GRIMES FAMILY NEAR TEMPLE ASSAULTED—THREE DEAD

Temple, Texas, July 29.—Three children of W. R. Grimes, a farmer, near here, were beaten to death with a Santa Fe railroad spike hammer at midnight.

Mrs. Grimes was beaten unconscious and will die. Mr. Grimes is probably fatally injured. Robbery and rape are believed to have been the motive.

Two twin babies were sleeping with Mrs. Grimes and were killed. Her clothing was torn to shreds. A boy who was sleeping with Grimes also was killed.

Three children sleeping in another room were unharmed.

TEMPLE NEGRO BURNED AT STAKE—CONFESSES CRIME

Admitted Slayer of Three Grimes Children Taken From Jail by Clamoring Mob and Lynched.

Temple, Texas, July 31.—Henry Stanley, the negro charged with the murder of the three Grimes children Wednesday night, and probably fatal injury to Mr. and Mrs. Grimes, including criminal assault on the unconscious wife and mother, was taken from Justice Cooper's office at midnight by the mob which had been clamoring for him since mid-afternoon. He was taken to the public square and burned.

After the flames had licked his body a short while a shot was fired and the wretch crumpled and soon expired. Examination of his alleged negro accomplices brought from Rogers failed to implicate them in the crime. Before dying Stanley confessed.

Just before being cast into the flames Stanley confessed the crime. He struggled desperately as the executioners dragged him into the fire with a chain about his body. The chain became too hot to hold and when the struggles again brought him to the edge a pistol shot was fired.

Death came in a few minutes and there was but little outcry made.

FARMERS' SHORT COURSE WELL ATTENDED

Word comes from Prof. C. M. Evans, who has charge of the short course work of the A. & M. College under Clarence Ousley, director of extension, that the attendance at other courses in the State has ranged up as high as 500. In several places the farmers with their families have come from long distances and camped during the entire course. Especially attractive to the men and boys have been the demonstrations in judging horses and cattle. The special attraction for the women and girls has been the demonstration in home canning, cooking butter making, poultry raising, etc. The orchard work and the peach budding and grafting work have been a revelation to many, while the lectures and demonstrations on dairying, crops, animal disease, land rearing and marketing have been most helpful.

An interesting thing about these courses is that the last lecture always has the largest attendance. The course at Colorado starts off with horse and mule judging for the men and boys, and a home canning demonstration for the women and girls. Everyone should make it a point to be present at the first lecture so that nothing will be missed.

Will open in Colorado Monday for a three-days course.

GETS 25 YEARS IN PEN

Chandler, Okla., Aug. 2.—Henry Starr, noted bandit, pleaded guilty to bank robbery today in the district court and was sentenced to 25 years in the penitentiary. A jury was being empaneled this afternoon for the trial of Claud Sawyer, one of Starr's alleged accomplices.

Henry Starr, last of the Starr gang of bandits, was charged with the robbery of two banks at Stroud, Okla., in which he led his gang last March and took an aggregate of $5,000. Starr was wounded after the robbery and four of his men—Claud Sawyer, "Bud" Maxfield, Charles Johnson, and Louis Estes—were captured and are awaiting trial.

Paris, July 29.—It is reported that another fine of one million dollars has been imposed by the Germans upon Brussels because Allied aviators destroyed a Zeppelin there June 24.

CHARLES BECKER DIES PORTENDING HIS INNOCENCE

Police Lieutenant Pays Penalty for Herman Rosenthal Murder in Electric Chair.

New York, July 30.—A hollow mockery of the once arrogant, powerful Charles Becker perished miserably in the electric chair at Sing Sing this morning. Thirty-eight men, including reporters, doctors, under-sheriffs' prison officials and two priests saw a still powerful will drive a faltering spirit across seven feet of concrete floor and speak a toneless breaking voice into patriot-like responses to the words of the Rev. Father William L. Quinn, chaplain.

Becker's death was ghastly. The execution was clearly bungled. The strap against which his huge chest strained when the 1,850 volts were hurled into him had not been buckled. Becker's rigid body shot upward. The closely cropped head screwed to the right. The copper helmet in which the crown electrode reposed slipped forward. And the thirty-eight shaken individuals who sat watching a man die foresaw the horrible prospect of a slow and tortured death.

But the leg and arm electrodes had done the work. After he first contact—a minute in duration—the once mighty ear of New York's tenderloin was practically gone. It was just 15 minutes of 9 when the first shock was administered. The second surge filled the wretched man's body at 5:47, and it continued for ten seconds. A third contact, the final one, was delivered two minutes later and at 5:53, after the physicians had jabbed, prodded and stethoscoped the bulky body, Dr. A. W. Farr, the prison physician, announced that Charles Becker was dead.

Charles Becker's last message given out just before he went to death, is as follows:

"Gentlemen: I stand before you in my full senses, knowing that no power on earth can save me from the grave that is to receive me. In the face of all that, in the teeth of those who condemn me, and in the presence of my God and your God, I proclaim my absolute innocence. You are now about to witness my destruction by the State, which is organized to protect the lives of the innocent. May Almighty God pardon everyone who has contributed in any degree to my untimely death. And now, on the brink of my grave, I declare to that world that I am proud to have been the husband of the purest, noblest woman that ever lived, Helen Becker. This acknowledgment is the only legacy I can leave her. I bid you all good-bye, Father, I am ready to go. Amen."

CREDIT WHERE IT'S DUE.

In referring to the encouraging prospects of securing a railroad park in Colorado last week, the Record assembled much of the credit to the Colorado activity of civic pride of the good women of Colorado, without the least invidious distinction or comparison, as the Record had conceived the matter to be one of general pride and desirability.

The Record gladly records all the labor and more, to the good ladies of whatever club moved first or most actively in the park propaganda, but at the same time realizes that to secure the same within any reasonable time, the demand for it must be collective on rather than the wish of any particular organization. The Record as shown by its files, began the agitation for a park before the foundation of the new passenger station was put down, and has been instant in its repetition. But for this the paper expects no credit, as it is part of a paper's public function to advocate everything and anything making for the public good. However, if the park can be secured, the Record will cheerfully ascribe single honor to whomsoever of the town; but suggests that the town, as collective patrons of the Texas & Pacific Railway rather than some specific organization, move together in the matter and secure what we want first—then there will be glory enough to reach all around and to spare.

In this connection the Record recognizes the value of the efforts of the Hesperian Club of this city, for the past year or more to secure the park. This club has made the proposed park the chief object of its civic activities, and the Record meant not to rob the club of the least honor in referring the matter to collective local clubdom.

FORMER COLORADO GIRL MARRIED AT NOGALES

We take the following notice of a former Colorado girl from a Tucson, Ariz., paper. We received a much more extended notice of the occurrence last week, but in the shuffle the copy was lost.

Nogales, Ariz., July 2.—C. P. Clark, newspaper man connected with the office of Governor Maytorena of Sonora, and Miss Grace Simon of this city, were married at the Catholic church today at noon. The bride's mother and a few intimate friends of the bride and groom were present.

Mrs. Clark resided in Bisbee before coming to Nogales. The young couple will remain here for a few days before going east on their honeymoon.

CHRIST TO COME WHEN THE DARDANELLES FALL

Fort Worth, Texas, July 28.—Seventh Day Adventists, who are meeting 800 strong at Dalworth, expect the second coming of Christ when the Allies capture the Dardanelles. They declare that this will mark the millennium in the world's history.

PRIMITIVE BAPTIST ASSOCIATION

The Primitive Baptist Association of Mitchell county will convene at Zion's Rest church on Friday before the third Sunday in August. Everyone is invited to meet with us on this occasion. Owing to the fact that this community was in the midst of the hail destruction, those who attend must care for themselves. Plenty of wood and water for campers.

W. H. BOEDINE.

SOME MOVING

Last week Mr. and Mrs. B. Reese packed their belongings to leave for Corpus Christi. Ben Morgan moved into their house. Abe Dolman moved where the Morgans left. Dr. Henthorn moved into the Presbyterian manse, vacated by the Dolmans, and Mr. and Mrs. Judd will soon occupy the house where the Henthornes lived. If anybody else wants to move an other house will have to be built or somebody leave town.

Special attention given orders for fruit cream, ices and sherbets by Ben Morgan.

and have a little cry; and that needn't amaze you, for the hearts of women are often near the breaking point when we least suspect it, not alone from overwork, mind you, but from lack of appreciation and of some of the old-time caresses of courting days. And then you can tell her that you are going to have the washing done for her in July and August. The cost won't be a great deal and you can save somewhere.

THE FARMERS' SHORT COURSE

Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday will open at the court house at 10 o'clock Monday morning. In addition to the program already published Mrs. Steele G. Meushaw will give a lecture on "The Value of Art and Science in the School and Home." It is expected that many of the housewives and daughters in Colorado, as well as the farmers' wives and daughters, will take advantage of the important lectures to women. Mrs. Fraizer's lecture on poultry will be given on Monday.

There will be such subjects as follows:

Horse and mule judging. Soil and soil fertility. Silos, feed and feeding. Care of milk. (To men and women.) Food lectures, demonstrated. (To ladies.)

The home orchard, budding, etc. (To men and women.) Jelly making. (To ladies.) These lectures are entirely free.

MEETING OF SOUTHERN CATTLEMEN'S ASSOCIATION

The third annual meeting of the Southern Cattlemen's Association will be held at Birmingham, Ala., August 18, 19 and 20, 1915. Special reduced passenger rates for the round trip have been secured on all lines in the territory of the Southwestern Passenger Association, and summer tourists rates, two cents a mile, from points in Southwestern Passenger Association.

On the program are a large number of men who are prominent among the cattlemen of the South because they have done things. The program is one of instruction, because we have passed the stage where we need to be told "What to do," for we now want to be told "How to do."

A big auction sale of 60 head of pure bred breeding cattle will of itself be a liberal education for any one starting to raise or handle cattle.

No man interested in the development of the cattle industry in the South can afford to miss this meeting. For program and other information write the secretary, Tait Butler, box 935, Memphis, Tenn.

Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Reese will leave Monday for Corpus Christi, where they will reside.

GET RID OF WASHING THIS SUMMER

The owner of a big laundry estimates that in three-fourths of the homes of moderate means in this city the housewives do the family washing, all except collars, which are generally sent out to be laundered. This statement was the result of a careful investigation he had made, and he was sure it was correct. Now this newspaper is not concerned in any way in the laundry business. The owners of the laundry in Colorado seem to be getting along pretty well, and will continue to do so, whether the women do their own washing or not.

But How About the Woman who spends one day each week toiling over the washboard and tub of hot suds, and another day over the ironing board? How about her, Mr. Man?

Don't You Know That Washing Is Such Hard Work, and is so dreaded by women that by common consent, from one end of the country to the other, the second day of the week is known among them as "Blue Monday," because that is wash-day in the majority of homes?

She Doesn't Complain, You Say

Of course not, the average housewife seldom complains. She goes about her household work with outward cheerfulness, believing that it is her duty to do so; and a great part of housekeeping is the hardest kind of work, too—dishwashing, scrubbing, making beds, sweeping floors, shaking the rugs. But the hardest of all is washing.

Of course many families can not afford to have the washing done outside. But here is a suggestion for this summer.

Take a Good Look at Your Wife

when you go home from work next wash day. Watch her as she moves wearily around, busy with the supper things. And then think how hot it is going to be this summer. Go to her, put your arms around her and say: "Sweetheart, you're tired, ain't you? This washing is too heavy for you. What do you say if we send it to the laundry through the summer?"

"Why, We Can't Afford That," she will be likely to say, just like a woman, always trying to help.

"Well, We Can Afford That Better than we can afford to see the last of the roses leave your cheeks," and that will be your time to kiss her.

The Chances Are That She'll Break Down, and lean her head on your shoulder,

OLDER BUT STRONGER

To be healthy at seventy, prepare at forty, is sound advice, because in the strength of middle life we too often forget that neglected colds, or careless treatment of slight aches and pains, simply undermine strength and bring chronic weakness for later years.

To be stronger when older, keep your blood pure and rich and active with the strength-building and blood-nourishing properties of Scott's Emulsion which is a food, a tonic and a medicine to keep your blood rich, alleviate rheumatism and avoid sickness. No alcohol in Scott's.

SEEING THE GREAT FAIR

A Colorado Visitor Gives Interesting Account of Her Visit.

The San Diego Exposition will run a full twelve months from January 1, 1915, to January, 1916. Being the first port discovered by the white man they wish to celebrate by this exposition as forever being the first town of California, where January is the same as June and summer never dies. Where roses are like the roses of Castile, where flowers, shrubs and trees are forever in bloom and blossom. It is a spot ravishing in its beauty, where the balm of the sea and the gentle winds caress it and the breath of the desert keeps it warm.

Compared with any other exposition it is less only in size. In the plaza at the center of the exposition grounds some of the best ancient Indian exhibits are installed. In the big Spanish building along the "Prado" are the principal industrial exhibits.

We were especially attracted to the Foreign and Domestic Art Building, this pavilion and botanical garden. Japanese artists weaving their hemp, embroidering their silks and carving their expensive wood and ivory, the Russians at their kousarnai arts, Italians at their famous and grass cutting, all a very industrial display of genuine interest.

Entering the west gate and crossing a canyon made beautiful by an artificial stream, exuberant with every known shrub as much like nature as is possible for man to imitate, is the large California building, with its large dome, tall tower with a spiral stairway. A great temptation comes to ascend and gain a view of San Diego and the surrounding country, of which Mr. E. A. was the courageous one.

From here we passed through the beautiful Prado Long and massive corridors on either side lead to the Formal Gardens. Every county has put forth its utmost to overstep its neighbor in the splendor of its building. From this on to the Botanical Building, overlooking large lagoons, profuse with pond lilies, surrounded with flowers of every nature and color. This spot is where they all halt and pose for snapshots souvenirs. On the lower plateau is the State and Valley Building. A part of the seven southern counties is the Modern Farm, and is a practical demonstration of what can be done on a ranch or farm. This includes all varieties of oranges, lemons and grape fruit, planted in 1912. They have a daily demonstration of the actual work in carrying on a farm of this kind. This farm and demonstration field covers seven acres. They have utilized every ability on their outdoor exhibits.

The north end is the amusement street called "The Isthmus" successor to the old-time "Pike." Many things along this isthmus have been transplanted and look as if by nature. The Painted Desert, made from rock brought from Arizona and New Mexico, desert cedar, cactus and iron wood composing an Indian village inhabited by Cliff Dwellers and other tribes. There the Navajo women are working, weaving rugs and blankets; the children carding and sorting the colored wool, others shaping pottery and hammering out their silver and copper ornaments.

We were exceedingly anxious to compare this with the great San Francisco Exposition. After twenty hours' travel a feeling of enthusiasm to see from a distance this great ferry open in the hick mist and haze which had hitherto concealed it from view. We landed at the foot of Market street,

EXPULSED—every poison and impurity of your blood, by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Then there's a clear skin and a clean system. Tetter, Salt-rheum, Eczema, Erysipelas, Halls, Carbuncles, Enlarged Glands, Tumors and Diseases, from a common blotch or eruption to the worst scrofula, are perfectly and permanently cured by it.

In building up needed flesh and strength of pale, puny, scrofulous children, nothing can equal it. In liquid or tablet form, Mrs. May Bryant, of No. 2223 Loving Avenue, Fort Worth, Texas, says:

"I have used Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and Favorite Prescription and they did me good. I gave the Golden Medical Discovery to one of my children whose blood was all out of fix—was broken, out all over with sores but after taking the Discovery for a short while was entirely well. I think everybody ought to use Dr. Pierce's medicine."

Dr. Pierce's Pellets regulate and invigorate stomach, liver and bowels.

facing a city of one-half million inhabitants, on a mountainous peninsula, between the Pacific and San Francisco bay. A busy city without a resident district, its climate peculiarly bracing. I know its summers are not hot and understand its winters are very little colder.

The exposition ground is a tract two and a half miles long and one-half mile wide, fronting the bay and Golden Gate. The buildings are compact, with an exhibit from each and every obtainable industry, showing the product and manufactory, also the process of manufacture, not idle machines, which would take an expert to study out, but the bulk is in operation, showing the most improved methods. One can receive every information of whatever interest.

In the transportation is shown from the primitive ox-cart method of travel to present day luxury. In the food product the raw wheat through the mill, baked into lovely buns and served to the public. The Palace of Fine Arts has sculpture and paintings from every known artist in the world. But my untrained artistic eye did not appreciate such as "Summer L'Amour" etc., being a child of nature of the nineteenth century. I do not care for some things belonging to this age.

In the Paris exhibit Mr. E. A. failed to be interested in the fashion designer, guess he did not want to break the record of the twentieth century man. All foreign exhibits were very complete. Mrs. Hertzberg, ex-president of Federated Clubs, presided at the Texas building, which was formally opened July 12th.

Few State building have exhibits mostly composed of reception rooms and dance halls. Of all Canada has the most beautiful exhibit. The crowd can not be estimated until these exhibit buildings close at 6 p. m. when all file out for the Zone and other places of amusement.

On July 24th over 200,000 persons registered through the gates. That night's illumination was worth the price of the ticket. Our last day was spent at the Golden Gate Park, four miles long and one and one-half wide, all artificially made, overlooking the ocean and Golden Gate. Equipped with athletic stadium, Japanese tea garden, children's playground, wild animal paddocks, Lane's Memorial Museum, luxuriant in flowers, shrubs and trees, miles of paths and roads. In this museum I sat in a Chippendale chair used by General George Washington on the occasion of his visit and reviewing of troops at Salem, Mass., October 29th, 1876, a gift of the Mrs. Anna M. Hutchinson estate.

Innumerable gifts from Hilda Hut-tall, a grand piano with painting inside, after Watteau, period of Louis XV of France. Carriage used by General M. G. Vallejo, brought from England to Sonora in 1839. Saddle and bridle of Dixie Thompson, mounted with $500 worth of silver. Near the museum is the statue of Francis Scott Key, author of "The Star Spangled Banner."

The next morning we started for Salt Lake, a distance of 920 up the canyon of Feather river, through forty-eight tunnels.

Utah is a land of mountains, valleys and plateaus. Salt Lake is in a valley, watered by melted snow from the mountains. Drinking fountains of this ice water are all over the city. This city is in the heart of what was a generation ago the great American desert, is now the pride of Mormon and Gentile. We went direct to Temple Block, which is the visitors' chief interest. This is a ten-acre square, surrounded by a stone and adobe wall twelve feet high and three feet thick, with large iron gates on each of the four sides.

The bureau of information furnished us a guide who led us to the Temple but not inside. Gentiles and a great many mormons are not permitted to enter. It is to them as Solomon's Temple was to the sincere Jews, a holy place, devoted to sacred ordinances, marriage regarded as one of the most sacred, and these only are perpetuated beyond the grave. Here we had an excellent view of this massive granite structure with six majestic spires. The sun, moon and stars engraved on every side, every decoration symbolic. The walls are nine feet thick, was completed in 1893, forty years after it was commenced. It required four yoke of oxen four days to transport a single stone. The Tabernacle is an immense auditorium and will seat 8,000 people. Our guide demonstrated we could hear a whisper or a pin drop from any position in the building. In the west end of the Tabernacle is the great organ, blown by a ten-horsepower electric motor. Free public recitals are given every day. We passed the two life-size bronze statues of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

The Seagull Monument—In the time of distress from devastation of the cricket invasion the gulls proved to be a devourer of these crickets. Leaving here we passed through the Royal Gorge, a canal in the Rocky mountains, a span wide in places and rising 3,000 feet perpendicular to the clouds. It presents miles of beautiful scenery. Next stop was the progressive city of Denver.

Then Colorado Springs, adjoining is Colorado City, where stands a little log cabin, its first territorial capitol. On to Manitou at the foot of Pike's Peak, called the monument of this continent, everyone making a mad rush for the ride above the clouds. At first our interest was centered at the novel train but soon diverted to the surroundings. The train hugs the left-hand wall between dizzy heights, swaying pines and swirling streams, at times hidden beneath a confused mass of rocks as large as houses. Minnehaha, a quaint rustic cottage, is the first stop. Then through scenes of ever-changing beauty. A halt is made at the half-way house.

This proved to be a very thirsty engine, continually stopping to drink. There are six stations on this nine-mile ride, and every inch of this road is up. As the train gains in elevation the air grows chill. After passing through thick billowy clouds, then sunshine with snow and flowers everywhere. On reaching the summit one is thrilled with such an extended range of vision and the vibration of the voice. The Summit Hotel is a comfortable building where some remain over night to view the sunrise. This pair wished to hasten home for a sunrise in our own Colorado.

CO-OPERATIVE AND EXTENSION WORK IN AGRICULTURE

A. & M. College of Texas and U. S. Department of Agriculture Co-Operating.

To all Boys' and Girls' Animal Husbandry and Agricultural Club Members:

This is to notify you that we will hold a county club rally at Colorado, Texas, August 11, 1915, in connection with the farmers' short course which will be in session at that time. You are requested to meet at the court house not later than 10 a. m.

We want every member to be present, if possible. To get the greatest good from the meeting, it will require the presence of all. Of me in order that we may show the people that we are energetic and can stand together. Extend an invitation to your parents and the neighbor boys to come with you. Mr. H. H. Williamson, agent in club work in Texas, and other lecturers from the A. & M. College will assist in entertaining you. The program will be as follows.

- 10:00 a. m.—Assembly.
10:15-10:45—Lecture on club work and preparation of reports.
10:45-11:15—Preparation of seed beds and plans for 1916.
11:15-12:00—Grain judging.
1:30 p. m.—3:30 p. m.—Lecture on hog judging and hog judging contest.
3:00-3:30—Hog calling contest.
3:30-4:00—Horse saddling contest.
4:00 p. m.—Adjournment.

You will observe that the entire afternoon will be devoted to outdoor contests. It is probable that prizes will be awarded in each contest. The horse saddling contest will be based upon the time required to saddle and mount, and the accuracy of the placement of the blanket and saddle. The hog calling contest is one that always furnishes a great deal of amusement. Each contestant will be given at least three trials at calling hogs just as though he were at home calling his hogs to feed. It will be decided by the judges which boy would probably get the best response from a hungry hog. Each boy is requested to bring with him an ear of corn or head of milo, kaffir or or feterita. Select from your field the best ear or head that you can obtain. One ear will be sufficient. This will be used in the grain judging lecture. You should also supply yourself with a lead pencil and a note book, which you will need in the hog judging contest. Do not forget the date and place of meeting.

Yours very truly, W. A. DULIN, County Agent U. S. Department of Agriculture.

RECOMMENDS CHAMBERLAIN'S COLIC, CHOLERA AND DIARRHOEA REMEDY

"I never hesitate to recommend Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy," writes Sol Williams, merchant, Jesse, Tenn. "I sell more of it than any other preparations of like character. I have used it myself and found it gave me more relief than anything else I have ever tried for the same purpose." Obtainable everywhere.

Studebaker 1916 Studebaker Cars

- more POWER
—more ROOM
—still HIGHER QUALITY
—and LOWER PRICES

—a Forty H.P. 7-passenger (MOTOR—3 7-8" bore, 5" stroke) $885

—a Fifty H.P. 7-passenger (MOTOR—3 7-8" bore, 5" stroke) $1050

This year the Studebaker announcement is more significant than ever before. It demonstrates more conclusively than ever Studebaker's leadership in the industry. For once again, Studebaker is announcing new cars at prices that completely recast all standards of value in the automobile industry. And never before has a dollar bought so much as it buys in these new Studebakers. They are the best cars in every detail that Studebaker ever built.

But while the prices are remarkably low, Studebaker has made no effort to manufacture a small, low-price car, to compete purely on a price basis.

THE PRICES ARE LOW SOLELY

- 1—Because of largely increased volume of production.
2—Unrivaled manufacturing resources.
3—The Studebaker policy of manufacturing our cars complete in our own factories and thus eliminating parts-makers' profits.
4—The greatly increased efficiency resulting from 4 years' study and concentration on the manufacture of two chassis.
5—The high per centage of interchangeability of parts in the two chassis.

And Studebaker is merely passing along to buyers the FULL benefits of these notable economies. You may question in your own mind the quality of these cars, considering the remarkable reductions in price when compared with our last year's models.

But we simply invite you to make any comparisons you like with last year's cars or with this year's models of other makers to see what resources and manufacturing experience such as Studebaker has at its command can accomplish.

COLORADO, TEXAS, FRIDAY, AUGUST 6, 1915.

Every West Texas exchange now carries ads of "Fine Elberta peaches," home grown, for sale.

The general precipitation last week knocked out the danger from prairie fires, which had become of no small consideration.

The rains which have fallen over this and adjoining counties during the past week, have simply cinched the crop prospects in this bulky country.

Santa Fe puts on hog train service.—Lubbock Avalanche.

We may now be able to take that long deferred trip.

We have yet to read of the first typewriter or automobile that hasn't broken the record for speed, endurance and economy all to smithereens.

The niggers of Haiti have pulled off another successful revolution, killing the president, mutilating his body and dragging it through the streets. The government of Haiti has been the opera bouffe of the past century.

Again the country is assured that the United States has reached the limit of its watching and waiting, and that stern measures will shortly be taken in dealing with Mexico. Meantime Villa says "To hell with the United States," or words to that effect.

There has been considerable movement in real estate in Colorado and Mitchell county this summer, which is only an earnest of the activity we may expect this fall. The man having improved land for sale, is now an anomaly in Mitchell county. If you already own land here—freeze it to it. If you expect ever to own any here—better get busy now. It's sure to rise in price.

Cheer up; the worst seems to be over! Science has dealt another solar plexus lick to the high cost of living. Secretary Lane of the department of Commerce and Labor makes the announcement that radium from Colorado carnotite can now be produced at the nominal cost of only $36,050 per gram, as against the former price of $116,000. This is encouraging to the tribe of "Us Poor Folks."

Nothing short of a physical cataclysm can now prevent West Texas producing one of the greatest crops in the history of the country. Rains, which have been general over this section of the state, continued intermittently for several days, accompanied by a humid atmosphere and cloudy weather, which allowed the soil to absorb every particle of moisture that fell. Although the crops had not begun to suffer, the pastures and young feed had begun to show the need of rain. August being the time in which cotton puts on its fruit, a good rain at just this juncture means much to West Texas. If a period of good growing conditions now succeeds the recent rains, Mitchell county will make a new record in all lines of agriculture.

Land investments in West Texas will grow faster than money a ten per cent compound interest. Let us grant for the sake of argument that these years of abundant crops will be succeeded by an equal number of lean years—say two lean years and two fat years succeed—land at its present price in Mitchell county, considering its ease of cultivation, little help required, health and general conditions of living, is a better investment with a crop very two years than $150 land in Central Texas, requiring three times the teams and hired help to work it, with an average crop annually. The highest tide of immigration in the history of this section will likely occur this fall and winter, and Mitchell county should see to it that it gets its share.

REWARDING TREACHERY.

Cyclone Davis prayed for the destruction of the Democratic party and taught his boys to do the same. Yet Cyclone is now drawing $7,500 salary, one son is drawing $3,000, and another $1,500 yearly through the party they tried to destroy.—Hamilton Herald.

The old time Populist who was honest in his belief, along with the Democrat who still clings to the basic principles of Democracy, look upon Cyclone as did the disciples upon Judas, with this exception; Judas, after his crowning act of treachery, atoned for it by hanging himself, while Cyclone, instead of "shuffling off his mortal coil," with a rope is still adding to his thirty pieces of silver the shillings gathered from those whom he sought to destroy by pandering to their prejudices.

In business Cyclone's political reputation wouldn't secure for him a job of masticating grease in a soap factory; but by pandering to popular prejudice, politics has debauched places dedicated to High God by placing puppets and altars at his disposal. But when sanity shall sit upon its throne once more, this golden calf will be destroyed and a serpent with mortal sting will make the Democratic conscience writhe with the remorse that goes before repentance.—Sterling City Record.

Joe Stokes left Tuesday night for El Paso.

"AND IT COME ON FOR TO RAIN."

There's a smile on every face
While we hit a quicker pace,
And do the best we can by might and main;

There's a hustle all around
And a stirring of the ground,
And a general jubilation since the rain.

Prospects are bright and cheery;
The people hopeful—very,
All the merchants extend credit once again;

Now all farmers will buy autos
For their marriageable daughters,
O it's bully in West Texas since the rain.

You now can go and borrow
With promise to pay tomorrow,
Money wherewith to pick the coming crop;

When but some weeks ago,
Had you tried it then, we trow,
You had more than likely heard the bottom drop.

Now, all you belly-achers—
And you, backwater-takers,
Just take another hole up in your belt;

Lay hold with firmer grip,
Keep a stiffer upper lip,
And the knocking you've done will ne'er be felt.

It was long since said of Texas, and the saying waxed into a proverb that "it could promise more and perform less, and promise less and pay more" than any other section of the earth. This was particularly true of West Texas.

There is but one thing, however, in the breezy empire of this great commonwealth that changeth not, nor is there to be found in it any shadow of turning. The old-timer stays put, and stands patter than the postest. Everything is referred to condition and experience as they obtained "in the early days." He refuses to accept the evolution of nature and scorns the puny efforts of the new-comer and nester to adapt the conditions in this country to an approximation of the comforts and conveniences of their former homes. His gospel is that God's Mighty made this country for cows to run upon, and efforts to transmute it into an agricultural proposition, is, in his eyes, a profanation little less than a sacrilege, deserving nothing short of being run from the country, and in aggravated cases—a wet rope. He wouldn't try to keep up with the procession; he wouldn't get out of the way of the band wagon; so—oh, just plant him anywhere by the roadside.

But those who contended that West Texas was not—never could be made—an agricultural country, have another guess coming their way. Conditions were never so promising in this section as now. Not even the high water years of 1906 and 1914 surpassed at this date, the existing prospects. This refers not alone to the stable crops of maize and cotton, corn and small grain, but to the impulse given the past two years to the spirit of diversification, has resulted in the production of most of the things farmers consume in their homes, and which have heretofore been paid out of the proceeds of the cotton crop, which was the only source of real money they had.

The abundant seasons of last winter and spring have kept the crops in vigorous condition until the recent rains, and unless some calamity wholly beyond the power of man to imagine intervenes, Mitchell county, as well as the whole domain of West Texas, will harvest the greatest crops in their history. No other section of the union can recuperate from periods of depression quicker and with more vigor than West Texas. Hope and abiding confidence are the county's most valuable assets. No matter how long and severe the drouth; no matter how hard the conditions of living; how sear the prairies and scare the water; how copper the skies and deceptive the mirages; one good and sufficient rain smooths every wrinkle, dispels every doubt and restores perfect confidence. While nature rejoices in a recurrence of life with a riot of color, and carpets the prairies with flowers in preparation for the carnival procession of prosperity.

Farming has moved every year farther from the realm and influence of mere chance, and become more and more a scientific certainty. Nature has many times during the past rebuked our timidity and encouraged our strength and confidence. She has proven to the observing mind that faithful heart that the seasons of drouth are not misfortune in themselves, but the conservation of some worse calamity, as well as the recuperating periods for her strength and the renewing of the fertility of the her soil; that she might bless us all the more abundantly when she returns with "the horn of plenty."

Then let us exorcise the evil spirits of Fear and Distrust; let us shrust out the gaunt spectre of Drouth from our feasts and cut down the sword we have kept these years suspended above our heads. Taught to expect these recurrent seasons, is it not the part of wisdom to anticipate, and provide against their coming?

ENCOURAGING HOME ECONOMICS

Mr. C. C. Berry of the Cuthbert community was in town Monday to receive a shipment of cans wherein to put up the fruit crop of this year on his place. He and his brother, W. C. Berry, have gone into the canning industry this season quite extensively. They have prepared for the business and expect to put up at least 3,000 cans. Besides canning the surplus fruit on their place they are conserving the large grape crop raised, in the form of bottled grape juice.

The example of W. C. and C. C. Berry in thus turning the raw products of the farm, which have no local market, into marketable products that can be held, is worthy of the emulation of every farmer in Mitchell county. Farm products that would otherwise have been sheer waste, have been converted into a marketable asset.

This reference to the Berry brothers is not by way of invidious distinction; there are hundreds of others in Mitchell county and indeed, in all West Texas, who have broken with the fetish of the one crop system and are producing what they consume at home. No doubt there are more hogs in this county today than have ever been—in fact, the farmer or the near farmer without a few hogs is the exception, and the judgment and wisdom of this system of farming will find expression this winter in a larger bank account and smaller living expenses next year. As we have intimated aforesaid: "Great is Mitchell county and the Record is its Prophet."

SELL FOLKS WHAT THEY WANT

He walked into a store and asked for a number three pencil. He wanted number three pencil and he did not number three pencil, he asked for a need a number two o; a number one or any other number in the catalogue of numbers. But the silly sales girl began to try to argue with him that he ought to buy a number two. What fools some mortals be. They have such a meager range of knowledge that they do not know that pencils are made in any other numbers than one and two. And when anything beyond their range of knowledge is asked for, they smile a commiserating smile and begin to interest you in something else. It is healthier to sell the folks what they want, whenever they want it, if you have it; if you do not have it, say so, and be done with it.

The insignificant transaction reminds one of the intolerance of ignorance. Only ignorance is intolerant. Oh, folks may know a whole lot about a whole lot of things, but they may still be woefully short on wisdom, and hence be intolerant. What is tolerance anyhow? Patience with the other man's ideas and ways, even though diverse from yours.—Western Evangel.

Is not the above rather a broad proposition, Bro. Dawson, for those of us who believe in sumptuary laws regarding the sale of whiskey, drugs and other dangerous things? It is the very "guts" of the anti's argument, the mudsill of the "personal liberty" patriot. For example: A man who needs and wants whiskey by reason of his habitual use, knows what he wants and needs—not bread, not something just like it, not a tract nor a lecture—but whiskey; should it be sold him? The argument is good in the specific case cited, but pushed to its broader application, might become dangerous.

WONDERFUL JUVENILE TALENT AND VERSATILITY

Though somewhat belated, the Record desires to notice the performances of Little Manora, who appeared in Vaudeville at the Opera House Movies here on July 16th.

When it is considered that she is yet hardly ten years old, her talent and versatility are indeed remarkable, and would do great credit to even a professional of much greater years. Her ability to please and entertain, is not so much an accomplishment of labor as a gift of nature. At so early an age of five years, she gave promise of great things in "black face" songs and impersonations that placed her at the top of juvenile entertainers.

At five she entertained the National Congress of Mothers in session at San Antonio, captivating all hearts by her singing and dancing. Since that time she has appeared before many critical audiences, devoting the major part of her time, however, to the study of music and training for a professional career. Her appearance at the Opera House Movies was a distinct treat to the people of Colorado. Her singing, dancing, monologues, and lightning changes, all gave evidence of the brilliant career in store for this versatile and talented little Miss. The Record heartily commends Little Manora personally and her wonderful performances in particular to all those who appreciate clean, wholesome and high-class entertainment.

Washington, August 3.—This year's cotton crop will be 11,790,000 bales, according to the estimate made by the department of agriculture announced today. Last year's crop amounted to over 16,000,000 bales.

Black Pepper and White Pepper Come from Same Plant

Many people think that there's a white pepper plant and a black pepper plant. There's not. The difference between the two peppers is entirely a matter of manufacture—or rather what part of the peppercorn is ground.

In making black pepper, the whole peppercorn or pod is ground up. In making white pepper, the black outside shell is removed and only the white part of the pod is ground into pepper.

Some people prefer white pepper—some prefer black pepper. White pepper is used especially in making dishes where black pepper would mar the color, as in delicate light sauces, etc. But there's one kind of pepper nobody wants; the kind of black pepper that's made by unscrupulous manufacturers by grinding a small proportion of whole peppercorns with a large proportion of the black shells which have been removed in the process of making white pepper. Yet such pepper is all pepper and therefore passes as pure pepper.

Your guarantee of quality in the pepper you buy is to insist on White Swan Peppers.

White Swan Black Pepper is made only by grinding the whole pepper pods. White Swan White Pepper is the ground heart of the pod and nothing else. Your grocer sells these peppers that are "Better than the law requires"—insist.

KILL 'EM WITH ROCKS

Rome, Aug. 3.—Letters from Italian officers say a large proportion of the Austrians dead was caused by the Italians hurling down rocks. More than 10,000 Austrians were crushed in their trenches. At San Martina 2,500 dead Austrians were found in a group in trenches, crushed by falling rocks.

The temperature at Sioux City fell 51 degrees in one day, on Tuesday, putting overcoats and female wraps in quick commission.

"THE GOVERNOR'S LADY" TYPICAL OF REAL AMERICAN LIFE

The Lasky-Belasco picturization of Alice Bradley's play, formerly presented on the legitimate stage, with great success by Mr. Belasco himself, is unusually typical of real American life. It is the story of a poor man who achieves sudden financial and political success and then feels that the wife of his youth and poverty is not equal to the demands of his new position in life. This story is peculiarly American—ininitely more true to the life of our country than it would be anywhere else in the world. In fact, it is a story that has come to light many times in the lives of some of the foremost "captains of industry," and which is one of the regrettable tragedies of vast business opportunities. However, in the instance of the photodrama the story comes to a happy conclusion, for the man of ambition comes to understand the emptiness of his solitary success, and induces his wife to come again to take her place by his side. Opera House Movies, Friday, August 13, matinee and night.

Phone McMurry for fresh vegetables

During July and August there will be much sickness in live stock, says Dr. Francis, professor of veterinary science at the A. & M. College. One of the most vital things to do where stock have died of some disease, and especially where there is a suspicion that the disease is anthrax or charbon, is to bury the carcass or to burn it right on the spot where the animal died. Draw out a little blood from the cow and place a small speck of this blood on a piece of glass. With another piece of clean glass make a smear across the glass on which the blood was placed. Allow it to dry and then send it to the veterinary department, A. & M. College, College Station, Texas, for microscopical examination. Most of the specimens of diseased animals that are sent to the college are sent in such shape as to render them useless for reliable result-getting investigations.

It is not too late to "swat that rooster." Kill your male birds and render your eggs easier to keep during the hot weather. The removal of the male from the flock will not reduce the production. On the other hand it will increase the desirability of your eggs. They may be kept for an indefinite period in the cold storage if they are infertile. Fertile eggs spoil very quickly. In the cooler months males may be allowed to run with the flocks to produce eggs for hatching.—F. W. Kazemier, Poultry Husbandman at A. & M. College.

Over Fifty Per Cent Saved

The lumber industry in the South represents many millions of dollars in the business of the States in which the lumber plants are situated.

Materials which were formerly regarded as waste are utilized for making many things of importance to the people of this country.

Paper, boxes, shingles, staves and other articles have been added to the products of the mill which formerly produced only planks, etc.

In the organization of this vast industry every available means for reducing waste has been studied with great care. It is natural to find that the largest lumber plants in these States with the most complete organization are using for their work. One lumber company of great importance found that it had effected a saving of over 50 per cent, in the lubricating oil consumed, by the use of Texaco Products.

Texaco Quality and Service have demonstrated their value to the manufacturers of lumber wherever they have been installed.

Texaco Products have justified the policy and work of the company by their success.

THE FATE OF 1915 COTTON

(By Zimmerman & Co., Cotton Brokers, Galveston, Texas.)

We are informed that the States of Alabama and Georgia have passed resolutions and sent them to Washington, asking that the United States government take steps for the re-opening of the general cotton export trade, which trade has been prohibited since March, 1915, by a British order in council.

We think that Texas, as the largest cotton producing State, should join Alabama and Georgia the more, since Texas is more dependent on the export to Europe than those two States. Texas, which raises more cotton than Georgia and Alabama combined, consumed in 1913 to 1914 about 64,000 bales, while Alabama and Georgia consumed in the same period about 940,000 bales. In other words, Alabama and Georgia can use about 875,000 bales within their own borders, for which Texas, with the same cotton crop, has to seek a foreign market. Moreover, Alabama and Georgia have the further advantage over Texas of being located closer to the Eastern and New England mills and thereby enjoy cheaper freight rates to these centers of consumption.

If, under these conditions, Georgia and Alabama found it necessary to ask Washington for protection of their interests, how much more important is this question for Texas, where the port of Galveston alone exports more cotton than all the Atlantic ports and the Alabama port, Mobile, combined. We, as cotton people, may be permitted to say, that we are fully convinced that cotton will go begging at six cents, or even five cents a pound if it can not be exported, and we venture to say that many other cotton exporters share our opinion.

Our statement is substantiated by last season's experience. Cotton sold in Texas at the beginning of the war at five and three-fourths cents, that is during the time that only a few firms dared to ship cotton. Prices advanced to about nine and three-fourths after exporting became safe. After the British order in council prohibited the general cotton export prices declined again for more than one and a half cents. These plain facts should be convincing.

Great Britain will not buy much cotton next season, as Liverpool has more stock than even. The following circular letter from Liverpool merchants may be interesting in this connection:

"Germany and Austria as cotton buyers are 'off the map' at present. Warehouse room here is exceedingly scarce and is bound to remain so for several months, therefore merchants who have been in the habit of buying early cotton freely will be obliged to go slow, on account of the difficulty of storing cotton here.

"These two reasons seem to be obvious and very important, and therefore I am inclined to think that we must look for a sharp decline in prices later on, and most probably a very much reduced basis for all grades."

France can not buy as much cotton as usual, as a large per centage of her cotton mills are destroyed or are in her enemies' hands.

This season France imported about 40 per cent less cotton than the year before, although this season's cotton crop was much larger. This will go to show that the only salvation for the South lies in the re-opening of the other markets of the European continent, where cotton is scarce and brings high prices. We could pay today 17 cents for middling in any interior town and make money if we could execute orders from European mills which need the cotton.

We repeat, that we are firmly convinced that cotton will go down to six cents again if it can not be exported, no matter how many warehouses the different communities build, or how many banks or bankers promise their support.

What such prices will mean for Texas, it is needless to say. It is a matter of self-preservation to every person, firm or organization in Texas to work for the re-opening of cotton export, no matter whether they are directly connected with cotton or not; and something should be done by this State to point out to Washington what the cotton question means to Texas.

The prohibition by Great Britain of cotton export is contrary to international law. Washington has acknowledged this and has protested against the British order in council, but so far without result. Seemingly the matter has not been pushed more because Washington is not aware of the tremendous importance of this question to the South.

Cotton has never been declared contraband, and therefore it is contrary to all existing laws and agreements either to interfere with cotton shipments or to stop them.

A ROMANCE OF OUR TIME; MARVEL OF FORD GROWTH.

The latest story about the Ford Motor company reads more like one of Scheherazade's fairy tales to her blood-thirsty Sultan Schariar than like a prosaic statement of modern business. Indeed, it eclipses the Arabian Nights romances, for even the Asiatic imagination never pictured such a vision of wealth as this that is spread before the eyes of Detroiters.

Fancy nor history has approached the marvel of the Ford growth. From nothing the idea in the brain of one man has developed into the tangibility of industrial buildings to which no gen-built palaces could compare of seigniorial estates, of vast and intricate mechanical plants, of world-wide employment for thousands upon thousands of people, of money in stored cold cash besides the pile of which the fabled treasures of Croesus would be an ant hill, of luxury for some and of new convenience for the multitude.

And all this has grown up before the sight of those who have lived in the city of Detroit a mere dozen years or so. What former romance of quick fortune rivals it? No other business ever came to such dimensions before in twice, or five times, the period of its duration—if, indeed, any other business in the records of the world has at any time come to the prodigious luxuriance of the Ford concern. It is a dream, surely; we shall be waking up one of these days and returning to the humdrum of life with a sigh for the wonderful things we have gazed upon in our sleep.

Sixty million of dollars is the measure of the accumulated assets. Twenty-seven million dollars is in the banks in cash. The balance accounts show a surplus of nearly $50,000,000. What incomprehensible sums they are! And twelve years ago not a dollar of it all existed; nothing but an idea, perhaps even then still unborn.

One hears sometimes a saying, common enough among certain classes of people, that "all wealth is created by labor." It has just enough truth to be glittering. How much of the Ford wealth was created by labor? The labor would have been here, there or somewhere in the United States or Europe, if Henry Ford had never lived, and it would have been applied to occupation of some kind, but it would not have accumulated these millions of money and property. It takes more than toil to produce capital. The fertile mind of someone to invent, the executive genius of someone to direct, these and other ingredients enter into the creation of wealth, and without them labor would today be housed in caves and its most intelligent application would be the chasing of animals for food.—Detroit Free Press.

EDISON TO THE RESCUE

The idea of enlisting the inventive gifts of the whole nation in the service of the navy by specific governmental aviation and encouragement is thoroughly sound in principle, and, if properly worked out, should prove to be thoroughly practical and a most useful aid to the development of naval material. In Germany the spirit of this movement, if not its definite work, with results in scientific and mechanical efficiency which have astonished the world. Great Britain is lending ear to suggestions of the same character as uttered by H. G. Wells and by Prof. Ramsay.

In announcing that he would accept Secretary Daniels' innovation, Mr. Edison made a suggestion, the importance of which, in its bearing upon the proposed board of invention, can scarcely be over estimated. He suggested that in connection with the secretary's board there should be a department of experimentation, provided with the necessary buildings and plant and a corps of efficient men qualified to carry on experimental work under the direction of those who have made suggestions that have received the endorsement of the board.—Scientific American.

The advantages of the silo are well reflected in the experience of Merritt Nay, of Amarillo, Texas, who recently shipped a car of fed cattle to the Kansas City market. Among the steers comprising the shipment was one animal three years old, fattened on silage, which weighed 1,640 pounds and sold for $157.44.

A MUNICIPAL BAT ROOST.

The only municipal bat roost in the world was recently erected at San Antonio, Texas, and is expected to play an important part in the city's fight against malaria and other diseases. Dr. C. A. Campbell of San Antonio declares the bat to be one of the greatest enemies of the mosquito, which is largely responsible for the spread of malarial and other germs. For this reason San Antonio is not only protecting the bat by law, but has entered into the proposition of its cultivation.

Dr. Campbell is authority for the statement that the yearly toll of this nation to malaria is conservatively $100,000,000. He has also demonstrated that a single bat will consume as many as 200 mosquitos in one night, and as it requires seven days for the cycle of evolution to complete itself in the mosquito that has bitten an infected person, before it can transmit the disease to another, it will be seen that in regions where many bats are flying all night, the chances of catching the mosquito and stopping the infection are very large.

THE RUNNER.

God give us strength to use each passing hour; not as the runner who would reach the goal labors with panting breath, with sparing dole of strength with which to gain the prize at last; but give us strength and courage, Lord, to reach a hand to whom beside us run. Whose stumbling feet and labored breath tell of a strength far spent; lest when the race be won, the winner would be asked, "What of thy comrade? He whose feet fail would have kept pace with thine?" And we, with downcast eye and reddened cheek, must answer, "Lord, I know not when he fell."—A. R. G.

SYNOPSIS.

Professor Stilliter, psychologist, Gordon Barclay, Semmes and Sturtevant, millionaires, plan to preach to the world the gospel of efficiency through a young and beautiful woman who shall believe that she is a heaven-sent messenger. They kidnap the little Amesbury girl, orphaned offspring of a eugenic marriage, and conceal her in a cavern, in care of a woman, to be molded to their plan as she grows up. Fifteen years elapse. Tommy Barclay, adopted son of Millionaire Barclay, develops radical tendencies which threaten the older man's plans, loses his prospective heirship, and on a hunting trip discovers Celestia, who thinks she has just come from heaven to save the world. The adventures of Tommy and Celestia in the woods begin.

FOURTH INSTALLMENT

CHAPTER X.

But Tommy stopped short with a kind of jerk, as a tethered animal stops when it comes to the end of its rope, for he saw clearly, and all in a moment, that it was not a woman who invited him to share the shelter of the hut, but a little child. He stopped short then and smiled as a boy smiles. "Not room enough for two in there," he said. "But if you get frightened or want anything, just call. I'll hear. And—good night."

It seemed darker when she had closed the door of the hut and no longer gleamed in the fire light. Professor Stilliter lowered his rifle with a suppressed sigh of relief and sank down among the bushes. And when Tommy, healthfully tired, had fallen into a sound sleep he withdrew to a distance with his followers, and passed a night of supreme discomfort upon the hard ground. Celestia was safe in Tommy's care, and there was no use separating them before morning.

Bright and early Celestia waked and stepped from the hut into the cold, still Adirondack dawn. Tommy, his feet to the fire that had almost died, still slept. She knelt by him and studied his face at leisure. Presently she touched his hand cautiously with the tip of her finger and found that it was cold. Then, happy as a child, to be of service, she put wood on the fire and blew the embers into flame. Still Tommy did not wake, and she knelt by him once more and, with a laugh, bowed her lovely head and kissed him.

Tommy was dreaming of her. She had promised to marry him as soon as he had killed the horrible dragon that lived under the hill. Tommy, after a desperate battle, in which he was armed with only a can-opener, had just succeeded in opening the dragon's jugular vein, and was just rushing out from under the hill to claim his reward from the waiting Celestia, when she really kissed him, and he waked, and knew that he had been kissed.

His very first words were of reproof. "Celestia, dear," he said, "you mustn't do that."
"Mustn't kiss you?"
"Of course not."
Her great eyes assumed an injured look.

"In heaven," she said, "an angel always wakes me with a kiss."
Tommy was wide awake now.

"What kind of an angel?" he inquired with a kind of cold suspicion in his voice.
"Oh," she said carelessly, "anyone that happened to pass by, and thought that I had slept long enough. But then Celestia liked to be kissed. Don't humans?"

"Yes," said Tommy, "sometimes. I liked it. Only among us it's a sacred sort of thing, and grown-up humans reserve their kisses for celestial moods, or for children, who are always rather heavenly." As he spoke, he began to prepare breakfast, and Celestia smiled upon him, but not as if she was very much interested in what he had said, or indeed understood it. Suddenly she said:

"I want to cook."
"You do, do you? Do you know how?"

"I've watched you."
Tommy rose with a laugh.
"Then you shall," he said, "and I'll have a swim to wake me up."
"A swim?"

"You do it in the water," said Tommy gravely, and he made swimming motions with his arms.
"Oh, but I'd rather swim, too, than cook," said Celestia, and she prepared to follow him. But Tommy shook his head.

"Somebody has to cook," he said, "and I was the first to think about swimming and so it would be selfish of you—"

"You were nicer to me yesterday," said Celestia, and she turned with a little cry of astonishment to the kettle, which had just boiled over.

Tommy hurried away chuckling, and just before he came to the Narrow Island Beach he stripped and hung his clothes on a tree limb, then he ran into the water until it was waist deep, and then dove.

Celestia, busy with the cooking, was not troubling her mind about celestial affairs.

The reason that Tommy could not understand Celestia was simple. She could not explain herself. She believed beyond question that she had always lived in heaven until the day before, when after a glorious rush through space she found herself on earth, seated by a pool of water and looking into the eyes of Tommy Barclay.

Educated to her finger tips in the languages of this world, she had never had a master. In dreams she had been taught, without knowing that she was learning, all that a great and unscrupulous dreamer had thought best for her to know.

And as she leaned to the work of cooking, her lovely face, red with the heat of the fire, that very dreamer was watching her, from a neighboring thicket, with almost as much admiration as he felt for himself. And why not? He felt that what she was, what she was going to be, was all the work of his own mind.

He arose from his hiding place and stepped cautiously toward her. It was his intention to hypnotize her and get her away from that place quickly and quietly so that Tommy should not have an opportunity to make further trouble. It needed no more now than a glimpse of that sphere of rock crystal which Professor Stilliter carried always with him to reduce Celestia to that condition of mind in which she spoke and acted upon impulse, that did not rise within herself. But though he flashed the crystal suddenly in her face and exclaimed in a tone of sharp command: "Sleep, Celestia," either she was too startled and bewildered to see the crystal at all or for once something was lacking in the process, for she sprang to her feet with a cry of fear and ran from him, calling upon Tommy by name at the top of her lungs.

So she ran after Tommy, and Stilliter ran after her, and the two guides and old man Smellsgood came out of hiding and followed after him. And in this order they came to the shore of the island, toward which Tommy, alarmed by Celestia's cries, was struggling in a welter of foam.

But when he actually saw Celestia, Tommy's enthusiasm for being of service to her seemed suddenly to cool. He let his feet drop to the bottom and stood with just his head out of water. So standing, he saw Stilliter seize Celestia by the wrist and attempt to force her back toward the camp. He saw her shake herself free with an astonishing show of energy, and it was as if her eyes no less than her hand went out to him in an appeal for help.

The veins stood out on Tommy's forehead.
"Don't let him take me away, Tommy!" she cried.

"You leave her alone!" shouted Tommy. "If you touch her I'll knock your head off!"

But Stilliter by now appreciated Tommy's predicament and smiled dryly.

"Come and do it," he said.
"You know I can't come and do it now, you dog," said Tommy, furiously, "but you just wait."

"Can't," Stilliter. "In great hurry. Come, Celestia! You'll be better off with me. You can see for yourself that the young man has no intention of risking himself against four of us."

Celestia meanwhile drew herself up, tall, proud and cold; she looked at Tommy, just once more, and she looked as if she had never seen him before. Then she turned to Stilliter.

"I will go with you," she said.
Two plans had presented themselves to Tommy. He could have told Celestia to shut her eyes until he told her to open them; then he could have come out of the water and fought for her; but he discarded that first plan because he liked the second better. In this he would come out of the water when she had gone, slip into some of his clothes and follow her.

Celestia, Stilliter, the two guides and last of all old man Smellsgood vanished in the thick of the woods. Tommy gave them two minutes' head start, and then beautiful as a Greek God, he rushed out of the water to the trees where he had hung his clothes. They were gone.

Tommy having failed her, it was obvious to Professor Stilliter that Celestia no longer even wished to escape. The heart had been taken out of her. There was no need to throw her into a hypnotic trance. She would do as she was told.

Since her emergence from that imaginary heaven, which nothing could persuade her was imaginary, Celestia had proved less manageable than he had expected. He thanked his stars that she had taken a sudden fancy to running away with Tommy rather than with some other young man. He disliked Tommy for three good reasons. Tommy disliked him, and twice Tommy had gotten the better of him. Twice Tommy had knocked his glasses off and rendered him blind and helpless. But he knew all about Tommy and couldn't help respecting him in some ways. Another young man might have taken advantage of Celestia's ignorance and innocence.

He took off his glasses to polish them and became for the moment as blind as a stone. And that made him shudder. So he polished his glasses as quickly as he could, put them on, and once more saw. Then he felt in his pocket to see if this time he had a spare pair with him. He had.

"Nobody," he thought, "will ever catch me with but one pair again."

A man of iron nerves and of great imagination under perfect control, Professor Stilliter had but one weakness—his eyes. Otherwise he was as strong as a bull; but let him once begin to think about his eyes and he became the prey of fearful and wild fancies.

Most men die but once. Professor Stilliter had died a thousand deaths and all of them violent and horrible, and due to a sudden loss of sight. During the preceding night, lying miserably on the hard, rooty ground, he had had a most unpleasant nightmare about himself.

He was alone in the midst of a vast, trackless forest. He was there on scientific business—to record the song of a certain very rare bird. But the bird wouldn't sing. It would only laugh.

Now he had stopped to rest; so had the laughing bird. In the forest was the silence of death. Suddenly the bird began to laugh again, and this time the laughter came nearer and nearer. And presently there emerged from the forest into the little open glade in which he stood two children, who held hands and laughed. They were Tommy Steele and the little Amesbury girl. They walked straight toward him as if they didn't see him. But they must have, for suddenly they stopped, and Tommy said:

"So you are the man that tried to take her away from me and lock her up in heaven, aren't you?"

"Yes, I am, and what's more, I'll get her this time."

And he lunged at the little Amesbury girl, and Tommy simply knocked his glasses off.

He stood still for quite a long time. He could hear the children, still laughing as they wandered off into the forest. The laughter grew fainter and fainter.

Then he knelt and began to hunt for his glasses. He hunted until the knees of his trousers were worn through and the small of his back ached like an ulcerated tooth. He hunted slowly and methodically until he felt that he must have covered every square inch of the open glade.

Then he began to scream for help. After an hour his screams grew hoarse and faint and presently his vocal cords relaxed and he could no longer make a sound.

So it was to be death, was it? Death in the damned forest, when he was still in the prime of life! Death because a little boy loved a little girl and always stood up for her! Well it had to be, and he tried to resign himself to it and be calm.

He woke so frightened that he was half dead in reality. And it took him some time to pull himself together.

Well, the party landed and took up the long trail to Four Corners.

About leaving Tommy without clothes, Stilliter had no compunctions. The young man might suffer. He would undoubtedly catch a frightful cold, but he wouldn't actually die. "He'll swim across," Stilliter thought, "and walk naked until he reaches the outskirts of Four Corners. Then he'll hide in a bush and call piteously for help. I wish I could be there to see. The scene should have in it the true essence of comedy."

Stilliter had no beliefs that could not be ratified in a scientific way, but he could not altogether explain away the miraculous coincidence of Tommy being the very first person that Celestia should meet.

"Why pick out to meet her when she comes back, from all the millions who might be the first to meet her, the one person who was unhappy?"

"She works like a charm," he thought, "and she is my work-mine."

And in a way she was; but the scientist took too much credit.

Left to herself Celestia must have been a force for good.

Toward the end of the long tramp there had to be frequent rests, for Celestia was getting very tired, and when at last they reached Four Corners it was only just in time to catch the New York express.

During the few minutes there were to spare, however, Celestia gathered all the crowd there was to gather, and made the deepest and most lasting impression that had ever been made upon that woodland community.

Something of interest happens in the midst of a remote wilderness, and within a few hours the incident "written up" with details appears in a newspaper. That this is possible is owing nine-tenths to good management and one-tenth to good luck.

"Johnny" Cumberland of the New York Beacon had just stepped off the Montreal express at Four Corners for a few days' rest and holiday in the woods. He had earned this by tracking down, through a period of six weeks, and causing the arrest of a certain gentleman who had been using the United States mail to separate unsophisticated people from their money.

"I want to go somewhere for a few days," said Johnny, to the city editor, "where there is no news."

The city editor did not make the usual cynical answer about Brooklyn or the state department. He said simply: "Try Four Corners, Waycross county, New York," and dismissed Johnny with a quick, pleasant nod.

Johnny, however, had no sooner stepped off the train at the newsless place than he ran head first into news. And that afternoon there appeared a column of the Beacon devoted to Celestia and headlined like this:

Angel from heaven found in Adirondack.

She bowed her lovely head and kissed him.

when she was taken away? Well, they won't do any more meeting, if I can help it. It really looks as if forces, of which we understand little or nothing, were at work to bring these two together and spoil my plans."

"Why," said Celestia, "do you make me go with you?"

"It's my duty," said Stilliter; "you can't live in the woods, at the mercy of the first young man that comes along."

"He was going to take me to New York."

"Well, so am I; by the next train. But look here, you seem to talk rationally enough," he laughed, good-naturedly. "You'll forgive me, but I took you for a demented person—that costume, you know, those jewels in your hair. You wouldn't expect a sane person to dress that way for a fishing trip. Won't you tell me who you are?"

"I am Celestia," she said. "I come from heaven to make the world happier." She spoke these words in a clear rather loud voice, so that the two guides turned to look at her, and the younger of them having looked, sheepishly pulled off his hat, and during the rest of the march held it in his hand. He didn't quite believe that she came from heaven. He didn't quite believe that she didn't. He proposed to take no chances. At least she was the most beautiful creature he had ever seen, or ever hoped to see.

"You Leave Her Alone!" Shouted Tommy.

Stilliter passed over the question of Celestia's origin; he appeared to accept it as a matter of course.

"I hope you will succeed," he said. "I could stand being happier myself. Won't you tell me how you propose to go about the matter?"

"If you like," she said; then for a long time she talked reform and politics to him, exactly as he had taught her to talk them, with the same eager, simple faith and serene conviction. He pretended to be immensely interested in her schemes. But he doubted their practicality. And he tested her with numerous questions, to which during the long years of her training he had taught her the answers. Toward the end of their conversation he made less and less opposition to her theories. He began to accept and to agree with them. And in three-quarters of an hour she had performed the miracle of converting him to his own beliefs.

If he was amused, he was also excited and exhilarated. "She plays her part to perfection," he thought.

"Well," he said at last, "I believe you are right. Whether you can put your schemes in execution is another matter. Talk to the guides; tell them what you intend to do. See if you can convince them."

So while the party rested at a spring, Celestia talked smoothly and earnestly to the guides. The younger never took his eyes off her face; but the elder, after a while, looked only at the ground, and occasionally nodded. As for the old Indian, he too listened, and it seemed as if some feeling akin to remorse was gnawing at his leathery heart, for he was seen to cast sidelong glances at the bundle he had made of Tommy's clothes, and later when the party had resumed its way, it seemed as if the bundle had become too heavy for him, for when he thought no one was looking he cast it from him into a thicket. This was an act of conscience. He had stolen. That couldn't be helped; but at least he would not profit by it. However, I regret to say, a few days later the old man returned for the clothes and sold them.

"What's that?" cried Tommy, sharply. For he was not in a pleasant humor.

"That's all right," said Johnny, backing slowly away. "I thought you thought you were Robinson Crusoe; but if you think you are someone else I think so too. I think whatever you do."

"I am Tommy Barclay," said Tommy with a certain fierceness.

"Of course you are," exclaimed the reporter, "that's what I meant to say in the first place."

"If you think I'm mad—" Tommy began, but Cumberland interrupted with a hasty "No sirree, I don't. Just as sane as I am. Wouldn't wonder if saner. Maybe two or three times as sane."

Tommy couldn't help laughing.

"Look here," said Tommy, "don't be an ass if you can possibly help it. My clothes were stolen while I was in swimming. I threw this fashionable suit together out of respect for Anthony Comstock, and I'm looking for a young lady named Celestia—"

"The girl from heaven?"

"That's what she says; but how do you know?"

"Me? I interviewed her just before she boarded the New York express. Professor Stilliter, the famous psychologist found her in the woods, and between you and me she's some girl."

"Who are you?" Tommy asked abruptly.

"Then you probably know who I am."

"If you're really Mr. Thomas Barclay, I do. Are you?"

Tommy merely nodded and the reporter knew he was speaking the truth.

"If you've any statement to make, Mr. Barclay—"

Tommy shook his head.

"They took her to New York?"

"To Bellevue, Stilliter couldn't make up his mind whether she was big game or not."

"I'm afraid she is," said Tommy. "Poor kid. Look here, old man, I'd be a life long friend to anybody who'd bring me a decent suit of clothes in time to catch the next train. I know everybody in Four Corners, but somehow I can't see myself facing them in acks. Is the most beautiful woman in the world. Insane or an advertising scheme. Some think her a female Billy Sunday—wants to reform New York—will be taken to Bellevue observation ward.

CHAPTER XI.

Think of the maddest you have ever been, multiply that by ten, and you will have some idea of Tommy's state of mind when he found that his clothes were gone. It was half an hour before he was able to think.

And by that time there was no longer any sight or sound of Celestia.

Still furiously angry, but calmer, he hurried to the hut and used up the precious hour to make a suit of clothes out of the buffalo robe. He succeeded with an old nail, which he found, in making holes for his arms and legs to go through and in cutting a strip of hide for the belt, but as a suit the affair was not a success. Finally he determined to travel naked, carrying the buffalo suit over his arm to be donned hastily in case he met anyone.

So he swam to the mainland, keeping the buffalo hide out of water as much as he could, and on feet which were soon bruised and bloodied, headed straight for Four Corners. He chose this course not because he expected to find Celestia there, but because he was well known there, and could get clothes and if necessary a posse of men who would help find out what had become of her.

Badly bitten by mosquitoes, gnats and deerflies, he had by five o'clock arrived within half a mile of Four Corners, when a sound of footsteps caused him to dart behind a virburnum bush and dress hastily in his buffalo robe suit. That so dressed he resembled a cross between the wild man of Borneo and a Christmas stocking, did not trouble him. He was covered and proprieties were preserved. That was all that mattered. Stepping back into the trail and renewing his way he came face to face with John Cumberland.

John gave one look at Tommy and shuddered. Every brave man has his weakness; an inborn fear of maniacs was Johnny's. He would have given his reputation to be elsewhere, but he had plenty of real nerve, and though he felt that the situation might prove desperate, he resolved to face it like a man. He had often heard that the way to get along with maniacs is by humoring them; so he drew a long breath, assumed a ghastly smile. "It is—I must be Robinson Crusoe!"

"What's that?" cried Tommy, sharply. For he was not in a pleasant humor.

"That's all right," said Johnny, backing slowly away. "I thought you thought you were Robinson Crusoe; but if you think you are someone else I think so too. I think whatever you do."

"I am Tommy Barclay," said Tommy with a certain fierceness.

"Of course you are," exclaimed the reporter, "that's what I meant to say in the first place."

"If you think I'm mad—" Tommy began, but Cumberland interrupted with a hasty "No sirree, I don't. Just as sane as I am. Wouldn't wonder if saner. Maybe two or three times as sane."

Tommy couldn't help laughing.

"Look here," said Tommy, "don't be an ass if you can possibly help it. My clothes were stolen while I was in swimming. I threw this fashionable suit together out of respect for Anthony Comstock, and I'm looking for a young lady named Celestia—"

"The girl from heaven?"

"That's what she says; but how do you know?"

"Me? I interviewed her just before she boarded the New York express. Professor Stilliter, the famous psychologist found her in the woods, and between you and me she's some girl."

"Who are you?" Tommy asked abruptly.

"Then you probably know who I am."

"If you're really Mr. Thomas Barclay, I do. Are you?"

Tommy merely nodded and the reporter knew he was speaking the truth.

"If you've any statement to make, Mr. Barclay—"

Tommy shook his head.

"They took her to New York?"

"To Bellevue, Stilliter couldn't make up his mind whether she was big game or not."

"I'm afraid she is," said Tommy. "Poor kid. Look here, old man, I'd be a life long friend to anybody who'd bring me a decent suit of clothes in time to catch the next train. I know everybody in Four Corners, but somehow I can't see myself facing them in this. They have nothing to do but spit on a red hot stove and laugh."

"I've got extra clothes," said Cumberland. "If you wait here, I'll go and come back with the necessary. Aren't you dying for a smoke?"

"I am," said Tommy; "you're a brick."

He accepted three of the reporter's cigarettes and a number of matches.

CHAPTER XII.

It had leaked out that the angel from heaven, recently found in the Adirondacks, would reach New York on a certain train, and the entrances to the Grand Central station were thronged with idlers on the lookout for a sensation. I don't know what they expected to see—some sort of a Carrie Nation perhaps, at whom they would jeer—certainly not Celestia. Very few persons in the crowd really saw her—but from these as she passed swiftly with Professor Stilliter to a waiting taxicab arose no jeers and insults, but only a low, humming murmur of wonder and admiration.

She walked like someone in a trance, looking neither to the right nor to the left, but her lovely face had such an expression of serenity and peace and she was so touchingly young that the worst scoffers felt their hearts soften and go soft to her.

Her white dress, falling in unbroken lines from her shoulders, the jeweled band low across her forehead, would, at the time and place, make almost any other wearer ridiculous. But Celestia's face was so commandingly good and beautiful that only women and reporters noticed her clothes at all. And only those of them who were in the foremost fringe of the crowd saw that, except for thin sandals, her small, high-arched feet were bare.

Another crowd not so large saw her leave the taxicab and enter Bellevue hospital. From these there went up a short, sharp murmur of pity. "Of course, she's mad, poor thing," these thought, "or else they are going to make out that she is, and that's worse; and did anybody ever see such hair and eyes, and such a carriage of the head, or any dress so white, or anyone that moved with so much grace?"

Professor Stilliter, who was well known to the Bellevue authorities, though he remained a spectator of all the tests to which her mental powers were subjected, refused to give his own conclusions as to her sanity.

"I've been with her a good many hours on end," he said, "and, of course, I've formed an opinion, but I refuse to interfere in any way with your experiments and deductions."

At first they all thought that she was mad. They couldn't help it. She told them that she came from heaven, and had come to save the world. And she told them these things with such simplicity and dignity that it was obvious to the most cynical that she at least believed what she said. "It was like a mother," said one of the young doctors afterward, "telling her children Bible stories."

Cross questioning could neither shake her narrative in detail or degree, and as her mind continued to respond quickly and patiently to one test after another they became more and more puzzled. Instead of being able to prove that she was defective, it began to dawn on them after hours of experiment and observation that she was the opposite, not only mentally but physically.

At last Professor Stilliter took the head doctor aside.

"You haven't even a pretext for detaining her, have you?" he asked.

"Not one," said the doctor. "She's as sane as you or I, according to all the tests, and yet she can't be. What's to become of her?"

"Why, as long as I discovered her," said Professor Stilliter, "I feel that I

He resembled a cross between a wild man and a Christmas stocking. Must at least look after her until I discover who her people are. So, if you will keep her here for an hour I'll send for her."

The doctor followed Professor Stilliter into the waiting room. This was empty but for a gentleman in a far corner, whose face was concealed by a newspaper. At the outer door of the waiting room Professor Stilliter shook hands with the doctor.

"It's been wonderfully interesting, hasn't it?" he said. "I'll let you know how she gets on. Meanwhile thanks for all the trouble you have taken. And I'll send for her in about an hour."

The door closed behind him and the doctor turned to retrace his steps to the observation room.

Just then the gentleman in the corner rose to his feet, laid aside his newspaper and disclosed the bronzed face of Tommy Barclay.

"I'd like to speak with you for a moment, if you don't mind," he said.

SUNSHINE MOLLIE

Featuring Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley, is a powerful story of the oil fields, full of dramatic action with a vein of comedy running throughout and staged with a close attention to detail and naturalness that characterizes all Bosworth productions. Some remarkable scenes are shown of "Gushers" and magnificent fire scenes show the burning of the immense oil field. It was found necessary to purchase property at considerable expense in order to get the wonderful effects. The settings of the different interiors from the dining room and kitchen of the workmen in Oilfield to the magnificent O'Brien mansion in town, are all absolutely true to life in every way and realistic in the extreme. The photography is exceptional and many new and novel ideas are made use of to good effect.

We do not keep Quick Meal Oil and gasoline stoves we sell them because we guarantee them to be the best made.—H. L. Hutchinson & Co.

D. M. Logan and family returned last week from Galveston and other South Texas points.

Prompt delivery, full measure and weight, and best service, at McMurry's Phone—they'll do the rest.

Maurice and Miss Roxie Coughran returned from a visit with their father and family at Coughran, Texas, last week. They report Mr. Coughran's condition as slightly improved. He is now able to walk about. His Colorado friends hope that he may fully recover from his lameness.

We will furnish everything but the baby and for the cold cash we can certainly interest you if you will give us a chance.—H. L. Hutchinson & Co.

A letter received last week announces the fact that Rev. R. W. Thomas, who went to Indianapolis, Ind., for treatment has returned to Dallas for treatment and is now at the Baptist Sanitarium in that city.

The Quinine That Does Not Affect The Head
 Because of its tonic and laxative effect, LAXATIVE BROMO QUININE is better than ordinary Quinine and does not cause nervousness nor ringing in head. Remember the full name and look for the signature of E. W. GROVE. 25c.

Mrs. Hooten has purchased the F. McKenzie home on Sycamore street and now occupies the same.

The four-room residence being erected on Third street by F. M. Bourn is going forward rapidly to completion. Mr. Bourn has purchased the two lots just north of Manuel's new rock building. The Record hopes he may soon see it to his advantage to erect a building thereon.

Piles Cured in 6 to 14 Days

PROMPT AND EXPERT AUTO WORK

The repair department of O. E. Avery's garage has been taken over wholly by Robert Henthorne, who will attend to all the ills of whatsoever kind to which automobiles are heir or which have been inflicted upon them. Robert needs no introduction or commendation as an expert workman to the auto owners of Colorado and Mitchell county. He will do the needed work skillfully, quickly, and above all, reasonably. He asks a share of the public patronage, based upon satisfaction and dependable work.

STRAYED.
