South Plains Health District Awarded $200,000 Grant

South Plains Public Health District (SPPHD) was recently awarded a $200,000 grant by the Texas Department of Health for Primary Health Care Services to low income persons within its service area. Primary Health Care (PHC) services will be provided through SPPHD clinics in Seminole, Brownfield, and Denver City. The purpose of the grant is to provide early and cost effective medical care for common childhood illnesses as well as to prevent complications from uncontrolled diabetes and high blood pressure in adults. Diabetes is currently the number one cause of blindness and kidney failure in Texas. Uncontrolled high blood pressure is linked to premature heart attacks and strokes often striking its victims in their forties and fifties while still in their productive wage earning years.

Services to be provided with the new grant will include physician services, health education, some lab and X-ray tests secured at the local hospital, and financial assistance in the purchase of certain medications and supplies (antibiotics, diabetes and high blood pressure medications, insulin syringes, etc.) from local pharmacies. Each person applying for PHC services will also be screened for possible eligibility in other health care assistance programs such as Medicaid. Assistance will be provided for applicants to apply for these other programs as well. Although clinic services will not be free, a sliding fee scale will be applied to the clinic charge. The sliding fee scale will be based on the number of family members residing at home and the family's total income.

To be eligible for this new PHC program each person must provide proof of income and meet the state's income guidelines, be a resident of Texas, and be either under 18 years of age OR have diabetes and/or high blood pressure (no age limitations).

For further information or to make an appointment to apply for the program call 592-2706 or come by the new SPPHD clinic at 412 N. Avenue F, which is Dr. Scott's old office in Denver City.

Texas Libraries Building Community Partnerships

"Writers love to go to Texas because Texans buy books!" That statement was made by a young author who was signing autographs at the American Library Association Conference in New York City in the summer of 1986. For some unexplained reason, that statement came as a surprise. I have frequently compared notes with librarians from other states as we have met at various conferences, and I have been aware that, frequently, many places in Texas do have better-than-average library facilities. Consequently, that author's statement should not have startled me, but it did.

In attempting to analyze my reaction, I have decided that I was surprised because I, too, adhere to the stereotypical image of the Texan who is something of a loner who independently works out his own solutions to problems without consulting books or other people....But that "Texans buy books!" is an image that we need to promote.

On October 20, 1990, the West Texas Conference on Libraries and Information Services (WTCLIS) will be held at Ed Irons Junior High School, 5214 79th Street, Lubbock, Texas. The meeting is one of several preliminary gatherings across Texas to prepare for the Texas Conference on Libraries and Information Services (TCLIS) to be held in Austin in January 1991. Fifty state conferences nationwide are scheduled in preparation for the White House Conference on Libraries and Information Services (WHCLIS) in Washington, D.C. in July 1991.

The White House Conference on Libraries and Information Services is held once every ten years. While other organizations lobby for national recognition and may bombard government with requests regularly, Libraries and Information Services concentrate their efforts to create the strongest impact possible.

As area conferences send delegates and resolutions to the state conference, goals and long range plans will be honed to promote the most effective, workable ideas for presentation at the White House Conference. Texas has always been well represented in efforts to promote libraries and information services, but this conference is even more crucial because the efforts are aimed toward the nationwide theme of "Literacy, Productivity, and Democracy" as they are influenced through libraries.

Productivity is the output of an average worker over a specified period of time in relation to the use of a given resource or input as raw materials or energy.

Literacy is the ability to read and write.

The survival of Democracy is dependent upon both literacy and productivity.

A great deal of work done today is based on services, communications, and information. It has been predicted that by the year 2000, 71% of the labor force in industrialized countries will work in the information and communications sectors of the economy.

The greatest productivity gains can be realized by improving the productivity of knowledge workers, an emerging class of managerial and professional workers who create, use, and communicate information.

Sadly, however, 30% of the adults in the United States are functionally illiterate. Slightly over 1/3 of Texas students drop out of high school before graduation. Of all inmates in the Texas Department of Corrections, 90% have not completed high school. Eighty-five percent of all juveniles who appear before a judge have reading problems.

By the year 2000, 73% of new jobs will require more than minimal literacy skills.

Such statistics go on and on. It is time that the problems be addressed by all citizens nationwide. Participating in the West Texas Conference on Libraries and Information Services is a beginning. All people who want to make a difference in reversing the trends toward illiteracy, nonproductivity, and apathetic attitudes toward government and democracy are urged to attend the West Texas Conference on Libraries and Information Services in October.

Delegates to the state and national level conferences must include the general public, elected officials, and members of support groups, as well as library and information professionals. Everyone who is interested in the future of our state and nation is invited to attend, says Betty Hamilton, Chairman of the Publicity Committee.

THE VOICE OF BUSINESS

WE'RE STILL MAKING THINGS

by Dr. Richard L. Lesher, President
U.S. Chamber of Commerce

WASHINGTON — They say a rumor can circle the globe twice in the time it takes the truth to get out the front door. That might explain why so many otherwise sensible people believe the United States has lost its edge in manufacturing to enter some sort of post-industrial phase.

To be sure, there are some superficial data to support such a notion. For example, in 1955 the United States imported less than one percent of cars sold here; today we import 30 percent. In 1963, we imported two percent of the apparel sold here; today we import 50 percent. In 1955, some 96 percent of radios sold in this country were produced domestically; today virtually none is. Also, in the 1950s we produced virtually all the televisions sold here; by 1987 we had only one domestic firm in the business — Zenith — with a 15 percent market share.

But specialization is the name of the game in international commerce. In pursuit of economic growth, nations tend to focus their energies on specific tasks that they perform best. While other countries have been targeting these industries, we have been concentrating on others.

For example, since 1977 our production of chemical products is up 78 percent; our output of plastic products is up 116 percent; our printing and publishing are up 102 percent; our office machinery is up 240 percent; our production of electronic components is up 188 percent; our output of communication equipment has risen 110 percent; and our production of aircraft and parts has gone up an astounding 177 percent.

Those are not isolated figures, but rather reflective of an overall trend. Since 1982, our industrial capacity has increased by 21 percent and our production by 37.5 percent. Only one other major industrial nation, Japan, can boast a greater increase and that by a tiny margin. No other industrial nation has even come close to matching our performance.

That doesn't sound to me like a manufacturing base in decline. To the contrary, it sounds like a vigorous manufacturing sector on an aggressive growth curve. The rumors of our manufacturing demise are premature — to say the least.

Helpful Ideas From The World's Top Managers

Q. What's a good way to get noticed by top management?

A. "Declare victory," says Robert Dilenschneider, head of the world's largest public relations firm, Hill and Knowlton.

"Look for opportunities to declare victory," says Dilenschneider in a startling new book. "If your boss has a weekly activity report, find a way to mention fine work. About to solve a genuinely tough problem? Let management know that the problem is a real 'bear.'"

"Update your bosses periodically. Then, when you finally lick the problem, they can share in the win."

The new book, "Power and Influence," is at some bookstores but not all, so it's a good idea to call around before going to a store.

Consumers To Benefit From 1990 Farm Bill

The American farmer produces enough to feed himself and 112 other people. Food is abundant at a reasonable cost to the American consumer.

"Farm programs assist farmers in achieving reasonable food costs," said Jack Eberspacher, executive director of National Grain Sorghum Producers Association. "Congress is working on the 1990 Farm Bill, and consumers should be as interested in the outcome as farmers are. Congress needs to know the American public supports agriculture."

Eberspacher said the agriculture budget is only four percent of the national budget, and the portion that is directly related to farm programs is less than one percent of the national budget.

"It is projected that the bailout of the Savings and Loan banking system will cost American taxpayers $500 billion. This figure is 50 times greater than the portion of the 1990 Farm Bill which directly assists the American farmer in providing America with the lowest food cost per capita in the world," said Eberspacher.

In fact, most of the agricultural budget is for activities that directly benefit consumers such as food safety and inspection programs, food stamps and the school lunch program, said Eberspacher.

"Not only do Americans eat well, but they spend less than 12 percent of their disposable income on food," said Eberspacher. "The cost of farm programs to each American consumer is less than 10 cents per day. That's not much to pay to ensure a dependable supply of food and fiber."

American agriculture has a positive impact on the nation's economy as well. It accounts for nearly one-fifth of our Gross National Product. Agriculture from farm to retail is the largest single industry in America, employing nearly 21 million people or almost 19 percent of the nation's workforce.

Exports of American agricultural products are expected to reach $38.5 billion this year. "Not only do American farmers feed Americans," said Eberspacher, "but much of the rest of the world as well, and in doing so they help with our balance of payments."

So who really benefits from farm programs? "The answer is simple," said Eberspacher, "EVERYONE."

Search For 1996 Olympics Site

The search is on for a site for the 1996 Olympics—the 100th anniversary of the Olympic Games in modern times. In the running for this coveted honor is Melbourne, Australia's second biggest city.

The last time the city hosted the Olympics was in 1956, an event which came to be labelled "the friendly games." Along with the rest of Australia, Melbourne boasts political stability, has a moderate climate and a clean and safe environment in which athletes can train and compete. Melbourne's beauty, diversity and culture also help make it an ideal Olympic city, many agree.

Melbourne has hosted many sporting events, including World Series Cricket, the World Grand Prix Motor-Cycle Championship and World Cup Weightlifting. It's also home to the million-dollar Melbourne Cup horse race and the Australian Open Tennis Championship.

Already there's wide support for Melbourne in its attempt to win the right to stage the centenary modern Olympics. Also, three-quarters of its Olympic facilities are now in place. More than 75 corporations and institutions have each contributed $100,000 towards the $20 million Olympics bid. Some 50,000 Australians have registered as potential volunteer assistants.

It could be the land "Down Under" is the place for tomorrow's up-and-coming athletes to compete in at the Olympics!

ELECTRIC SAFETY....

Sometimes hunters and children have a bad habit of lifting irrigation pipes near or under overhead power lines in the pursuit of small animals. This is a deadly business. Always remember to stay away from pipes near power lines.
