Sunday was a full day. The Sunday school was a little below par but some of the regulars were out of town and some were over worked and others slept a little too late to make it but here is hoping they will all be on the job next Sunday morning with a smile and ready for another full day. The pastor taught a class in the morning, preached, met a committee of visitors, drove to the

AS A TOWN GROWS.
 At the present time some discussion is going on regarding the future of the little town. Some regard it's fortune with much pessimism, and think that the development of good highways and modern means of transportation have spelled it's doom.

Such means and methods of transportation can be made to work to the advantage of the small town, as much as it has to the larger cities. However, it will require that the small town wake up. The same quick transportation that might lead the customers of the small town's trade territory to buy in the city, can also enable the small town merchant, and can afford. The small town customers no longer go to the market in an ox cart and the small town merchant must not use ox cart methods. Any small town that thinks that its customers will buy an inferior product when they can drive to the city and get a product of quality, is badly mistaken.

The merchant in the small town can carry just as good material as his brother in the city. In fact he can carry the same material that his city brother does, at much cheaper rates, because he does not have high rents to pay. The old styled method of country grocer keeping is doomed. The country grocer can have the same spic and span appearance that the city grocer does. He can supply his customers with the same brand of groceries as his city brother does, and at cheaper prices.

The modern means of transportation will work to the advantage of the small town. It will enable him to keep in touch with his customers. It will also make it possible for the small town to afford a better market for home produce. There is no reason why the farmer should not receive practically the same price for his products in the small town as he would in the larger towns. The merchant can buy the produce of the farmer and can themselves send it to the big markets. The profit on such a transaction may not be much from the standpoint of the merchant, from a monetary viewpoint, but the profit will be large in satisfied customers. They will realize and appreciate the time saved by the local market.

The little town is not doomed, it has merely entered upon a new phase of life. Towns that are wide awake, meeting with intelligent insight, the needs of the trade territory will continue to prosper and grow. The town, that does business as the town fathers did, will wilt in the noon hour of progress. The world moves, and they are safe who meet the conditions of the age in which they live.—Commercial World.

STATE TEACHERS' ASS'N.

E. Frank King, superintendent of the Colorado schools, and Samuel C. Harris, superintendent of Mitchell County schools, expect a large number of teachers from the city and county to attend the Texas State Teachers Association convention, which will be held in San Antonio November 27, 28 and 29. San Antonio has made plans to entertain more than 5,000 visitors, and it is expected that the meeting will be the largest in the history of the association.

Dr. George A. Works and others who have been engaged in making the Texas School survey will make addresses. The needs and conditions of Texas schools will be the general theme of the convention, and school leaders of the State will engage in discussions of every phase of the work.

Hundreds of teachers are expected to go to San Antonio from Southwest Texas points by automobile.

Dr. and Mrs. P. C. Coleman and W. W. Porter have returned from Lubbock, where they attended ceremonies attending laying corner stone of the administration building Texas School of Technology.

NEGRO GIVEN FIFTY YEARS ON CONVICTION OF ASSAULT

Willie Hall, an 18-year-old negro boy, was sentenced to fifty years in the penitentiary by a jury in 72nd district court at Lubbock Thursday of last week on charges of assaulting a white woman, the wife of a Lubbock county farmer. The case proved of considerable interest, since it was claimed it was the first time a negro was charged with having outraged a white woman on the Plains of West Texas.

In reporting the trial, the Lubbock Morning Avalanche for Friday says:

"The case is the first of its kind that has ever been tried in the Plains section and ever since the apprehension of the negro a feeling of unrest has existed throughout the county. Sheriff H. L. Johnston, the same of the Ross-Good trial fame, has had his force organized at all times and handled the situation admirably. In order to leave every avenue against violence guarded Johnston secured the services of Sheriff John McDermitt, of Crosby county, and Sheriff John Kellar, of Yoakum county, two of the outstanding peace officers of West Texas, to aid in the handling of the prisoner. City policemen were also pressed into service and never since the completion of the famous trials of Milt Good and Tom Ross here has such precaution been exercised in upholding peace and order.

"Prosecuting the case was the veteran District Attorney Gordon B. McGuire, whose arguments resulted in the conviction of Ross and Good, with Owen W. McWhorter, Lubbock county attorney, one of the outstanding young prosecutors of West Texas, as his assistant. Arranged against the veterans of many a hectic legal skirmish, were three young local attorneys, each going through his baptism of fire before a court of law. Appointed by the court to defend a negro charged with a heinous crime against a respected white woman."

TERRACING ADDS TO CROP PRODUCTION, IS CLAIMED

H. L. Atkins, Mitchell county farm agent, in contributing an article to the current number of The Progressive Farmer, outlines that terracing farm lands adds from 15 to 25 per cent to the land value, in increased crop production alone. Atkins has personally supervised terracing on a number of Mitchell county farms during the past year.

The article contributed by Mr. Atkins follows:

"The practice of contouring or terracing of agricultural lands, while of comparative recent adoption in the United States, is by no means a new thing in the world of agriculture.

"China, for ages our most backward nation in many respects, was among the first to learn and adopt the principle of the terrace, and we must even believe that the famous 'Hanging Garden' referred to in ancient history was nothing more or less than a series of terraces, planted to trees, crops and flowers.

"Within the recent years terracing has found favor in the United States and the Department of Agriculture has both recognized its value and recommended the adoption of the terrace to American agriculture.

"In North and South Carolina and others of the Southern and Eastern states, the rapid return to prosperity in agriculture may be attributed to three factors: First, a wise rotation of crops with the liberal use of legumes; second, judicious usage of natural and commercial fertilizers; and last, but not least, the terracing of the hill-side farm.

"While in most instances the chief object in the construction of the terrace, is that of preventing soil erosion; yet there are other benefits to be derived. This is especially true in the sections where rainfall constitutes the limiting factor in crop production for, in this case, the terrace has as its prime objective the conservation of moisture.

"In West Texas the value of the terrace in moisture saving is a demonstrated fact, and the actual value of the farm on the slope, when properly terraced is increased from ten to twenty-five per cent, as indicated in terms of increased crop yield alone.

"But, we should ever bear in mind that the terrace, to accomplish the purpose to which it is intended, must be properly constructed. The broad terrace of eighteen to twenty feet width, under varying conditions will prove most satisfactory, and it should rise at least twenty inches above the ground surface, being built higher and wider at ditches and washes as occasion demands.

"With proper attention devoted to correctly built terraces; to crop rotation and the use of natural fertilizers, the western states should have little cause to pass through such periods of poor production as were once suffered in the east, and farm prosperity will continue in the years to come."

ALL OUT OF SORTS? So Was This Colorado Woman Who Tells Her Experience.

All too often women accept their pains and aches as natural to their sex. They fail to realize that weak kidneys are often to blame for that backache, those headaches, dizzy spells and that tired, depressed feeling. Thousands have found new health and strength by helping the weakened kidneys with Doan's Pills—a stimulant diuretic. This Colorado case is one of many:

Mrs. W. M. Cooper, Concho St., says: "I suffered with severe pains across the small of my back. I could hardly get out of bed mornings, as my back was sore and lame. I got so dizzy, everything turned black before me. I had severe headaches and was bothered by my kidneys acting irregularly. Doan's Pills from W. L. Doss' Drug Store removed the pains in my back and regulated my kidneys."

OIL NEWS REPORTED BY THE STERLING CITY RECORD

Durham well No. 2, came in a good producer last Friday. Having carefully watched developments of this well since it was spudded in until it reached its present depth of 1406 feet, we are prepared to say to those interested that as it now stands, it is good for a minimum of 50 barrels of oil every 24 hours. If we had a million dollars to invest in oil lands, we would not be afraid to invest it on this basis, because we have reason to believe 100 barrels would be nearer the correct estimate after the well cleans itself on the pump.

The job of shutting off the water was entirely successful and nothing comes in but oil. The drilling was suspended when the sand was penetrated about 30 inches. On several days the oil was bailed out and stored in a tank and used for fuel for the boiler. The job of installing a pump was completed Tuesday, and the well behaved beautifully until the pump was stopped about 8 o'clock that night. M. C. Mitchell, night watchman at the well, states that oil "oozed" out of the discharge pipe all night Tuesday night. The well stood 800 feet in oil Wednesday morning. Paul S. Odward, head of the Chicago Oil and Gas Co., which owns the well, went to San Angelo Thursday on business connected with the well.

We have been asked not to tell it to strong—and we haven't—but Mr. Odward authorizes us to extend an invitation to the people to come out next Sunday afternoon and take a look and see for themselves whether or not Sterling has an oil producer.

This well is the shallowest commercial well on the Marathon Fold. Foster Sterling County No. 1 on Sec. 34, Block 13, S. P. Ry. Co. survey, five miles southwest of town was spudded in this week. We called this well Foster well No. 4 last week, but to avoid confusion, we must speak of it as Foster No. 1.

Operations are in full blast at the Hull well and the boys are making good progress.

Good progress is being made at the Douthitt well 18 miles northwest of Sterling near the Pannamora ranch. Another new well about 3960 feet east of the Durham wells is being considered by the lessee of several 10-acre tracts. It is also rumored that a deal for a new well in the vicinity of the J. L. Glass ranch has been made.

We learn from reliable sources that several big oil companies have pooled to drill 50 test wells on the Marathon Fold, and Sterling is spoken of being the first object of the efforts of these people.

Operations in the McDowell field in Glasscock county southwest of Big Spring have been renewed. There is no doubt but that the McDowell field will be a commercial one when a boni fide test is made and the wells given a chance.

Later reports came in from the McDowell well yesterday to effect that the hole was found full of oil and that so far the bailer had failed to lower the oil.

ROBERT TERRY sometimes felt that his position was intolerable. Judith Blackstone had told him frankly that she loved him when he asked her to marry him. That was last May—and then she had dashed off with her sister-in-law, Daphne, to their summer home on the side of Dale mountain, to be gone for months, telling him definitely that there must be no exchange of letters between them.

"If we were engaged in the regular way we'd be good for nothing else all summer but writing everlasting daily letters and worrying when letters didn't come on time," Judith had said. "So don't write and then when you have your vacation the first of September you may come up to Dale mountain and we can talk of a definite engagement then."

At the beginning of the warm weather it had been definitely agreed that Robert should have no vacation until September, but by the close of July he found himself in such a state of anxiety, because of his inability to hear from Judith, that he decided that, come what might, he would take a week off from his work and go to her. About all that Robert Terry knew of Judith's arrangements on Dale mountain was that she and her widowed sister-in-law lived together in a cabin some quarter mile off from the club lodge where they and the other members of the club had their meals together.

Robert Terry dispatched a letter, of the briefest sort, to tell Judith that he was coming. Judith promptly telegraphed back: "Don't come now. Much preoccupied. Will write."

The result of this telegram was that Robert Terry took the first train he could catch that carried him in the direction of Dale mountain. He was ready to fight the most formidable of rivals on the strength of the vivid recollection of Judith's simple, "Terry, I love you."

Twelve hours later Terry found himself in the nearest railroad station ten miles from the Dale mountain lodge. He arranged with the local garage man to motor him up the mountain road to the club encampment. It was nearing eight o'clock when Terry finally found his way to the Blackstone cottage. He stepped across the wide veranda to find the place obviously deserted for the time being.

Robert Terry felt his courage mounting. Judith had said that she loved him. She had intimated that she would marry him. They were virtually engaged. Then, argued Terry going to the front door and trying the knob, since Judith had no brothers she lived alone with a widowed sister-in-law, he was her rightful male protector. The door knob gave as he turned it vigorously. If she was "pre-occupied" it was his business to find out why. Thus concluding Robert Terry let himself into the cabin. He struck a match, found a candle on a rustic table and lighted it. He saw the outlines of the room—quite large and furnished in keeping with the rough-timbered interior. This room was in order but as Robert observed the adjoining room he was struck by the disorder of it.

Two trunks, drawn away from the wall, were wide open, the trunk trays placed on the floor with dainty clothes, slippers, parasols, and hats strewn about. Quite clearly some one was making preparations for hasty departure. He recognized a rose-colored frock of Judith's. On a table was a tray containing a half-eaten sandwich and beside it—the sight of it sickened him—a large and mischievous-looking revolver. Examining more closely he saw bits of torn paper about the floor, and an overturned chair. Obviously there had been some sort of struggle.

Cautiously Robert approached the revolver, about to see whether it was loaded or discharged, when he heard footsteps on the veranda, the turning of the knob and then light steps in the next room. Followed a cry of fright—it was Judith's voice. Robert breathed a prayer of thanksgiving. At least she was still breathing. "Daphne," she called, "there's a light. Some one has been here."

Robert Terry did what he considered the most considerate thing that he could under the circumstances. He coughed, gently but distinctly. Then he strode forward where the two women could see him.

"I know you didn't want me to come," he said facing Judith and, as he did so, feeling the full intensity of his love for her. "I came anyway. I hope it isn't too late."

"But what's up?" asked Robert, waving an agitated hand in the direction of the open trunk, the scattered clothes and the revolver.

Judith put two arms out and actually embraced Robert Terry, laughing as she did so. "You dear lamb, you," she said. "We're giving a play. I'm in it and it's going to be here tomorrow. We had a rehearsal here tonight and the stage was set for the last act. It's a thriller I can tell you. And I didn't want you to come until the next day because I was afraid I'd get stage fright if you saw me act. I'm the maid. I could have been leading lady. Bob dear, only the leading lady had to kiss the leading man, and—here Judith pressed a neat little kiss on the lips of the astonished Robert Terry—"I wouldn't think of kissing any one but my fiance."

LORAIN FARMER FINDS
BIG PROFIT IN POULTRY

J. L. Kuykendall, farmer of near Loraine, is among the strong poultry enthusiasts of Mitchell County. And Mr. Kuykendall has become a strong believer in poultry after having found the business one of the most dependable, from a financial standpoint, in which to engage. It is easy money, assures quick turnover and is a business which, different from the old crop method, brings in its dividend checks every day of the year.

According to figures submitted to the Chamber of Commerce Wednesday, Mr. Kuykendall started his 1924 poultry business with a flock of 200 English white leghorns, including cockerels. During the first ten months of the year he has marketed eggs to the value of $917.80, baby chicks at $68.60, cockerels at $40.00, making a total of $1,074.10. Added to this he includes the additional income of $580.00 realized through increased market value of his flock, which now is considerably larger than it was on January 1st. This places the total income at $1,654.10.

Total expense of caring for the flock, including feed bills, marketing and other expense accounts aggregates $400, leaving $1,254.10 in net profit from the first ten months of the year. Net profits during the months of November and December will easily reach $300, placing total profits for the year at $1,550, or an average of more than $125 per month.

Mr. Kuykendall is not devoting his entire attention to his poultry by any means. He continues to grow his annual crops of cotton, sorghum grains and other farm products as before. His poultry income is thus to be considered velvet.

Much attention has been given the poultry industry in this county during the past two years by the Colorado Chamber of Commerce and the home demonstration and county farm agents. The record attained last year was placing standard bred poultry on 87 Mitchell county farms. Under direction of Miss Sealy, home demonstration agent, scores of girl club members of the county are devoting their attention to care of small flocks of standard bred poultry. At the Dallas Fair last year a Mitchell county club girl won sweep stakes on a pen of poultry entered by her.

OLD CLOCK STOPPED WHEN
JUDGE W. R. SMITH DIED

An interesting article appears in a recent number of the El Paso Herald. The story concerns an old clock in the United States district court room at El Paso, which, since the day on which Judge William R. Smith, federal judge, died, has refused to run. The story is interesting to Colorado people, in view of the fact that Judge Smith, for several years a member of congress, lived in Colorado many years. He came here as a young attorney soon after the city was founded and moved to El Paso in 1917 to accept an appointment from President Wilson as judge of the United States district court there. His recent death will be remembered by his many friends at Colorado.

The article, as it appeared in the Herald, follows:

"A faithful attache of the United States district court has refused to work any longer. After watching innumerable trials, witnessing heart-breaking scenes, and seeing men leave the court to begin sentence which may put them behind the bars for the rest of their lives, this attache has decided to work no longer. "A face beaming with good nature always on time, seldom speaking out of turn—the court clock has refused to work any longer. "A peculiar feature is that the clock stopped the day the late Judge William R. Smith died," said court stenographer Roy G. Lassiter. "We sent the old clock to repair shops many times. It would come back and perform its duties for a day or two and then give up the struggle. It looks now as though the government will have to supply us with a new clock."

Rev. W. M. Elliott will preach at Coahoma Sunday. Mr. Elliott has been supplying the Coahoma church until they can secure a pastor. There will be no preaching at the Presbyterian church here this Sunday. Other services as usual.
