Authorities confirm more measles cases

By KEVIN SMITH
University Daily Reporter

The measles outbreak Lubbock has been experiencing since late January is continuing, with city and campus authorities still reporting newly confirmed cases of red measles, also known as rubeola.

The Student Health Center confirmed Friday the latest student suffering from red measles, bringing the number of student cases to seven.

Murdo MacDonald, director of the health center, said campus medical authorities still are pushing measles vaccines in an attempt to block the spread of the disease.

"There have been enough cases reported that the only good preventative method is to inoculate all those who are in doubt about their immunity to measles," he said.

MacDonald said it is impossible to estimate how many students have been exposed to the disease, but that once exposure begins it has a snowball effect as others become contagious and continue the spread of the virus.

At other universities studies have shown that about 10 percent of the students exposed to the disease are susceptible to it, MacDonald said.

What that translates into is that a person who is just coming down with measles and is contagious can walk into a class and expose 15 to 20 people to red measles, of which about two will be susceptible to it, MacDonald said.

The two exposed can become infected and will be contagious before the symptoms of measles develop. Before those symptoms exhibit themselves, many other people can be exposed to the virus, he said.

MacDonald said student reaction to the outbreak has picked up, due in large part to the efforts of the housing department, which encouraged all resident assistants to go door to door in the residence halls urging all students with doubts about their immunity to be vaccinated.

The health center also distributed a short notice to all dorm residents explaining the measles situation, MacDonald said, and as a result more immunizations are being administered to the student population.

MacDonald said it is impossible to predict how long the outbreak will last. He and the health center is relying on publicity regarding immunity to help counter the circulation of rubeola among the student population.

There are three groups of people who should be immunized: those who have never had red measles or been vaccinated against it, those who were immunized before they were 12 months old and those who were immunized before 1968.

Anyone who has doubts about his immunity would be well advised to go ahead and be inoculated, MacDonald said.

"It's getting to the point where a student can't afford to take a week off of school, and that's what measles will do once the rash appears. On top of that, before the rash appears a person will experience a sore throat and a fever that could make him feel so bad he just wouldn't want to go to class," MacDonald said.

Local farmers study use of water-efficient crops

By DAMON PEARCE
University Daily Reporter

The economic peril of Texas farmers was the major topic of discussion at a public water hearing Monday afternoon on the Texas Tech campus.

The hearing was organized by Rep. Steven Carriker of Roby, chairman of a Texas House subcommittee assigned to study the economic feasibility of the utilization of water-efficient crops and the conversion of irrigated land to dryland farming.

Many of the more than 40 farmers and farm experts testified at the hearing, saying the conversion to dryland farming already was under way because they no longer are financially able to irrigate their crops.

"I have always said that we will not be able to afford to use water long before we run out," said Robert King, director of the Office of Natural Resources of the Texas Department of Agriculture.

"We perceive that there is not any water crisis as such, but a slow erosion of the Texas farm economy because of increased irrigation expenses," King said.

"Our primary concern is whether we can pay to irrigate, or whether we can pay our farming expenses in general," said Joe Rankin, a Crosby County farmer.

"We have got to find some better market for our crops, some means to pay our bills and mortgages," Rankin said.

Rankin said he thinks many advances were being made in water conservation simply because farmers cannot afford to irrigate because of increased fuel costs.

The deteriorating economic condition of Texas farms also has had an adverse effect on water conservation efforts, said Hockley County farmer Mike Hicks.

"We have been making all the conservation improvements that are economically feasible, with the key words being 'economically feasible,'" Hicks said.

"Production costs are exceeding demands right now, and many farmers have had to irrigate and pay the expense, or lose their crop and not be able to make the payments."

Hicks said that he thinks many farmers also cannot afford to make the initial investment needed to buy the modern equipment for better, more efficient irrigation.

A lack of stable markets for crops also was offered as a cause for the water problems.

Hicks encouraged the committee to work to strengthen and stabilize both export and domestic markets for Texas products, as a way to help the farmers.

James Mitchell, a farmer in Lubbock and Lynn counties, said a larger market for crops that are more water-efficient also would help.

"We've had a lot of suggestions for other crops that are more efficient with water, but those suggested do not have a market," Mitchell said.

"Somebody suggested using grapes as an alternate water efficient product, but I imagine that every farmer on the South Plains could plant about 10 acres of grapes and it would flood the grape market."

"We are making a sincere effort to use the most water-efficient crop varieties that we can, and we are making a conscious effort not to waste a drop of water," Mitchell said.

The committee also heard reports on advances in technology making dryland farming more profitable.

Kathy Jo Harmon, speaking for Agricultural Producers of the High Plains, told of operations using "low-till and no-till" technology.

"Dryland farming is not as easy as turning off the water wells," Harmon said.

Harmon said that by leaving the residue from the past year's crops on the soil, problems with water loss in the soil because of evaporation could be eliminated.

Leaving the residue on and then not tilling also could help in moisture retention and erosion when the land was irrigated or it did rain.

"We have found that we can increase our profit margin by $60 to $80 per acre with this system," Harmon said.

Harmon said the Legislature should encourage increased research and development in no-till technology in order to make improvements in the water situation.

"We would like for you to help make Texas the leader in low and no-till technology," she said.

Mitchell said he has 14 wells on his 320-acre farm and that a switch to partial irrigation rather than full irrigation has cut his costs drastically.

"Our change showed that a change to dryland farming is a multi-stage process," Mitchell said.

He said the irrigation he has done has lowered the water table beneath his land only 6 inches a year for the past seven years.

"We are irrigating with fairly shallow wells, and using a very modern drop-line irrigation system, so our expenses are minimal," Mitchell said.

Sam Curl, dean of the Tech College of Agricultural Sciences, said the success of West Texas agriculture has heightened the importance of the water problem.

"It is crucial that the unique problems of this region be considered soon," Curl said.

Robert Sweazy, director of the Tech Water Resources Center, said 95 percent of the water used in West Texas goes for agricultural purposes.

"I believe it is possible to preserve the Ogalala Aquifer for centuries, with substantive cooperation from the farming, economic, and private communities," Sweazy said.

"Hopefully, the aquifer will eventually be quasi-stable, with water replacement equalling the water that is taken out."

Sweazy said funding for research conducted by the Tech Water Resources Center and others across the state also will be helpful in taking care of the aquifer.

"We certainly appreciate the funding that we have received in the past, and we hope the Legislature will continue to have a positive attitude when we make our budget requests," Sweazy said.

President approves action

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan has approved a series of measures, including pre-emptive strikes and reprisals, designed to get the upper hand on terrorism worldwide, administration officials said Monday.

One of the key elements of the policy is an effort to switch from defensive action to offensive, partly by increasing the ability of U.S. operatives to gather intelligence in order to stop terrorist activities before they occur.

"You have got to have very good intelligence and very good experience to deal with intelligence," said one administration official, who spoke on the condition that he remain anonymous. "We are just trying as best we can to improve this capability."

While the U.S. government has been increasingly concerned with terrorism for several years, new impetus to deal with it occurred when 241 U.S. servicemen died in the truck-bombing of a Marine headquarters building in Beirut, Lebanon, last Oct. 23.

Although preventive raids and reprisals are part of the policy, it is not known what form such activities would take or what, if any limits were placed on such actions. However, a White House official, speaking anonymously, said Reagan did not scrap an existing prohibition against assassination attempts by U.S. government agents.

"The general idea is that we don't allow terrorism to go unpunished," this source said.

The outline of the new, government-wide approach to terrorism was contained in National Security Decision Directive 138 which Reagan signed April 3.

The document was the culmination of months of study by an inter-agency group that included the president's national security adviser, Robert McFarlane; his deputy, John Poindexter; and specialists from the State and Defense departments and other agencies that deal with national security.

U.S. embassy security official slain

By The Associated Press

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — Gunmen riding in a taxi assassinated the highest-ranking Salvadoran employee of the U.S. Embassy security staff on Monday as his car stopped at a traffic light, an embassy spokesman said.

The yellow taxi full of armed men drew alongside the car driven by Joaquim Alfredo Zapata Romero and the gunmen opened fire, killing him instantly and wounding his wife, said spokesman Gregory Lagana.

Yolanda Zapata was wounded in the face and neck, Lagana said, but the couple's daughter Lindora, also riding in the car, was not injured.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility.

The attack occurred near the Camino Real Hotel in northwestern San Salvador.

Lagana said the security official had worked for the embassy for eight years and was chief of Salvadoran security personnel at the embassy, responsible for about 20 full-time security agents.

The spokesman said Zapata had nothing to do with investigations of rightist death squads that have been accused of many of the murders of civilians since the start of El Salvador's civil war.

"He was a routine investigator," Lagana said. "I don't suspect anyone yet."

Zapata had worked for the National Police for 22 years, and for about seven years had been chief of the police criminal investigations unit, a police spokesman said.

Lt. Cmdr. Albert A. Schaufelberger III, deputy commander of the American military advisers in El Salvador, was assassinated by guerrillas last May as he sat in his car waiting to pick up his girlfriend at a local university. He was the only American military adviser slain in El Salvador.

In other developments, leftist guerrillas announced the election of a "provisional president" in the northern province of Chalatenango, and the eastern third of the country was blacked out by rebel sabotage.

The clandestine Radio Farabundo Marti said an election was held April 9 in the "controlled territories" of Chalatenango, some 55 miles north of the capital, and a 28-year-old agricultural worker identified only as Comrade Andres was chosen "new people's president."

The rebels claim to have established a regional government in Chalatenango that provides health, education, economic, public works and defense programs. But there have been no announcements in the past about elections.

"Here in Chalatenango, we live a true people's democracy," the broadcast said, adding that the president and a junta elected at the same time for the Chalatenango region would serve for one year.

The guerrillas have long controlled many of the towns in the mountainous northern province.

Senator upset about briefing on Nicaraguan mining

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A Democratic member of the Senate Intelligence Committee says he received a full briefing from the CIA about the agency-backed mining of Nicaraguan waters only because he "went and dragged it out of them."

Sen. Patrick Leahy, (D-Vt.), also said that while he thinks a colleague on the committee, Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, (D-N.Y.), was not adequately briefed about the mining, he has asked Moynihan to reconsider his decision to resign as vice chairman of the panel.

Leahy spoke amid continuing controversy over whether the CIA fulfilled its legal responsibility to keep the House and Senate intelligence panels "fully and currently informed" about intelligence activities that are under way or planned.

According to members of the two committees, the House panel was first informed of the CIA's role in the mining on Jan. 31, several days after it had started, and the Senate committee was notified March 8 by means of a brief mention in a lengthy statement, of which few if any senators took note.

The Intelligence Oversight Act, passed in 1980, requires the CIA to keep the intelligence panels "fully and currently informed of all intelligence activities" being engaged in by the United States, "including any significant anticipated activities."

Moynihan announced Sunday he is resigning as vice chairman of the Senate committee to protest what he said was the CIA's failure to give the committee full and current information prior to launching the operation, which administration officials have said privately has now been discontinued.

He will remain a member of the committee until the end of the year, when he will have completed the maximum of eight years' service established by the panel's rules.

The Senate and House voted overwhelmingly last week for a non-binding resolution condemning the mine-laying. The previous week, before most senators knew about the CIA's role in the mining, the Senate voted to continue U.S. aid to Nicaraguan guerrillas and rejected by a 47-43 vote an amendment barring any support for terrorist acts by them.

Leahy said he telephoned Moynihan on Sunday and asked him to reconsider his decision. Moynihan could not be reached for comment Monday.

Sen. Barry Goldwater, (R-Ariz.), committee chairman and who wrote to CIA Director William Casey last week complaining of not being briefed on the mining, said he regretted Moynihan's decision.

Leahy said he received a briefing from several CIA officials, not including Casey, after returning to Washington from about two weeks in Vermont during the final illness of his father. He had missed some meetings of the committee while he was away.

"Rather than read through a lot of transcripts, I asked the CIA to come over," he said. He said he asked agency officials a number of questions about the mining, which had been reported in the newspapers although the CIA's role in it was not yet public.

"I got a full and what turned out to be a pretty accurate briefing," he said. "But I got it, not because they volunteered, but because I went and dragged it out of them."

On April 4, during debate on whether to continue aid to the guerrillas fighting Nicaragua's leftist government, Goldwater told the Senate, "Neither I nor my staff have ever seen a document that is being described as attesting to the fact that the president authorized or ordered the mining of any waters in that area."

In his letter to Casey on April 9, Goldwater said that the day after making this statement he found out President Reagan had authorized the mining operation in writing in February.

After attending a briefing given by Casey last week, Leahy told reporters that during the previous week's debate he was aware of the CIA role in the mining and, "I just assumed everybody knew about it. I was one of a smaller number than I thought that had been briefed."

An amendment to delete $21 million to continue financing the guerrillas was rejected 61-30, with Leahy voting for it and Moynihan and Goldwater voting against it.

Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker, (R-Tenn.), when asked last week how many senators had known about the mining when they voted on the amendments, said, "I would assume not many."

Leahy described the CIA's briefing about the mining as "a passing reference." Moynihan had said it was "singularly obscure sentence."

November forecast: deficits will not harm Reagan's credit with voters

TOM WICKER

Members of Congress returned from a recess with the news that the home folks are concerned about what President Reagan has once again referred to as "your deficit" — as if he had nothing to do with those staggering budget shortfalls that may reach $250 billion annually by 1989.

Americans certainly should be concerned; the deficit this year will be $192 billion, by the Congressional Budget Office's estimate; if nothing is done, it will be at or above that level every year for the rest of the decade. Most economists, including Reagan's own chief economic adviser, believe deficits of that size, maintained for that long, could have a disastrous impact on interest rates, economic activity, and inflation.

Nevertheless, and despite those complaints that legislators may have heard back home, don't bet your lunch money that the deficit issue will defeat Reagan next November. Not that the case against him isn't strong. It is; but how deeply do the voters really care about the deficit?

The Democrats in 1984 can and will charge that Reagan underestimates the deficit. He says it will be only $180 billion this year, falling to $123 billion in 1989; the CBO says the annual deficiency by then will be $125 billion more than the Reagan estimate.

The president also misstates the problem, either willfully or ignorantly. At his last news conference, he said that "about half your deficits are created by the recession — they are cyclical." But Martin Feldstien, the chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, puts the heaviest responsibility where it belongs — on the Reagan tax cuts of 1981 and the Reagan military buildup. And all economic forecasts show that an economy operating at peak capacity would not come near closing the projected budget gaps.

Reagan also points the finger at Congress, in an effort to escape his own responsibility. He says Congress, particularly the Democratic House, refused to make the necessary spending cuts. But the hard truth is that if Congress eliminated all non-military discretionary spending — including the Weather Bureau, the FBI, welfare, and farm price supports — that would be only 15 percent of total spending, and again would not come close to balancing the budget.

Reagan and Secretary Weinberger stoutly resist cutting the military budget; neither the president nor the Democrats want to cut popular entitlement programs like Social Security; but if both are untouchable, then there's simply no way to cut spending enough to eliminate the deficit without tax increases.

The president's proposed remedies range from farcical to inadequate. The former category includes a constitutional amendment to force a balanced budget, a bad idea in itself and one that could not conceivably be effective in less than three years; and the line-item veto, which if permitted by Congress still would leave Reagan the choice of cutting the military or Social Security (after he'd eliminated, presumably, all discretionary government services, including the national parks and the Food and Drug Administration).

His proposed bipartisan $100 billion "down payment" plan, to be imposed over three years, would leave the deficit rising by something approaching $500 billion over the same 36 months. In short, all Reagan's underestimating, misstating, finger-pointing, evasion, and snake-oil remedies can't hide his direct responsibility for deficits that by the end of the decade will triple the national debt.

Why shouldn't the voters therefore rise in good, thrifty American wrath and throw this biggest of all presidential spenders — L.B.J. was a piker, folks, compared with R.R. — out of office? Because the deficit isn't all that threatening to the American voter, who isn't all that thrifty anyway. Unemployment is coming down, inflation is at acceptable levels, and the economy should still be booming along by November. These direct pocketbook facts, all politically favorable to the president, mean more to voters than the deficit.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Nelsons Protest

To the editor:

As three avid rock fans, we enjoy listening to the radio or watching MTV; in so doing we have blown off many a test, including English tests (which the grammar of this prose will prove), kicked back watching MTV, consuming beer and socializing, much like "frat" boys.

We'd like to take this opportunity to express our total discontent with the unsatisfactory conduct of the MTV Basement Tape Competition held last Wednesday night.

We first point out our discontent with the adolescent, acne-afflicted, metal-mouth junior frat boys who won the competition, namely TRAX. Their lack of originality, and the fact that the video would even have been a reject in the prime of the disco era, gave it no merit for winning. This group won $25,000 worth of Yamaha equipment, and are not even old enough to hold a driver's license. The band we all KNOW should have won the competition was the home-grown "NELSONS."

Even the Dallas based band, KIM & CALLAHAN, should have had a much better showing in the polls. Both groups showed the greatest originality, promise, and talent in their videos, since the South Padre Island Lost Weekend concert of the "King" — Joe "King" Carrasco.

The inspiration for this letter was due in part to the fact that we tried constantly, with the undying persistence of a lovestricken frat boy, to use our democratic right of voting for the video of our choice. However, we always received the incessant beeping of a busy signal (thank heaven for Ma Bell).

Just between us and the 3-4,000 people who will read this, we feel the Basement Tapes contest was rigged by MTV network executives and/or EMI recording company. We feel this should be investigated: not by the highly respected Texas Tech Student Senate, not by the over-worked, under-paid Texas State Senate, but by the epitome of judicial supremacy, the United States Supreme Court.

We feel this is by far the largest scandal since Watergate, since Senators were reported as having intimate relations with their pages.

In closing, until this contest, we have always had the deepest respect for MTV's taste and promotion: (e.g. Van Halen's Lost Weekend). We feel that the American public has been hoodwinked and should be — and will be, if we have anything to do with it — apologized to.

Greeks

To the editor:

This letter is in response to Mr. Steve Dabbs, who seems to hold his fraternal brethren in highest esteem. Granted, Mr. Dabbs, there are many good points to being a fraternity man. However, these good points are not always presented fully.

From my personal experience with fraternities, (and you know to which I refer) I have found that many helpful and meaningful relationships can develop, and last a lifetime.

Unfortunately, I have also found that fraternities can be nothing but clubs for hypocritical, power-hungry backstabbers who every Tuesday night try to convince you that you want to be their "brother."

Peter F. Klein

To the editor:

I have truly enjoyed the recent pro/con-Greek editorials that have been written to The UD Tech seems to be very hard pressed to find a controversy, as the world revolves around us.

But now is the time for a few facts to be presented on the issue. Two studies, published in 1980, one by Oklahoma University and the other at Oregon State University, documented the fact that members of Greek-letter fraternities are more likely to remain in school and graduate than are non-affiliated students. The results were similar to several early 1970s studies on the subject. A late 1970s study by Bowling Green

State University, Ohio, and a 1980 study by the University of Akron, Ohio, reaffirmed statistics from earlier years that alumni of Greek-letter organizations are, per capita, more generous financial supporters of their alma mater than are alumni who are not Greek-affiliated.

I hope this satisfies your desire for facts on the issue.

David Groves

To the editor:

This letter is to anyone, Geek or Greek, who shares the same self-centered views as Stephen Dabbs. Actually, I can understand why Dabbs would join a frat — I mean, with an attitude like his, he's lucky his Daddy is nice enough to purchase his friends for him.

Stevie also pointed out that money isn't the only prerequisite to being in a fraternity (or a sorority, for that matter). In Dabbs' words, you also need taste, personality and class; but, hey, let's be realistic. You can be the greatest guy in the world, but if you don't have that crucial fifty dollars a month, you're history. On the other hand, you can be obnoxious, rude and ignorant, but if you can pay, you can play.

I'd be interested in knowing what fraternity Dabbs is in and if they also subscribe to his ideals. Of course, if there's no reply, I wouldn't blame his brothers; I wouldn't claim him either.

I await your rebuttal with pen in hand. Barry Johnson Sean Madden

To the editor:

This letter is in response to "Geek Reply," printed April 9. I wonder if Mr. Dabbs realized that in his last three biased sentences he overtly slandered approximately two-thirds of this campus' population.

There are many of us who are not, and never will be, pledged into a Greek fraternity/sorority. This is not because WE are losers, have a low financial standing, or have bad taste, but because we believe that there are more important things in life than joining a glamorized social clique.

We also believe there are better ways of making lasting friendships than being humiliated by and/or humiliating others. In general, whether or not one pledges is a matter of choice, NOT status, as Mr. Dabbs vainly believes.

This, though, is not our only grievance. His lofty belief that ONLY Greeks will become "fantastic future leaders," is totally absurd. Whereas some fraternity/sorority members will eventually attain leadership roles in later life, so will the non-members. Whether or not they will be "fantastic" will not be due to their membership in a fraternity/sorority, but because of job-related and other personal qualities.

We hope we have made our point to the narrowminded people like Mr. Dabbs. We are insulted by his remarks, and demand a written apology for them.

Good Humor

To the editor:

It seems that I remember a certain Pat Barton who used to frequent your hangout over there in the Journalism Bldg. And, if my memory serves me correctly, he was not the most popular person ever to write satire in The UD. He survived. I guess what I'm trying to say is this: Mr. White, keep your sense of humor — even if no one else out here can. At least people read your stuff. (P.S. This goes for Ms. Geek Week Marla "Houston Toyota" etc., Erwin, too. If we can't laugh at ourselves, we're missing one of life's simplest pleasures — and possibly biggest jokes!)

Cults

To the editor:

I was disappointed to see that religious bigotry is still alive and well here at Texas Tech University. I refer specifically to Gary Cevin's insidious use of the word "cult" to defame the religious beliefs of a person who happens not to believe exactly like Gary Cevin.

The word cult as defined in the modern dictionary has a variety of meanings. Taken in its broadest sense, any religion could be called a cult. For example, if you look the word cult up in Webster's Ninth New Collegiate Dictionary, the first definition you find is "formal religious veneration; WORSHIP." Events in recent history, including the "Guyana" incident, caused the word "cult" to take on a heavy loading of negative meaning. Now, certain people who like to consider themselves very religious have become fond of capitalizing on all of the negative connotations the word carries by using it to describe any religious organization that does not conform exactly to the organization to which they belong.

Allow me to suggest, Mr. Cevin, that this approach is not only sophomoric, but basically dishonest. And may I further suggest that it is not Christlike.

NEWS BRIEFS

Revenge may be massacre motive

NEW YORK — Police said Monday that revenge over drug dealings may have led gunmen to murder two women and eight children in their Brooklyn apartment, leaving the victims on sofas and chairs like figures in a "wax museum."

A crying 11-month-old baby found crawling among the corpses was the only survivor of the Sunday afternoon massacre, which officials called New York's worst mass murder in memory.

All 10 victims were shot in the head and some were "almost in repose," police said, indicating the shots may have caught them unawares. A pregnant woman, apparently shot as she fed a child, still had a spoon and pudding can in her hand.

There apparently was no panic or struggle. Carmine Rossi, a baker who found the survivor, said some victims were sitting on a couch and on chairs in front of a blaring TV set.

"There were bodies all over the place," Rossi said. "They were sitting up. It looked like a wax museum, like dummies."

Stunned veteran police officials said they had never seen anything like it. People in the quiet, largely working-class East New York neighborhood were shocked.

Lactose, a milk sugar used to cut heroin, and foil wrappings normally used to wrap narcotics were found in the apartment, police said, but added that the evidence pointed to "street stuff, small stuff," not a major operation.

Soviets may not attend Olympics

MOSCOW — The head of the Soviet Olympic Committee today refused to say whether the Soviet Union would attend the 1984 Summer Olympics and left open the possibility that Moscow will not send a team to the Los Angeles games.

Repeating the full range of Soviet complaints about preparations for the Olympics, committee chairman Marat Gramov said a final decision on Soviet participation would not be made until the end of May.

The deadline for notification of a nation's plans to attend the games is June 2.

Gramov said the Soviet Union would go to Los Angeles only if it is satisfied that the United States is observing the Olympic charter and providing "normal conditions" for Soviet athletes to attend the games.

Bodies of diplomats flown back to U.S.

By The Associated Press

PRETORIA, South Africa — The bodies of two American diplomats killed in a bomb blast in South-West Africa began the journey home Monday, their slayers still unidentified.

U.S. Ambassador Herman Nickel expressed hope that the U.S.-sponsored peace effort to end a drawn-out bush war for control of the South African territory would not be set back by the killings.

There was growing evidence — but no conclusive proof — that Dennis Keogh and Ken Crabtree were not targets of the attack Sunday. The head of the territory's security police said it appeared their deaths were "coincidence."

The bodies of Keogh, head of the U.S. liaison office in Namibia, as South-West Africa also is known, and Crabtree, a military aide, arrived at a Pretoria air base on a camouflaged cargo plane. A U.S. Marine guard of honor stood at attention as South African soldiers carried the flag-draped coffins to an ambulance.

"May the tragic death of Dennis Keogh and Ken Crabtree result in a redoubling of our efforts to put an end to a war that is nearly 20 years old," said Nickel.

Keogh, 44, and Crabtree, in his mid-40s, were killed in a blast at a gasoline station in the far north of Namibia, where they had apparently stopped for fuel. One black civilian also was killed, and four occupants of a truck were wounded.

The gas station, in Oshakati, 25 miles from the Angolan border, is where guerrillas of the South-West African Peoples Organization have been active, and Willie van Niekerk, Namibia's administrator-general, blamed SWAPO guerrillas.

However, SWAPO President Sam Nujoma said Monday his group was "absolutely unconnected" to the blast. SWAPO deputy administration secretary Riundja Kaakunga said, "SWAPO policy is not to attack diplomats."

Nujoma said the attack may have been a "provocation" by South Africa "to make the question of Namibia's future even more difficult."

For the past 17 years SWAPO, based in Angola, has been waging a bush war for Namibian independence from South Africa.

Supreme Court to decide on PAC spending limits

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court, without promising a speedy answer, said Monday it will decide whether political action committees may spend unlimited amounts of money to back a presidential candidate.

The court did not say whether its ruling will be in time to affect conservative groups' plans to spend as much as $20 million in support of President Reagan's reelection effort this year.

The Federal Election Commission and the Democratic Party are challenging a lower court's ruling that struck down a federal law limiting the spending of any political committee to $1,000. Both appeals asked for a Supreme Court decision by July.

But neither the commission nor the Democrats submitted a separate request for expedited consideration as required by the court.

Without such a speeded-up study, the justices would not even hear arguments in the case until next October at the earliest.

"We will file special papers if that's necessary," Democratic Party lawyer John Coleman of Philadelphia said after the court's action. "It's urgent that the issue be resolved before the campaign gets into full swing, and it's almost there already."

In the campaign-spending case, a three-judge federal court ruled last Dec. 13 that the $1,000 limit violates free-speech rights.

The gas station, in Oshakati, 25 miles from the Angolan border, is where guerrillas of the South-West African Peoples Organization have been active, and Willie van Niekerk, Namibia's administrator-general, blamed SWAPO guerrillas.

However, SWAPO President Sam Nujoma said Monday his group was "absolutely unconnected" to the blast. SWAPO deputy administration secretary Riundja Kaakunga said, "SWAPO policy is not to attack diplomats."

Nujoma said the attack may have been a "provocation" by South Africa "to make the question of Namibia's future even more difficult."

For the past 17 years SWAPO, based in Angola, has been waging a bush war for Namibian independence from South Africa.

Distinguished alumna named

Lubbock novelist Jane Gilmore Rushing, whose seven novels depict West Texas and its people, their customs, manners and morals, has been named the first distinguished alumna of the Texas Tech department of English.

Rushing will be recognized during the department's first awards banquet at 7 p.m. Thursday in the University Center ballroom.

She earned her master's degree in 1945 and her doctorate in 1957, both in English, from Tech.

Her novels, all published by Doubleday, and publication dates are: "Walnut Grove," 1964; "Against the Moon," 1968; "Tamzen," 1972; "Mary Dove," 1974; "The Raincrow," 1977; "Covenant of Grace," 1982; and "Winds of Blame," 1983.

Rushing earned her bachelor's degree in journalism from Tech. She worked briefly as a reporter for the Abilene Reporter-News and later taught English at the high school and university levels.

Tickets can be obtained through the English department by telephoning 742-2501. They cost $10 for the public and $5 for students.

Memorial service set for student

A memorial service honoring Cherisa Gammill will take place at 5 p.m. today at First Baptist Church on Broadway.

Gammill, 21, was killed April 6 in an automobile accident. She was a sophomore at Texas Tech and a member of Alpha Phi sorority.

The service is open to the public.

Tennis tournament site moves off campus

By ROBIN RYNN CHAVEZ
University Daily Reporter

Due to a growing emphasis on the quantity and quality of stars attending the April 27-29 Texas Tech Celebrity Tennis Tournament, the tournament has been moved off campus. The stars will practice at the Tech Recreation center tennis courts, however, according to tournament organizers.

Pat Taylor, director of special projects in the Tech development office, said tournament play will be at the Supreme Court Racquet Club and Fitness Center's Tennis Center at 90th Street and Memphis Avenue.

"The decision to move was a sudden one," Taylor said, "because the originally guaranteed 12 stars quickly multiplied into 35 or more. "The event simply outgrew the Rec Center's court space, and the Racquet Club offers the added stability of an indoor facility."

Taylor said if the tournament was affected by any adversity on the outdoor courts, the indoor courts will ensure that no delay will occur.

Taylor said the actual seating space will not increase dramatically with the move, but he said the indoor courts are vital, in case of adverse weather.

"Just imagine, 35 charitable celebrities trying to play tennis for Tech in the middle of a good old-fashioned West Texas dust storm, with winds blowing 60 miles an hour.

"What a disaster," he said.

"And as much as we need rain here in Lubbock, I would hesitate to applaud a drenching in the middle of a singles match between Morgan Britany and Gwen Stafford."

The Tennis Center has seven indoor courts and four outdoor courts.

Taylor said about 1,200 seated spectators could be accommodated in the indoor courts, with standing room for a few hundred more.

Stars already committed to attending the tournament include Lee Horsley, former Tech student G.W. Bailey and Barry Corbin, Cathy Lee Crosby, Lloyd Bridges, Barbara McNair, Cornel Wilde, Trini Lopez, Lyle Waggoner, Richard Dean Anderson, Cindy Gibb, Connie Stevens, and Jo Ann Pflug.

Also Jerry Van Dyke, Judy Norton-Taylor, Martha Smith, Martin Kove, Joseph Mascolo, Eric Braeden, Christopher Holder, Markie Post, Marcia Rodd, Morgan Brittany, Grant Goodeve, and Dick and Pat Van Patten and their sons Jimmy, Vincent and Nels.

Proceeds from the tournament will benefit the Tech Foundation for scholarships, endowments and other academic areas at Tech. The goal for the tournament has been set at $250,000.

Money will be generated from the sale of tournament tickets, dinner show tickets and souvenir programs. Show tickets are priced at $12 for the public and $10 for students. Dinner show tickets cost $100 a plate and include tournament passes. Tournament tickets cost $5 per day for the public and $3 for students, or $7.50 for the weekend for the public and $5 for the weekend for students. Programs cost $3.

Tournament play will begin April 28. A Las Vegas-style dinner show will take place in the Lubbock Memorial Civic Center Exhibition Hall that evening, with performances by the celebrities and Tech student groups.

Ray Noval, with Noval/Bucks Productions Inc. of Los Angeles, said one of the tournament producers is choreographing the dancing and is composing the original score based on the Tech "Matador Song" for the event.

Tournament play will end April 29.

Kids tell why taxes are paid

By The Associated Press

LONGVIEW, Wash. — One look at some Internal Revenue Service forms and second- and third-graders at the Robert Gray Elementary School had a thorough understanding of why Americans pay taxes.

Without income taxes, "everything would be extinct," said Ben Heater.

Without taxes "the city would just die out and everyone would leave," said Brandon Parsons.

No taxes and "there wouldn't be schools or church or electricity," said Sherry Coats.

"It's a tax your parents pay for toys and stuff they buy in the store," said Dylan Greene.

No, it's "a tax you pay for the president to buy things like bombs," said Michael Blodin. And taxes are going up, he said, because "there are going to be new people coming into the world, and we're going to have to buy them things."

Fail to pay and "You get put in jail by the police or the president," said Donald Hedglin. Michael Barry said two years in jail sounded about right for evaders.

And just how much taxes do children expect to pay?

About $25 a year, said April Bjorge.

Brave Combo sows politics of polka

By PETE WILKINS
University Daily Staff

Brave Combo, an aptly named quartet from Denton, provided the entertainment for Fat Dawg's Thursday night crowd with some hard-driving, good old-fashioned polka music. That's right — polka — you know, that crazy dance music that comes from Czechoslovakia or somewhere around there.

But this was not your basic Lawrence Welk-type stuff. Brave Combo has succeeded in mixing polka, rumba, bossa nova — you name it — with good old rock 'n' roll. The result is a type of music unlike any other, but it sure sounds good.

All the members of the band were nothing short of excellent — playing incredibly tight, despite frequent and often drastic changes in timing. The band proved themselves versatile in many styles of music, ranging from polka, latin, rock and some straight-out jazz.

Although Brave Combo's music may be considered unorthodox, they all are serious musicians devoted to the advancement of polka. At one point Carl Finch, lead vocalist, paused to tell the audience that the band members thought "the world would be a better place to live if everyone listened to polka."

The band played three hair-raising sets, never letting up on the energy that underlined all their songs. That energy was contagious, and it was not long before the audience had come down with a serious case of dance fever. Couples, trios and whole parties danced frenziedly before the stage while the band played its version of "Green Acres" and other assorted polka hits of yesteryear.

Ragtime pianist mixes scholarship, wit

By The Associated Press

Max Morath, who has been touring the country for 25 years, mostly putting on shows featuring his ragtime piano playing, now has a new show, "Pop Goes the Music," featuring music from the 1920s, '30s and '40s.

His first engagement was in New York's Michael Pub. The New York Times review said, "Students of American pop history could not find a more engaging mixture of wit, scholarship and deft musicality."

The review added, "The idiom of Morath's music is a springy, jazz-inflected ensemble pop that is not grounded in a particular style but is definitely antique in feel. And Morath sings in a crisp, direct style tinged with a fixed gramophone drawl."

Morath says, "I'm really happy doing music that breaks out of the restrictions of ragtime. I love ragtime. But it has got limits."

"I've got Frank Loesser in here and four Irving Berlin tunes. He is endless. I've got Hoagy Carmichael. He wrote a million songs about a down-and-out piano player, 'Hong Kong Blues.' I do Eubie Blake's ballad 'I'd Give a Dollar for a Dime (To Play That Record One More Time).' Eubie wrote wonderful songs. They're just now really beginning to be discovered."

This show is coming back to his own upbringing, he says. "It's from my own life and time. A lot more of this music is in my childhood memory bank than ragtime."

"I was born in 1926. My parents were divorced in 1930. My mother had to shuffle."

His mother played the piano for silent movies. She couldn't afford sheet music and taught herself to improvise, Morath says. "One day she'd be working on 'I Surrender Dear.' The next day she'd get it. She became very proficient at improvising in the early '30s. Remarkable."

Morath started as a radio announcer in 1945 on KBOR in Colorado Springs, "the voice of the Rockies." There was a three-hour show in the afternoon where he'd do commercials, play piano and play records.

"I'd go through 25 tunes a day. I worked at the radio station with a pianist. I'd sit and listen to him. He'd teach me little things. In my late teens I played piano a lot and dug in. I had some training and theory in high school, which helped me learn to improvise."

Knowing that pianists who sing usually work in bars and not wanting to do that, Morath put together a show with a theme — ragtime — suitable for conventions and theaters. He's been touring since 1959.

He did Max Morath at the Turn of the Century songs and monologues, in an off-Broadway theater in 1969, and toured it for five years. He followed that with The Ragtime Years until 1977. For the last five years he has been doing Living a Ragtime Life. He drew material from 1895 to the start of World War I.

"I feel like I'm in a business," he says. "I better have a product out there to market. You can not really repeat the same show forever."

He says it's not an improvised show, but structured in full concert format. He goes out, in a van, with a quintet. He used to go out in a car with equipment in the back, he says.

"I love this country and getting around. We hit a lot of small towns. We go to a motel, get a good night's sleep, get on the road in the morning. Runs are generally no more than 300 miles a day. It's not like the big band days. You had to be a kid to do that."

Morath's in his sixth season being booked by Columbia Artists.

"They book very tightly. If they're cooking good, they'll get me five in a week. I've had as many as 10 in 10 days. They'll say,

'Do you want eight in a row?' I'll take them. I figure when I'm on the road I might as well be playing dates as sitting in a hotel room."

"I shoot for 90 to 105 dates a year, theater dates in eight to 10 weeks in the fall and 10 to 12 weeks in the spring plus runouts to summer festivals." This spring, some bookings are Living a Ragtime Life and some are "Pop Goes the Music."

Morath lives in New Jersey with his wife. Their three children are grown.

One of his 13 records is Living a Ragtime Life on Vanguard. The one which has sold most is The Best of Scott Joplin and Other Ragtime Classics, which he made for Vanguard in 1971.

The Scott Joplin revival happened in the early 1970s while Morath was touring his ragtime shows. "I don't claim any credit," he says. "That revival was due to the talents of Scott Joplin. The world was marking time until his music was rediscovered."

"It helped me sell records. I don't think I noticed a change in bookings. I've always been busy."

The latest record Morath is on is More Rodgers and Hart on RCA Records. Pianist Bill Bolcom and singer Joan Morris asked him to sing four duets with her on it. His most recent album on Vanguard is Ragtime Stompers.

Morath likes to study American popular culture and American popular music but he's careful not to oversimplify trends and reasons.

He says, "Stride piano playing is the style that followed ragtime. James P. Johnson was the master stride pianist during the 1920s. Stride was a more powerful style than ragtime. It was infused with jazz. It did not have ragtime's strict march-like quality."

Mexican mayor fights corruption, hardships

By The Associated Press

CIUDAD JUAREZ, Mexico — When Francisco Barrio Terrazas was elected mayor of this large border city last year, his campaign focus was "change" — a pledge of hope for the nearly one million residents that for years have lived with government corruption and economic hardship.

Now, six months into office, Barrio insists changes are occurring, though he admits they are not clearly visible or easy to grasp.

"If you think only of physical aspects, it certainly is not going to change in six months," Barrio, 33, said recently. "The pavement, the lights, the sewers — there are no changes. But we've changed a lot in the mind, the thoughts of the people. We communicate more with them now and that is the first step to changing the physical factors."

Barrio, a certified public accountant who moved north to Juarez seven years ago from his native Chihuahua City, was elected in July 1983 under the banner of Mexico's conservative opposition National Action Party, known by its Spanish initials as PAN. His victory broke the 54-year stranglehold this country's dominant Institutional Revolutionary Party, or PRI, had in Juarez.

Barrio took office in October 1983 and still views the PRI's defeat as the change Juarez needed most. "People always are asking 'Where are the changes?'" he said. "Well, a year ago, people in Juarez and in all the country thought it was almost impossible to defeat PRI. The people don't think so any more. Is that a change or not?"

A tall man with hazel eyes and a wispy moustache, Barrio attributes his first political success to his citizens' frustration in 1983 with the Mexican economy, which in 1982 went through several peso devaluations, and to prevailing corruption in the PRI government.

"All this together caused such anger among the people," he said. "People had had enough of government in PRI. When (the PRI) started campaigning, they were lost and they never could pass that advantage."

Barrio defeated PRI candidate Santiago Nieto Sandoval with more than 60 percent of the vote.

And Barrio said the PAN currently is "the largest political force by far" in Juarez, Mexico's fifth-largest city that sits across the Rio Grande from El Paso, Texas. Barrio said his current plans are to follow through on several objectives he set forth when elected.

The blueprint includes allowing Juarez residents to share in the responsibilities, decisions and functions of government.

More than 40 neighborhood committees have been formed to "discuss what the problems may be and then they have to come up with solutions. We work together, but they — the people — must work with us. They just can't look to us for all the answers."

The committees are representative of Barrio's informality.

He dresses casually — in trousers and a cotton shirt sans tie — and opens his office three days a week to the citizens "to talk, to chat about the problems."

Despite the attempt to better communication between the people and the government, Barrio concedes some residents resent the lack of changes. Juarez remains the economically depressed and overpopulated city with a growth rate of between 6 percent and 7 percent annually that is was before Barrio took office.

The city's budget for 1984 stands at about $12 million, an amount Barrio knows is not sufficient to provide the services needed by his growing population.

But he said his nemeses are numerous.

"I have problems with everything," he said with a large smile. "This city lacks so much."

KTXT names manager

By KRISTI FROELICH
University Daily Lifestyles Writer

Derik Lattig was named the 1984-85 station manager for KTXT-FM Sunday night at the station's annual awards banquet. Lattig was chosen by a five member selection committee made up of three faculty members and two students.

Lattig is a 20-year-old broadcast journalism major from Albuquerque, New Mexico.

He is currently serving as the station's music director and has worked at the station since last August as a deejay, an underwriter and has done some production work.

Lattig plans to have more fund raisers next year to help raise money for new station equipment. He also wants to put more emphasis on training new deejays and wants to work more closely with the station's program director and music director.

"Programming (for the station) will be basically the same. I'll keep the same format for the music. I want to keep things as they are because they are going really good right now," Lattig said.

Filmgoers pay upon departure

By JAN DILLEY
University Daily Lifestyles Writer

During the "Bad Science Fiction Festival," this week, filmgoers will pay not to stay.

"The admission scale is on a declining rate basis," said Steve Norwood, member of the University Center Programs film committee, sponsor of the event that will begin at 6 p.m. today in the Center Theater. "The charge will go down as the movies go on; if you can sit through all three of these incredibly horrid movies, you pay only 50 cents."

Plan Nine from Outer Space will be the first of the three festival films to be shown. Viewers who leave the theater before, during or right after Plan Nine will be charged $1.50. The low-budget Plan Nine was Bela Lugosi's last film; the actor died while the movie was being made, a situation the filmmakers failed to conceal well, said Norwood.

The late Steve McQueen starred in "The Blob," the festival's second film. The 1958 movie portrays the actions of a rebellious teenager who tries to warn the people of a small town of the impending danger brought on by some space jelly, said Norwood. Admission charges for people who stay through "The Blob" will be $1.

"Attack of the Killer Tomatoes," a 1978 flick, features a peck of hostile vegetables bent on destruction. "That's it. The movie shows a bunch of killer tomatoes running around attacking everyone."

"We wanted to put together something totally different from anything we had ever done. We wanted to get these dreadful films to the public," said Norwood. "Chances are that few people get to see any of them; they probably never were shown on television. If they're on television at all, they probably air at 3 a.m."

Overall, he thinks the evening will provide some inexpensive, potentially fun entertainment. "If you make it through all three, it's only 50 cents. That's not bad. It's a bargain."

NBA reserves shine as season ends and playoffs begin

By The Associated Press

With all playoff berths and positions decided, the final day of the National Basketball Association's regular season was a chance to rest veterans and give young players a chance to shine.

A number of seldom-used players posted career highs Sunday, but nowhere was depth more in evidence than in Boston, where the Celtics improved their league-best record to 62-20 with a 118-111 victory over the New Jersey Nets.

With nothing at stake, Boston used customary starters Larry Bird, Cedric Maxwell, Robert Parish and Dennis Johnson as substitutes. Not surprisingly, the Boston bench outscored the New Jersey substitutes 60-31.

"I thought the second unit did a good job at the end," Celtics' rookie center Greg Kite said with tongue-in-cheek. Kite, in his first game as a starter, also contributed to the victory with 13 points and 10 rebounds.

In other season finales, it was Philadelphia 129, Chicago

115; San Antonio 157, Denver 154; Phoenix 123, Los Angeles 114; Golden State 98, Dallas 96 and Seattle 108, Portland 103.

The first round of the playoffs start with five games Tuesday and three on Wednesday.

The playoff-bound Nets did not seem too concerned about the loss.

"It was a good tuneup for both clubs before entering the playoffs," coach Stan Albeck said. "Down the stretch, the Celtics were able to execute and accomplish the things they wanted to accomplish."

"Today, I just wanted to get the momentum going for the playoffs," said Buck Williams, who led the Nets with 25 points and 14 rebounds. "Our franchise is more stable this year and this should help us in the playoffs."

Williams finished with exactly 1,000 rebounds for the season to become the ninth player in NBA history to hit at least 1,000 in each of his first three years. The last player to do it was former Celtic Dave Cowens, who completed a three-year streak in 1973.

The Nets led 91-90 before the Celtics got the next eight points, six by Parish. New Jersey then cut the deficit to 107-104 with 3:39 to play before Boston reeled off nine consecutive points, ending with a layup by Gerald Henderson with 54 seconds left.

Henderson had missed the previous four games with a strained left hamstring, but scored 18 points in 39 minutes Sunday as the Celtics finished the season with 10 victories in their last 11 games.

"We're hitting our peak. We're moving the ball well," said Johnson, a regular starter at guard who scored 18 points off the bench. "I'm ready to go."

Spurs 157, Nuggets 154
Second-year man Mark McNamara and rookie John Paxson both scored career highs and led a fourth-period San Antonio blitz that carried the Spurs to victory over visiting Denver.

McNamara had 18 of his 22 points and Paxson 17 of his 25 in the final period, when San Antonio outscored the Nuggets 48-43 in the quarter.

Veteran John Lucas had no points in the game but he set an NBA record with 14 assists in the second quarter and finished with 24. Alex English and Kiki Vandeweghe scored 30 points apiece for the Nuggets.

Suns 123, Lakers 114
Phoenix won at Los Angeles to complete a six-game winning streak that allowed the Suns to avoid their first losing season since 1976-77.

The Suns employed a balance attack to beat the Pacific champion Lakers, with Maurice Lucas scoring 23 points, Walter Davis 21 and James Edwards and Larry Nance 20 apiece.

The Lakers rested center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, James Worthy didn't play after the first period because of a scratched eye, guard Byron Scott was sidelined by an injured knee and Earvin "Magic" Johnson played only the first half because of a hurt finger.

Warriors 98, Mavericks 96
At Oakland, Calif., Golden State held off a late Dallas rally to end its disappointing season on a winning note.

The Warriors finished 37-45, seven games better than last season but out of the playoffs for the seventh straight year. They got 10 points from Darren Tillis and nine from Don Collins in the final period to build a 92-78 lead, but rookie Dale Ellis, who had 18 of his career-high 31 points in the final period, hit two of the Mavericks' four three-point goals down the stretch to make the game close.

76ers 129, Bulls 115
Julius Erving scored 14 of his 22 points during a 28-8 spurt in the third quarter that lifted Philadelphia over visiting Chicago.

The game was tied 76-76 with 7:58 left in the period before the streak that put the 76ers ahead 104-84. They went on to lead by 29 points in the final period as the Bulls finished the season with 14 losses in their last 15 games.

Sonics 108, Blazers 103
Jack Sikma scored 15 of his 25 points in the fourth quarter as Seattle rallied to win at home against Portland.

Jim Paxson scored 14 of his 30 points in the third quarter as the Trail Blazers built a six-point lead late in the period. But two free throws by Sikma snapped an 82-82 tie and gave the SuperSonics the lead for good. NBA reserves shine as season ends and playoffs begin

Dallas hosts Seattle today

By The Associated Press

Aguirre

DALLAS — Dallas Mavericks coach Dick Motta is happy his team didn't back into its first National Basketball Association playoff series.

"It wouldn't have meant much if we had made the playoffs because of the expanded list of eligible teams," Motta said. "Our record would have put us in the playoffs last year and that means a lot."

"It just wasn't given to us."

The four-year-old Mavs meet the former world champion Seattle SuperSonics at 7 p.m. today to begin a best-of-five series.

The second game will also be in Reunion Arena Thursday night at 7:30 p.m. Both games were expected to be sellouts.

The Mavs had to fly to Dallas from the West Coast after losing to Portland Sunday night and Motta would have preferred a Wednesday night opener. The Sonics flew in Monday from Seattle.

"It's still better than opening in Seattle," Motta said. "The home court advantage

"Who knows?" said forward Mark Aguirre, who leads the team in scoring with an average of 29.5 per game. "It's zero-zero now and when the playoffs start, everybody's even. Some wild things could happen."

"You never know what might happen if we win the first series," said guard Rolando Blackman, who is averaging 22 points per contest.

The third game of the series is set for 2:30 p.m. Saturday at the Seattle Center Coliseum and Game four is down for 9:30 p.m. Tuesday, April 24 in the Seattle Kingdom.

If Game five is needed, it will be back in Dallas at Moody Coliseum with the time to be announced.

The Mavs lose Reunion Arena next week to The World Championship of Tennis.

The playoffs couldn't come at a better time for the Mavs.

"We're playing well," Motta said. "We've had 12 or less turnovers in the last four games."

The Sonics won the 1978-79 NBA championship.

Crenshaw forgets defeats with first Masters victory

By The Associated Press

AUGUSTA, Ga. — Ben Crenshaw knew he had the first major championship of his golf career sewed up — and so did the massive gallery surrounding the 18th green at Augusta National.

The thunderous ovation came in waves as the popular Texan prepared to put the finishing touches on a closing 68 that left him with an 11-under-par 277 total and the coveted Masters title.

"I honestly didn't know where I was," Crenshaw said. "Coming up 18 I had so much support," he said. "It was incredible. I just didn't want to let those people down."

They had been with him all the way on the treacherous back side of this famous course built by Bobby Jones.

The cheers started at the 10th hole where he rolled in a monstrous, breaking 60-foot putt for his third straight birdie — one that gave him a three-shot lead.

He bogeyed the 11th, but then came back with a 12-foot birdie putt on the 155-yard, par-3 12th — a hole that took out the only two players with a realistic chance.

Larry Nelson, the U.S. Open champion who had closed the gap to one with a birdie on 11, knocked his tee shot in the water and took a double bogey.

Tom Kite, the third-round leader who was two back at the time, also found the water, and made triple bogey.

There was a sense that this tournament was over, that the only person who could beat Crenshaw was Crenshaw.

He didn't let it happen. He saved par with a 20-footer on No. 14 and then applied the clincher, a 15-foot birdie putt on the 15th that built the lead to four shots.

The ovations at each hole continued to grow.

They were the type that had been reserved for two legends in Masters lore — for the popularity of Arnold Palmer during his heyday and for the respect for the brilliant play of Jack Nicklaus, the only five-time winner of this prestigious event.

Tom Watson, a two-time Masters winner, made two birdies over the last three holes to claim second place at 69-279, but he really never was in the title chase.

David Edwards and Gil Morgan shared the low round of the final day with 67s, and were deadlocked in third place at 280.

The longest jump

Tech's Selmon leaps into NCAA's

By COLIN E. KILLIAN
University Daily Sports Writer

The winds of West Texas. These "breezes" are nothing more than minor annoyances for most people who live in the region.

Yet for Texas Tech long-jumper Thomas Selmon, the wild western winds meant much more in Saturday's Angelo State Invitational.

Selmon shattered the school long jump record by more than a foot with a leap of 26-9/4 in the meet. In fact, only Carl Lewis and Mike Conley have jumped farther in Southwest Conference history.

Selmon's effort also was the best recorded in the collegiate ranks this spring, bettering the previous mark of 26-7/2. The leap easily qualified Selmon for the NCAA Outdoor Championships May 29-June 2 in Eugene, Ore.

And the senior's jump surpassed the Olympic Trials qualifying standard of 25-7. But that's where those infamous south plains winds come into play.

Selmon's jump was aided by a six mile-per-hour wind. Under Olympic Trial rules, the breeze disqualified the leap. Selmon jumped 26-1 earlier in the day, but that jump wasn't allowed, either. The air movement was a fraction too strong at 4.7 miles-per-hour.

Heck, compared to the gales West Texans have grown accustomed to, those readings aren't winds — or even breezes.

But Selmon isn't discouraged. The Snyder High School graduate knows he has the ability to repeat his San Angelo performance. It's just a matter of time.

"I want to maintain the high I'm on and stay in the high 25's (25 feet)," Selmon said during a break from practice Monday. "I want to stay consistent and if I can stay healthy, I can maintain my jumps and hit 26 (feet) again."

Ironically, the long jump specialist almost didn't attempt his school record-setting jump. "I had already jumped 26-1

The University Daily / R.J. Hinkle

Thomas Selmon

and had just run in the 100-meter dash," Selmon remembered. "I had only three or four minutes to get ready to jump again and almost decided not to do it."

"I thought my legs would be dead," he continued. "But everything went right and I popped a good one."

Two years ago, things like the Olympics and the NCAA Championship were distant dreams for Selmon. He had just completed a stellar sophomore season in which he garnered All-America honors. Then disaster struck. Selmon broke his leg while posing for a photographer.

"I had a terrible season last year and I really should have been redshirted," the 5-8, 150-pounder said.

But now Selmon has fully recovered from the injury and seems to be reaching his potential.

"Thomas has tremendous speed and is very aggressive," Tech assistant track coach Abe Brown said. "He's a heckuva competitor and that is really the basic formula for the event. I think he has to be considered one of the favorites in the NCAA's." Selmon knows the Oregon trail to the NCAA long jump crown won't be easy. After all, his competition will consist of some of the top collegiate long jumpers in the world.

"You never know what will happen at the NCAA's," Selmon said. "You either choke or you do it. Hopefully, if I can keep close (to the leader) I'll pop a good one."

Selmon hasn't limited his talents to the sand pits of the SWC, though. He joined the Raider football squad last year as a walk-on split end.

As a member of the Tech junior varsity, Selmon returned a punt 95 yards for a touchdown against Cisco Junior College. It was the longest punt return in Tech history. He plans to again contribute his abilities on the gridiron next season. Maybe.

"I want to get a legitimate jump and get to the (Olympic) Trials," Selmon said. "And if I don't make the top three for the Olympic team, I want to come back and get ready to play football in the fall."

Raider netters challenge UTA today

The Texas Tech men's tennis team will travel to Arlington today to take on UTA at 3 p.m. The Raiders will then play TCU Wednesday in a Southwest Conference match and host Texas Saturday.

The Raiders, now 13-11 on the season, notched their first conference victory this past weekend by upending Rice 5-4. The Tech men netters made it two in a row when they defeated Houston Baptist 5-4 Sunday.

The Raiders, 1-4 in SWC play, have been plagued by injuries in their last few matches. Sophomore Guy Callender suffered an arm injury last week and is not expected to play against UTA and freshman Decio Lobo sprained his ankle and didn't make the trip to Houston during the weekend.

Former Yankee manager arrested

By The Associated Press

CORONA DEL MAR, Calif. — Former New York Yankee manager Billy Martin was arrested and later released on $100 bail after a shouting match with a woman on the front lawn of a home in this suburban community.

Martin, 55, was booked for investigation of public drunkenness and disorderly conduct and released at about 4 a.m. Saturday, after spending four hours in a public drunk tank, police said.

Police, responding to calls by neighbors complaining of hearing a loud argument, found Martin on the lawn, "obviously intoxicated, screaming and hollering at a female," traffic investigator Gary Bruton said.

Bruton, who responded to the complaint with another officer, said Martin and a female companion, identified as Jill Guiver, apparently argued about travel arrangements for a horse he bought for her.

Martin, who was fired last year as Yankee manager, has been involved in previous fighting incidents. Martin is currently a Yankee scout after being fired as the club's manager.

Ashby: Raiders win two of three against Arkansas

By JOHN KELLEY
University Daily Sports Editor

Gary Ashby hoped that it wouldn't get to this point. In fact, the Tech baseball coach never thought it would. When the coach spoke at his first-ever press conference back in February, he listed the Raiders' main goal as going to the Southwest Conference post-season tournament.

That was a goal Ashby figured his team would fulfill. And the Raiders still do have a chance to finish among the conference's top four teams and qualify for the tournament. But it's not going to be very easy.

After three straight losses to Texas A&M during the weekend, the goal has become more of a dream.

"We're going to have to do something that we're not supposed to do," Ashby said Monday at his weekly press conference. "We're going to have to take two or three from Arkansas and then the same from Texas. That's going to be tough but that doesn't mean we won't."

Yes, it has come down to Tech having to beat the Hogs in Fayetteville and Texas in Lubbock. Not just one game — at least two and maybe a three.

The Raiders, 29-18 overall, are currently 6-9 in league play, tied with Baylor for fifth. Only the top four teams in the conference go to the tourney. And Arkansas is 8-7 and in fourth place in the league.

Ashby can't help but think of a couple of games that could have — and probably should have — been wins for the Raiders. The three losses to TCU to open league play, the last-inning loss to Baylor, the last game of the series against the Aggies.

Ashby spoke of the latest one that got away. Tech lead 4-0 in the series finale against A&M, but the Aggies rallied to take a 9-8 win. The winning run was unearned. Of course, that's the way it went the whole weekend for the Raiders. A&M won the doubleheader Friday, 13-3, 11-6.

"Friday night we just didn't play very well," Ashby said. "It was the first time this year that we played under lights and some of the kids didn't adjust very well. Saturday we played better. After we got out to a 4-0 lead I thought we just might sneak out there with a win."

Smith triumphs in rain-plagued Boston Marathon

By The Associated Press

BOSTON — England's Geoff Smith fought through rain and strong winds Monday to win the 88th Boston Marathon, just the second marathon in which he has run.

The weather conditions were among the worst in the race's history, but Smith, 30, a native of Liverpool and a senior at Providence College, mastered them.

Smith, only the second Englishman to win this race, won by more than four minutes after taking the lead for good between the fifth and sixth miles. His time of 2 hours, 10 minutes, 34 seconds was not considered exceptional.

Before breaking away from the field of almost 6,800 runners, Smith had been at the front, either in the lead or just behind Arega Abraha of Ethiopia.

Smith was considered the strong favorite in a race bypassed by many leading marathoners.

His time, unofficially 80th on the all-time list of marathon finishers, was short of the Boston and world marks, both held by Alberto Salazar — 2:08:51 at Boston in 1982 and 2:08:13 at New York in 1981.

"It was really windy out there," Smith said, adding that his victory wouldn't guarantee him a spot on the British Olympic team. "It should impress them," he said. "It impressed me. If the wind was in my favor I could have run two or three minutes faster."

Little-known Gerry Vanesse of New Milford, Conn., finished second overall in 2:14:49, and Domingo Tibaduiza, on Colombia's Olympic team, was third in 2:15:40.

Smith's only previous marathon also was impressive — a 2:09:08, the fastest first-time clocking ever, at New York City last October. Ron Hill, who won here in 1970, was the only other Briton to win the laurel wreath.

While Smith made a runaway of the men's competition, the women's race was more fiercely contested.

Allison Roe, the 1981 Boston Marathon winner and former holder of the world best but running with a tender hamstring this time, was in front through 18 miles. Lorraine Moller, like Roe from New Zealand, took command and won handily in 2:29:28, a personal best. Roe dropped out after 25 miles due to the hamstring problem.

Sweden's Mide Hamrin, a student at Lamar University in Beaumont, and Norway's Sissel Grottenburg placed second and third among the women. Hamrin was timed in 2:33:51 and Grottenburg in 2:36:13.

Foul weather threatened the race and heavy downpours drenched the starting line at suburban Hopkinton shortly before the nearly 6,800 runners lined up. But skies lightened during the race and rain didn't appear to be a factor, although a raw headwind pushed at the runners.

Smith entered with the best time, 2:09:08 — the fastest ever by a first-time marathoner.

He was the only runner in the expected field here with a clocking under 2:10.
