VENUS FLYTRAP

The Verus Flytrap is an "insectivous perennial"--and quite a wonder! The trap of the plant will catch and digest small insects when they are available. (The native habitat of this plant is a small area of the southeast United States where the soil is low in nitrogen. Since nitrogen is necessary for growth, the plant has developed a digestive system to supply its' nitrogen needs.)

To zero in on its' needed food, the traps of the plant are fringed with bristles and there are sensitive hairs on the inside surface. Antyhing touches these trigger hairs, they close suddenly and the bristles interlock to form a trap. A digestive fluid is secreted when the trap closes, and this fluid disolves most of the insect or other food. If flies and instect aren't readily available, the plant can be fed a tiny piece of raw hamburger once every two weeks.

Over working or overfeeding of the venus flytrap can damage or kill it, so resist the tempetation to touch the sensitive bristles. Keep the plant in a warm sunny spot with plenty of moisture and humidity. Clip off any traps that turn brown, and new ones should sorm. As the trap mature, the inside color turns red if given enough sun. Small flowers that appear in the summer should be removed, as they weaken the plant.

GUEST

Linda Martinez, Committee Member Troop 234

Recently Boy Scout Troop 234 held a gymastic event by which the boys collected pledges for an event they were going to do. I feel it is the respinsibility of the person making the pledge to be aware of what they are committing themselves to. Apparently some of the pledges didn't.

One of the boys practiced when ever he could, to do well in the event he had chosen--sit ups.

On the day of the event he did extremely well and proudly went to collect his pledges. Due to the fact he did do so well, a couple of the pledges he received before the contest, his pledges reneged leaving the boy very disappointed.

The next time you make a pledge be aware of the contract you are making, that it's more than likely tax deductible, and going to a good cause.

The Texas Consumer Association Education Fund's Report from Austin

By Rebecca Lightsey, Director

When is $2,000 not $2,000? When you are promised it, and don't get it. Some people say that's what General Motors is doing.

Here's the scenario. General Motors is advertising rebates of up to $2,000 on some new car purchases. Most of the rebate -75% of it - comes from GM; the auto dealers pay the other 25%. The ads, though, don't go into who is paying what part of the rebate. Which is where the broken promise comes in, some say. Customers aren't actually getting the full 100% of the rebate advertised because in order for the dealers to give their share of the money back, they've got to make it up on some other part of the sale

The auto dealers are mad. They feel they are in an impossible position — they feel they've got to participate in the rebate program, but they can't afford to. They think that since GM promised the rebate, GM should-pay for it all. So, the Motor Vehicle Commission is proposing rules to make joint rebate programs between the auto makers and the auto dealers illegal, and to prohibit dealers from giving rebates at all.

Good, say auto dealers and others, that's what needs to be done. The type of promotion GM is running is deceptive. The customers don't know that the dealers have to pay part of the rebate. But since it comes out of the dealers' pockets, they have to manipulate their costs elsewhere. For example, they aren't giving as much for trade-in cars as they would otherwise. In the end, it may work out that customers aren't actually getting the full refund; they may be only getting the 75% from GM.

That means customers aren't given all the facts they need to fully evaluate how good a deal they're being offered. In legal terms, that's a lack of material information — information that's necessary to adequately make a decision. To prevent this misleading practice from continuing, they say, rebate programs which involves the dealers should be outlawed.

We agree that buyers aren't getting all the information they need if they don't know the dealers are covering part of the rebate costs, others counter, and they should definitely be informed. But isn't there a better solution to this lack of information than totally outlawing dealer participation in rebate programs? Why not cure the lack of information with more information? Require the ads for joint rebates to state that the dealers are paying for part of it. This way, customers can take that fact into account when they're shopping, but the rebate will still be available to them.

We don't see why the Commission should completely outlaw rebates when the dealers pay the full amount either, they say. Customers should certainly be told who's giving the rebate, but once that's been disclosed, buyers should be able to take advantage of that kind of offer. Why should a dealer rebate be prohibited when a big sale by the dealer isn't? In both cases, the buyers know they should shop around to see if some other cost associated with buying the car is going up to cover the "special deal" being offered.

After the Commission proposed its rules, but before they were finalized, the Attorney General's office brought suit against GM to the joint rebate program. The Attorney General asked the court to stop GM from making the dealers participate in the rebate, but to continue to honor the refund. GM has revised its ads, and is now letting people know that the dealers are responsible for 25% of the rebate.

Which solution do you think is best? Should rebates in which dealers participate be banned altogether, or should there simply be strict disclosure requirements in those situations?

Let the Motor Vehicle Commission know soon, write them at P.O. Box 2293, Austin, Texas 78768.

WHAT TO LOOK FOR IN QUALITY BOOTS

The cattle-driving cowboys of yesteryear knew the value of quality western boots. They depended upon them in their work.

While consumers today are not as dependent upon their boots, they do demand comfort, durability and style. Fine bootmakers take extra steps to ensure their boots have these qualities. Look for these characteristics in well-made boots:

TAXPAYE RIGHTS

Don't overpay your Property Taxes.

The Texas property tax system provides certain rights and remedies for property owners. The law also offers tax relief measures to qualified taxpayers. But they do not go into effect automatically; you must apply for them by May 1. To help you understand your rights as a taxpayer, the State Property Tax Board has prepared a free pamphlet, Taxpayers' Rights, Remedies, Responsibilities!, available from your new county appraisal district or local tax office. The publication will help you understand the types of exemptions that are available and what you must do to obtain them if you qualify.

Rendition

One way to assert your rights as a taxpayer is to render your property. This means filling out a rendition statement at the appraisal district office, telling tax officials what you believe the value of your property should be. When you render, the appraisal district or appraisal review board must officially notify you if the value of your property is increased over the amount you

General Homestead Exemption

If you qualify for a residence homestead exemption, you are entitled to a $5,000 exemption off the appraised value of your home for school tax purposes, and a $3,000 exemption for the portion of county taxes levied for farm-to-market roads or flood control. Some jurisdictions may offer an additional exemption of a percentage of the value of your homestead.

Exemptions for the Elderly

If you are 65 or over, you are entitled to an additional $10,000 exemption off the appraised value of your residence homestead for school taxes. And, when you apply and qualify for this exemption, the school tax bill cannot increase on your home, unless you make additions or improvements to it.

Disabled

If you are disabled and qualify for the residence homestead exemption, you are entitled to an additional exemption of $10,000 off the appraised value of your home for school taxes. Other taxing jurisdictions may offer optional exemptions. All jurisdictions offer an exemption for certain disabled veterans on one designated property.

Farmers and Ranchers

If you qualify, your agricultural or openspace land may be taxed at its productivity value instead of market value. Certain farming implements and machines may also qualify for exemption

Tax exemptions and special valuations are not effective automatically. Applications should be made this year before May 1 to your new county appraisal district, or to local tax offices in appraisal districts which have postponed implementation. Check with the appraisal district or local tax offices to find out where to apply for

While late applications for exemptions may be accepted in some instances, the burden and expense of proving a good reason for filing late rests on the taxpayer. You can avoid any inconvenience and fully protect your rights and access to remedies as a taxpayer by applying for exemptions and rendering your property before May 1.

Ask for a free copy of Taxpayers' Rights, Remedies, Responsibilities! at your appraisal district or local tax office. Or contact the State Property Tax Board in Austin.

Soil Conservation

GRASS SEEDING

The optimum grass planting season is repidly approaching in Southwest Texas. Selection of adapted grasses for pasture planting and range seeding can have major economic impact on your ranching or farming operation.

There are some major consideration that need to be made prior to the planting date which are (1) the grass should be adapted to the soil and/or soil types on which it is to be planted, (2) the grass should compliment and improve other forage resources on the ranch or farm, (3) the grass should be planted on a well prepared, firm seedbed, (4) the grass should be plant ed with equipment that will evenly distribute the recommended seeding rate. Such equipment as a grassland drill or Brillion seeder does an excellent job; however, this equipment may not be available or applicable in all situations. Good stands of grass have also been obtained by aerial seeding, (5) the grass should be planted early enough to receive full benefit of spring rainfall. Chances of receiving rainfall in April, May and June are good but not guaranteed, (6) high quality seed should be used. The seed should be purchased and applied on a pure live seed basis where possible.

Buffelgrass and Selection 75 Klein grass are two of our most productive perennial grasses and have been widely planted during the past few years. Both of these grasses are adapted to a wide variety of soil types and are capable of producing high quality forage. The recent availablity of seed of the Nueces and Llano strains of buffelgrass allow producers the option og considering buffel in the northern portion of the Rio Grande Plain and the southern part of the Edwards Plateau.

Although Kleingrass has the potential of producing large quantities of quality forage, there have been a few cases of swellhead in sheep and goats, especially stressed lambs and kids grazing Kleingrass in some growth stages.

Other grasses for consideration are blue panicum, sideoats grama, green sprangletop, switchgrass, and several varieties of bluestems and lowegrassess.

Blue panicum, once widely planted in Southwest Texas, has not been used to a great extent in recent years; however, blue panicum is capable of producing large quantities of high quality forage with a good grazing management program. The seed of blue panicum, like the seed of Kleingrass, is also an excellent food source for quail and dove.

Sideoats grama and green sprangletop, native grasses to the Edwards Plateau and northern Rio Grande Plain, also have a place in range seeding and have the potential of complimenting seeding mixtures with other grasses in this region.

Switchgrass, a high producing native native grass, deserves consideration in the Southwest Texas area receiving at least twenty four to twenty five inches of annual rainfall. The Alamo strain of switchgrass, recently released by the Soil Conservation Service Plant Materials Center, has tremendous potential for high quality forage production.

Several strains of introduced bluestems have been seeded in Southwest Texas for several years. Gordo bluestem has excellent potential for high quality forage production for the late summer and fall months in areas receiving at least 24 to 25 inches of rainfall annually. Medio bluestem, adapted to clay and clay loam soils, also produces high quality forage during the late summer and fall months Keeberg bluestem, adapted to a wide variety of soils, has the potential of high forage production and is one of our most drought tolerant grasses. King Ranch bluestem is not as productive as the other bluestems but grows under the most adverse conditions. There is a lot of truth in the old saying that King Ranch bluestem will grow on a flat rock. This grass still has aplace on a very shallow and rocky soils. Old world bluestem, a new variety of the introduced bluestems developed by the Soil Conservation Service Plant Materials Center, shows tremendous promise for Southwest Texas in trail planting on the J.R. Hamilton Ranch near Carrizo Springs, Texas and the Jim Willingham ranch near Uvalde, Texas. Both Hamilton and Willingham have harvested seed from this grass and expanded their original acreage from trial plantings. Old world bluestem produces a large volume of high quality forage that cures exceptionally well and it is adapted to a wide variety of soil types. Very limited amounts of Old world bluestem seed will be available on the commerical market in 1982, but additional seed should be available in the future.

Although the lovegrasses are not widely planted in Southwest Texas, they deserve consideration. Weeping and Ermelo lowegrass are adapted to sandy and deep sand soils and are capable of producing large amounts of grazing under an intensified management program.

Wilman's lovegrass is adapted to a wide variety of soil types. The leaf blade on this grass is broader than the other strains of lovegrass. The forage is palatable and it has good production potential. J.R.Hamilton has also used Boer's lovegrass to good advantage on deep sand and sandy soils.

Most perennials grasses require a full growing season deferment to become established and additional deferment is needed in some instances. Grazing newly seeded grasses too early can limit the productive potential of your grass and in severe instances can cause you to lose your entire investment in the seeding.

For additional information on soil adaptions, seeding rates and management of specific grasses, contact the Soil Conservation Service, providing assistance through your local Soil and Water Conservation District.
