YOUNG BERTRAM MEADE LEARNS IN A FRIGHTFUL EX-PERIENCE JUST HOW MUCH HELEN ILLING-WORTH MEANS TO HIM

The Martlet Construction Company is building a great international bridge planned by Bertram Meade, Sr., a famous engineer. His son, Bertram Meade, Jr., resident engineer at the bridge, is in love with Helen Illingworth, daughter of Colonel Illingworth, president of the company. Young Meade questioned his father's judgment on the strength of certain important steel beams in the gigantic structure but was laughed to scorn. He still has private doubts, though outwardly agreeing with his elder.

"It's rather confused in here," said the man, "but we will soon get out toward the end and then the view is magnificent. You can see up and down the river for miles and the night boat will be along in a few minutes."

"Isn't that it?" asked the woman, pointing up the river to where a cluster of lights rounded a huge bend not far away, and swung out in midstream. "Yes," said the man, "if we listen I

"Exactly. But can't I stand on it?" "Wait," he answered.

He climbed to the center of it, lifted himself up and down on his feet to test it, and found it solid apparently.

"I think so, but I shall have to put you up," he said at last as he lifted her up and set her down on her feet in the middle of the plate of steel.

"Oh, there comes the steamer." she cried. "I can see it beautifully from here."

"Be careful. You must not move. Stand perfectly steady. I am not so sure of that plate." He reached over from where he stood on the track below her and by her side and gathered mingled the song of the night wind, the material of her dress in an iron

Now, after a week's confinement in his cabin, he felt strong enough to venture out again and to attack his probems. They were personal problems now, much more intimate than before, for he was building not only the bridge but weaving in its web of steel his own future happiness. Of course he had been able to get out on the rough porch of his galvanized iron shack where he had the bridge in full view, and the day before he had even walked unsteadily down to the river bank, where he had been equally surprised and delighted at the progress that had been made. Abbott was a driver after his own heart, Really things seemed to have gone on just as well without him as if he had been on the job. He had not been lonely in his illness, for all of the chief men connected with the construction had done their best to beguile the tedium of his hours by visiting him whenever they could spare the time. Abbott had been especially kind in his somewhat rough-and-ready way. The big construction superintendent was fond of Meade, although he undervalued him. He regarded him more and the inevitable antagonism between the theorist and the practical man, when they are not combined in one personality, was latent in Abbott's heart. of the progress of the work. IN BED FOR WEEKS Mr. Smith Was in a Bad Way, But Doan's Restored Him to the Best of Health.

In April, 1916, Louis Smith, 90 New St., Hackensack, N. J., said: "Words fail to describe the misery I endured from kidney complaint. In my work I have to do a lot of heavy lifting and this weakened my kidneys. At first I only suffered from a slight backache, but almost before I knew it, I was all bent over like a man a hundred years

"I began to grow worse as the days passed and finally I had to take to mr. Smith. my bed where I remained for weeks. My head pained terribly and my back just throbbed. I was always dizzy and it seemed as it everything was whirling. Little black specks came before my eyes and I also suffered from painful and scanty passages of the kidney secretions. Every-thing seemed dark and dreary.

"Doan's Kidney Pills completely cured me and I am enjoying the best of health now."

"Sworn to before me."
E. M. Johnson, Justice Peace. On March 19, 1917, Mr. Smith added: "I will never forget what Doan's have done for me. Whenever I catch cold on my kidneys. I can depend on Doan's to fix me up all right."

The Spirit of Youth.

When all has been said, and the last warning uttered, the spirit of Youth remains the only true and healthful spirit of life. The objects which the passionate heart of Youth pursues remain always the vital ones, writes Edward Lewis in the Atlantic. The dtrection given to Youth by the creative impulse which brings it into being, before Society coerces it and the Church warps it, remains the right direction unto the end of life. Nor can there be a higher reach of faith than that of which the unwritten creed of Youth is the expression-I believe in joy, in lifewardness, in self-expression. I believe in the world and in the flesh. I believe in the natural man, the health of his instincts, the purity of his functions, and in his divine potentialiti-s. I believe in the soundness of the Auman heart, the goodness of life, the beauty of all experience.
