

Higher 2011 Cotton Prices Complicate Crop Insurance Decision Process

By Shawn Wade

At the close of Friday's mar-ket activity on the New Yorkbased InterContinental Exchange (ICE) it appears that the December 2011 contract may have finally regained some of its footing after a week of .

tions about where the Base insurance price will fall for the 2011 crop of Upland cotton produced on the High Plains of Texas and in other areas that have a March 15 sales closing (insurance cancelation) date.

Many growers in areas with the March 15 sales closing date have been holding off on making their final crop insurance coverage decisions until the USDA Risk Management

USDA Risk Management Agency (RMA) announces the 2011 Base price. Through February 25, the USDA RMA website projects the average price to be $1.22 per pound with market results for February 28th still to be price for cotton in areas with a March 15 sales closing date will be established by averag-ing each trading day's closing value of the new crop (i.e.-2011) December Cotton futures contract traded on the insurance period, as well as establishing the minimum level of protection provided through the Revenue protection plan of insurance.

With such a dramatic difference between the base price at which cotton will be insured in 2011, versus what it was insured for the previ-ous year, growers have been reluctant to finalize their 2011 crop insurance coverage. Accrop insurance coverage. Ac-tivity in crop insurance agency offices throughout the High Plains region will pick up dramatically early next week after RMA announces the Base insurance price on March 1st or 2nd.

As they go about the pro-cess of finalizing their 2011 insurance plans, growers are also reminded of the avail-ability of the new Cottonseed (Pilot) Endorsement, an optional endorsement that they can use to insure the cottonseed they produce alongside their cotton lint.

The Cottonseed Endorsement was developed by Lub-bock-based Plains Cotton Growers, Inc. and is designed to provide growers a cost effective way to insure the

By Bryan Golden Looking Forward With Hindsight

Six months ago you had trouble finding your keys and were late for work. At the time, you felt agitated and up-set. Chances are, you don't even remember the incident. Last year, at a business lunch, you spilled salad dressing on your shirt. You were so embarrassed when it happened but now you can just laugh at the whole episode. Three years ago, you were on your way to the airport to leave for vacation. You got caught in a traffic jam and missed your plane. You were worried sick that your whole vacation would be ruined. However, when you finally arrived at the airport, the airline was able to get you and your family on a later flight. Your trip was wonderful and the traffic jam is a distant memory. How often have you looked back on what seemed like misfortune at the time, and wondered how you could have been so aggravated? Has anyone ever said to you, "Remember when you were so upset about..." and you couldn't recall the incident they were re-ferring to? Did you ever have a fight with someone and later couldn't remember what the conflict was about?

Undesirable or unpleasant circumstances and events are a part of living. Something breaks, you loose something, you're late, you embarrass yourself, you forget to do something, someone laughs at you, someone doesn't like you, you get into an argument, or your car breaks down.

Without Limits

Some circumstances you have control over, others you don't. Many people constantly get tripped up by the small an-noying aspects of life. They expend far more emotional energy on them then is warranted. As a result, their enthusiasm for good and positive things declines.

Most feelings fade with time. If they don't disappear altogether, their intensity di-minishes. The cliché that hind-sight is 20/20 is recalled on a regular basis. So why not look forward with hindsight?

What exactly does this mean? You have already experienced the effect time has on your memory and feelings. In hindsight, you wonder why you were so upset. So view the present as if you were looking back on it from the future.

When faced with a stressful situation ask yourself, "How

Coyotes Bow Out With Loss in Bi-District

By Coach Baeza

The Borden County Coy-otes competed in the basketball Bi-District round against a tough Ropes team and came away with a disappointing 68-49 loss.

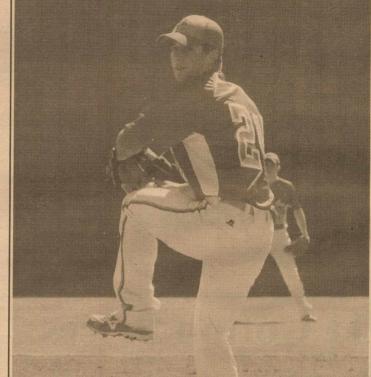

The Coyotes came out matching the Eagles point for points as Zach Telchik and Quinton Shafer had hot hands quarter and a 68-49 win. scoring eight and nine points. In the second quarter the Coyotes committed to many turn-overs which stalled the offense allowing Ropes to have the quarter 17-8 putting the Eagles ahead 37-26 at half.

The Coyotes began the sec-ond half determined to cut the lead as Tanner Richey led the scoring with eight points and Quinton Shafer putting in six. This cut the lead to 48-42 Eagles going into the fourth with the Coyotes playing well. The steam that the Coyotes had built up in the third began to and Austin Tyler.

Lady Coyotes Fall in Regional Quarterfinals

By Coach McCook

The Lady Coyotes 2010- 5 points, 3 rebounds, and 6 as-2011 basketball season came to sists. Stefanie Cooley had 2 an end last Tuesday in a regional quarterfinal game against Paducah. The Lady Coyotes led for most of the first half, entering the break with a 30-28 advantage, but the Lady Dragons proved to be too much in the second half. The Lady Covotes gave it their all, but in the end they fell short 52-33.

The loss, while regrettable, capped yet another season of which to be proud. The Lady Coyotes finished the season 22-8 and were district and area champions. Great job, girls! Taylor Richey led the team with 18 points, 4 rebounds, and 4 steals. Bailey Anderson had points, 3 rebounds, and 2 assists. Aubree Lester had 3 points, 2 rebounds, and 2 as-sists. Kylie Voss had 2 points and 6 rebounds. Raegan Belongia had 2 points and 2 rebounds. Machelle Barr, Taylor Gass, Kalyn Massingill, Kaylyn Dean, Teryn Soto, Lexi Peterson, Mollie McMeans, Shea Burkett, Sydnie Day, Mallory McMeans, and Jordan Day also contributed to the team effort.

When You Work With Pesticides

A nursery rhyme says, Pussycat, pussycat, where have you been? I've been to London to visit the queen. Pussycat, pussycat, what did you do there? I frightened a mouse under her chair.

What a pity-sidetracked by the seductive, tempted by the trivial. Every day offers you opportuniies to "see the queen," that is, to live a purposeful life; or to "frighten mice," that is, to live a purposeless

But for every triumph there's a sacrifice. Dare you pay it?

CLAYTON WILLIAMS: Flamboyant Exuberance

I spent an enjoyable couple of hours with Clayton Williams and his wife Modesta the other day. They are extremely happy and settled. Both easily laugh at the world and each other. They are really like a couple of kids, especially Claytie. His perpetual smile and good hu-mor bounces off the walls of his offices in their Claydesta business complex in Midland. It was Modesta's job to decorate the edifice when it was built. "I gave her an unlimited budget," says Clayton, "and she went over it 43 percent."

Claytie and Modesta are both hunters and hold world records in different breeds of wild mountain sheep. He started early shooting rabbits and mule deer while growing up in Fort Stockton. Modesta, who comes from a ranching family, didn't like guns at first, but learned to be a crack shot. "She's tougher than most men," says her husband.

Clayton Williams is short of stature and wiry. He weighs around 150 pounds and bounces all over the place between the phone and his boardroom. He continually talks about his wife's beauty. "Marrying her was the smartest thing I ever did," he says. They both love to brag on their chil-dren and grandkids. Claytie says a good marriage is like a campfire. "You need to tend it every once in awhile. Same with a family Life hasn't always been easy for the couple, which has coped with ups and downs in the oil business and a fizzled campaign for governor. But Claytie is able to purge on through, calling his down times him into going into the oil busi-learning experiences. He says ness in 1957. For the next 25 ply is politics." His father and grandfather were both surveyors and curious about the world. "It fell my duty to become an explorationist," says Clayton. "My forebears always wanted to know what was over the next hill. I want to know what's over yonder, maybe we need to drill.

Claytie is the champion Aggie and has given A & M lots of money, regardless of his financial condition. "I gave the school a former student center and that's where I had to sell my best company to make the last payment. I have trouble saying no when somebody wants something. I'd have made a terrible girl." He says scouting taught him some strong principles. "I can borrow money from just about any bank because I paid them back, even when it was tough.
