When Adam Carter gradu-ated from Borden High School in 2005, he knew—as much as an 18-year-old can know—that his hometown was a support-ive community and that his alma mater had given him a solid education. That was about the extent of what any young person realizes before heading off to that proverbial "next chapter" of his or her life. Adam's path of choice would be the United States

Marine Corps. His service to his country included two tours of duty in a five-year enlist-ment: the first to Iraq (seven and a half months) and the other to Afghanistan (six months). This past May, Adam completed his Marine Corps enlistment and headed home to Gail America, intent on enrolling in college to obtain a degree in Exercise and Sports Science.

This information alone would make for a newsworthy feature. However, the layers to this story are worth peeling back. Adam, in true Paul Harvey fashion, wants Borden County to know the rest of the story. You see, all those years that

Adam was away from Borden County, he wasn't alone. After his basic training in California, Adam attended special-ized training in the Marine Corps K-9 field. In Peru, Indiana, at the Vohne Liche Kennels, Adam met the companion that would stay with him throughout the remainder of his five-year military career. Rex, a Belgian Malinois, was trained as a combat tracking dog. During his own military service, he was partnered with no one other than Adam. So what would become of

Rex when Adam retired from the Corps? He was returned to Camp LeJeune in Jackson-ville, North Carolina, one of three base camps used for Marine Corps canines. The boy and his dog were sepa-rated after years of not only a working relationship but a personal bond.

"Rapport," as Adam refers to it in typical military fashion: this word describes what a boy and his dog had to have to survive war. And while Marines may have the earned reputation of being the tough-

Overcoming Fear: Part 1

The effects of fear are far reaching. Fear can thwart success, obscure opportunities, inhibit personal growth, induce depression, and encourage inactivity. In the past, fear has served a vital function.

Fear of fire, pain, and death has been essential to mankind's survival throughout history. Fear was an important asset that helped an individual stay alive. We no longer live in primitive sur-vival mode. Most, if not all, of the fears we experience hurt us instead of help. What are you afraid of? The following are some common fears

- Fear of povertyFear of failure
- Fear of rejection • Fear of ridicule
- Fear of loss
- Fear of the opinion of
- others
- Fear of being different
- Fear of success
- Fear of the unknown
  - Fear of loss of security
- Fear of old age

Overcoming your fears re-quire that you go where you're afraid to go and do what you're afraid to do. Others have already overcome whatever it is you're afraid of. If someone else can conquer the fear, you can to.

In order to live free, you can't allow your fears to control you. To conquer fear, you need to understand the basis for your fear. First, determine what you have control over versus what is beyond your control.

Don't expend any effort or energy on issues you have no influence over. Distressing over the price of gas, the economy, or the weather, etc. is pointless. Let's look at over-coming the fears you do have control over.

Fear of poverty can cause you to miss opportunities. For example, the prospect of changing jobs, changing ca-reers or going into business for yourself can be scary. To conquer any fear, consider the worst that can happen. Invari-ably you will find that the worst case scenario isn't really that bad.

If you change jobs and it doesn't work out, you can change jobs again. If you change careers and you don't like the new career, you can go back to your old one or try another. If you go into business for yourself and it fails, you can always start another venture

As long as you don't throw in the towel, the chances of you

The Coyotes got the opening kick-off and methodically drove the ball down the field, but a fumble inside the five yard line thwarted the once promising drive and gave the Red Devils their first opportunity with the ball. The Coyote defense bent on the first Red Devil drive, but they finally stiffened inside the 10 on a nice defensive stop by Miles Valentine and Quint Shafer.

On the very first play of Borden County's second pos-session, sophomore Tanner Richey followed some nice blocking to sprint the distance, covering 71 yards and the first score of the season for the 2010 coyotes. Sophomore Helio Rosales connected for the extra points and an early 8 to 0 lead. The Coyotes overcame another miscue in the first half as a fumbled punt return, which gave the ball back to the Devils, but the defense finally rose to the challenge and made a great defensive stand to end any other threats that the Red Devils could muster for the remainder of the contest.

The Coyotes dropped a touchdown and had a touchdown taken away on their fihar drive of the harr, which proved to lead to an even battle after a half of play, at 14 all. The Coyotes kicked the ball off to start the 2nd half

The coyotes quickly marched down their field, following a couple of nice runs by junior Austin Fields and senior David Rodriguez, Richey converted a tough 3rd down play then followed that up with a twentytwo yard run to the endzone early in the 4th quarter to ex-tend the lead for Borden County to 28 to 14. The Red Devils decided to spread things out and take to the air, but great pressure by senior John Hensley and Shafer forced a hurried throw that senior Zach Telchik made the Red Devil quarterback pay for as he jumped in front of the ball for the interception. Three plays later the Coyotes added another score as Richey skirted 18 yards to pay dirt. The Rosales kick made the score 36 for the Coyotes and 14 for the Red Devils.

The Coyotes were able to start playing some back-up defensive players on the next series, but as was the case starting midway through the 2' quarter, the defense proved to be too much for the Red Devils. After another defensive stop for Borden County on 4th down as Howard tackled the Devil runner, the 2nd team of-fense got their shot at a few plays. Three plays later, Fields made a great move and followed some nice blocks to stop and go run that resulted in a nifty 51 yard run and the capper on a nice 2nd half for the Coyotes and a 42 to 14 Lead. Hensley moved to linebacker on the next series allowing several 2nd team defenders to play in the other spots and he brought a final climactic end to the day as he busted through the Devil line and not only forced a fumble, but came up with the loose pig skin as well. The Coyote offense then got into the victory formation and knelt on the ball to bring a close to their 30th straight victory and number one on the 2010 season as the Borden County Coyotes won 42 to 14 over the Rankin Red Devils.

The Coyotes rushed for over 400 yards as a team, behind the line blocking of senior Center Derek Tatum, guard est guys on the planet, even they recognize that rapport is just a technical word for love and trust.

This past June, Adam came home without Rex. He went to work for Joel and Betty Dennis, planning to spend the summer in Borden County before moving to Lubbock in August to enroll in college. Then, the phone call.

"Two months and four days" but who's counting? Adam was. That is how long it had been since Adam said good-bye to Rex. The call, however, informed Adam that Rex was going to be honorably discharged into Adam's care. The only catch was that Adam had to pick up his canine pal at Camp LeJeune.

Enter the Angels, all of them, beginning with Joel and Betty. Betty, a seasoned American Airlines flight attendant, immediately knew what to do. Her contacts included Tanya Pinkos, an American Airlines employee, who fol-lowed Betty's lead and got the ball rolling for an amazing re-union. crude signs advertising boiled peanuts. Curiosity got the best of me and I pulled into one of the stands selling the things. "I'd like some boiled peanuts,

I told the man behind the big pot. He told me I better try some first. He handed me a hot, wet peanut. I opened it and saw some of the biggest peanuts I've ever seen. I popped them in my mouth and instantly wished I had just kept on driving past that stand. They were mushy and had no taste. He apparently knew he had lost a sale and said, "Not everybody likes 'em." I was glad he made me sample them. I bought some regular dry, unboiled peanuts and they were delicious.

I hadn't given boiled peanuts another thought until I met Warren Garrett in Crockett. He grew up in Crystal Springs, Mississippi and loves boiled peanuts. He is a boiled peanut fiend. "In my youth, on Sunday afternoons in the fall of the year during the peanut harvest while they were still green, peanut boilings were social events," he says. "People in the neighborhoods would, gather around a big washpot and boil peanuts. You have to cultivate a taste for them. In Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, the Carolinas and in some parts of Louisiana you'll find a lot of people who grew up eating boiled peanuts.

You boil peanuts in the shell and it's preferable to eat them while they are warm, just out of the pot. "You boil them in a salt brine," says Warren, "and they are salty. It depends on your taste as to how much salt

While in North Carolina a you want on them. You can eat few years back I kept seeing them cold, but they're better them cold, but they're better right after they've cooled down after dipping them out of the pot.

After Warren left Mississippi and started working in Houston, he occasionally would return to Crystal Springs to visit family members. He has four children and they would be with Warren as he traveled to his boyhood home. On the way back to Houston on one of his trips he spied a man in a pickup near Hammond, Louisiana. "It was Hammond, Louisiana. It was an old farmer going along and I could see in the back of his pickup that he was hauling a bagful of peanuts. I just pulled up beside him and waved him over. I paid him fifteen dollars for twenty five pounds of for twenty-five pounds of green peanuts ready for boil-

He admits that most people who didn't grow up eating peanuts boiled in salt brine don't have a craving for them. The fact that they're green may have something to do with that. "This is before they are dried. You can boil the dry peanuts, but you need to soak them for quite a while. The best way to boil them is to put them in a pressure cooker. But they're not as good as the green ones when they're fresh from the field. The best ones are picked slightly before they mature. Some farmers in Mississippi make their living growing green peanuts for boiling."

Warren has tried to boil Texas peanuts, but they don't work too well. He says it's the soil. "I've given some of my Texas friends boiled peanuts and they all say they don't know how I can eat them."

wanting to try and understand it sociologically." Part of Jeffrey's demographic research led him, in fact, to discover an interesting fact about his home county.

"Depending on which year you look at, Borden County is the 10th or 11th least populous county in the United States, " said Jeffrey. "A lot of people are surprised by that, because of the huge areas of Alaska, Wyoming, and Montana that are unpopulated. But, the counties there are much larger and so because of that have more people."

Jeffrey's area of expertise is Medical Sociology and Demography. His job at UTPB has a strong teaching focus, but publishing is "still expected and encouraged" so he will continue to be active with research.

"The work will largely be looking at how social characteristics of individuals and society impact health outcomes in the U.S.," said Jeffrey. "My dissertation specifically was concerned with how different social factors help explain Low Birth Weight in the United States, and I expect to continue in that area."

Heather, a graduate of Sundown High School, also completed a degree while in Boulder. She earned her BA in Religious Studies, a field that examines the ways that religion functions in society.

The two Texans feel right at home in Odessa and were drawn in part to it because of location and small size. Jeffrey realizes, too, that he is a part of a university system that is established on the state level and yet still growing in places such as Odessa.

"I was really impressed and drawn to the benefits of being part of the UT system. UTPB is doing a lot of work to grow, and I think it will offer a lot of opportunities in the future as it continues to build and become known in the region and state."
