County mulls pair of airport runway rehabilitation projects

MOLLIE BRYANT mbryant@thepampanews.com

Date set in school finance trial

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas' school finance lawsuits are set to go to trial Oct. 22.

State District Judge John Dietz signed an order Monday establishing the tentative trial date.

Four lawsuits on behalf of hundreds of school districts statewide have been filed in response to school finance legislation passed by the Texas Legislature last summer. They charge that the way Texas distributes funding to school districts is inadequate and inequitable.

Dietz, who handled school finance lawsuits in 2004, has consolidated the cases. Some charter schools, as well as a group of parents arguing that Texas' schools are inefficient, have also sought to intervene as part of the suits. Legal fights over Texas school finance have raged for decades. The current suits are the eighth round of litigation filed in the state since 1968.

Great Plains hit with 75 storms

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Forecasters say it appears about 75 tornadoes touched down in four Great Plains states Saturday.

Greg Carbin, a meteorologist at the Storm Prediction Center in Norman, Okla., said Monday most of the tornadoes were in Kansas, followed by Oklahoma, Iowa and Nebraska. The tornadoes hit during a 24-hour period from 7 a.m. Saturday to 7 a.m. Sunday after forecasters warned of a "high risk" of severe weather.

At least six deaths were blamed on a storm that went through the northwest Oklahoma town of Woodward and destroyed more than 100 homes and businesses. Dozens of people were injured.

Many tornadoes hit in unpopulated rural areas in Kansas and Oklahoma, and Carbin says researchers are still collecting data.

Initial observations from spotters produced an estimate of more than 100 twisters.

Possible water contamination at site

AUSTIN (AP) — A lawmaker says he has confidential documents about possible groundwater contamination at a radioactive waste dump in West Texas, and is asking the state for permission to release them.

State Rep. Lon Burnam on Monday asked Attorney General Greg Abbott whether documents detailing the Texas Commission on Environmental Quality's concerns about Waste Control Specialists' application to build the site can be released.

The Democrat from Fort Worth says he obtained the documents using open records requests but is prohibited from sharing them publicly under a 2009 confidentially agreement.

But Burnam said they indicate that groundwater has seeped into a 100-foot buffer zone around the facility.

The site is awaiting final state approval to open, but Burnam said it should not be allowed to do so until safety can be guaranteed.

TERRY SAVAGE Creator's Syndicate

Would you take a bribe? To do the right things? Things like saving and paying down your debt?

That's part of the interesting psychology behind SaveUp.com - a free website that lets you earn a shot at cash and other prizes, just for doing the right thing.

The concept has taken off since the site was launched Nov. 1, 2011. In less than six months, SaveUp users have deposited $25,752,249.51 into their savings and paid down $22,278,973.93 in debt.

Priya Haji, one of the company founders, likens the incentives offered by SaveUp.com to credit-card rewards points and miles, and acknowledges in that sense, the incentives are indeed a bribe designed to reward positive financial behaviors.

But, she explains, the site is based on solid behavioral research out of Harvard, which demonstrates the concept of "skewed rewards" vs. incremental savings. That is, people will act when the perceived potential gains are impressive enough.

Motivation based on the small possibility of a big reward is similar to the behavior that makes people buy lottery tickets. Haji explains that the long-term benefits of compound savings returns — something I find very attractive — is just not enough to get most people to take action to save more and pay down debt.

But when you post a $2 million monthly prize, for which you can compete by "earning" rewards credits as you pay down debt and add to savings, then people really get excited. Other potential rewards

Save-Up.com to stash cash, win prizes for which you can compete include cash, cars, vacations, electronics and things such as a "makeover" from Banana Republic

Each reward has different odds of winning. For example, the odds of winning the $2 million monthly prize are one in 1.175 million. The odds of getting "double your tax refund" (up to $10,000) are one in 2 million. Some drawings are held weekly. And there are "instant" rewards for some prizes and cash.

SaveUp.com can offer these kinds of rewards while banks are prohibited from doing so. But banks and other financial institution partners, totaling more than 18,000 institutions, do help you link your accounts to SaveUp.com, using the secure technology created by Intuit, parent of Quicken.

And that's how you get started. Just go to SaveUp.com and create your own "account" by setting up a username and password. Then you can securely link to your existing financial accounts. It takes just moments.

None of your money moves to, or through, SaveUp. But SaveUp is notified every time you pay down a credit card or your student loan and add to your savings or even to your retirement plan at work - because you've linked to those accounts. And each of those positive steps earns credits — which you can use to compete for prizes.

Yes, some of the big numbers above come from things people are already doing, such as making payments on student loans or contributing to an IRA. But the more you save, and the more you pay down, the more credits you earn — and the more chances at prizes.

Says Haji: "SaveUp lights up your brain once a day, making you think about money, whether you're logging in to check your balance or use your credits to play for a prize. The goal is to get you to engage daily and become more involved in your personal finances."

SaveUp.com is free to consumers because the brands offering prizes get advertising and because they can offer you special deals, such as lower-rate credit cards, through the website.

It appears that those already connected are finding it almost addictive. And recognizing that possibility, SaveUp limits you to three "plays" a day.

That means people keep coming back every day, to see the credits they've earned and to spend some of them on a chance at a prize. The site even offers helpful videos so members can learn more - and earn credits by watching them.

Who can argue with this kind of "bribe" — if it gets people motivated to do the right things with their money. It's a different approach, but clearly it works.

And that's The Savage Truth.

Deadline for BP spill settlement extended

NEW ORLEANS (AP) A federal judge on Monday extended a deadline for BP and a team of plaintiffs' attorneys to announced March 2 file details of a proposed settlement designed to resolve billions of dollars in economic damage claims spawned by the 2010 oil spill in the Gulf of Mexico. The company and lawyers representing more than 100,000 individuals and businesses were expected late Monday to present the formal terms of the settlement agreement to U.S. District Judge Carl Barbier in New Orleans and ask him for preliminary approval. Early Monday evening, Barbier extended the deadline to Wednesday morning. He said the parties needed more time to finish compiling supporting documentation and exhibits.

private party claims, but their agreement calls for the proposed settlement doesn't have a cap.

The agreement doesn't resolve separate paying eligible claims by cleanup workers and others who say they suffered illnesses from exposure to the oil. Many people have filed claims asserting spillrelated illnesses, but none were paid by the GCCF. The Plaintiffs' Steering Committee, which negotiated the proposed settlement, filed a class-action complaint Monday against BP on behalf of cleanup workers and coastal residents who claim they were harmed by exposure to oil or chemicals that were used to disperse the oil.

Crime victim's fund faces deficit

AUSTIN (AP) — Experts have told Texas lawmakers that the crime victim's fund is facing major financial problems due to a drop in revenues.

First Assistant Attorney General Daniel Hodge told lawmakers that court fees that fund the program have dropped 3 percent since 2008. The result is a short-term deficit in the current two-year budget and a longer term problem keeping the fund going.

The House Criminal Justice Committee must decide whether to keep funding the program, which provides direct financial aid to victims and also supports nonprofit groups that provide services to victims. About 65 percent of the fund relies on court fees and fines, but could require more taxpayer money.

Texas lawmakers had to cut $15 billion in state spending in 2011 and expect to face another shortfall in 2013.

Teen faces murder charge in crash

PALMVIEW (AP) — A 15-year-old South Texas boy has been charged with nine counts of murder among other charges after a van he was driving crashed, killing nine of the suspected illegal immigrants packed inside.

The boy, who is not being identified because he is a juvenile, appeared at a probable cause hearing Monday. He was also charged with 17 counts of smuggling a person and causing serious bodily harm including death, and one count of evading.

The boy told investigators he drove the van because his family had been threatened, Palmview police Chief Chris Barrera said.

Barrera said prosecutors would decide whether to try the boy as an adult.

The nine killed in the rollover crash last Tuesday were all Mexican citizens. Barrera said the ground around the van was scattered with bodies.

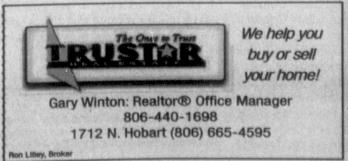

He said the boy told them he had not done this before, but he did have a previous record.

Stand raises funds for sick dad

LIBERTY CITY (AP) — What appeared to be the classic child's lemonade stand has given a big lift to an East Texas father's cancer treatment.

Six-year-old Drew Cox was charging 25 cents per glass of lemonade at the stand he set up Saturday in front of his house in Liberty City. KLTV-TV of Tyler reports his father, Randy Cox, has been diagnosed with a rare form of cancer, and Drew came up with the idea to help his dad feel better.

Instead, a block party swelled around the stand, with cars and people lined up around the block for lemonade. Drew's family says he raised his trade came from as far as 70 miles away for a glass of lemonade, generating more than $10,000 to help with Randy Cox's medical bills.

BP set up a $20 billion compensation fund after the April 20, 2010, blowout of its Macondo well. The Gulf Coast Claims Facility paid out more than $6 billion from the fund before a court-supervised administrator took over the claims process on March 8.

The agreement calls for BP to pay $2.3 billion for seafood-related claims by commercial fishing vessel owners, captains and deckhands.

President Barack Obama calls his proposed tax on millionaires the "Buffett rule," based on financier Warren Buffett's claim that he pays a lower tax rate than his secretary. Obama claims that the "Buffett rule" asks millionaires to "do their fair share" by paying the same income tax rate that middle-class families pay.

Despite a sluggish recovery and depressing job creation numbers, the president isn't pushing for policies that would stimulate the economy and create jobs; he's focusing on keeping his own job. On Monday, the Senate voted 51-45 -- shy of the 60 votes needed -- on a version of the "Buffett rule."

FactCheck.org looked into the "Buffett rule" and took Obama and Vice President Joe Biden to task for leaving the "false impression that many, if not most, millionaires (people who earn $1 million or more a year) are paying a lower tax rate than the middle class. The fact is that even without the Buffett Rule, 'more than 99 percent of millionaires will pay' a higher tax rate than those in the very middle of the income range in fiscal year 2015, according to the nonpartisan Tax Policy Center." Tax Policy Center budget guru Roberton Williams figured that middle-class families pay about 15 percent of their income on taxes, where-

double the mid-SAUNDERS dle-class tax rate -- in the name

CNN poll shows that 72 percent of Americans think the "Buffett rule" is dandy. As Scott A. Hodge, president of the Washington-based Tax Foundation, observed Monday, if the president suggested Americans tax Canadians to balance the budget, that probably would poll well, too.

Americans love taxes that other people pay. What's the matter with taxing millionaires? Hodge watches the White House and hears rhetoric that "has had a chilling effect on economic activity."

ers paid payroll taxes but no federal income taxes at all. (Most earned less than $50,000.) That's 41 percent of income tax filers, "the largest share of nonpayers since World War II."

Personally, I could accept a deficit reduction package that increased revenue, flattened tax rates, shaved loopholes and reformed entitlement spending -- along the lines of a draft presented by the Simpson-Bowles commission, created by, and then ignored by, the president. Reforms should stimulate the economy.

But the "Buffett rule" represents the exact opposite of Simpson-Bowles. By talking as if America could balance its books by squeezing the rich, Obama is pushing the notion of what Hodge called "free government" -unrestrained entitlement spending, fewer taxpayers and a bigger bite on working families. In the "Buffett rule" world, a large chunk of voters

By pushing for a millionaires tax with no reforms attached, the White House has sent a message that whenever Washington overspends, the political class will squeeze the rich.

The feminists and the real war on women

Hilary Rosen's attack on Ann Romney by saying that, although she raised five children, she "never worked a day in her life" perfectly fits the definition of a gaffe. A gaffe is a statement that reveals what the spokesperson really thinks but turns out to be embarrassing when it is publicly discussed.

In this case, the embarrassment fell on the Obama administration, so his campaign operatives immediately tried to create political distance between Obama and Rosen. They were not successful. The media refer to her as a "Democratic strategist" or "political analyst."

Rosen visited the Obama White House 35 times. That frequency may be exceeded only by visits from Service Employees International Union boss Andy Stern.

Rosen is a managing director of a political consulting firm called SKDKnickerbocker, one of its founders is Anita Dunn, who was Obama's communications czar leading Obama's war on Fox News. Dunn is memorable for having said that Mao Tse-tung is one of her two favorite "political philosophers" who "I turn to most" for answers to important questions.

Although Rosen finally issued a lame apology for the insult, she had said what she meant and meant what she said. Even after her remark about Ann Romney boomeranged, Rosen continued with the same line for hours on Twitter, in an online column, and in television appearances.

Rosen's gaffe was no mistake; it is what the feminists really think about any mother who would say, as Ann Romney said, "My career choice was to be a mother." The big mama of feminism who is revered in college women's studies courses, Simone de Beauvoir, famously said, "No woman should be authorized to stay at home and raise her children. Women should not have that choice, precisely because if there is such a choice, too many women will make that one."

That's exactly what feminists think. The strident voices that demand "choice" do not believe women should have the choice to be a homemaker rather than work a paid job in the labor force. For an updated statement of this feminist dogma, refer to Linda Hirshman. She wrote that "The tasks of housekeeping and child rearing are not worthy of the full time and talents of intelligent and educated human beings."

Obama said that Republicans are waging a "war on women," but that's a completely contrived issue. The real war on women is by feminists who demean women who choose the career path of homemaker and mislead young women into believing that a job in the workforce will be more significant and rewarding than marriage and motherhood (in that order).

The most scholarly book written about the feminist movement by a nonfeminist is "Domestic Tranquility" by Carolyn Graglia. She read all those tiresome books and articles by the feminist leaders, Betty Friedan, Germaine Greer, Kate Millett, Gloria Steinem, and Simone de Beauvoir, and concluded that the principal goal of feminism from the get-go has been "the status degradation of the housewife's role."

Graglia documented the fact that all branches of feminism are united in the conviction that a woman can find identity and fulfillment only by a career in the workforce. Betty Friedan said the stay-at-home mom is a "parasite" living in a "comfortable concentration camp." Gloria Steinem said, "you become a semi-nonperson when you get married."

This devaluing of the role of other and full-time homemaker is bedded in the psyche of the femimots who are major players in the Obama administration. Don't forget that when the feminists started their movement in the late 1960s and early 1970s, they called themselves the women's liberation movement, i.e., their goal was to be liberated from home, husband and children.

Feminists believe that society's expectation that mothers should care for their own children illustrates the oppression of women by the patriarchy. That's why legislating taxpayerfunded daycare as an entitlement for all is a major and longtime feminist goal.

Longtime? Absolutely. The feminists are still crying on television about President Richard Nixon's 1971 veto of the Mondale-Brademas Daycare bill. Governmentfinanced daycare was one of the hot-button demands endorsed at the International Women's Year conference in November 1977, along with the Equal Rights Amendment, taxpayer-funded abortions, and the entire gay agenda.

The feminists showed their clout in the Obama administration when they got him to rule that Obamacare must force all employers to pay for sterilization, abortion drugs, and contraception even when it's contrary to their religious beliefs. The feminists were able to override the objections of all Obama's experienced political advisers who warned that this would alienate large blocs of voters who care about religious liberty.

Perry promotes budget compact to ensure no new taxes

HOUSTON (AP) — More than eight months before the Texas Legislature reconvenes, Gov. Rick Perry proposed a compact on Monday that would ensure no new taxes or increases to levies already on the books.

Among other things, the Texas Budget Compact calls for a constitutional limiting of state spending increases to population growth and inflation and demands a business tax exemption for companies with annual revenues of less than $1 million be made permanent.

The compact asks legislators to keep the state's rainy day fund to remain strong, eliminates unnecessary and redundant state government programs and agencies, and demands "truth in budgeting" by ending short-term financial fixes that put off decisions to future legislatures

"This is an incredible opportunity to do what's right for Texas and for Texans," Perry said at a campaignstyle appearance at a Houston moving company that he said was typical of small businesses to benefit from the business tax exemption. "This is a conversation that time is ripe for us to have."

Perry's proposal comes one year after lawmakers passed a state budget that included spending cuts of almost $15 billion.

The Texas Legislature doesn't meet until next January and Republican Perry isn't up for possible re-election for a another two-plus years, but several Texas Senate seats and the Texas House are up for grabs in 2012, beginning with the primary election next month. The GOP controls both houses.

The Texas Democratic Party, which has held none of the statewide elected offices since 1994, immediately branded Perry's announcement Monday "shameful."

"Perry is calling on his fellow Republicans to commit to permanently underfunding public education and human services," Boyd Richie, the party chairman, said. "He's leading Texas into a race for the bottom that jeopardizes the future of both our children and our parents."

Perry said he understood not everyone would embrace his ideas.

"This is nothing new," he said. "I've been involved in this process since 1985 and there's been wailing and gnashing of teeth and the same in 1985 as we hear now.

"Every session there are people who want to spend more money, there are people who want to prioritize their projects where they find themselves as most important in the state. ... We make it work. I'm sure at the end of the day there will be those who say we would have done this differently. But our process works and I think our process works as well as any other state in the nation."

Asked specifically what cuts he'd make in redundant state programs or agencies, Perry declined.

"I think this is a good time to start the conversation," he said. "We're not going to write the budget today. My instinct is there may be some folks in the private sector who can give us some ideas."

The governor said a good chunk of the state budget goes to Medicaid costs, which he described as a "ticking time bomb" that only will rise if the U.S. Supreme Court doesn't throw out President Barack Obama's health care law.

Perry said the compact was "all about resetting the button on budgeting and that's what I think Texans understand." He also said he didn't want the state to become like the federal government "that's out of control" and other states "that have some real problems with their budgetary process."

•Legislators told that victims' fund has budget issues

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) - Court fines and fees that fund the state crime victims' fund have fallen off, creating a budget shortfall for the program that funds rape crisis centers and women's shelters, experts told Texas lawmakers on Monday.

First Assistant Attorney General Daniel Hodge told two legislative committees that revenues have dropped 3 percent since 2008 and the result is a short-term deficit in the current two-year budget and a longer-term problem of keeping the fund going. He said the Crime Victim Compensation Fund, which paid out $75.5 million last year, would only have $2.7 million left in it at the end of fiscal year 2013.

The attorney general's office, which manages most of the fund, had sent out a letter warning nonprofits that provide victim services to expect a cut, but after legislators complained, he assured those organizations there would be no cuts before 2014. Hodge said the fund has enough money to continue direct payments to crime victims, but not enough to fund programs that provide victims with services, such as shelter or counseling.

"Both the short-term stability and the long-term viability of the fund are in jeopardy," he said.

More than 65 percent of the fund's revenue comes from court fines and fees, but those have dropped off since 2008. Hodge said convictions are down, the economy has slowed and law enforcement agencies have cut back and shifted priorities to activities that don't generate as much in fines and fees.

He said the attorney general's office has cut expenses and sought to increase revenue by leading a statewide round-up of those with outstanding warrants. Officials are also working with courts to improve collection rates on outstanding fees and fines.

"I don't think collections alone, to be frank to the committee, will resolve the long-term shortfall if you want to continue funding at existing levels," Hodge warned.

Appropriations Subcommittee Chairman John Otto, R-Dayton, said lawmakers must decide whether to maintain current funding from the state treasury or increase it to keep the fund healthy.

Rep. Pete Gallego, the Democratic chairman of the criminal justice committee, said the fund had enough money to last until the next Legislature meets in January. At that time, lawmakers can vote to appropriate additional funds.

Verna Lee Carr, state director of People Against Violent Crime, called on lawmakers to ensure that crime victims receive the direct assistance they need. She complained that, in the past, crime victims' funds were spent on other programs.

Torie Camp, director of the Texas Association Against Sexual Assault, said it's critical to fund nonprofits that provide services in addition to making direct payments to victims for costs not covered by insurance or restitution.

Only 18 percent of rape victims report the crime to law enforcement, but it's not known how many seek counseling from a rape crisis center. State law requires a victim to report a crime before he or she can receive funding, so the crisis centers are frequently the only resource for those who do not call the police.

PHS Sr. Engle finds permanent position in center

ANDREW GLOVER aglover@thepampanews.com

When Pampa senior Cole Engle was a sophomore, he had to look at the lineup card every day to know where he was playing.

"It depended on who was pitching that game to see where I played,' Engle said.

This year, Engle knows he is the leadoff hitter and playing center field.

Engle played eight of nine positions, everything except catcher, in his sophomore year and said it was tough not having a permanent Engle position.

"I had to take ground balls when I was playing in the infield," Engle said. "Fly balls aren't very difficult. I just started this year trying to make diving catches. Ground balls take hard work to get used to."

Head coach Kaleb Snelgrooes said Engle handled that year well.

"He's a guy you can put anywhere," Snelgrooes said. "He's played shortstop and he will (today). He's done a great job there. He's been a leadoff hitter for me for two years and has done a good job there."

Also, Engle wasn't consistently batting.

"There were some games, I played the field and someone DHed," Engle said. "You want to be hitting. To earn that spot you have to show you can hit. You have to perform in a game. I just had to work my way up to it."

Engle worked his way into the leadoff spot, keeping that position the last two seasons.

Last season, Engle spent most of the year in left field but got moved to the infield after then-senior Mitch Simon's injury. Engle said it's nice to know what he's doing each game.

"I can go out there every game and play the same spot," Engle said. "Talk to the same guys. Let them know if I got the ball or if they have the ball. I'm in the same spot in the batting order. I'm comfortable."

Snelgrooes said Engle has developed well.

"It's one of those deals," Snelgrooes said. If a pop fly is hit to him, I stand up and go 'Get ready for the next inning.' You know it's going to be caught. He's that kind of outfielder. He's made some catches this year that were hit, that I didn't think anyone could get to and he catches them no problem."

Engle plays shortstop when junior starter James Thompson pitches. The senior said playing in the infield in his sophomore year helped him do well this season.

"That Borger game, coach Snelgrooes had me play shortstop," Engle said. "I played (hard) and played great at shortstop. As a sophomore I couldn't play great at shortstop. I would make some errors. Right there is two years of work to get where I'm at."

The Pampa Harvesters have lost the may 'Preakness Stakes." For horse racers that would signal the end of their run for an elusive Triple Crown. That's not the case for Pampa, as it's still able to clinch district in the final three games of the season.

Head coach Kaleb Snelgrooes named every three games after a Triple Crown race. Pampa needs to win two out of three games to "win the race." The Harvesters lost to Perryton on April 6 and to Borger Saturday. Snelgrooes said his team controls its destiny.

WASHINGTON (AP) Roger Clemens stood and uttered "Morning" to the 90 potential jurors who had gathered in the ornate, sixth-floor ceremonial courtroom, the one deemed big enough to hold them all. After he sat down, he swiveled his chair, as if trying to make eye contact with as many as possible.

Some of those looking back had no idea who he was. Others, including two who survived the first cut, wondered if it was a waste of taxpayer time and money that got him to this point.

The seven-time Cy Young Award winner was back in court Monday in the government's second attempt to prove that he misled a House committee at a landmark drugs-and-sports hearing in 2008. The first trial last July ended in a mistrial when prosecutors introduced inadmissible evidence after only two witnesses had been called.

One potential juror said he felt "it was a little bit ridiculous" when Congress held hearings on drug use in sports because he felt the government should have been focusing on bigger problems. Nevertheless, the native of Chile an investment officer for an international bank — was asked to return, the only male to remain in the jury pool among those who were individually screened on the first day.

Texas prosecutor trying revoke Leaf's probation

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) The Texas prosecutor who brokered a plea deal with former NFL quarterback Ryan Leaf filed a motion Monday to revoke his probation and will press for prison time.

Randall County district attorney James Farren said his motion probably will be amended as he gets additional details about Leaf's latest legal problem. Leaf faces four felonies in Montana after allegedly breaking into a home to steal prescription painkillers, then robbing a second home after being released from jail.

"I anticipate amending that motion to reflect other potential charges," Farren said.

Leaf is likely to face the Montana charges first. He was given 10 years' probation in Texas in 2010 after being accused of burglarizing a player's home while he was a coach at West Texas A&M. An investigation found he obtained nearly 1,000 pain pills from area pharmacies in an eight-month span.

Leaf is jailed without bond on a 30-day hold to allow prosecutors in Montana and Texas to sort through the separate cases. Leaf's Texas attorney, Bill Kelly, declined to comment because he had not seen the motion.

Farren said he is fine with Montana proceeding with its case first, though "our process would probably be shorter because revocation doesn't take as long" as getting a case to trial.

Late last week, Cascade

County (Mont.) prosecutor John Parker charged Leaf with two counts of burglary and two counts of criminal possession of a dangerous drug. If convicted, Leaf faces a maximum prison sentence of 20 years and five years for each possession charge.

Should the judge in Leaf's Texas case revoke his probation, the former Washington State standout and the No. 2 pick in the on each burglary charge 1998 NFL draft, could be sentenced to 20 years. The revocation motion cites Leaf's admission twice to a probation officer in Montana that he had taken oxycodone pills not prescribed to him.

Address windshield nicks

marks the return of road trips for millions of motorists across the country. Whether going to the beach or heading off to parts unknown, hitting the open road with the windows down is a time-honored tradition for drivers of all ages.

But such road trips can prove disastrous if drivers don't take the right steps to prepare their vehicles for spring and summer travel. The following are a few ways motorists can ensure their car is ready to tackle the open road.

Tighten things up. Loose parts, such as exhaust clamps, license plates, and interior trim panels, can create rattles and cause parts to get damaged or fall off. What's more, rattling sounds can be a noisy nuisance for drivers and passengers alike. Permatex Threadlockers can be used to keep the nuts and bolts from coming loose and save parts replacement costs. They also have a threadlocker for plastic fasteners, which vehicle manufacturers have grown to rely on more and more.

Wash your car. A newly washed car not only looks good, but it's often much safer as well. Take your car before the trip and have the vehicle thoroughly cleaned. A thorough cleaning will remove dirt and grime from the vehicle's undercarriage, not to mention unsightly bird droppings and water spots or salt stains leftover from winter.

Many spring and summer road trippers travel at night so their days can be spent

Simple ways to improve fuel economy

The economy might be make the gas last a little longer. Improving fuel economy is nothing new to many motorists, but some might still ways they can get more gards to fuel costs. • Don't break the law. Obeying the speed limit might save your life, and it can also save you money. Typically, fuel economy decreases rapidly as a car reaches and surpasses 60 miles per hour. According to the U.S. Department of Safety, drivers can assume that each five miles per hour they drive over 60, they are paying an additional 26¢ per gallon for gas. · Empty the trunk. Though it might be more convenient to keep your golf clubs in the trunk of your car, extra and unnecessary cargo in a cent, so keep a trunk free of necessary.

• Stop idling. Many peo- hazard. The DOE notes that pickup truck but don't use it to haul items might want Improving fuel efficiency Pre-owned can be a smart financial bet

The allure of a lower price is what drives some consumers to purchase a preowned car or truck. Considering many of the used vehicles available are only a few years old, this can be a smart decision.

With the widespread availability of leases, many pre-owned vehicles are lease turn-ins that are only a few years old and in relatively good condition. And because leases limit the amount of mileage that can be put on the vehicle in a given year, chances are a lot of those pre-owned vehicles are also low in mileage.

Used-car pricing almost always will be lower than a vehicle off the lot. This is a big draw to many consumers looking to save money on a vehicle. New cars depreciate as soon as they are driven away from the dealership, so even a vehicle that is only a few months old will cost less than it did brand new.

Buying a pre-owned car at a dealership also may come with a warranty. In order to liquidate their stock of used vehicles, oftentimes dealerships will certify the vehicles are in good condition and of-

Many fer warranties that cover many of the same items people look to one would find with a new vehicle. Certified vehicles car lots can be a safer investment, when primarily because the service history and the condiping for tion of the car is verifiable. Buying from a private owner may be a riskier purchase.

That doesn't mean that buying a used car from a private owner should be avoided at all costs. Many private sellers are honest individuals and will offer proof documenting the vehicle's maintenance history. There are also car history reports that can be obtained using the VIN number on the vehicle to check to see if it was in any major accidents or had other kinds of damage.

Buying used is also a green investment. While a brand-new hybrid may certainly save on fuel use, the energy needed to produce that new hybrid can be considerable. Purchasing a used car means less demand for a new one to be made.

Another advantage to used vehicles is that insurance premiums may be lower. That's because new cars usually require comprehensive insurance coverage, when a used vehicle may only require the basics.

People looking to save money on a vehicle should consider pre-owned cars as viable options for their next vehicle.
