The election behind them, U.S. investors dumped stocks Wednesday and turned their focus to a world of problems ---tax increases and spending cuts that could stall the nation's economic recovery and a deepening recession in Europe.

The Dow Jones industrial average plummeted as much as 369 points, or 2.6 percent, in the first two hours of trading. The average was on track for its worst decline in a year.

The Standard & Poor's 500 index fell as much as 40 points, or 2.8 percent.

Energy companies and bank stocks took some of the biggest losses. Both industries presumably would have faced lighter and less costly regulation if Mitt Romney had won the election.

Stocks seen as benefiting from President Barack Obama's decisive win rose. They included hospitals, free of the threat that a Romney administration would have sought to roll back Obama's health care law, and renewable-energy companies.

With the election over, traders' attention returned to an increasingly sickly European economy, dragged down by a debt crisis for more than three years. The 27-country European Union said unemployment there could remain high for years.

The European Commission, the executive arm of the EU, said that it expects the region's economic output to shrink 0.3 percent this year. In the spring, the group predicted no change.

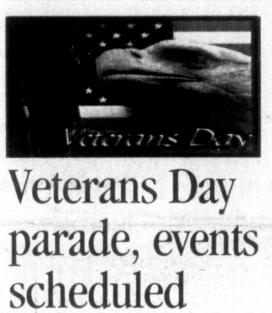

For next year, the commission predicted 0.4 percent growth, barely above recession territory. It predicted 1.3 percent last spring.

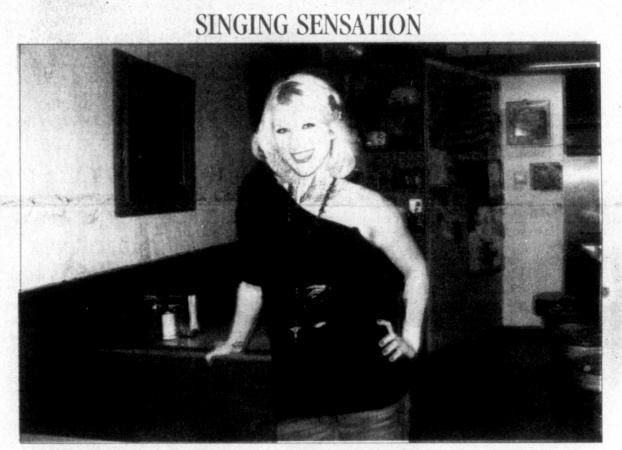

U.S. stock futures were higher overnight after Obama cruised to victory. They turned sharply lower after the European forecasts, and discouraging comments from Mario Draghi, president of the European Central Bank. European markets turned negative as well.

Now that the U.S. election has been resolved, it's natural for traders to focus on Europe's problems, said Peter Tchir, who manages the hedge fund TF Market Advisors.

What they're tuning in to, he said, is the failure of a major STOCKS cont. on page 5

New storm bears down on Sandy-battered NYC, NJ

BY COLLEEN LONG AND FRANK ELTMAN

Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) - A nor'easter blustered into New York and New Jersey on Wednesday with rain and wet snow, plunging homes right back into darkness, stopping commuter trains again and inflicting another round of misery on thousands of people still reeling from Superstorm Sandy's blow more than a week ago.

Under ordinary circumstances, a storm of this sort wouldn't be a big deal, but large swaths of the landscape were still an open wound, with the electrical system highly fragile and many of Sandy's victims still mucking out their homes and cars and shivering in the deepening cold.

Exactly as authorities feared, the nor'easter brought down tree limbs and electrical wires, and utilities in New York and New Jersey reported that some customers who lost power because of Sandy lost it all over again as a result of the nor'easter.

"I know everyone's patience is wearing thin," said John Miksad, senior vice president of electric operations at Consolidated Edison, the chief utility in New York City.

As the nor'easter closed in, thousands of people in low-lying neighborhoods staggered by the superstorm just over a week ago were urged to clear out. Authorities warned that rain and 60 mph gusts in the evening and overnight could topple trees wrenched loose by Sandy and erase some of the hard-won progress made in restoring power to millions of customers.

"I am waiting for the locusts and pestilence next," New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie said. "We may take a setback in the next 24 hours."

Ahead of the storm, public works crews in New Jersey built up dunes to protect the stripped and battered coast, STORM cont. on page 7

Two Oklahoma men arrested on possession of marijuana

Penn State ex-President Spanier arraigned

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) - Former Penn State president Graham Spanier was arraigned and released on bail at a brief court appearance Wednesday on charges he lied about and concealed child sex abuse allegations involving former assistant football coach Jerry Sandusky. Spanier, accompanied by his wife,

Graham Spanier

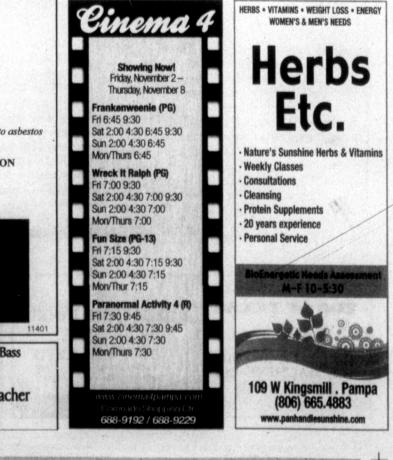

Ainslie told reporters her client is "not guilty, absolutely" and disputed prosecutors' claims Spanier conspired with university athletic director Tim Curley and vice president Gary Schultz. She said Spanier, who testified before a grand jury in the matter, has not been given the opportunity to present his side of the story.

"This wasn't a conspiracy of silence," she said, echoing the charge made last week by state Attorney General Linda Kelly. "That is ridiculous."

Spanier, 64, was charged last week with perjury, obstruction, endangering the welfare of children, failure to properly report suspected abuse and conspiracy for his actions in response to complaints about Sandusky showering with children. Spanier has claimed he is being framed for political purposes.

He served as Penn State's president for 16 years but was forced out a year ago after Sandusky was charged along with Curley and Schultz, who were two of Spanier's top underlings. Spanier is on paid leave as a member of the faculty.

We have come to a national crossroads. We can choose to embrace immorality, apathy, unmitigated greed, corruption, idleness, entitlement, incessant spending and divisive rhetoric. Or we can put our unique freedoms to good use, elect authentic leaders who serve our great nation, unite to emerge from our hardships, help our neighbors through adversity and treat one another with civility.

In less than 200 years, America grew from a cluster of colonies to the greatest nation on earth. Our hardships have been etched into our national soul --- the American Revolution, the Civil War, the Great Depression, Pearl Har-

Letter to the Editor We need bipartisanship, along with term limits

In 2008 I cast my first vote for a Democratic president, and I voted for Obama again this year. Here's some background: I began voting Republican in the 1950s when the Texas Panhandle didn't even have a Republican Party, and all local candidates were Democrats.

I didn't like a one-party system then, and I still don't like it, so I now seek to balance my political participation based on issues. I don't think any party should be run by radicals. When I was younger, the Democrats went too far left for me.

In truth, I didn't leave the Republican Party; it left me several years ago when the far Right took control. (I saw it happening even when I went to local precinct meetings.) I always try to be a moderate, but frankly, I just can't reconcile myself to some of the platforms in both parties.

When the Republicans went into Congress in 2008 with the openly stated purpose of opposing everything President Obama proposed, even when it contained things they (the Republicans) had recommended, and voted against issues they said they wanted, I was totally disgusted.

Since when is compromise and working for the good of all citizens, instead of blindly following "party politics," a bad thing? There have been Presidents and congressmen I didn't like or approve of, or whose issues and beliefs I disliked, but they managed to sit down, talk civilly to each other and work out Congressional bills together, regardless of which political party they represented. It needs to happen again.

Republicans scream about "Obamacare," yet much of it was modeled on the very program Mr. Romney set up as governor of Massachusetts.

I appreciated Mr. Romney's statement in his concession speech telling both parties that it is time "to reach across the aisle" and get something done to solve the problems of this country. Unfortunately, on TV today, I heard a Republican Senator make a comment that implied nothing would change. Like bullies on the playground, if they can't have it (various bills and suggestions) their way, they won't even consider it. Where are the "Statesmen" instead of the "Politicians?"

Let's set term limits and make Congress live under the laws and rules they pass for the rest of us, and see if they don't moderate their ideas some.

warfare, ongoing wars, the threats of global terror and a nuclear Iran, and internal division and scandals, from "Fast and Furious" to the massacre in Benghazi, Libya. The list goes on and on.

Meanwhile, during this pivotal election season, politicians and lawmakers launch fiery attacks at one another. and several Twitter users threaten to riot if their candidate doesn't win the election this week.

Americans are struggling to find jobs, deeply concerned about the economy, troubled by the soaring federal deficit and frustrated with leaders who don't represent their interests in a nation torn apart by divisive politics. Many believe that our country is headed in the wrong direction and worry that their children's lives won't be so good as their own.

Is this what America stands for?

America is a country born of hardship, struggle and protest. It's a nation of people who share powerful ideas and a place where each of us is blessed with the opportunity to succeed on our merits, ambition, ingenuity and hard work.

We can express our opinions and ideas without facing persecution by our government, play a powerful role in policymaking and embrace bor, Sept. 11 and many others. We've survived our great struggles and emerged a stronger nation. We always have conquered adversity, even against insurmountable odds. This time is no different.

It's time to unleash the American spirit.

In the midst of this national turmoil, let's take a moment to reflect on who we are and what we stand for.

In Matthew 12:25, Jesus told us, "Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation; and every city or house divided against itself shall not stand.'

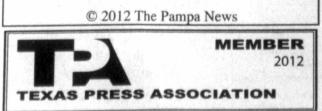

One of America's great strengths is its ability to unite under a common goal and emerge from adversity together through hard work, determination and a spirit of brotherhood.

In the midst of all our troubles, America is suffering from a leadership crisis. We need our leaders to believe in American exceptionalism, to establish a core set of values and to stand by them.

How Obama victory could affect areas of economy

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Upper-income Americans may face a tax increase. Auto fuel economy standards might be raised. Stocks of construction and engineering companies could benefit.

America's decision to re-elect President Barack Obama over Mitt Romney will affect all that and other elements of the U.S. economy and financial system — from the health care law to the overhaul of financial rules.

At the same time, a gridlocked Congress will limit Obama's influence. Tuesday's election kept Republicans in control of the House. Democrats still control the Senate, but without a commanding majority.

Here's how Obama's re-election could affect key sectors:

ECONOMY:

Obama has laid out some key themes for rejuvenating the economy: Extend Bush-era tax cuts for lowand middle-income Americans. Spend more to build and repair roads, bridges and other public structures. Provide targeted tax breaks to businesses.

Most immediately, Obama needs to persuade congressional Republicans and Democrats to reach a budget agreement to prevent the economy from falling off a "fiscal cliff." Without a deal, deep spending cuts and tax increases will start to kick in next year.

The combination of those measures could send the economy back into recession and drive the unemployment rate back up to 9 percent next year, according to estimates by the Congressional Budget Office. The rate is now 7.9 percent.

Analysts warn that Congress must break its stalemate for the economy to sustain its recovery.

"There will be a lot of brinksmanship, and that will hurt the economy and likely upset the financial markets," Mark Zandi, chief economist at Moody's Analytics, said Wednesday.

Still, the urgency of the crisis could "generate the political will necessary to get the deal done," Zandi said. And that could mean "much, much stronger growth" by 2014.

Others caution that even if the fiscal cliff is averted, the economy may continue to be hampered by slow growth, stagnant pay and modest job gains.

"Obama's re-election does not change the bigger economic or fiscal picture," Paul Ashworth, an economist at Capital Economics, said in a research note. "Over the next couple of years, the U.S. economy will remain saddled with an uncomfortably high unemployment rate and will struggle to grow by more than 2 percent a year."

The president has pledged to cut projected deficits by $4 trillion over 10 years. He says he'd do so in part by raising the tax on investment gains. He would also raise income tax rates for individuals who earn more than $200,000 and married couples who earn more than $250,000. And a minimum 30 percent tax would be imposed on incomes above $1 million.

STOCKS:

Stock prices plunged Wednesday in the aftermath of the election. Investors appeared rattled by the impending U.S. tax increases and spending cuts and Europe's deepening recession.

Over the long run, though, the stocks of construction and engineering companies might get a lift during Obama's second term. The president has said more spending on roads, bridges and public buildings will boost the economy. If Obama's victory helps Democrats gain seats in Congress, he'll have more support for such spending.

Other categories of stock might stumble. Financial companies had hoped to weaken rules imposed after the 2008 financial crisis. Obama's victory may ensure that the rules will remain intact. Companies will have to keep spending to make sure they comply with them.

Obama also wants to tax dividends at a higher rate. That could make financial stocks, which often pay high dividends, less appealing to investors.

Defense stocks might suffer because Obama wants to limit the growth of military spending. And some energy companies may fall because some investors think his administration will tighten pollution regulations that affect energy extraction and coal-burning power plants.

AUTO INDUSTRY:

Obama will likely seek to further boost fuel economy standards. He's already raised the standards twice. This year, he required automakers to double their vehicles' average fuel economy to 54.5 miles a gallon by 2025.

Obama set an ambitious goal in 2011 to put 1 million electric vehicles on the road by 2015. Fewer than 30,000 electric cars have been sold in the United States this year. He wants to raise a $7,500 tax credit for electric cars to $10,000.

The president has asked the World Trade Organization to rule on Chinese subsidies for autos and auto parts and its import duties on U.S. autos. He's awaiting a decision.

ENERGY:

The boom in U.S. oil and gas production during the president's first term will likely continue, thanks largely to new drilling techniques. But drilling could slow if the Environmental Protection Agency toughens rules governing a controversial technique called hydraulic fracturing.

Obama backs the idea of a federal clean-energy standard that would require the country to use more low-carbon energy sources, such as wind and solar for electricity and advanced biofuels and batteries in cars.

But Republican opposition is so strong it's doubtful Obama could muster enough support in Congress for it. There would be bipartisan opposition to any administration effort to regulate emissions of carbon dioxide and other gases that scientists say contribute to climate change.

European summit last week and minimal progress on the issues that are holding the region back. "People can only digest one or two stories at a time, and people had put Europe on the back burner" before the election, he said.

Obama's win followed a costly campaign that blanketed markets with uncertainty about possible changes to tax rates, government spending and other issues seen as crucial to the prospects of some industries and the broader economy.

As jitters about the election subsided, traders confronted an ugly reality: The so-called fiscal cliff, which will impose automatic tax increases and deep cuts to government spending at the end of the year unless the president and Congress can reach a deal.

That's no easy task for a deadlocked government whose overall composition has barely changed - a Democratic president and Senate and a Republican House.

If Congress and the White House don't reach à deal, the spending cuts and tax increases could total $800 billion next year. Some economists say that could push the economy back into recession.

"Obama's, re-election does not change the bigger economic or fiscal picture," Paul Ashworth of Capital Economics Ashworth, an economic research company, said in a note to clients.

Tobias Levkovich, a financial analyst at Citi Research, told clients Wednesday that a compromise on taxes and spending was likely in mid- to late January, but that stocks will probably fall in the meantime.

A deal early next year is much more likely "once the political class begins to negotiate realistically and as the consequences . . are too costly for either party to ignore," he wrote. About two hours into trading, the Dow was down 345 points at 12,921, dipping below 13,000 for the first time since Sept. 4. The S&P 500 was down 37 to 1,391. The Nasdaq composite index dropped 75, or 2.5 percent, to 2,937.

As traders streamed into lower-risk investments, the yield on the 10-year Treasury note plunged to 1.64 percent from 1.75 percent late Tuesday. A bond's yield declines as demand for it increases. Stocks continue to hurt from lackluster thirdquarter earnings reports, Tchir said. "There's been this whole litany of things that have been dragging down the market for a while, earnings chief among them, and that's still out there,' he said, adding that those concerns "play as much of a role as anything to do with the election." Earnings have been relatively weak, with many reporting companies lower revenue and darkening expectations for the coming quarters.

and new evacuations were ordered in a number of communities already emptied by Sandy. New shelters opened.

In New York City, police went to low-lying neighborhoods with loudspeakers, urging residents to leave. But Mayor Michael Bloomberg didn't issue mandatory evacuations, and many people stayed behind, some because they feared looting, others because they figured whatever happens couldn't be any worse than what they have gone through already.

"We're petrified," said James Alexander, a resident of the hard-hit Rockaways section of Queens. "It's like a sequel to a horror movie."

All construction in New York City was halted a precaution that needed no explanation after a crane collapsed last week in Sandy's high winds and dangled menacingly over the streets of Manhattan. Parks were closed because of the danger of falling trees. A section of the Long Island Expressway was closed in both directions because of icy conditions.

It was a very happy Halloween for LA shelter pets. In a decision that sparked high-fives throughout the animal welfare community, Los Angeles closed its pet-store doors to commercial breeders.

On Wednesday, LA City Council voted 13-2 to make Los Angeles the largest city in the country to ban the sale of commercially bred dogs, cats and rabbits.

But the ban goes deeper than just cutting off the flow of mill animals to pet stores. Writes the LA Times, "Pet stores will be limited to selling animals obtained from shelters, humane societies and registered rescue groups."

Rescue groups have long served to ease the burden of shelters, regularly pulling dogs and cats from local animal control facilities, housing them through their network of foster homes and working tirelessly to adopt them into loving "forever" homes. The new ordinance adds another outlet through which the public can connect with homeless animals: pet stores. Councilman Paul Koretz introduced the motion in hopes of mitigating the city's pet overpopulation problem, arguing that legislators must be the voice for animals who "cannot speak for themselves." In 2011, LA shelters took in more than 35,000 dogs and more than 21,000 cats. Approximately 25 percent of the dogs and 57 percent of the cats never made it out. Nationally, the Humane Society of the United States estimates that of the six to eight million dogs and cats that enter shelters every year, three to four million are euthanized. Puppy and kitten mills add to the nationwide problem of overpopulation by forcing their breeding animals to produce litter upon litter upon litter, keeping the parent animals confined to a miserable existence and often resulting in unhealthy, unsocialized animals, as well as the propagation of genetic mutations rom inbreeding.

While LA is not the first to pass such a law -- 27 other North American cities have implemented similar restrictions -- it is the largest and potentially the most impactive, paving the way for the next big city to follow suit. Chicago has already expressed interest in pursuing a ban of its own.

Elizabeth Oreck of Best Friends Animal Society is at the forefront of the fight to eradicate the large-scale manufacturing of companion animals. The potential benefits of ordinances that ban the retail sale of commercially bred pets are significant," says Oreck. "It all helps mitigate the puppy mill problem, or other situations that are the byproducts of irresponsible breeding, such as the online sales of animals shipped around the country that, again, put a strain on local shelters.'

In the wake of the final vote approving the ban, the Los Angeles Daily News reports, "Commercial breeders have warned the city action will drive potential pet owners to other sources to get the animal of their choice.'

That may be true, and it is certainly the right of the individual to explore all options. But the numbers reflect

Airlines canceled at least 1,300 U.S. flights in and out of the New York metropolitan area, causing a new round of disruptions that rippled across the country. The city manager in otherwise.

So far in 2012, euthanasia rates are down in LA shelters by about 20 percent from last year. This appears to be because adoption rates are up. Fewer people are shopping. More people are adopting. And that's before the ban.

Keeping commercially bred animals out of pet stores won't force people to adopt from their local shelter, but these bans shine sunshine on a plight that is too large and heartbreaking to be ignored. And sunshine is the best disinfectant. Woof!

PampaSports Legendary Texas Longhorn football coach dies at 88

BY JIM VERTUNO Associated Press

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) Darrell Royal, the former Texas football coach known as much for his folksy, simplistic approach to life as for his creative wishbone offenses and two national championships, has died. He was 88.

University of Texas spokesman Nick Voinis on Wednesday confirmed Roval's death. Roval had suffered from Alzheimer's disease and recently fell at an assisted living cen-receiving care. Royal, who also starred as defenthe for Oklahoma Sooners, didn't have a single losing season in his 23 years as a head coach at Texas, Mississippi State and Washington. During his 20 years at Texas (1957-1976), his teams boasted a 167-47-5 record — the best mark in the nation during that period. One season ended with an even record.

"It was fun," Royal told The Associated Press in 2007. "All the days I was coaching at Texas, I knew this would be my last coaching job. I knew it when I got here.'

Royal was just 32 when Texas hired him.

back James Street to take over.

"We were struggling," Street said in 2007. "Coach Royal grabbed me and he looked for a minute as if he were having second thoughts about putting me in. Then he looked me straight in the eye and said, 'Hell, you can't do any worse. Get in there.""

Texas won its next 30 games. Soon, rival Oklahoma and other schools started using the wishbone as well.

Royal faced criticism over the lack of black players on his first 13 Texas teams, although he had coached black players at Washington and in the Canadian football league. At the 1960 Cotton Bowl, Syracuse accused Texas of hurling racial barbs at Syracuse's black players, which Royal denied. Texas became the first SWC school to announce it would fully integrate the athletic program in 1963, but the football program didn't have a black letterman until Julius Whittier in 1970.

Royal, who acknowledged being unconcerned about racial discrimination for much of his life, credited former President Lyndon B. Johnson with turning around his viewpoint. Johnson, who attended Texas football games after his presidency ended, was close friends with Royal.

"I'm not a football fan," inserted backup quarter- Johnson once said. "But I am a fan of people, and I am a Darrell Royal fan because he is the rarest of human beings.'

Royal's program faced other criticism as well.

In 1972, former Texas lineman George Shaw published "Meat on the Hoof," a searing critique of the Texas program that accused the coaches of having a class system within the program and of devising sadistic drills to drive off unwanted players

"I want to be remembered as a winning coach, but also as an honest and ethical coach," Royal said in 1975

Royal was among the first football coaches in the nation to hire an academic counselor to ensure athletes went on to graduate. He also set aside a fund for a special "T" ring, which he awarded to his players upon their graduation.

When Royal inherited the Texas football program, it was in such disrepair that Memorial Stadium was surrounded by barbed wire and a chain-link fence with tall grass growing around it.

"I was disappointed," Royal said of his first impression of Texas. "But I felt I could get changes made.'

The biggest victory that first season came against Paul "Bear" Bryant's No. 4 Texas A&M Aggies, clinching the Longhorns' first winning season since 1953. Texas went on to have 19 consecutive winning seasons until Royal's last in 1976, when the Longhorns finished 5-5-1.

Royal's last game was a 29-12 victory over rival Arkansas. Afterward, he and Razorbacks coach Frank Broyles announced they were retiring.

Royal also served as Texas athletic director from 1962-1979. He later became a special assistant for athletic programs to the UT president and was influential in the hiring of Mack Brown as football coach in 1997.

Texas honored Royal in 1996 by renaming the football stadium Darrell K Royal-Memorial Stadium. K was his middle name, not an abbriviation.

Royal, the youngest of six children born to Katy and B.R. "Burley" Royal, grew up in tiny Hollis, Okla., where he chopped cotton as a young boy to help his family through Depression. His the mother died before he was 6 months old, and he lost two sisters to a fever epidemic.

In 1938, Royal's father took the family from the Dustbowl to California to look for work. Homesick for Oklahoma, Royal soon packed his bags and hitchhiked his way back.

Ine Longhorns hadn't had a winning season since 1953, and Royal immediately turned the program around. Under Royal, Texas won 11 Southwest Conference titles, 10 Cotton Bowl championships and national championships in 1963 and 1969, going 11-0 each time. The Longhorns also won a share of the 1970 national title.

The son of a cotton farmer, Royal credited hard work and luck for his success. He had a knack for delivering pithy quotes about his team and opponents.

"Football doesn't build character, it eliminates the weak ones," was one of Royal's famous lines.

The national title season in 1969 included what was dubbed the "Game of the Century," a come-frombehind, 15-14 victory by the top-ranked Longhorns over No. 2 Arkansas to cap the regular season.

In Texas lore, it ranks as the greatest game ever played. President Nixon, an avid football fan, flew in by helicopter to watch. Afterward, Nixon greeted Royal with a plaque proclaiming Texas the national champion.

The Longhorns also were named national champions by United Press International in 1970, a year in which Texas lost its final game to Notre Dame in the Cotton Bowl and finished 10-1.

Royal and assistant Emory Ballard changed the football landscape with the development of the wishbone in 1968, which features a fullback lined up two yards behind the quarterback and a step in front of two other backs.

It almost didn't work. After a tie and loss in the first two games that season, a frustrated Royal

See 'The Wall'

Can't travel to Washington, D.C. to see the wall? There is a traveling replica of The Wall that visits cities across America throughout the year. You can see the schedule at www.vvmf.org to find out where it can be seen.

Standards Link: Civics: Students know how Veterans Day reflects the shared values, principles and beliefs of Americans.

The replica is 80% the size of the actual Vietnam Veterans Memorial, but it includes every one of the names.

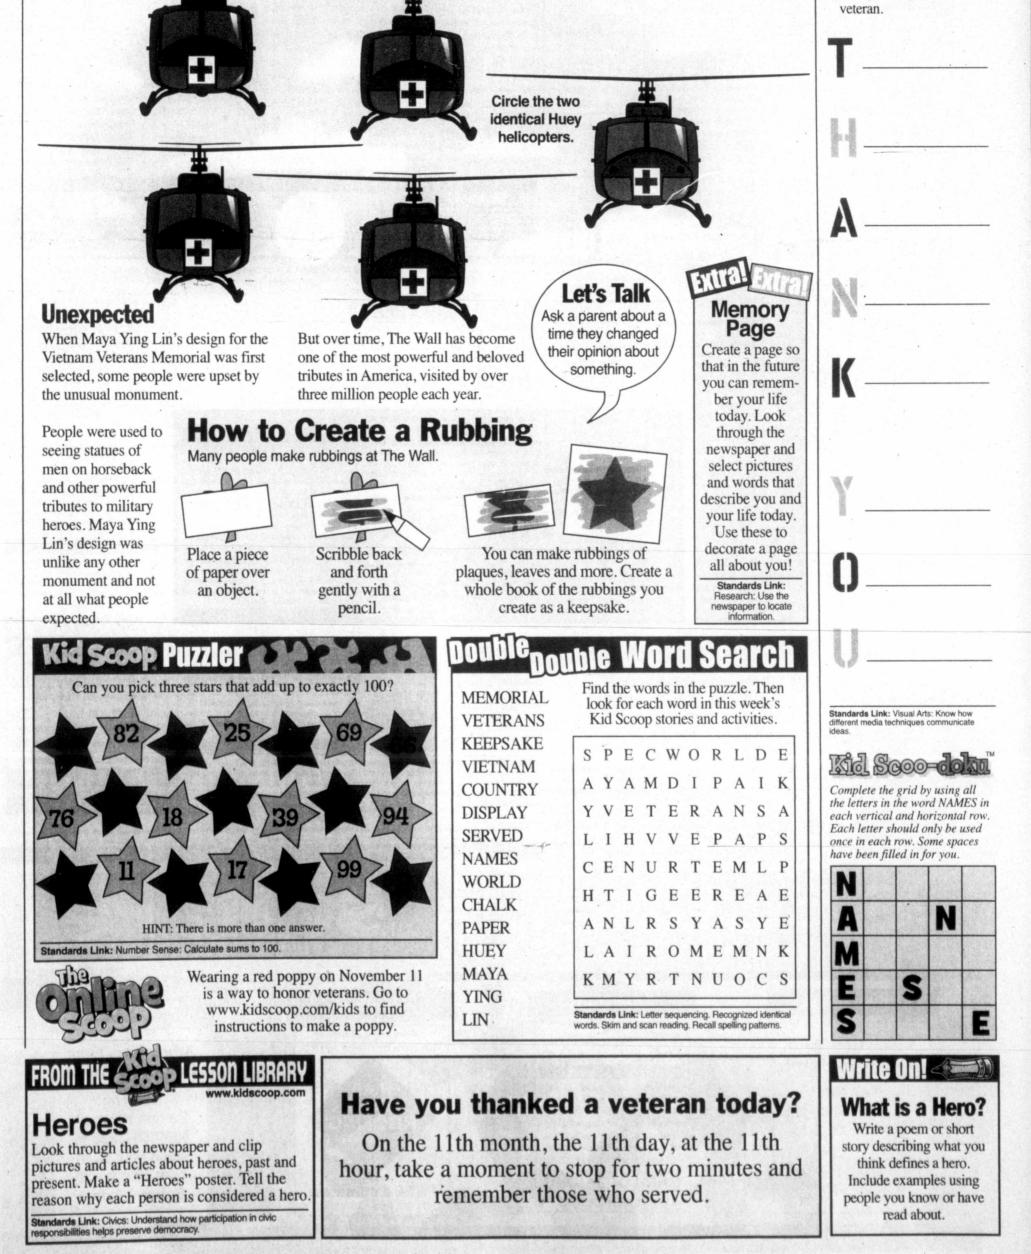

Families can make rubbings of the names or spend time ______ about those who served in Vietnam and other wars.

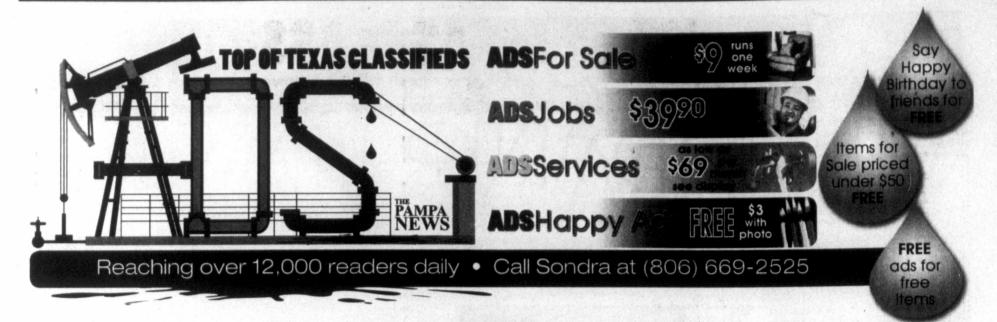

Here are just some of the ways you can honor military veterans on Veterans Day, courtesy of www.va.gov/kids

- Draw a picture about Veterans Day and send it to your newspaper. Maybe it will be published!
- Make a card to thank veterans. You can send your card to a local VA Medical Center.
- Ask your teacher to invite veterans to your classroom. You can learn a lot from your guests!
- Have your school make a poster with the names (and pictures) of relatives and friends who are veterans.
- Write an acrostic poem using the words "THANK YOU." Begin each line with a word that starts with the letter shown and give it to a friend or family member who is a veteran.

Waiting game for Pampa's

playoff hopes

BY ZAC GREEN sports@thepampanews.com

Attack the day PAMPA REGIONAL MEDICAL CENTER

After a disappointing loss to Dalhart Friday night in a game that Pampa could have solidified their playoff hopes, all they can do is wait.

Pampa finished with a 2-2 district record. Perryton is 2-1, with their last game being against Dalhart. Borger is 1-2 with their last game against Amarillo River Road Friday.

It is pretty simple for the Harvesters, Perryton or Borger need to lose Friday. Pampa owns the tiebreaker with Perryton but does not own the tiebreaker with Borger.

The off week is a blessing in disguise for the Harvesters. Although they are left with not knowing if they are in or out, they can get healthy. Pampa has a roster of 30 players and seven of them were out for one reason or another. This week will give Pampa a time to rest and get healthy. Football Coach Heath Parker expects five out of the seven that missed the game against Dalhart to play in the potential playoff game.

Parker gave the players Monday and Tuesday off to get well, heal up physically and focus on their grades.

Should Pampa make the playoffs, they will most likely face the Andrews Mustangs, but there is a slim chance they could face Lubbock Estacado or Lubbock Cooper.

Playoff match ups in Bi-District play are set up by matching the two largest enrollment schools in a game together. Then matching the other schools. Pampa has the largest enrollment from District 3A-1, so if the Harvesters make the playoffs they will face the largest enrollment school to make the playoffs from District 3A-2.

Lubbock Cooper has the highest enrollment from District 3A-2, followed by Andrews, Levelland and then Lubbock Estacado.

Once it is determined what the match up will be, the athletic directors from both schools will try to negotiate a neutral playing field. If negotiations fail, then they flip home and home. That means one school will host the playoff game this year. Then if the two schools meet again in the playoffs within two years, the game will be played on the other team's home field.

As soon as we find out we will let you know when, where and who Pampa will play in the playoffs. A match up breakdown is also possible to come.
