From The Superintendent's Desk

Dean Andrews

The following article was printed in the June 30, 1988, issue of the Texas Superintendent's Insider.

Parents Facing Fines Over Delinquent Children

"I think it is one of the best juvenile justice decisions I've ever seen...There's an absolute need to issue orders that hold parents accountable for their children. Without them, we don't have any teeth on the parent's side of the equation."

Those were the words of Diane McGauley, deputy director of the Dallas County Juvenile Department. She was reacting to Judge Harold Gaither's decision to hold the parents of a 12-year-old boy with a history of delinquent behavior responsible for their son's actions.

"It's very uncommon to issue court orders to parents," McGauley. "To hold them in contempt of the court order, it's the first time it's ever happened in Texas. I think Judge Gaither is a pioneer."

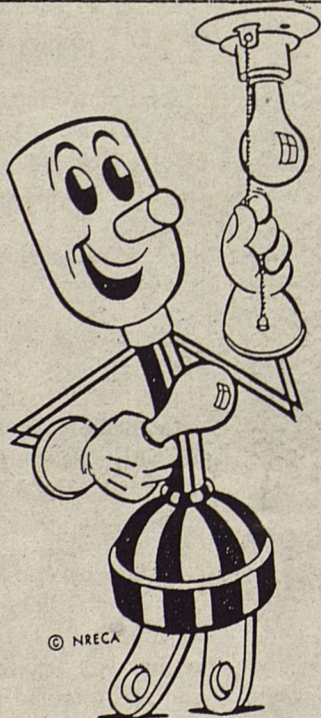

The boy's criminal history reportedly included aggravated assaults, burglaries, an alleged molestation of a female student and an incident in which he was accused of holding a .22 caliber pistol to the heads of two 10-year-old girls.

What was Gaither's reaction to the publicity from his decision?

"We have to do something," he said. "Sixty percent of the kids that come through the juvenile system will be back. We have to try more of this (holding parents accountable), and we have to try other things in order to determine why their children were either truant from regular classes or failing to attend the tutoring sessions.

"I'm trying to literally toughen up the district," Raymond said. "Schools have been too permissive."

We also have been lenient with truancy in the past, accepting almost any excuse from the parent regarding the student's absence. However, we are no longer going to sit back. The stakes are too high to permit excessive absences for no justifiable reason. Our job is to serve students and students must be in school to receive the benefits of this service. Regular attendance is a basic requirement of the educational system and it is imperative that parents realize the importance of this fact.
