ASPARAGUS-----

The genus Asparagus includes the edible vegetables asparagus as well as a number of indoor foliage plants. Most have tuber-ous roots, then stems and featherly foliage. Flowers produced are small and insignificant and are small and often followed by berries. The common house plants of this group are asparagus plumosa, sprengere and foxtail.

These plants like bright light but not direct sun, as it will sorch the leaves. They grow well in average house temperatures and can tolerate as low as 55 degrees.

Water these plants often during the active growing period, but never allow the pot to sit in water. Never let the pot dry out entirely, or foliage loss is inevitable. Fertilizer regularly during the growing period.

The best way to propagate your asparagus is to divide the overcrowded clumps when new growth appears in the spring..

Elementary school boys who would like to dress as cowboys and participate in the FFB presentation my phone Don Crowder after 5 at 563-2958 or during business hours at 563-2972.

Here is Shawn's essay:

Back in the old days people were closer than they are now. Now they are glued to the T.V. or too occupied with other things to just sit around and talk.

Back then, times were rough. They didn't have all the conveniences that we have now. They didn't have washing machines like we do, they had rubboards. They would get a bucket and either do down to a creek or a well to get water and wash up and down to get the clothes clean.

People should take advantages of the things we have now because we could be like back then; using a rubboard to wash, taking a bath in a big bucket, etc.

But on the other hand it would be nice to have the communication they had back then.

TEXAS DEPARTMENT OF HUMAN RESOURCES

Some 600,000 Texas households will divide $33.8 million this winter under the Home Energy Assistance Program (HEAP), Marlin W. Johnston, acting commissioner of the Department of Human Resources said today.

The program, established by Congress is designed to assist low income households meet the increased cost of energy for heating their homes.

Johnston said the cash assistance will be one-time payments, and will range from $20 to $140, based on family size, income, primary heating energy used, and county of residence.

Payments will begin in January and continue through March, 1981, Johnston said.

About 400,000 households will receive the energy payment automatically, and do not have to apply for it. These are households now receiving benefits from Aid to Families with Dependent Children Supplemental Security Income, or Food Stamps.

The remaining 200,000 households are low-income families and individuals not already receiving public assistance. Members of these households will be required to apply for HEAP benefits be-

DO YOU LIKE IT? Cecile is hoping that the spun gold is just what the King ordered in "Rumpelstiltskin." Cecile is played by Rena Newton and the King by Bryan Lake, both of Dallas. This Penguin Productions presentation of "Rumpelstiltskin" will be at the Brackettville High School Auditorium, March 14, 1981. And is being sponsored by The Friends of The Library. (Photo by Robin Rightmire).

Penguin Productions is a professional touring company that deals exclusively with quality theatre for children. The company is produced and managed by the husband and wife team of Bryan Lake and Rena Newton. They believe that a live theatre performance should be an aesthetic experience that children can become involved in, much different from most television shows and/or movies.

"Rumpelstiltskin" is the story of the poor Miller's daughter who has to try to spin gold from straw for the King in order to save her life. A strange little man helps her to do this, but makes her promise her first born child to him. The King is very pleased with the gold, so he marries her and later they have a son. When the little man returns for his promised child, the Queen refuses to surrender him. She is given three chances to guess the little man's name. Songs, color, and interesting characters fill the stage and create a memorable experience for all.

ginning January 5, and not after February 28, 1981.

Each county in Texas has a designated location for members of these 200,000 households to apply for the energy assistance. These locations may be determined by calling the local office of the Texas Department of Human Resources. If certified as eligible for the assistance, applicants should have their payments within 20 to 30 days.

Household gross monthly income cannot be more than the following figures for eligibility. Numbers of people in household, in parentheses, precede income figures: (1-person)--$296; (2)--$446; (3)--$613; (4)--$756; (5)--$893; (6)--$1044; (7)--$1195; (8)--$1346; (9)--$1498; (10)--$1649; (11)--$1800; (12)--$1951.

THE 80s—DECADE OF PROGRESS?

We can have a more equitable and compassionate society during the 1980s—providing we address the basic economic realities. Here, a former Secretary of the Treasury discusses the road to meaningful social progress.

By W. Michael Blumenthal

America's problem is a failure to address its economic dilemmas.

The first reality is that meaningful social progress is nearly impossible in a high-inflation economy. Inflation erodes compassion and altruism throughout society. It works a special penalty on the poor, the retired on small fixed incomes—those most dependent on enlightened policies.

High inflation drags down the rate of growth in real incomes, for it depresses investment and productivity growth, diverting economic activity into unproductive channels. With almost no prospect of a steady growth in real resources there is virtually no possibility that a fair share will go to those most in need.

Blumenthal

Unemployment can be reduced only if inflation is reduced. If we rev up the budget deficit to fight each rise in unemployment, we will fail: unemployment will go up despite our efforts—and inflation will accelerate. But on a course of fiscal and monetary prudence, unemployment will rise only temporarily and will then fall to lower levels.

The second reality is economic regulation. It is vital to the cause of social justice that we extinguish this passion for economic regulation. Regulation is a hopelessly cumbersome tool for distributing income from the rich to the poor; it ends up enriching those with the greatest access to the regulators. It causes major economic inefficiencies—resulting in higher prices over the long term and a loss of real production and jobs. Economic regulation diverts efforts and talents into building and defending huge government bureaucracies that are doomed to failure and ultimately, to public ridicule.

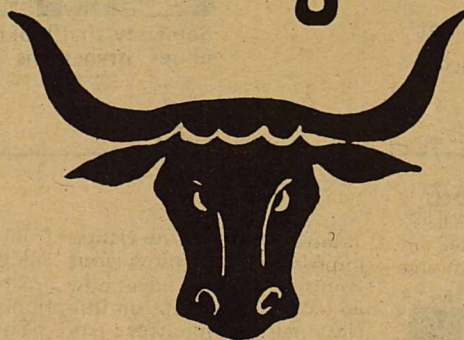

The third reality is that federal domestic spending is a very mixed blessing. The federal budget is too often bloated not by compassion for the poor but by a coalition of middle-income groups which manipulate the Congress and the bureaucracy. The budget can be cut without setting back the disadvantaged—or blown up without helping the poor. The productive sectors of the American economy cannot withstand a steady expansion in the share of resources going through government as tax revenues and spending programs.

If we learn these basic lessons—the need to eradicate inflation, the folly of economic regulation and the dangers of unfettered domestic spending, we can adapt to the 1980s. What we need for the new decade is a sensible marriage of social conscience and economic common sense.

These paragraphs are excerpted from an article by Mr. Blumenthal that appeared in Commitment magazine, published by Abbott Laboratories, a worldwide health-care company. For a free reprint of the magazine article, send a self-addressed, stamped, long business envelope to "W. M. Blumenthal," Dept. 383NA, Abbott Laboratories, North Chicago, IL 60064.

EASY-TO-CARE-FOR PLANTS CAN IMPROVE A HOME

Every home can always take some improvements—but not every homeowner has the money to make them these days. Yet, there is a way to improve the appearance of your home or apartment that doesn't cost much ... and adds color, grace and pleasure to any room. Plants.

Take advantage of them to cleverly hide a cracking wall, fill in a gloomy, empty corner or "curtain" a bare window. Whether they are tall, elegant palms, succulents or hearty trailing vines, plants blend well with any decor. And, by following just a few basic rules, you'll find that taking care of them is easy, fun—and most rewarding.

Feeding, for example, once considered a dreaded, complicated chore, is now really a simple matter. According to new research conducted by Dr. H. W. Scheld at the University of Houston, unflavored gelatine is an excellent source of organic nitrogen which is what plants need to make them greener, healthier and fuller. Yes ... that familiar household product, unflavored gelatine, now has a new use ... as a good source of nourishment for household plants.

Plants get their other essential nutrients from the commercially-prepared potting soils in which they come ... or which you use when you repot them into larger containers. The nitrogen that they may be missing can now easily be supplied by dissolving one envelope of Knox Unflavored Gelatine in one cup of hot tap water, then adding three cups of cold water to make a quart of liquid. Prepare only as much of this mixture as you plan to use at one time. Feed this mixture to your plants once a month as part of your normal watering/feeding pattern. Knox is a pure, safe food—with no additives—and it's almost impossible to burn your plants as you might do with other plant foods. Be careful not to overwater your plants, of course. Knox is convenient to use, too, and if you don't already have a box of it in your kitchen, you can quickly pick one up at the supermarket on your next shopping trip.

To help your houseplants grow, remember that they need to be periodically repotted into larger pots. Regular monthly use of unflavored gelatine, combined with proper lighting and watering, will help assure that your modest investment in household plants more than pays off in making your home more attractive, inviting ... and fun to be in.

Plants can enrich the appearance of any room. To keep them fuller and greener, feed them with an unflavored gelatine and water mixture about once a month as part of your normal watering/feeding pattern.
