County Commission to hold public hearing Friday

■ Will consider designation of Reinvestment Zone for wind project.

> By Sasha Heller sheller@thepampanews.com

The Gray County Commissioners Court will hold a public hearing at its regular business meeting, set for 9 a.m., Friday, at the Gray County Courthouse.

The hearing is in regards to a wind power generating project, proposed two weeks ago by Pioneer Green Energy, of Austin. The proposal involves Pioneer operating wind farms in Roberts and Hemphill counties but would require installing power lines throughout the western portion of Gray County to connect the wind generators to a power substation located south of Lefors.

At their Feb. 16 meeting, the commissioners approved, by 3-1 vote, to establish criteria for a Reinvestment Zone, covering the area in which the power lines would run through. Commissioner Jeff Haley cast the lone, nay vote. Pioneer is requesting a tax abatement within that zone, which led to the commissioners' debate. At that meeting, Judge Richard Peet expressed hesitation toward the proposal and said he didn't see a need for it.

Peet cited how, in the past, the commissioners would approve a tax abatement for projects that offer employment opportunities for Gray County citizens.

The only jobs created for this phase of the wind project would be for initial construction work, which would last between 6-7 months.

Other notable items on Friday's agenda include consideration of a gas line easement to the new terminal building at Perry Lefors Airport.

The commissioners will also consider a solution to the drainage issue north of the Heliport as well as a resolution to protect and defend the constitutional right to keep and bear arms.

City sales tax revenues are steady, coffers healthy

By Sasha Heller sheller@thepampanews.com

People in Pampa are shopping. They're spending. They're building. And all the while, the City of Pampa collects sales tax revenues which funnel into the city coffers.

The city's sales tax revenue collections maintained a positive outlook for the month of January, as the city collected $334,876. Sales tax collection totals are typically posted two months after they are collected.

As of March, the city is $208,052 over its expected budget, or nearly 17 percent. Sales tax collection totals for FY2013 are $109,711 over FY2012 to date, or 8.3 percent.

So, to what does Finance Director Robin Bailey attribute this positive financial out-

"I would surmise that the increase in sales tax revenue, while directly attributed to an increase in retail sales, is being driven generally by growth in Pampa and our region," Bailey said.

Immunization clinic 3 times a month

By Zachary Green zgreen@thepampanews.com

The Texas Department of State Health Services (DSHS) hosts an immunization clinic in Pampa three times a month.

The clinic is held from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. and from 1 to 3 p.m. on the first three Wednesdays of each month.

The first 10 people in line will always receive shots. However if there are more than 10, they still may be able to accomodate the patients, or ask them to come back at another time. The Field Office Coordinator from the Clarendon Office, Shari Davenport said that if some people are only getting one shot, then they will allow 12 people to be

"Sometimes we take down phone numbers and call people to come back if we aren't as busy as we expected to be," Davenport said. "We do the best we can to get everybody seen if we can."

Shots are given as part of the Texas Vaccines for Children Program. DSHS can only accept children that are on Medicaid, have no insurance or have limited insurance. CLINIC cont. on page 3

U-Top-It first business to announce move into mall

The timing on opening its second location in Pampa should be just right for U-Top-It, an ice cream, frozen yogurt and sandwich shop located in the industrial corridor along Alcock Store owners Louise and James Kephart have just signed a lease for a space in the Pampa Mall. The lease begins in May.

The Kepharts are the first business owners to announce their intentions to do business at the mall, which has been nearly vacant since the mid 1990s. "We plan to open in May, and summer is a good time for yogurt," Louise said.

The shop on Alcock serves ice cream, yogurt, sandwiches, soup and salads. The store in the mall will be smaller and only serve yogurt and smoothies to start with, and then sandwiches will be added to the menu, she said.

The new store will have the same bright, candy-colored decor as the first one, which opened about a year ago, Louise

Assurances sought with potential $2B water fund

AUSTIN (AP) — Lawmakers want assurances that a proposed $2 billion to jumpstart water projects in Texas will be free of the conflicts that have dogged other lucrative funds flush with taxpayer dollars.

Democratic state Sen. John Whitmire on Monday used the state's embattled $3 billion cancer-fighting agency as a cautionary tale as the Legislature moves forward with an unprecedented water spending plan. There is broad support for taking $2 billion from the Rainy Day Fund to finance water projects getting new urgency following a historic Texas Republican Sen. Troy Fraser is carrying the plan in the Senate. Whitmire pressed him on how the state will ensure the money is spent properly and not used to reward political patronage.

Fraser says talks on installing those safeguard are under way.

Search for kayaker suspended at Houston-area pond

HOUSTON (AP) — Emergency responders have suspended their search for a missing man whose kayak was found capsized at a Houstonarea retention pond.

The Harris County Sheriff's Office on Sunday night announced the search for 32-year-old Ryan Smith has been called off pending additional information on him. Further details weren't immediately released. Smith's kayak was discovered Sat-lake and used sonar. Dogs and a Texas Department of Public Safety helicopter were also used in the search.

Texan gets prison for shooting into crop duster

LUBBOCK (AP) — A West Texas man has been sentenced to 1½ years in federal prison for shooting into a crop duster as the plane sprayed a neighbor's fields.

Prosecutors in Lubbock on Monday announced 69-year-old James R. Cate of Talpa must also pay $297,000 in restitution. Cate in November pleaded guilty to making a threat to an aircraft in the February 2012 incident that left the plane heavily damaged.

Investigators say Cate fired into the air to try to keep the chemicaldumping plane away from his fields.

One round hit the propeller, went through the engine cowling and into the chemical hopper. A bullet fragment tore through the leg of the pilot's pants. The pilot wasn't injured.

Cate was sentenced Friday and must report to prison April 12.

Young tree left at tiny park where 1 was stolen

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Was it remorse — or a tiny tree fairy? Portland parks officials say a Douglas Fir sapling resembling one stolen from a tiny Portland park has appeared at the 2-foot-diameter oasis.

Last week's theft captured the city's attention. On Wednesday, park staffers planted a replacement sapling to fill the hole left in the center of the park.

Parks officials say a passing driver posted a comment online Friday, noting that a young tree, roots and all, was lying on its side beside the replacement tree. The unidentified driver speculated that perhaps the "arborious criminal was feeling remorse."

Parks Director Mike Abbate says if the latest tree is healthy, it will be planted in another city park.

Even if the thief returned the tree, Sgt. Pete Simpson says police will continue their investigation. In his words, "Remorse does not mean 'case closed.'

The tiny park lies in a median strip in downtown Portland near the Willamette River. It was established by newspaper columnist Dick Fagan in the 1940s and became an official city park in 1976.

A year ago it was an old, ugly piece of junk rusting away on a hillside in Lawrenceburg, Tenn.

Rick Munguia's Dodge Dart is old, 50 years to be exact, but whether it's ugly — that's in the eyes of the beholder.

"My brother told me, Why do you want to buy that car? It's so ugly.' But after I looked at it I knew I had to have it."

Munguia, who owned Rick's Body Shop in Pampa for 30 years, was staying with his brother in Tennessee as his brother was being treated for cancer.

Even the music playing on the car's stereo while Munguia was towel-drying his cherished ride Monday at Tay's Mighty Wash was original for the Dart's era: Jerry Lee Lewis' "Whole Lotta Shakin' Goin' On."

Rather than a ferocious big-block 383 or 440 roarDart is modestly powered by a slant-six with 225 cubic inches.

The feisty little engines are revered by mechanics from days of yore for their reliability and ease of maintenance.

No matter how you beef it up, the slant-six will never win any drag races.

However, it did have enough gumption to keep up with the semi trucks on the interstates on the drive from Tennessee to Texas, Munguia said.

'Four months after I finished restoring it, I flew back to Lawrenceburg to drive it back to Pampa,' he said. "The 900 miles was good for breaking in the engine."

The motor is original, but completely rebuilt.

Munguia said he likes the car because it's so unique from anything else you see on the road today.

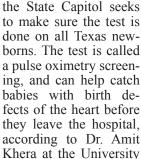

"I've never seen another one like it out on the road," he said.

Push for newborn heart defect testings in Texas

Recovery slow as Japan marks 2 years since tsunami

TOKYO (AP) — Amid dissatisfaction with the slow pace of recovery, Japan marked the second anniversary Monday of the devastating earthquake and tsunami that left nearly 19,000 people dead or missing and has displaced more than 300,000.

Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe said that the government intends to make "visible" reconstruction progress and accelerate resettlement of those left homeless by streamlining legal and administrative procedures many blame for the delays.

"I pray that the peaceful lives of those affected can resume as soon as possible," Emperor Akihito said at a somber memorial service at Tokyo's National Theater.

At observances in Tokyo and in still barren towns along the northeastern coast, those gathered bowed their heads in a moment of silence marking the moment, at 2:46 p.m. on March 11, 2011, when the magnitude 9.0 earthquake — the strongest recorded in Japan's history struck off the coast. Japan has struggled to rebuild communities and to clean up radiation from the Fukushima Dai-ichi nuclear plant, whose reactors melted down after its cooling systems were disabled by the tsunami. The government has yet to devise a new energy strategy — a central issue for its struggling economy with all but two of the country's nuclear reactors offline

About half of those displaced are evacuees from areas near the nuclear plant. Hundreds of them filed a lawsuit Monday demanding compensation from the government and the now-defunct plant's operator, Tokyo Electric Power Co., or TEPCO, for their suffering and losses. "Two years after the disasters, neither the government nor TEPCO has acknowledged their responsibility, nor have they provided sufficient support to cover the damages, said Izutaro Managi, a lawyer representing the plaintiffs.

Throughout the disaster zone, the tens of thousands of survivors living in temporary housing are impatient to get resettled, a process that could take up to a decade, officials say.

"What I really want is to once again have a 'my home," " said Migaku Suzuki, a 69-year-old farm worker in Rikuzentakata, who lost the house he had just finished building in the disaster. Suzuki also lost a son in the tsunami, which obliterated much of the city.

Further south, in Fukushima prefecture, some 160,000 evacuees are uncertain if they will ever be able to return to homes around the nuclear power plant, where the meltdowns in three reactors spewed radiation into the surrounding soil and water. The lawsuit filed by a group of 800 people in Fukushima demands an apology payment of 50,000 yen ($625) a month for each victim until all radiation from the accident is wiped out, a process that could take decades. Another 900 plan similar cases in Tokyo and elsewhere. Managi said he and fellow lawyers hope to get 10,000 to join the lawsuits.

Evacuees are anxious to return home but worried about the potential, still uncertain risks from exposure to the radiation from the disaster, the worst since Chernobyl in 1986.

While there have been no clear cases of cancer linked to radiation from the plant, the upheaval in people's lives, uncertainty about the future and longterm health concerns, especially for children, have taken an immense psychological toll on thousands of residents.

"I don't trust the government on anything related to health anymore," said Masaaki Watanabe, 42, who fled the nearby town of Minami-Soma and doesn't plan to return.

Yuko Endo, village chief in Kawauchi, said many residents might not go back if they are kept waiting too long. Restrictions on access are gradually being lifted as workers remove debris and wipe down roofs by hand.

'If I were told to wait for two more years, I might explode," said Endo, who is determined to revive his town of mostly empty houses and overgrown

A change of government late last year has raised hopes that authorities might move more quickly with the cleanup and reconstruction.

Since taking office in late December, Abe has made a point of frequently visiting the disaster zone, promising faster action and plans to raise the long-term reconstruction budget to 25 trillion yen ($262 billion) from 19 trillion yen (about $200 billion).

Even ancient mummies had clogged arteries

(AP) LONDON Even without modernday temptations like fast food or cigarettes, people had clogged arteries some 4,000 years ago, according to the biggest-ever hunt for the condition in mummies.

Researchers say that suggests heart disease may be more a natural part of human aging rather than being directly tied to contemporary risk factors like smoking, eating fatty foods and not exercising.

CT scans of 137 mummies showed evidence of atherosclerosis, or hardened arteries, in one third of those examined, including those from ancient people believed to have healthy lifestyles. Atherosclerosis heart attacks and strokes. More than half of the mummies were from Egypt while the rest were from Peru, southwest America and the Aleutian islands in Alaska. The mummies were from about 3800 B.C. to 1900

A.D. "Heart disease has been stalking mankind for over 4,000 years all over the globe," said Dr. Randall Thompson, a cardiologist at Saint Luke's Mid America Heart Institute in Kansas City and the paper's lead author.

with The mummies clogged arteries were older at the time of their death, around 43 versus 32 for those without the condition. In most cases, scientists couldn't say whether the heart disease killed them. The study results were announced Sunday at a meeting of the American College of Cardiology in San Francisco and simultaneously published online in the journal Lancet. Thompson said he was surprised to see hardened arteries even in people like the ancient Aleutians who were presumed to have a healthy lifestyle as hunter-gatherers. "I think it's fair to say people should feel less guilty about getting heart disease in modern times," he said. "We may have oversold the idea that a healthy lifestyle can completely eliminate your risk. Thompson said there could be unknown factors that contributed to the mummies' narrowed arteries. He said the Ancestral Puebloans who lived in underground caves in modern-day Colorado and Utah, used fire for heat and cooking, producing a lot of smoke. 'They were breathing in a lot of smoke and that could have had the same effect as cigarettes," he

Previous studies have found evidence of heart disease in Egyptian mummies, but the Lancet paper is the largest survey so far and the first to include mummies elsewhere in the world. Dr. Frank Ruehli of the University of Zurich, who runs the Swiss Mummy Project, said it was clear atherosclerosis was notably present in antiquity and agreed there might be a genetic predisposition to the disease.

Has the bell begun to toll for China?

BUCHANAN

Leader, Xi

Jinping, told a closed meeting of party

elite in Guangdong prov-

"Finally all it took was one quiet word from Gorbachev to declare the dissolution of the Soviet Communist Party, and a great party was gone," said Xi, according to notes obtained by The New York Times.

"Everyone is talking about reform, but in fact everyone has a fear of reform," said Chinese historian Ma Jong. "The question is: Can society be kept under control while you go forward? That is the test." That is indeed the test.

What is it that gives a party its legitimacy, its right to rule? What holds a nation together when its cradle faith, its founding ideology, has been abandoned by both elites and the people? That is China's coming crisis.

With victory in the civil war with the Nationalists in 1949, Mao claimed to have liberated China from both Japanese imperialists and Western colonialists, and restored her dignity. "China has stood up!" he said. Only a party with total power could lead a world revolution. Only an all-powerful party could abolish inequality in a way that made the French Revolution look like a rebellion at Berkeley. Xi Jinping's problem? The Cold War is over. China is herself in the capitalist camp, a member of the G-8, and inequality in the People's Republic resembles that of America in the Gilded Age. How does the Chinese Communist Party justify control of all of China's institutions today — economic, political, military and ultural?

If Marxism is mocked behind closed doors by a new economic elite and tens of millions of Chinese young, what can cause the nation to continue to respect and obey a Communist Party and its leaders, besides the gun?

Nationalism, tribalism, patriotic war if necessary, will bring the masses back. If the Chinese nation is being insulted, if ancestral lands are occupied by foreigners as in olden times, the people will rally around a regime that stands up for China. Nationalism will keep Chinese society "under control while you go forward."

Japan's Prime Minister Shinzo Abe traces the aggressiveness of Beijing in the Senkaku Islands dispute to a "deeply ingrained" need to appeal to Chinese nationalism in the form of anti-Japanese sentiment dating to the Sino-Japanese War of 1937-1945. Chinese nationalism, says Abe, is also behind China's quarrels with Vietnam and other nations over islands of the South China Sea.

If Beijing is unable to deliver economic growth, "it will not be able to control the 1.3 billion people ... under the one-party rule," Abe told The Washington Post. He is now denying those quotes. But China is not alone in stoking the flames of nationalism to maintain legitimacy.

Abe has himself taken a firm stand against China in the Senkakus and is moving rightward on patriotism, security and a defense of Japan's history in the 20th century, and he is rising in the polls. The apologetic and pacifist Japan of yesterday is no more. If our economy should sink like Southern Europe's, if the great god Progress no longer smiles upon us, what do we fall back

How patients treat their doctors

Q: Our family doctor and I became friends in the fourth grade, and we've been friends

e've been friends ever since. Recently after golfing, we enjoyed a glass of wine and relaxed. I asked him what his main gripes were about his patients. He felt most doctors believe they are bearing the brunt of the growing anger about health care. Reasons given include knowing that more money is coming out of their pocket for treatment and medications, juggling Medicare options, increasing insurance costs and decreasing payouts for treatment and medications, and they fear the worst is still ahead. Do you foresee more challenges?

A: Unfortunately we are aware that is where we are headed. Population growth, uncertain governmental regulations, higher insurance rates and larger deductibles are in the hopper, and the strong possibility of inflation increasing lies on the table.

Doctors are also concerned about the growing rudeness of patients. Because seniors experience declining health, they are often lonely and unhappy, have less money, and there is the looming fear of not being able to take care of them. Seniors often become crankier and depressed. Although patients do not usually intentionally lie, doctors know many of their patients are not taking their meds because they cannot afford them, they know they're not exercising but smoking, overdrinking, and other diagnostic questions.

Most patients want their doctors to like them. Sometimes they omit information to obtain handicapped parking permits, or they don't reveal using substances injurious to their own health. The interaction between patients and doctors are best served by both parties agreeing that honesty and trust provides the denominator for better health!

Q: My grandparents love me as I do them. However, as a struggling college student away at school, I am unable to spend much time with them when I can come home for holidays and vacations. I feel the tension and competition between my families in wanting me to share my short time with them. My girlfriend is a high school senior, and we need our short time together, too. How can I best manage to juggle my wonderful, loving family, my woman and successfully graduate?

A: How fortunate that you are in such demand! Make it a point to discuss your time limitations with your family and girlfriend. This is the time when you are under pressure to finish your education, begin your career and hopefully find a passion for your life. When you are at school, try to squeeze in a few phone calls to let them know how challenged you currently are. This will make them feel they are sharing your maturity. Although postcards and writing are out of style, buying a dozen notecards and occasionally sending a few words of your activities means more to them than you can imagine. It reminds them of your love and makes a world of difference to those who receive them.

Doug Mayberry makes the most of life in a Southern California retirement community.

Prairie Plains Perspective

Some clarity and continuation of last week's column

It's the red bricks with me, particularly their historical significance. 'Twas the world champion brick layer, Indian Jim Brown himself, who led the construction of

led the construction of our downtown streets, turning them from rutted dirt or rain induced muck into the redness you see today. Heck, Indian Jim was dead and gone when Dr. Bellamey spanked my arse that first day of my life back in August of 1949, and when one considers quality control for longevity's sake, Indian Jim did quite a job! Ever notice how our bricked streets are devoid of pot holes?

In fact, the only time they create a vehicular protest is due to infrastructure repair and when replaced, the bricks are not properly leveled. That was an A.D.D. moment, I know, I've many, but in light of the recent Blizzard of 2013 snow induced chug holes all over town, I find that red brick fact fascinating.

In regard to my take on storefront churches. It is not from an anti religion slant, don't even go there. Churches are a fundamental part of our communities in America. A sign of our times and politics is the sad fact there are those among us wishing churches would be no more. I am not one of them. I simply think that downtown commercial districts are meant for just that and nothing more. My irritation over storefront churches gracing our downtown is due to state law. We already have two storefront churches downtown on the 200 block of North Cuyler

If a revitalization of our downtown were to occur, say a restaurant like Canadian's Cattle Exchange or a national chain like Chili's is desirous of a new location, and say come this May 11 Pampa's liquor by the drink initiative passes, state law would prohibit a restaurant from serving any alcohol related drinks because they would be within 300 feet of a church. Again for clarity's sake, the state law is a good law, however, one or both churches decide to establish a school, we're now looking at a requirement of no closer than 1,000 feet.

If you look at center city revitalization programs across America, an incremental part of those redevelopments are restaurants. You can argue all you want about this fact, but those of you spending a portion of your day shopping in Amarillo, who take time to dine at cafes and eateries there that serve mixed drinks, haven't a soap box to stand upon. A Pampa restaurant owner deserves the additional rewards liquor by the drink will bring along with the increase our city sales tax revenues will incur.

city sales tax revenues will incur.
My grousing isn't limited to storefront churches. The old First National Bank aka Bank America building at 100 N. Cuyler St. is very significant to Pampa's history, but what do you see when you look out the building's front door and windows, a mixed martial arts/kick boxing establishment (if it even is still open for business?) For the matter, you can get your senses knocked loose in what is another historically significant structure, the M. E. Moses 5 and 10 Cent building. Take away Brandon's Flowers 1960s facade, you would be amazed (I remember) at the fine brick structure hidden underneath.

Open Range Engineering has brought back the old Montgomery Ward to it's former glory. Question, and not another A.D.D. moment. Who is the "goddess" adorning the bas relief on the topmost part of the old "Monkey Ward" building?

There are also buildings that desperately need to come down. Pampa's skyscraper of note, the crumbling eyesore and pigeon roost known as the Hughes Building, the Capri Theater... Implosions are neat to watch...

I'm willing to bet the ranch most buildings on Cuyler from the railroad underpass northward having those architecturally disgusting 1950s-1960s facades, were they to come off, would expose a beautiful assortment of storefronts that would attract new retail businesses that a Mainstreet USA type project would bring. Yep, I've become the old horse out to pasture in regard to my beloved Pampaville. She's taken many a hit over my lifetime, but nothing so bad that she cannot be brought back to life. First place to start is downtown.

Government mooch

One of the sorriest men that I ever met was way smarter than me, better educated than me, made more money than me throughout his life and had a better resume than me. Basically in all of these external ways he outshined me by a mile. However, let me tell you a couple of other things. In his 50s he had a heart attack and was down for a few months. During this time he ap-SUBLETT plied for and received monthly government assistance because he was unable to work. He grew quite accustomed to that monthly check. After a few months passed he grew stronger, more fit and able to work again. HOWEVER, he realized that if he went back to work then that monthly check would stop and he would have to start all over again on his "disabled" time. By then he had been on the role for about 6 months. That is when he learned that if he could just somehow make it not working for another 6 months and get a full year under his belt as "disabled", then he had a great chance to get on the fully disabled roll. Once that happened, those check would be coming for the rest of his life. And that's exactly what he did.

He took great pride in the fact that he not only got his significant monthly check, but that he had full benefits as well, also through the government because he was disabled. I have seen him climb 2 flights of tiny stais into an attic area, carry lumber up those stairs and work most of the day building something in his house. Those kind of activities were not uncommon.

He also had a "handicapped" sticker on his car from when he had his heart attack and he kept it up to date. He took great pride in parking in handicapped spots, even though he was perfectly capable of walking the length of any parking lot. If any of us said anything he would just laugh.

He also was a veteran so that meant that he was a disabled veteran and always got to go to the head of the line. He showed me his hearing aid one day, the very best one they made, about $3,000 I think. I commented that I didn't remember seeing it before. He replied, "Well, I don't wear it, I just get it every time I qualify for a new one." He did the same with contacts and glasses and didn't wear any of them.

I asked him one day why he stole from the government like that. He laughed and said that he didn't see it as stealing, just getting all that he had coming to him.

Want to know one of the things that is really WRONG with America. There are way too many Americans who get up each day and ask themselves: "How can I get more stuff from the government?" They don't see that all that government money comes right out of the pocket of some hard working American who paid their taxes.

Too many Americans don't see stealing as stealing. But one day they will discover that Father God was watching the whole time and He was making His list and checking it twice and He definitely has a NAUGHTY and NICE list. And people who lived lives stealing from others whether with a gun or legally from the government, will find out that God looks at things very, very differently.

The good news? There is still time to repent. How? STOP STEALING! Just because you qualify for something doesn't mean that you should take it. STOP STEALING!

Get up each day and work hard and let God help provide for you. God bless. Mike

Cardinals celebrate Mass before entering conclave

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Cardinals heard a final appeal for unity Tuesday before sequestering themselves in the Sistine Chapel for the conclave to elect the next pope, as they celebrated Mass amid divisions and uncertainty over who will lead the 1.2 billion-strong Catholic Church and tend to its many problems.

Gregorian chant echoed through St. Peter's Basilica as the 115 cardinal electors filed in wearing bright red vestments, many looking grim as if the burden of the imminent vote was weighing on them.

A few hundred people braved thunderstorms and pouring rain to watch the Mass on giant TV screens in St. Peter's Square. A handful knelt in prayer, eyes clenched and hands clasped. In his homily, Cardinal Angelo Sodano, dean of the College of Cardinals, called for unity within the church, a not-so-veiled appeal to the cardinal electors to put their differences aside for the good of the church and the next pope. "Each of us is therefore called to cooperate with the Successor of Peter, the visible foundation of such an ecclesial unity," Sodano said. He said the job of pope is to be merciful, charitable and "tirelessly promote justice and peace."

He was interrupted by applause from the pews — not so much from the cardinals - when he referred to the "beloved and venerated" Benedict XVI and his "brilliant" pontificate. Sitting in the front row was Benedict's longtime aide, Archbishop Georg Gaenswein.

Benedict's surprise resignation — the first in 600 years by a pope — has thrown the church into turmoil and exposed the deep divisions among cardinals who are grappling with whether they need a manager who can clean up the Vatican's dysfunctional bureaucracy or a pastor who can inspire Catholics at a time of waning faith. For over a week, they met behind closed

But they ended the debate on Monday with questions still unanswered and many cardinals predicting a drawn-out election that will further expose the church's divi-"Let us pray for the cardinals who are to elect the Roman pontiff," read one of the prayers during the Mass. "May the Lord fill them with his Holy Spirit with understanding and good counsel, wisdom and discernment.' In his final radio address before being sequestered, U.S. Cardinal Timothy Dolan on Tuesday said a certain calm had taken hold over him, as if "this gentle Roman rain is a sign of the grace of the Holy Spirit coming upon us.'

He said he at least felt more settled about the task at hand. "And there's a sense of resignation and conformity with God's plan. It's magnificent," he said during his regular radio show on "The Catholic Channel" on SiriusXM.

"It's almost a microcosm of life itself, you know how you try to make the right decisions in conformity with God's holy will. And I think that's what's happening now. I just hope I see you soon."

One of the faithful outside alluded to the huge challenge facing the next pontiff.

"It's a moment of crisis for the church so we have to show support of the new pope," said Veronica Herrera, a real estate agent from Mexico who traveled to Rome for the conclave with her husband and daughter.

Yet the mood was not entirely somber or

A group of women who say they are priests launched pink smoke from a balcony overlooking the square during the Mass to demand female ordination — a play on the famous smoke signals that will tell the world whether a pope has been elected.

This year you become familiar with the unexpected, so much so that you happens. Your luck with money depends on how well you respond to your inner voice. Sometimes you are an emotional spender. Be careful. If you are single, remember that you don't need to impress a new suitor; you want this person to see you as you are. If you are attached, the two of you might make a major investment that you both find exciting. ARIES can challenge your thinking about money and investments.

PAMPA'S LADY HARVESTERS ARE SNYDER TOURNAMENT WINNERS

PHS soccer vs. Dumas: girls win, boys tie

By Zachary Green

zgreen@thepampanews.com

The Pampa soccer teams hosted Dumas Monday night. The girls team won 1-0.

The goal was scored by Cheyenne Young. "This game was all about possessing the ball. We were able to hold onto it at key times and attack their goal. We were only able to get one in, but we kept placing shots on goal, and forced Dumas' defense to work for the entire match," said Pampa coach David Willis. "On the defensive side, most times we were able to force the Demons offsides when they were able to connect passes. When they were able to bring the ball to our goal, the defense made some great saves.'

Willis credited Karen Duarte, Olga Garcia, Macie Loggins, Tristen Morgan, Karoley Villareal, and Taylor Bolton as key players to the victory.

The girls team also played

Caprock on Friday night and

"We weren't making passes or runs effectively in this game," Willis said. "We took almost no shots on goal, and we couldn't get a good offensive push.'

Willis listed the key players as Viante Ellison, Villareal and Garcia. The girls soccer team is now 2-12 on the season.

They will be back in action in Amarillo against Randall on March 19 and they will finish their season at home March 21 against Amarillo High.

Boys soccer

The Pampa boys soccer team played Dumas to a tie on Monday night. "There are a lot of techniques and tactics a club can use to play for a tie, but I don't think one soul in the stadium could accuse us of that tonight. Dumas had several kids who were back from eligibility issues, and that gave their three-forward system some serious bite," said Pampa coach Byron May. "Our kids went toe-to-toe with them, and took several shots of our own. Even though the result wasn't what we were working for, this might have been the best soccer we've played all season. Dumas was in the hunt for the playoffs, but our two ties have effectively eliminated them from contention. The kids take pride in that, and so do I. In fact, these kids have a lot to be proud of. They have transformed themselves over the course of the season."

"I don't know how many shots on goal (sophomore midfielder) Alan Stovall had tonight, but he was everywhere. I really thought he was going to find the back of the net out of sheer determination," May added. "There's not enough words to describe the young man's singleness of focus, but that's the only term I can think would describe him tonight."

The boys soccer team moves to 2-14-2 on the season. Much like the girls they will be back in action on March 19 in Amarillo against Randall before coming home on March 21 for the final regular season game against Amarillo High.

Boldin, Harvin traded as NFL free agency nears

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

On the eve of NFL free agency, trades involving top receivers Anguan Boldin and Percy Harvin grabbed the headlines.

In an odd twist Monday, Boldin went from the Ravens to the San Francisco 49ers, the team he helped Baltimore beat 34-31 in last month's Super Bowl.

Harvin, who expressed his discontent in Minnesota, was sent to Seattle, where he will join former Vikings teammate Sidney Rice.

San Francisco acquired the 32-year-old Boldin for a sixthround draft pick. Boldin, a star in Baltimore's run to the Super Bowl title last season, must pass a physical to complete the deal. "Anquan was a great receiver for myself and for our football team," said quarterback Joe Flacco, who signed a six-year, $120.6 million deal with the Ravens last week. "It's sad to see a guy like that go, but at the same time, you want what's best for him and you just wish him the best of luck.

Boldin had six catches for 104 yards and a touchdown in the Super Bowl victory. He had said he'd consider retirement rather than leave Baltimore. But going to the NFC champions might change his mind.

The 24-year-old Harvin, Minnesota's moody and multitalented receiver, will join the Seahawks for a package of draft picks that includes Seattle's firstround selection next month, No. 25 overall. He also must pass a physical.

Minnesota will also get Seattle's seventh-round pick this year and third-round selection in 2014.

Harvin was producing at an All-Pro level until badly spraining his left ankle last Nov. 4 in a game at Seattle. He was placed on injured reserve a month later. He led the NFL in total yards at the time of his injury.

Harvin, who also has suffered from migraines, will enter the fifth and final season of his rookie deal with a $2.9 million salary that's well under market value - unless the Seahawks rework it.

Also Monday:

—The Giants are allowing Victor Cruz to enter restricted free agency, placing a first-round tender on the wide receiver.

Team owner John Mara said the Giants will risk having Cruz agree to a contract with another club. New York has the right to match any offer. If the Giants allow him to leave, they will get a first-round draft choice as com-

The tender is worth $2.879 million for 2012 for Cruz, who has not made half of that in his three pro seasons.

—Cornerback DeAngelo Hall was cut by the Redskins, a casualty of the team's NFL-imposed salary cap penalty. Washington is over the cap because of an $18 million sanction for the way it structured contracts during the 2010 uncapped season.

Hall had two years remaining on the six-year, $54 million deal and was due to make $7.5 million in salary in 2013.

—The Broncos released nineyear veteran linebacker D.J. Williams, freeing up his $6 million salary in 2013 for other needs. Williams missed nine games while serving a pair of NFL-mandated suspensions last season and was deemed expendable after Wesley Woodyard had a breakout season at weakside linebacker.

Denver also released third quarterback Caleb Hanie, who didn't take a single snap in his one season in Denver, and finalized a three-year deal to keep backup safety David Bruton, their top special teams player.

- The Jets signed quarterback David Garrard to back up and provide a challenge to starter Mark Sanchez. Garrard has not played in the NFL since 2010. He started 76 games in nine seasons with Jacksonville and played in the 2009 Pro Bowl.

-The Cardinals released running back Beanie Wells after four injury-plagued seasons. A first-round pick in 2009, Wells showed flashes of the brilliance he had at Ohio State, but has only played one full season his rookie year.

Wells eclipsed 1,000 yards and scored 10 touchdowns in 2011, but was limited to eight games last season due to turf toe. Dallas released linebacker

Dan Connor and restructured the contracts of guard Mackenzy Bernadeau, defensive tackle Jay Ratliff and cornerback Orlando Scandrick.

Connor was one of seven free agents Dallas added in free agency last offseason. He got a two-year contract and started eight games after Sean Lee and Bruce Carter were injured.

- Tennessee placed a secondround tender on center Fernando Velasco before the start of free agency. If another team offers Velasco a contract, the tender allows the Titans to match the offer or receive a second-round selection in April's draft from the team signing the lineman.

Velasco started 16 games for Tennessee last season with 13 at center and three at guard, and he has played in 49 career games for the Titans after signing originally in 2008 as an undrafted free agent out of Georgia.

- St. Louis released Quintin Mikell, a strong safety, to clear salary cap space. He was third on the team with 114 tackles and three sacks and three forced fumbles.

Dahl started every game at free safety and had 100 tackles and an interception but struggled in coverage.

Lent devotionals through Friday by Pastor Mike Sublett

Day 26 – Thursday

Scripture: Mt 27:24-31; Mk 15:15-20; Lk 23:23-25; Jn 19:1-16

"Here

is your king," Pilate said

But they shouted,

''Take

him away!

Take him

Mike Sublett

Crucify him!" "Shall I crucify your king?" Pilate asked.

"We have no king but Caesar," the chief priests answered.

With loud shouts they insistently demanded that he be crucified, and their shouts prevailed.

When Pilate saw that he was getting nowhere, but that instead an uproar was starting, he decided to grant their demand. He took water and washed his hands in front of the crowd. "I am innocent of this man's blood," he said. "It is your responsibility!"

All the people answered, "Let his blood be on us and on our children!" Finally Pilate surrendered Jesus to their will and handed him over to them to be crucified. (The Gospels Interwoven,)

Devotional:

Because it was part of the Governor's household utensils, it no doubt far out-shined the caliber of basin that Jesus had used to hold the water for cleaning the disciple's feet. That one was probably made of wood or clay, but this one was surely brass or silver or gold.

Its historically priceless value had little to do with the metal material. It was the basin that held the water when Pilate tried to escape his guilt and condemnation by washing his hands clean.

When all was said and done, Pilate's hands were wet, but he was 100% guilty in the eyes of the Creator God, the Father of the one he just sent to be crucified. Pilate learned that day that water can do many things, but it cannot cleanse the soul. What a ridiculous man he was; what a fool. How could he think something so silly?

Ooooops. Have I been that silly? How often have

I sacrificed something during Lent thinking that it might help hide something from God's eyes that I had done? When I was baptized was my faith in the water or in Jesus? Do I profess my commitment to Christ loudly, but then spend little time with His Word-the Bible? Have I gone on and on about how much I love Jesus, but never tithed? Do I go to the grocery store or Wal-Mart more often than I do church? How often am I silly?

Prayer: Jesus, I need to see more clearly. I don't want to be blind like Pilate. I don't want to ever see anything as the cleansing ingredient used against sin except Your blood. I don't ever want my faith to be in anything I do. I just want my faith to be in You and for my eyes to see more clearly than Pilate's did. With You that clarity of vision is possible because "all things are possible through Christ who strengthens me." Amen.

Day 27 – Friday

Scripture: Mt 27:32-44;

Mk 15:21-32; Lk 23:26-

43; Jn 19:17-27 They led him away, carrying his own cross. As they were going out, they met a man from Cyrene, named Simon, the father of Alexander and Rufus. He was passing by on his way in from the country. They seized Simon, put the cross on him and forced him to carry it behind Jesus. (The Gospels Interwoven,)

Devotional:

We don't know the type of wood from which it was constructed. We don't know how tall it was. We don't know how much it weighed. We don't know how wide it was. In fact, all we really know is that it was the cross on which the only begotten Son of God was nailed and hung and murdered. All of the things we don't know pale in comparison to what we do know.

It is a historical fact that Jesus was just one of thousands upon thousands who were crucified by the Romans; just one of the many who died this excruciating death. So why doesn't that make this event commonplace? Normally if something happened even a hundred times I would begin to consider it ordinary. But now it is impossible for me to look at a cross and not remember Him. No matter how many I see, no matter how ornate they are, no matter what material they are made from, no matter how large or small, no matter how valuable or inexpensive, no matter their unique design or presentation, no matter if they hang on a wall or around my neck, IT IS IMPOSSI-BLE FOR ME TO LOOK AT ANY CROSS AND NOT REMEMBER HIM. However, I know people who look at crosses and even wear them who seldom remember Him. Why is that? Why do they NOT remember Him, while I can't help but remember Him? Why do they take Him so much for granted, while I am aroused to worship and tears when I see a cross? What is the differ-

The difference rests in the Holy Spirit. There was a day a long time ago when I once again heard the gospel story of His coming and His death. But that time was different. The Holy Spirit came and stabbed me in my heart with His sword.

That allowed my earthly eyes to be opened so that I could finally see the gospel story for the precious treasure that it always was. And once anyone sees the gospel for what it really is, there is only one possible response-SURRENDER.

That is why I cannot see a cross without thinking about Him.

Prayer:

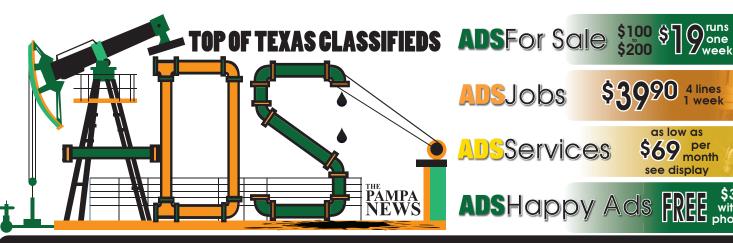

Holy Spirit, thank You so very much for wounding me in my heart that day. Please, help me never see any cross as something common.

In my mind and heart and spirit may that symbol always be directly connected to the cross on Calvary. Thank You for making that a reality in my life. Thank You for cutting

Your way into my life. Mike Sublett is a pastor at Hi-Land Christian Church, 1615 N. Banks St., Pampa, Texas 79065. Email him at pawdad@ nts-online.net.

My problem concerns my other gay friends, mostly Democrats, who don't like Mark because he's a Republican. I have tried explaining to them that we overlook our differences and concentrate on the many things we have in common, and they should try to do the same. But they no longer invite me to gatherings and their phone calls have ceased.

US citing security to censor more public records

- The U.S. government, led by the Pentagon and CIA, censored or withheld for reasons of national security the files that the public requested last year under the Freedom of Information Act more often than at any time since President Barack Obama took office, according to a new analysis by The Associated Press.

Overall, the Obama administration last year answered its highest number of requests so far for copies of government documents, emails, photographs and more, and it slightly reduced its backlog of requests from previous years. But it more often cited legal provisions allowing the government to keep records or parts of its records secret, especially a rule intended to protect national security.

AP's analysis showed the government released all or portions of the information that citizens, journalists, businesses and others sought at about the same rate as the previous three years. It turned over all or parts of the records in about 65 percent of requests. It fully rejected more than one-third of requests, a slight increase over 2011, including cases when it couldn't find records, a person refused to pay for copies or the request was determined to be improp-

The government's responsiveness under the FOIA is widely viewed as a barometer of the federal offices' transparency. Under the law, citizens and foreigners can compel the government to turn over copies of federal records for zero or little cost. Anvone who seeks information through the law is generally supposed to get it unless disclosure would hurt national security, violate personal privacy or expose business secrets or confidential decisionmaking in certain areas.

The AP's review comes at the start of the second term for Obama, who promised during his first week in office that the s signature openrecords law would be "administered with a clear presumption: In the face of doubt, openness prevails." The review examined figures from the largest federal departments and agencies. Sunday was the start of Sunshine Week, when news organizations promote open government and freedom of information.

White House spokesman Eric Schultz said in a statement that during the past year, the government "processed more requests, decreased the backlog, improved average processing times and disclosed more information

The administration cited exceptions built into the law to avoid turning over materials more than 479,000 times, a roughly 22 percent increase over the previous year. In many cases, more than one of the law's exceptions was cited in each request for

In a year of intense public interest over deadly U.S. drones, the raid that killed Osama bin Laden, terror threats and more, the government cited national security to withhold information at least 5,223 times — a jump over 4,243 such cases in 2011 and 3,805 cases in Obama's first year in office. The secretive CIA last year became even more secretive: Nearly 60 percent of 3,586 requests for files were withheld or censored for that reason last year, compared with 49 percent a year earlier.

Other federal agencies that invoked the national security exception included the Pentagon, Director of National Intelligence, NASA, Office of Management and Budget, Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Federal Communications Commission and the departments of Agriculture, Commerce, Energy, Homeland Security, Justice, State, Transportation, Treasury and Veter-

a problem because of contradictory constraints and rules — a veritable Catch-22," the judge wrote. "I can find no way around the thicket of laws and precedents that effectively allow the executive branch of our government to proclaim as perfectly lawful certain actions that seem on their face incompatible with our Constitution and laws, while keeping the reasons for their conclusion a secret."

The AP could not determine whether the administration was abusing the national security exemption or whether the public was asking for more documents about sensitive subjects. Nearly half the Pentagon's 2,390 denials last year under that clause came from its National Security Agency, which monitors Internet traffic and phone calls world-

"FOIA is an imperfect law, and I don't think that's changed over the last four years since Obama took office," said Alexander Abdo, an ACLU staff attorney for its national security project. "We've seen a meteoric rise in the number of claims to protect secret law, the government's interpretations of laws or its understanding of its own authority. In some ways, the Obama administration is actually even more aggressive on secrecy than the Bush administration."

The Obama administration also more frequently invoked the law's "deliberative process" exception to withhold records describing decision-making behind the scenes. Obama had directed agencies to use it less often, but the number of such cases had surged after his first year in office to more than 71,000. After back-toback years when figures steadily declined, as agencies followed the president's instructions, the government cited that reason 66,353 times last year to keep records or parts of records secret.

significantly more requests than it did in 2011. Other agencies, including the State Department, National Transportation Safety Board and Nuclear Regulatory Commission performed worse last year. The State Department, for example, answered only 57 percent of its requests, down from 75 percent a year earlier.

U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services drove a dramatic increase in the number of times DHS censored immigration records under exceptions to police files containing personal information and law enforcement techniques. The agency invoked those exemptions more than 136,000 times in 2012, compared with more than 75,000 a year earlier. Even though USCIS is not a law-enforcement agency, officials used the exceptions specifically reserved for law enforcement.

Under the law, a citizen can ask the government to reconsider its decision to censor or withhold materials. In the roughly 11,000 such instances last year where that happened, the government prevailed just under half the time. In about 3,400 cases the government turned over at least some additional information. These administrative appeals took about five months each.

The only recourse after such an appeal is an expensive lawsuit or to ask the government's FOIA mediator, the Office of Government Information Services, to intervene.

The AP's analysis also found that the government generally took longer to answer requests. Some agencies, such as the Health and Human Services Department, took less time than the previous year to turn over files. But at the State Department, for example, even urgent requests submitted under a fast-track system covering breaking news or events when a person's life was at stake took an average two years to wait for files.

granted so-called expedited processing, which moves an urgent request to the front of the line for a speedy answer, fell from 24 percent in 2011 to 17 percent last year. The CIA denied every such request last year. Under increased budget pressure across the government, agencies more often insisted that people pay search and copying fees. It waived costs in 59 percent of requests, generally when the amount was negligible or the release of the information is in the public interest, a decline from 64 percent of cases a year earlier. At the Treasury Department, which faced questions about its role in auto bailouts and stimulus programs during Obama's first term, only one in five requests were processed at no charge. A year earlier, it granted more than 75 percent of fee waivers. The CIA denied every request last year to waive The 33 agencies that AP examined were: Agency for International Development, CIA, Agriculture Department, Commerce Department, Consumer Product Safety Commission, Defense Department, Education Department, Energy Department, Department of Health and Human Services, Department of Homeland Security, Department of Housing and Urban Development, Interior Department, Justice Department, Labor Department, State Department, Transportation Department, Treasury Department, Department of Veterans Affairs, Environmental Protection Agency, Federal Communications Commission, Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Federal Election Commission, Federal Trade Commission, NASA, National Science Foundation, National Transportation Safety Board, Nuclear Regulatory Commission, Office of Management and Budget, Office of the Director of National Intelligence,

Jury convicts mayor of corruption

DETROIT (AP) — Former Detroit Mayor Kwame Kilpatrick was convicted Monday of corruption charges, ensuring a return to prison for a man once among the nation's youngest big-city leaders.

Jurors convicted Kilpatrick of a raft of crimes, including a racketeering conspiracy charge that carries a maximum punishment of 20 years behind bars. He was portrayed during a five-month trial as an unscrupulous politician who took bribes, rigged contracts and lived far beyond his means while in office until fall 2008.

Kilpatrick wore a surprised, puzzled look at times as U.S. District Judge Nancy Edmunds read the jury's verdict: guilty of 24 charges, not guilty on three and no consensus on three more.

Kilpatrick declined to speak to reporters as he left the courthouse.

Prosecutors said Kilpatrick ran a "private profit machine" out of Detroit's City Hall. The government presented evidence to show he got a share of the spoils after ensuring that Bobby Ferguson's excavating company was awarded millions in work from the water department.

Business owners said they were forced to hire Ferguson as a subcontractor or risk losing city contracts. Separately, fundraiser Emma Bell said she gave Kilpatrick more than $200,000 as his personal cut of political donations, pulling cash from her bra during private meetings. A high-ranking aide, Derrick Miller, told jurors that he often was the middle
