A 21-gun salute

A 21-gun salute was held Monday at McLean Hillcrest Cemetery to honor 18 Civil War veterans buried there. The ceremony to honor the soldiers, who all fought for the Confederacy, was held by Sons of Confederate Veterans, Plemons-Shelby Camp 464, based in Amarillo. According to genealogical research done by Sandra Barnes of the Texas Society Order of Confederate Rose, Chapter 51, assisted by John Mead at the Lovett Memorial Library, there are at least 36 Civil War veterans buried in Gray County. Barnes read the names of the Confederate soldiers at Hillcrest. Out of the 36 Civil War veterans buried throughout the county, four fought for the Union. About 100 people attended the ceremony yesterday in McLean.

HONORING THOSE WHO DIED FOR OUR FREEDOM

Photo by Timothy P. Howsare A Memorial Day service was held at 6:30 p.m. Saturday at Fairview Cemetery in Pampa. Local veterans performed a 21-gun salute in honor of their fallen brethren. Danny Martin, commander of VFW Post 1657 in Pampa, said, "A lot of men don't like to say they love another man. But if you fight with them and are depending on them, you love them." He added the men and women who have died in combat have made the greatest sacrifice of all dying for our freedom.

Americans gather to honor fallen service members

Americans gathered at memorials, museums and monuments and the president laid a wreath at Arlington National Cemetery to honor fallen service members on Memorial Day, as combat in Afghanistan approaches 12 years and the ranks of World War II veterans dwindle.

"Let us not forget as we gather here today that our nation is still at war," President Barack Obama said after laying a wreath at the Tomb of the Unknowns.

"When they give their lives, they are still being laid to rest in cemeteries in quiet corners across our country, including here in Arlington," he said. He told the stories of three soldiers who had died. Each had been devoted to their mission and were praised by others for saving lives.

Earlier in the morning, he and first lady Michelle Obama hosted a breakfast at the White House with "Gold Star" families of service members who have been killed.

Another wreath-laying ceremony was at Franklin D. Roosevelt Four Freedoms Park on the southern tip of Roosevelt Island in New York City. The park is a tribute to President Roosevelt's famous speech calling for all people to enjoy freedom of speech, freedom of worship, freedom from want and freedom from fear.

Mayor Michael Bloomberg joined military leaders and others at the Soldiers' and Sailors' Monument in Manhattan. He said celebrate the day and the good weather but also "remember the sacrifice that was made so that we could be here."

At the National World War II Museum in New Orleans, about 20 bicyclists clustered around veteran and museum volunteer Tom Blakey. The paratrooper in the 82nd Airborne Division jumped at Normandy on D-Day — June 6, 1944 — and in May 1945 helped liberate the work camp at Wobbelin in northwest Germany.

"Most of us wondered why we were there, killing people and being killed," he said. "We didn't do anything to deserve it. When we got to that camp and saw what was there, the lights came on."

The cycling group makes regular weekend training runs, and on Monday started a Memorial Day ride about seven miles away at the national cemetery in Chalmette, where the Battle of New Orleans — the last in the War of 1812 — was fought.

Assessing blame

the ball and then, suddenly, the KID STOPS RUNNING! He's tagged out. We lose by one run.

Now, I'm old school. I played baseball for 15 consecutive seasons, winding up on an adult team called the New York Monarchs. We played Sunday doubleheaders under the scorching Long Island summer sun. I mostly pitched the second game, because the majority of my workingguy teammates were so hung over from Saturday night that we usually got pounded in the first game.

When I was 9, I pitched for O.E. McIntyre, which I think was a furniture store near Levittown. Our coach chewed tobacco. We never stopped running. Too afraid of the coach.

But today it's a whole new ballgame. Most parents are so happy their kids are out of the house and away from the computer that they don't care what they do on the field. Just getting them out there is a huge victory.

I did not scold the kid who stopped running. But I did ask him why. He looked at me in a daze. I let it go.

The after-game meal was at Friendly's, where a fried clam dinner will cost you nearly 2,000 calories. Add the free ice-cream sundae that comes with the dinner, and you're up around 4,000. It says that right on the menu. I ordered an "Asian Salad" and picked off a few clams from my son's plate.

Foolishly, I tried to make a lesson out of the play at home that went against us. I asked my son: "Do you know why Ian stopped?"

He looked up from his "monster sundae" and said: "Dad, you shouldn't be assessing blame."

I swear he said that. Immediately, I called the State Department looking to get him a job on John Kerry's staff.

"I'm not assessing blame. I'm just talking about the play.'

"But, Dad, he's just a kid."

I forged on: "The reason Ian stopped running is that he was afraid he might be thrown out. He hesitated because of fear. You can't play anything afraid.'

My 9-year-old digested that along with his sundae, which was comprised of chocolatemint ice cream covered with hot fudge (3,500 calories).

"But, Dad, it's not his ault.

And it really wasn't Ian's fault. We now live in a world where many parents micromanage their children. Outcomes for the urchins are almost assured. So when a situation arises in which the kid has to make a fast decision, there is almost always hesitation.

That's way different from 1959, when I was making life-and-death decisions daily. Should I climb the "old oak" tree, which was 50 feet high? Of course I should. Right to the top. Did I ask my father for permission to do that? Would Eddie Haskell have asked his dad? (Google that.)

Protecting the kids is usually good. But it comes with a price. Here's a life lesson: Don't stop running if you want to score. And watch those calories at Friendly's.

A squirrel is a rat with good press

While out doing the arborist thing a couple of weeks ago, I was forced to send a Massasauga rattlesnake (look it up...) off to meet the Maker. I didn't want to dispatch the critter, but it was close to a ranch house where I was tending to some trees and the fact of the matter being, rattlesnakes around living quarters aren't such a good thing. Were I out doing my nature thing, well, the Massasauga would have been able to continue it's time on this great earth, for if encountering the little viper under that circumstance, I would have used a walking stick to simply move it out of my way.

Yes, when applicable, I let rattlesnakes live... Plain and simple, rattlesnakes are an important part of our ecosystem. While ruing my role in the snake's demise, I have been thinking about other critters with which we here in the prairie plains are "blessed," and like breeders, even more prolific a rattlesnake around a house, are not such a good thing.

Sipping some coffee while looking out my kitchen window a few autumns ago, I noticed three pair of mating red squirrels and a seventh and obviously single male interloper attempting to dissuade the three busier males from their pro-creativeness. This cannot be good, I thought to myself, for sure as shootin' a few months from now, there will be many more squirrels to add to my already overpopulated trees and yard.

You see, I kept bird feeders full of seeds, seeds for birds, not seeds for bushy-tailed vermin. Though they may be advertised as such, there isn't a squirrel-proof bird feeder out there! The squirrels had to vamoose! I won't tell you how I dispatched the pests, but I will tell you in one months time, 38 of them went to squirrel heaven. I will also tell you my squirrel eradication went for naught, for twice that many replaced them in less than three months time. Squirrels are prolific when it comes to the untold millions of dollars in damage they create for homeowners and electric utilities across the nation. For history's sake and a good example of when mankind interferes with Mother Nature, the red squirrel is not common to the prairie plains. In regard to Pampa's red squirrel population, they were introduced here sometime in the early 1970s. Remember, a squirrel is nothing but a rat with good press.

Next in line on my species must go list is the Eurasian collared dove. You can't miss the things, they have a black ring like collar at the base of their neck. In stead of cooing like our native mourning dove, this invasive species, to quote Judge Lee Waters, "growls", saying to yours truly how disconcerting it was to hear a dove growl. These birds are the generational results of what were once captive caged birds purchased in pet stores that escaped or were let loose. They are spreading across America faster than our 2006 wild fires and have become

Believe you are an eagle and you will fly

Early one morning in the Rocky Mountains of Southern Colorado, two young boys were looking for something "sneaky" to do in order to liven up the last day of their vacation. Walking near the edge of a cliff, one of them spotted an eagle's nest just a few feet below on a small ledge. Both decided that it would be funny to steal one of the eggs and place it in a hen house not too far from their home. They thought it would really be a funny joke to watch the hen with a baby eagle. They never stopped to think how their joke would make Herbie feel.

After placing the egg in the nest, they eagerly watched for the egg to hatch. Nothing happened. For several days they checked each afternoon, but still nothing happened. Soon their curiosity turned to boredom and they forgot all about the egg. It's too bad that Herbie couldn't forget about it.

Late one Monday afternoon the eventful time arrived. The eagle's egg began to move and shake and crack. The cracks grew bigger and bigger and bigger. Soon the egg exploded apart and there lay Herbie. Herbie, like any newborn bird, was eager for the love and excitement of his new world. Instead, Herbie found pain and very unfriendly roommates.

First, Herbie noticed that his mother hen did not act lovingly at all. She knew that he did not belong in her barnyard and she had no intention of making Herbie feel wanted. On top of that, his new brothers did nothing but make fun of everything Herbie did. The were quick to remind him that his squawk was very much out of place with their cheaps. Not only that, but his appearance and size were almost unbearable. Day in and day out this is what Herbie lived with.

The barnyard didn't have to much to offer, either. Herbie detested the food and his tummy was always slightly sick with the smell from the pigpens. Herbie didn't hardly like anything about his new home and surroundings, but what could he do? Therefore, Herbie learned to strut, peck, cluck, eat, and smell like the other chickens.

One day Herbie wandered out of the barnyard and got lost. While looking around for some signs of which way led home, he noticed a strange bird in the sky. Herbie had never seen anything fly that high before. As he watched the bird fly almost effortlessly across the sky, he thought to himself, "I'll bet it doesn't stink up there in the sky like it does in the barnyard." "I'll bet that bird doesn't have to eat that yucky grain like I do." "I'll bet he has more fun soaring in the sky than I do strutting around in the barnyard.'

Suddenly, Herbie's thoughts were interrupted. That big bird was flying directly toward him at an amazing speed. Herbie was terrified and began to run as fast as his legs would carry him. He wished so much that his big wing would help him fly, but no such luck. As he glanced around, Herbie was terrified to see the huge bird land directly in front of him. What was going to happen to him? Was the bird going to eat Herbie? Herbie closed his eyes and expected the worst. Instead of attacking Herbie, the bird said "Hi, my name is Mike Eagle. What's yours?"

Herbie was stunned. He was barely able to whisper, "Mine is Herbie Chicken." Immediately Mike Eagle began to laugh so hard at Herbie that he lost his balance and fell to the ground. "You aren't a chicken, Herbie." Mike exclaimed. "Oh yes I am," Herbie shouted, "I cluck like a chicken. I strut like a chicken. I flap my wings like a chicken. I peck my food like a chicken. I am a chicken.'

Mike Eagle began to quiz Herbie. "Herbie, do you really look like a chicken? Are your wings like a chicken's? Is your beak like a chicken's? Are your claws like a chicken's? Herbie thought and responded, "Well not really, but if I'm not a chicken, then what am I?" Slowly Herbie began to look at himself and then at Mike Eagle. "Let's see. Mike Eagle's claws are like mine. His beak is even like mine. In fact, his whole body looks like mine. Now I know he's not a chicken. Could it be?' In amazement he shouted, "You mean, I am an eagle?"

The discovery shocked Herbie so much that he could hardly stop shouting. "I'm an eagle. I'm an eagle". Suddenly Herbie stopped shouting and began to cry. "I can't really be an eagle. If I were, I'd be able to soar in the sky like you. All I can do is walk around a smelly barnyard." Mike Eagle asked, "Herbie, have you ever tried to fly? Maybe you could if you tried and really wanted to. Do you want to try?" Herbie exclaimed, "But I might fall. That would hurt." Just as Herbie was about to give up on the idea of flying Mike Eagle took off and flew high in the sky.

Suddenly every thought of failure disappeared and only the beauty and joy of flying remained. Herbie told himself, "I'll never know if I really am an eagle unless I try. Herbie hopped over to a cliff in order to make his test flight. The cliff was so high that looking down to the rocks below and thinking about the possibility of falling almost took his breath. However, not even that fear was as strong as his goal — TO FLY!

As Herbie made his way to the edge of the cliff his heart began to beat faster and faster. Mike Eagle shouted, "You can do it Herbie because you ARE an eagle. Now was the time for Herbie to find out just who he really was. He jumped as far out as he could and flapped his wings as fast as possible. To Herbie's amazement he didn't fall. Instead, he was soaring by Mike Eagle's side. "I really am an eagle."

The next few days were the most joyful and exciting that Herbie had ever experienced. He even learned how to eat meat instead of the grain in the barnyard. The air was so clear that Herbie forgot all about the smelly pigpens. All he could think about was how great it was to discover and do what he had been made for. Herbie enjoyed his new world so much that Mike Eagle had a very hard time getting Herbie to rest. Hundreds of new sights and experiences made it seem like he was just being born. Every day became an exciting new experience full of new sights, smells, and sounds.

Then one day as Herbie was thinking how great it was to be an eagle, he passed over his old barnyard. Immediately the old mother hen shouted, "Herbie, you get down here this moment. You know you can't fly. Who do you think you are?" Herbie's brothers were also quick to contribute to his fall. "Don't you remember how you were hatched in a chicken house? How could you possibly think about flying. Chickens can't fly. Nobody from the barnyard has ever been able to fly that high. You'd better get down here before you hurt yourself. "Anyone who was raised in a barnyard has to live there the rest of his life. It's crazy to think that you can fly.

Each time they shouted at Herbie he felt worse. Slowly his attitude began to change. "Maybe I am just fooling myself. Maybe I really am a chicken. If I am, them I certainly have no business up here where only eagles belong." Finally, Herbie talked himself right out of flapping his wings. that is when he began to fall. Things might not have been so bad, but Herbie was up almost 1,000 feet. That kind of fall would surely kill him. Herbie kept falling more quickly each second. Poor Herbie.

Why can't he remember the past few weeks of soaring with the other eagles? Why is he letting those chickens stop him from living as he was meant to live. Why can't he just ignore all of their lies? Doesn't he realize what he is gibing up by quitting? He's gibing up on being an eagle. That's what Herbie was mad for. It's too bad that someone can't tell Herbie all these things he's forgetting. Wait a minute, this is a story and you can do anything you want to in a story. why don't you try talking to Herbie. Go on! Talk to Herbie. Unless he does something fast he'll not only lose the joy of flying with the eagles, but Herbie will die. Go on! Talk to him. His life is in your hands. What will you tell him?

Praise the Lord! I think its working. I don't know what you are telling him, but it's working. Maybe you are reminding him of his birth. Maybe you are telling him about all of the greatness that was placed within him by the Creator. Maybe you are even reminding him about some of his accomplishments which testify to his eagle nature. Maybe you are talking to him about the sadness of not living the life he was made to live. Whatever it is, it sure is working. Herbie remembered the beautiful smell of the air as he soared. He also remembered the taste of meat. He could almost taste the memory of soaring. It felt so exciting to live the life he was made to live. With these memories in mind Herbie spread his great wings. His downward fall was changed into an upward flight. All of his falling speed had been changed into "skyward climb."

Herbie is a rare individual. Once he had his eyes on his goal, he found that he possessed the desire, determination, and strength to reach it. Today, if you travel in southern Colorado near San Isabel Lake you just might get a glimpse of Herbie. If you do, just remember that Herbie's story was designed for people, not for eagles. Humans are born with all of the inner greatness that being created in God's image can pack into our beings. Why then do we allow people to tarnish that greatness by convincing us that mediocrity is our birthright? Why are we content with the smelly barnyard, when the skies themselves were created for our home? Whatever you said to Herbie, say to yourself. Anything that applied to Herbie will apply to you. Where will you make your home? The barnyard? The sky? The choice is yours. Just remember, you were made for the sky by the Creator who knows you even better than you do yourself. Begin today to believe in your inner greatness. Your home is the sky.

quite the problem. Why a problem? They too are prolific breeders, clutching three to four sets of eggs a season, equating to between ten to fifteen more birds a year from one mating pair. What's worse, they are aggressive feeders and will move away smaller indigenous birds from a food source. If shooting a BB or pellet rifle inside our city limits were legal.

I will end with the grackle. Oh, there are more fauna that shouldn't be here, but for the sake of this essay's length and a red pen, enough for the time being. If there is a good example of natural climate change, it is the grackle. We've two species of grackle here in the prairie plains; the boat tailed and the common. Both prolific species cohabitate together and do quite well for birds that were common only to Mexico and Latin America, having moved northward into Texas and southwest states in the early 1980's. When the grackle is not raucously roosting in your mulberry or Bradford pear tree and pooping over everything you own, the bird likes to forage for food from our litter. In that sense, mankind is a reason for the birds being here, but I digress. Take away the litter, grackles would lessen in numbers. What's inane to me is the fact years ago some bureaucrat in the Department of the Interior prairie plains? Simple. The three do not belong here, were not in God's plan for indigenous fauna of our prairie plains. Rattlesnakes, on the other hand, are common to our region, they are part of that plan! There are ways to rid your property of squirrels, most of you know them, and with patience work well. With the Eurasian collared dove and grackle, make noise louder than they do, deny them a food source and eventually the birds will note your property is unfriendly and will roost/feed elsewhere.

U.S. intelligence embraces debate in security issues

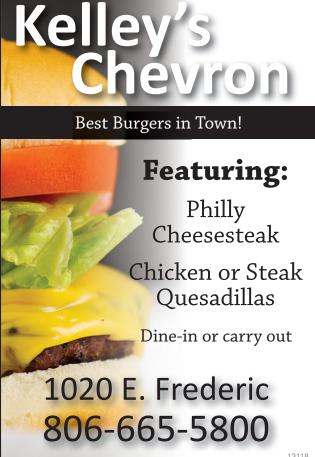

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the months leading up to the killing of Osama bin Laden, veteran intelligence analyst Robert Cardillo was given the nickname "Debbie Downer." With each new tidbit of information that tracked bin Laden to a high-walled compound in northern Pakistan — phone records, satellite imaging, clues from other suspects — Cardillo cast doubt that the terror network leader and mastermind was actually there.

As the world now knows well, President Barack Obama ultimately decided to launch a May 2011 raid on the Abbottabad compound that killed bin Laden. But the level of widespread skepticism that Cardillo shared with other top-level officials — which nearly scuttled the raid — reflected a sea change within the U.S. spy community, one that embraces debate to avoid "slam-dunk" intelligence in tough national security decisions.

The same sort of high-stakes dissent was on public display recently as intelligence officials grappled with conflicting opinions about threats in North Korea and Syria. And it is a vital part of ongoing discussions over whether to send deadly drone strikes against terror suspects abroad — including U.S. citi-

The three cases provide a rare look inside the secretive 16 intelligence agencies as they try to piece together security threats from bits of vague information from around the world.

Cruise ship stories are all wet

TOM MARGENAU Creator's Syndicate

Q: I am a married 64-year-old woman. started getting my Social rate and get a Security at age 62. I was told at the time that I was not eligible for any of my husband's Social Security. But we were just on a cruise and an older woman told me that she took retirement benefits at 62 and was also able to get half of her husband's Social Security. Why don't I get half of my husband's benefits?

A: First of all, don't believe most things you hear about Social Security from senior citizens on cruise ships. I've been on more than a few cruises, and I've heard so many old folks spreading false tales about Social Security. (I usually don't let on that I am a Social Security expert until after I hear their fanciful fables. Then I try to set them straight, but they frequently don't believe me!)

I can guarantee you that your fellow cruise passenger did not get her own reduced retirement benefit AND half of her husband's Social Security, as she apparently told you. A woman can get her own benefit SUPPLEMENTED up to a percentage of her husband's rate, but she doesn't get both benefits.

In other words, you are potentially due a percentage of your husband's Social Security, to the extent that it exceeds your own benefit. But what the percentage is depends on when you and your spouse filed for Social Security. If he was getting Social Security when you turned 62 and filed for your own benefits, then you are only eligible to have your payment supplemented up to about 30 percent of his. But if he filed for benefits later, the percentage you get depends on how old you were when he filed. If, for example, you were 64 when he filed, then you might be due up to about 40 percent or so. Had you been 66 or older when he filed, your benefit could have been supplemented up to half of his rate.

My guess is that like most working women, you won't get any of your husband's Social Security until he dies (because the widow's supplement is up to 100 percent). The only way you will know for sure is to contact your local Social Security office.

One final point: Had you waited until 66 to file, you would have had other options. For example, you could have taken just a 50 percent spousal ben-bonus. That procedure, called the restricted application policy, is a topic I've discussed many times in past columns.

70, at which point you could switch to your own retirement delayed retirement filing

Q. I just came back from a cruise through the Caribbean. Each night, I sat at a dinner table with a group of older widows like myself. As you might guess, Social Security was a frequent topic. One woman said she was getting full widow's benefits and full retirement benefits. No one else was getting that. Another woman said she was receiving a state retirement pension and couldn't get any of her deceased husband's Social Security. A third woman said that when her husband died, she never got the burial benefit, while all the rest of us did. And finally, I explained to my dinner companions that when my husband died, I was given the option of taking my widow's pension first, and then later switching to my own retirement benefits when I was 66. The other women said this option was never offered to them. Can you comment on this?

know any of the facts about each of your tablemate's Social Security affairs other than what you told me. But here are my either telling a big fib, or she really didn't know what she was getting from Social Security. The second woman was a retired teacher. The third woman was divorced and was probably talking about death benefits from her exhusband. And finally, my hunch is your husband died when you were in your early 60s, while the other women lost their husbands later in life. Now let me go over each of these situations one by one.

The first woman was

The first woman simply didn't know what she was talking about. No one can get two full Social Security benefits. My hunch is that she was getting her own retirement benefit when her husband died (probably sometime after she was 66 years old). Then her own Social Security check would have been supplemented up to whatever her husband was getting at the time he died.

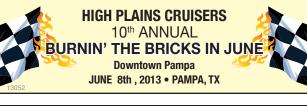

I'm guessing the second woman was a teacher who taught in a state where educators do not pay into the Social Security system. Just as a Social Security retirement benefit offsets A. Obviously, I don't any potential widow's net.

benefits, a teacher's retirement pension also offsets any widow's benefits she might be due from her husband's Social Security record. Actually, teachers are given a bit of a break. While an entire Social Security retirement pension is used to offset any widow's benefits; only two-thirds of a teacher's pension is applied as an

The third woman said she didn't get the death benefit from her husband's account when he died. I'm guessing they were separated or divorced or otherwise living apart; because the rules say the one time death payment can be doled out only to a spouse who was living with the deceased at the time of death.

And that leaves you. A woman who has worked and has her own Social Security account and then becomes a widow before age 66 has some options. She can take reduced benefits on one Social Security account (her own or her husband's) and then at age 66, or possibly even 70, switch to higher benefits on the other account. Which benefit she takes first depends entirely on the money amounts involved.

Keenan Hughes of Pampa received his Eagle Scout designation at a Court of Honor conducted at the First Christian Church on May 19. Friends, family and troop leaders attended the celebration, including his parents Trisha and Russell Hughes and his grandmother Louise Lebow.

Keenan, 17, a junior at Pampa High School, is a member of Troop 404 of the Golden Spread Council, Boy Scouts of America, led by Scoutmaster Bill Schroeder and chartered by the First Christian Church.

Eagle Scout is the highest rank attainable in the Boy Scouting program. Since the first Boy Scout earned his Eagle award over 100 years ago, the distinction has been earned by more than 2 million young men. Requirements include earning at least 21 merit badges and demonstrating the ideals of service and leadership, including organizing and leading an extensive service project that benefits his church, Fewer than four percent of Boy Scouts nationwide attain this illustrious rank. He joins other outstanding American citizens who have become Eagle Scouts, among them former President Gerald R. Ford, astronaut Neil A. Armstrong, cinematographer Steven Spielberg, and head of the FBI, William Sessions.

Keenan started his scouting career as a Cub Scout, earned their highest award, the Arrow of Light, and then joined Boy Scout Troop 404 in 2007. Keenan has been very active in the troop participating in flag ceremonies, parades, merit badge activities, service projects, and summer, winter and high adventure camps.

He is currently the Senior Patrol Leader for Troop 404. Keenan is also a member of the Order of the Arrow, the national Honor Society for Boy Scouts.

In addition to Boy Scouts, Keenan is active in the Pampa High School band and in rodeo activi-
