First United Methodist is asking people to pledge 10 cents, 50 cents or a dollar for every point Pampa scores against Perryton Tuesday. People need to turn in their pledges by the end of the month. Church member Donna Brauchi said the People can make pledges by filling out sheets in the church bulletins, newsletters, Sunday school classes or call the church office at (806) 669-7411.

Harvesters hope to clinch goals in last three games

ANDREW GLOVER aglover@thepampanews.com

The Pampa Harvesters entered the season with hopes to repeat their district championship. In the final round of district, Pampa hopes to make it happen as it hosts the Borger Bulldogs and visits the Perryton Rangers.

"We seem to have relaxed and just play the way we are capable of playing," head coach Dustin Miller said, which couldn't happen at a better time.'

Harvesters The (16-8, 3-3) are 3-1 since starting district 0-2. Senior Cole Engle Engle said the team's effort has improved.

Pampa hosts Borger at 7:30 p.m. Friday. Pampa evened the series on-January 31 with a 71-58 victory. The Bulldogs (11-16, 1-5) nearly erased Pampa's lead with three-pointers by Jamon Hearon and Grant Boren. The winner will have the head-to-head tiebreaker to determine playoff seeding if necessary. Borger is eliminated from the playoffs with a loss to Perryton and if Pampa beat Dalhart.

The Harvesters visit Perryton in the regular season finale 7:30 p.m. Tuesday. Depending on Tuesday and Friday's outcomes the game could determine who's still in the race for the district title. Engle said Pampa has to worry about its side.

"We want to win our three games and that's all we are in control of," Engle said. "We will just have to see what happens between the other teams."

Pampa already owns the head-to-head tiebreaker against Perryton after its 74-71 victory Friday. The Rangers overcame a 22-point deficit in the fourth quarter but senior Reid Miller hit a long range three at the buzzer to win for the Harvesters.

Perryton's Russell Anderson and Michael Hesler have lit up Pampa from outside, combining for 10 threes in the first two games.

The head coach said everyone at this level can shoot.

"We try to defend the perimeter better but we will take our chances with that," Miller said. "Perimeter shots are better than layups.'

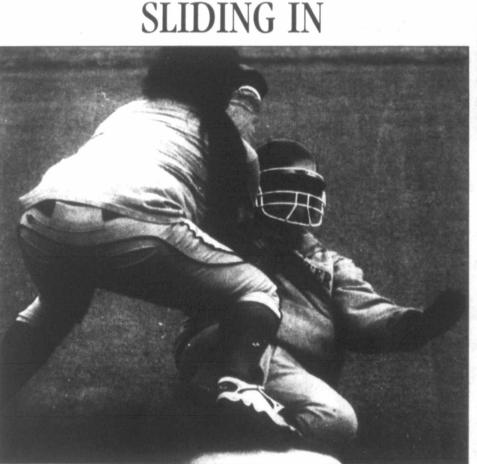

The game was marred by postgame incidents. A woman on the Perryton side charged the court and was confrontational with Reid and Dustin, causing Pampa to rush out of Perryton. The team bus was ambushed by paintballs on the highway leaving town.

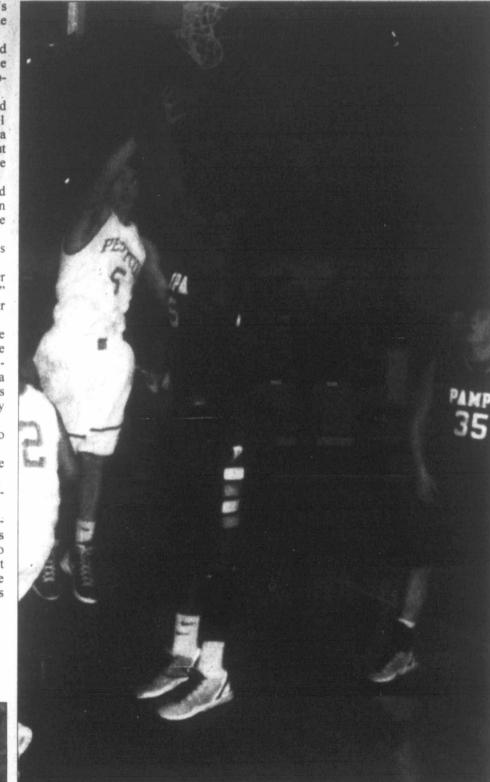

Engle said he's looking forward to returning.

"It makes me want to go down there and get another 'W,'" Engle said.

Dustin said the cooler heads will prevail Tuesday.

"We trust Perryton to take the correct actions that none of that happens again," Miller said. "I expect our fans to handle themselves the right way and let two pretty good basketball teams decide things on the court. When the game is over, teams shake hands and move on."

Perry ventures back into Texas public eye

ROUND ROCK, (AP) Rick Perry acknowledged Monday that he's not used to losing but also vowed "I'm not slipping off into the sunset" while promising to battle federal energy and environmental policies he says would cost Texas jobs.

Perry

Making his first speech in his home state since abandoning his foundering presidential run nearly three weeks ago in South Carolina, the governor invoked his alma matter, Texas A&M, saying "all Aggies have a really interesting way of admitting defeat. You know, we've never been outscored, we just ran out of time.

"The fact is I'm really not used to running out of time," Perry said, "but I wouldn't trade this experience for anything in the world."

Perry had never lost an election, an unbeaten streak that had stretched back to 1984, when he won a Texas House seat as a Democrat He switched parties and captured his first statewide post as agricultural commissioner before being elected lieutenant governor, ascending to the governorship when George W. Bush left for the White House in December 2000 and winning election to three full, four-year terms.

He said America could not afford another four years of the Obama administration's "misguided, socialist policies" and that conservatism "is bigger than any one man.

"And let me add this: I'm not slipping off into the sunset," Perry said. "We've got plenty of work to do right here in the state of Texas. I've got plenty of fight left in this old 61-year-old body.'

Perry appeared loose and confident - regaining a trace of the swagger that so eluded him while running for president - as he spoke for 31 minutes at a Williamson County Republican Party dinner in Round Rock, north of Austin. The adoring crowd of about 400 gave him a standing ovation as the emcee thanked him and his wife, Anita, for their "sacrifices" in recent months. "I don't know what y'all have been doing for the last six months," Perry joked, "but I think you kind of know what I've been up to." Perry entered the race late, announcing he was vying for the presidency Aug. 13 - but had no trouble zooming to front-runner status. A series of debate flubs and increasingly embarrassing public gaffes caused his popularity to plummet, however, and he dropped out before the South Carolina primary. During an interview with Fox News earlier Monday, Perry acknowledged, "looking back now, we would have gotten into this race substantially sooner.' "I haven't left the fight," he told the network, "I just went home and rearmed and reloaded my mags, and I'm going to be fighting on a different front.' Perry was equally defiant in front of the home-state crowd, saying he wouldn't let Texas lose its "title of best job-creation place in the world." He said that a relaxed regulatory climate and business-friendly policies statewide have kept the private sector humming. "Our policies are working. Our unemployment rate has been below the national average for the last five years. Our sales tax has risen for the last 20 months," Perry said, noting that 700,000 workers have joined the Texas workforce since the summer of 2008. "You don't raise taxes," he said. "I always get a charge out of these who say, 'Oh, you've got to raise taxes.' No, you don't. They're not coming from Florida and California and other states because they want to pay more taxes.' He noted that Texas isn't afraid to sue the Environmental Protection Agency over federal antipollution regulations and chided President Barack Obama for nixing the Keystone pipeline project, which would have carried tar sands oil from western Canada to refineries on the Texas Gulf Coast.

Perry also said Texas must strengthen its schools. Last summer, the state Legislature cut $5.4 billion from public education over the next two years, after Perry made it clear he did not want lawmakers tapping the Texas Rainy Day Fund to fill budget gaps.

"Some will try to measure the quality of our education and our schools solely on the amount of dollars that they send to the school," he said, "but ultimately success is about the results that we get.
