Local AIDS case

President of campus group says lawsuit will not be affected

By LINDA BURKE
University Daily Staff Writer

Robert Reed Obenour, president of Student Services for Lesbians/Gays/Friends (SSLGF), said the recent filing of an Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) case in Lubbock will not have an effect on the group's pending lawsuit against Texas Tech.

Obenour said he thinks the A&M case is the biggest deciding factor in the Tech lawsuit. "I was told by Robert Ewalt (vice president for student affairs) last fall that Tech would not pursue the specific issue of public health concerns, which is the only issue that differs from the A&M case. I don't expect Tech to latch on to this issue," he said. In the matter of the AIDS case, Obenour said the Lubbock Lesbian/Gay Alliance (LLGA) has experienced some confusion about how to deal with AIDS because members of the group never have had to deal with a case of the disease before. "There is now a tremendously increased awareness of AIDS in Lubbock," he said. Obenour said members of the gay community met Tuesday to consider ideas to increase awareness of the virus.

"We plan to have discussions within our own groups about the disease," he said. "We've also thought of distributing business cards to gay organizations and at bars with the numbers of local, state and national AIDS hotlines on them." Obenour said the LLGA has been distributing pamphlets that include information concerning the disease. Metropolitan Community Church in Lubbock has an AIDS helpline that normally handles 10 to 15 calls per day. Obenour said Tuesday the church took more than 200 calls because of the added concern in the community about AIDS.

Continuing Tradition

Texas Tech senior Jerrell Key was given the reins to Happy VI-II when he was named Tech's 24th Masked Rider Wednesday at a ceremony in Jones Stadium. Key took the reins from outgoing Masked Rider J. Zurick Labrier. Key, a Lubbock native, was chosen from among 11 applicants. The new rider was presented a $1,000 scholarship from the Student Foundation and a cape and mask for his first official ride around Jones Stadium. Selection is based on scholarship, horsemanship and an interview by members of the Masked Rider Committee, comprised of Tech students, faculty and staff.

City health director says public should not panic

By KELLI GODFREY
University Daily Staff Writer

Lubbock General Hospital is treating Lubbock's first reported case of Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) after a Lubbock man was diagnosed Monday as having the disease. No vaccination or cure is available for AIDS. Local health officials said Lubbock residents may be worrying unnecessarily about contracting AIDS through such means as donating blood or through physical contact. According to City Health Director Dr. Anthony Way, members of the public should not panic that they will contract the disease unless they engage in rectal sexual intercourse or use intravenously administered drugs. "The disease is of no consequence to the general public unless contracted through blood, semen, rectal intercourse or sharing needles with intravenous drug users," Way said. "Otherwise there is no concern." The first case of AIDS was reported in 1981, and about 3,200 people have been reported as AIDS victims since then. AIDS symptoms are difficult to detect, according to Way, but the most common symptoms are swollen lymph nodes, weight loss and unusual infections because of a lack of antibodies to fight disease. Other common symptoms of AIDS includes unusual and persistent fevers, pneumonia, diarrhea, neurological disorders and retinitis. By far, the largest affected group is homosexual and bisexual men. The second largest group includes intravenous drug users and Haitians. Way said no cure exists for victims of AIDS and that doctors can concentrate only on fighting the numerous infections and other viruses that plague AIDS victims. "There is no treatment for AIDS — and nothing on the horizon," Way said. "There is nothing else but to treat the infection." Way said the Lubbock media have given too much attention to the AIDS incident and needlessly are alarming local residents to the disease.

Faculty Senate hears university financial report

By RICK LEE
University Daily Staff Writer

In a continuing effort to keep faculty members aware of the financial condition of Texas Tech in view of anticipated budget cuts, Eugene Payne, vice president for finance and administration, spoke on the university's current condition Wednesday at a Faculty Senate meeting. Payne, speaking on behalf of Tech President Lauro Cavazos, told members of the senate about Cavazos' presentations in January to the House Appropriations Committee, the House Committee on Budget and Oversight and the Senate Finance Committee. According to Payne, Cavazos told the committees that higher education in Texas is better today because of a number of actions taken by the Texas Legislature in the past. "Over the past 20 years we have essentially moved from mediocrity to high quality due to funding the Legislature has provided," Payne said. According to Payne, Cavazos said the Legislature and the people of Texas have reached a point where they must decide the value of higher education in Texas. He said that decision is important because the state is on the verge of reaching the level of other high quality institutions across the nation. Payne said the yearly national average increase for higher education in the United States is 8 percent and is projected to continue at that rate during the next two years. Inflation, meanwhile, is expected to increase at a rate of 5 percent. "The president told the committees if the Legislature provides an 8 percent increase, we will continue to gain on our competition," Payne said. "A 5 percent increase will allow us to hold our position. "However, if we go to a freeze budget, then we are going to lose ground because that amounts to a 5 percent cut. And Texas will be set back. Not seriously, but it will be set back. Anything below that will cause varying degrees of damage. "The interesting point is that with this comprehensive program we have, we are still operating on the lowest cost per student, the lowest ratio of employees to students and the lowest room and board rate per student of the four major doctoral institutions." Tech is the most comprehensive institution in the Southwest because of its programs, Payne said. Payne told senate members the current budget restrictions implemented by Cavazos are the results of written and verbal directives received from Gov. Mark White, Speaker of the House Gib Lewis and Chairman of the House Appropriations Committee Jim Rudd. "Last August, the speaker and the chairman sent a directive to freeze hiring, cease capital expenditures and stop construction," Payne said. "At the first of this year, the governor sent a directive to freeze hiring, cut expenses and that the president should approve all expenditures." Payne said the chairman of the appropriations committee also directed Cavazos to report on the results of the salary freezes, which led to Cavazos' appearance before the legislative committees in January. Cavazos told committee members if the proposed 27 percent budget cut is put into effect, Tech could expect a reduction in the number and quality of its faculty members, which would lead to a deterioration of teaching and research activity. The budget reduction also would result in an increased teaching load, leaving less faculty time for student counseling and assistance, larger classes, denial of enrollment to qualified students and the reduction or elimination of some programs. Payne said the Legislature is requesting that budget cuts be made in areas that do not affect the classroom. However, 72 percent of the university's budget includes faculty salaries, utilities, departmental operating expenses and library funding. Payne said any cuts in those areas are a direct cut to the classroom.

Police continue to search for sexual assault suspect

By KEVIN SMITH
University Daily Staff Writer

Police were searching late Wednesday for a suspect in connection with the rape of a 21-year-old Lubbock Christian College student who was abducted Tuesday afternoon from the Texas Tech campus. Lubbock Police Department reports said the victim was sitting in her car outside the Music Building about 5:30 p.m. Tuesday when a white or Asian Indian man opened the passenger side door, grabbed her arm and forced her out of her car and into his vehicle. The suspect drove the car to the 2200 block of Ninth Street and parked the vehicle in front of a one-story red brick house, reports said. The suspect told the victim to stay in the car and then went into the house. He returned to the car shortly, took the victim into the living room of the house and raped her repeatedly, reports said. Police said the suspect released the victim after telling her not to say anything because he knew where he could locate her. The victim was walking west on Ninth Street when she was picked up by a friend she had left at the Tech campus, according to reports. Police said the victim said she was scared and did not know what to do after the incident. Reports indicated that at no time did the suspect threaten the woman's life or use a weapon, and police said the victim did not want her friend involved in the incident. The victim refused to sign a crime report and said she would not be able to identify the suspect. The suspect was described as a white or Indian male about 20 years old, 5 feet 7 inches to 5 feet 9 inches tall, of medium build with brown hair. When last seen, the suspect was wearing faded jeans and a short-sleeved net shirt. In other campus criminal activity, the University Police has reported a 266 percent increase since the previous week in crime based on monetary damages lost through burglary, theft and criminal mischief. A Texas Instruments portable professional micro-computer, valued at $5,000, was stolen from the Architecture Building during the weekend despite the protection of an alarm system. According to University Police reports, Robert Lima, an architecture professor, reported the theft Monday when he discovered the computer was missing from room 808 of the Architecture Building. The door to room 808 had an alarm hooked to the door, and Lima said the alarm was sounding when he entered the Architecture Building Sunday afternoon. Lima reset the alarm and checked the room, but he noticed nothing missing and did not report the alarm to police, reports said. Police reports said someone apparently had removed a metal plate covering the latch to the door.

SA election commission official predicts presidential race may result in runoff

By CHERYLE LOCKE
University Daily Staff Writer

The race for Student Association president may be forced into a runoff, according to SA election commission chairman Vincent Ianaule. Ianaule said for any one of the four presidential candidates to secure a majority vote would be difficult because the votes are expected to be split unevenly. According to the Student Senate Election Code, a presidential candidate must secure 51 percent of the student body vote before a victory can be declared. "I will go ahead and say that I feel certain that there will be almost undoubtedly a runoff," Ianaule said. "With four candidates, I just don't see any possible way that one guy can get enough votes to get 51 percent of the vote." If a runoff is necessary, it will be scheduled for March 20. SA presidential hopeful Lin Carter said he also expects a runoff. "I think there's a good chance there will be a runoff," Carter said. "I feel pretty confident about it. I've received positive feedback from a lot of people. It's just so crucial that people get out and vote." Ianaule, who monitored the voting booths Wednesday, said there was a steady flow of students most of the day waiting in line to vote. The official number of students who voted will not be disclosed until the polls close at noon today. Voting booths today will be located only in the Business Administration Building, Holden Hall and the University Center. Some senate members campaigning for re-election Wednesday morning outside the UC said they believed more students were voting this year than last year. Spencer Hayes, a presidential candidate, said the turnout was tremendous compared to last year. Hayes, along with many other senate candidates, spent most of Wednesday morning campaigning outside the UC. "When I approached one guy, he flat out told me he wasn't interested," Hayes said. "I don't mind, because that's only one out of many. Everyone else has been really good about it." Hayes said he was fairly sure the election would result in a runoff, but he said he was not going to worry about the possibility until the time came. Carter said he also received enthusiastic responses from students, but he said he regrets the less-than-favorable publicity the SA and Greek systems have received in recent articles and editorials in The University Daily. The articles concerned the involvement of the Phi Delta Theta fraternity in the SA and an unauthorized switch of a candidate from one race to another. "I think it's a shame it had to come up before the election," Carter said. "I hope it doesn't really hurt me because I'm Greek. I hope people vote for the person, not just their affiliation." Mark Wetzel, another candidate for SA president, said he felt somewhat frustrated after campaigning at the Business Administration Building. "I feel like people were so apathetic," he said. "They seemed to think it was all some sort of big joke. Over in the BA people keep ripping down everyone's signs and writing one-liners and signs on them. "It's not just the people in the BA who are doing it. Someone in the Home Economics Building drew on my campaign poster. They drew a mustache on my picture and wrote Hitler beside it." "I have really enjoyed getting out and meeting people, though. It's been the best part of this. I've met people I never would have gotten to know otherwise. The international students at Tech have been really responsive, and so have a bunch of the academic honoraries." Wetzel said he believes the SA presidential race this year is different from past races because of the mutual respect each candidate has for the other candidates. "This particular election is going to entangle a lot of different policies and views, but it will be a good race," Wetzel said. Candidate Jeff Bright said he has campaigned little because of a tight work and class schedule. "At first Spencer was running by himself, and we didn't want him to run unopposed," Bright said. Bright said he was referring to the residents of Gaston Hall when he said "we." "A bunch of us figured that someone should run against Spencer just so he wouldn't have to run alone. I volunteered to do it," Bright said. "We haven't campaigned to really win. We've campaigned to give people a choice. We're the alternative." "We didn't expect to win when we decided to do it. You can't come from nowhere and expect that. These other guys have been spending all their lives practicing for this. "If I do win I think I can make some really good changes for the SA, but like I said, I just wanted the students to have the chance to make a choice."

House rejects horse race betting bill

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas House on Wednesday voted 96-52 against a horse race betting bill, apparently slamming the gate on pari-mutuel gambling for at least two more years.
 "It's a dead issue," said Speaker Gib Lewis, a supporter of the measure. The bill's sponsor, Rep. Hugo Berlanga, D-Corpus Christi, said he had thought he enjoyed a three-vote margin going into the floor debate. Afterward, he agreed with Lewis that the 1985 battle is over.
 "This issue won't go away. I think it will come back (in another session)," he predicted.

Attorney General bribery trial resumes

AUSTIN (AP) — The commercial bribery trial of Attorney General Jim Mattox is scheduled to resume today with defense lawyers presenting their case and Mattox vowing to take the witness stand before the trial is over.
 Mattox is accused of threatening the lucrative bond business of the powerful Houston law firm Fulbright & Jaworski unless one of the firm's lawyers stopped trying to question his sister in a South Texas oil lease lawsuit.
 The trial, in its fourth week, has centered on Fulbright & Jaworski lawyer Wiley Caldwell's assertion that Mattox threatened him in a telephone call on June 17, 1983.

Former official says White promised him a contract to prevent competitive bidding

By The Associated Press

AUSTIN — Gov. Mark White had no comment Wednesday on a newspaper report quoting a former state water commissioner as saying he got a $9,950 state consulting contract due to a promise White made when easing him off the Texas Water Commission.
 The contract was $50 below the $10,000 level that would have triggered a requirement for competitive bidding.
 The Austin American-Statesman, in Wednesday's editions, quoted former commissioner John Stover as saying he received the contract because of White's promise "to help any way he could" after Stover resigned his water post to allow White to appoint a successor.

"I was following up on his (White's) offer to help," Stover told the newspaper.

"I told him I needed some business. I was looking for work, and this seemed to be the only way to go about it," Stover said.

For the $9,950, Stover wrote a report on water and sewage issues. The 23-page narrative contained information "readily available from the Texas Department of Water Resources and federal agencies," the American-Statesman said.

The newspaper said White denied awarding the contract to Stover for his resignation, to fulfill any promise to him or to ease Stover's transition to private life.

The paper quoted the governor's press secretary, Ann Arnold, as saying White "thought it would be helpful to have additional information."

Arnold said White would have no further comment.

According to the newspaper, the 23-page narrative said the state should maximize use of available water sources, reduce demand for water and sewage treatment, and shouldn't count on increased federal money for water needs.

The American-Statesman showed the report to three specialists in water and sewage issues inside and outside state government, and reported that all said "the report was superficial and offered no new findings."

Stover left the water commission in 1983, setting up shop as a lawyer in Austin.

Scholarships take students to Europe

By LIZ REYNA
University Daily Staff Writer

Two Texas Tech architecture students have been awarded fellowships to travel to Europe this summer.

The division of architecture has selected Kelly Carlson, a senior from Albuquerque, N.M., as the recipient of a foreign traveling fellowship. The Texas Society of Architects (TSA) gave Mike Imber, a senior from Midland, its fellowship award.

A foreign travel fellowship allows a student to study his subject of interest abroad.

"There are no strings. The students can go wherever they want to go. They are asked to make a presentation and show sketches to the faculty," said Dudley Thompson, chairman of the division of architecture.

This is the first year TSA has sponsored foreign traveling fellowships, according to Thompson. He said six architecture students from Rice, Texas A&M, University of Texas at Houston, Arlington, and Austin as well as Tech were selected.

The six students will travel to Fort Worth in August to design plans for the Trinity River Development project, a cityscape near downtown Fort Worth.

Imber's trip will include visits to London, Paris, Rome, Cologne and Amsterdam within the period of one month.

"I plan to visit the basic cultural cities in Europe and venture from these cities into surrounding areas," Imber said. "This is a great opportunity to get a more or less study of not just the surface but of the culture of what is behind Europe."

Carlson has not chosen her itinerary yet. Two programs are available to her, one with the University of Illinois at Chicago, offering one month of travel throughout Europe, and the other with the Universit e de Fontainebleau. Should she choose this program, she will attend school for two months in Paris.

"The school in Paris takes a European approach of education. It incorporates studies and experience," Carlson said.

'Favorite son' to present acoustic solo act in Lubbock nightspot

By PETE WILKINS
University Daily Staff Writer

Joe Ely is a performer who is making a name for himself in many places. Of course, he is one of Lubbock's favorite sons and a West Texas legend. (Now he claims Austin as his home). When people think of Ely they think of the Lone Star State.

But Ely has not been confined to Texas. It's a big state, to be sure, but not big enough to hold this honky-tonking country fried rocker. New York lately has had a taste of Ely's music. He's beginning to become a regular performer in England. And recently Ely and his band have returned from that big island in the Indian Ocean, Australia.

But Ely hasn't forgotten where he came from. No matter where he plays, Ely knows where his roots are. And he'll be stopping by Fat Dawg's Saturday to present a solo act. No band this time — just Ely. Opening the show will be Jesse Taylor, Ely's former guitarist, with an acoustic set of his own.

"I wanted to do something I haven't done for a while," Ely said. "Just me and an acoustic guitar. There's a lotta stuff I want to play — just dig into my roots."

Ely admitted that the prospect of a solo act can be somewhat frightening.

"It scares me to death — it's kinda like being naked on stage," he said. "It strips everything down."

Ely said he and his band just returned from a two-week jaunt across Australia, playing in 11 cities in 14 days. "We had a ball, man," he said. "The whole tour went so smooth, it almost made us suspicious. It reminded me a lot of the cities back home. It felt a little like a Texas crowd — not a jaded bunch."

When a crowd in England hears the name of Lubbock, Texas, they think of Buddy Holly, Ely said. "They associate our band with the 'Wild West.' They have a romantic idea of the West," he said.

England is not alone in its idea of the "Wild West," Ely said. "New Yorkers have a romantic idea of Texans, too. It can get kind of absurd, sometimes — a back yard full of sheep, for example."

Ely said there is a possibility that he and the band will be returning to England sometime in the fall. He said he also is likely to be releasing an album during the summer. Unlike his latest album, "Hi-Res," the new album will be recorded by Ely and his band in the studio initially. Ely recorded "Hi-Res" in his own home with the aid of a computer.

"I actually recorded it twice," Ely said of "Hi-Res." "The first time at home, on an eight-track recorder, and the second time in the studio. I felt like it was something I had to do, to satisfy my curiosity."

Ely said working with computers made some things easier and others more difficult. "I don't want to work that hard — I want to be lazy," he said. "Give me a ball point pen and an acoustic guitar, and I'll find a couch to lie down on in the studio."

UD names Sharp, Clay women's Coach, Newcomer of the Year

By COLIN KILLIAN
University Daily Sports Editor

It probably isn't much of a surprise, but Texas Tech coach Gerald Myers is The University Daily Southwest Conference Coach of the Year, and guard Bubba Jennings is the UD Player of the Year.

On the women's side, Myers counterpart at Tech, Marsha Sharp, is Coach of the Year and junior post Tricia Clay is Newcomer of the Year.

Myers and Jennings led Tech to a 20-7 regular season record and the school's first SWC title since 1973. The Raiders finished the SWC slate with a 12-4 mark, a full two games ahead of second place SMU, Arkansas and Texas A&M.

Jennings shooting touch from the perimeter and leadership on the court were major factors in Tech's drive to the championship. He shot better than 54 percent from the field, almost exclusively from long range, in averaging 19.3 points a game.

And, going into the first round of the SWC Post-Season Classic Friday, Jennings is shooting 87.8 percent from the free throw line, almost one percentage point above Myers' school record of 86.9 set in 1958.

Most pre-season prognosticators predicted the Raiders would be destined for a middle-of-the-pack finish in the league race. But Myers pulled his senior-dominated squad together and led them to eight consecutive victories to end the regular season.

When Tech beat TCU 61-53 Saturday in Fort Worth in the season finale, Myers became the winningest coach in Tech history with 255 victories, surpassing the 254 wins owned by his former mentor, Polk Robison.

Jennings also was a unanimous choice for first-team All-SWC. He is joined by Olympian centers Joe Kleine of Arkansas and Jon Koncak of SMU. Also making the first team were TCU guard Dennis Nutt and A&M guard Kenny Brown.

When Carolyn Thompson finished her eligibility last season, many observers predicted Tech coach Sharp would be faced with a major rebuilding task.

Thompson, the highest scorer in Tech basketball history, was a franchise player who wouldn't easily be replaced. The Raiders also lost the services of four other seasoned seniors.

So what did Sharp do? She recruited Clay and forward Sharon Cain from Odessa Junior College. And with the return of several talented sophomores and juniors, Sharp quickly found that a rebuilding year wasn't all that necessary. She led Tech to a 21-6 record and a second-place SWC finish.

The Raiders entered the nation's top twenty after winning the first five games and there they have remained since. The balloting for Coach of the Year was narrow in the women's category, with Sharp narrowly edging Texas' Jody Conradt.

Clay also was named to the first team after leading the Raiders with a 16.9 scoring average. Clay led the Tech in rebounding, too, with 7.0 per game.

Cain and guard Camille Franklin were selected to the second team for Tech, and post Melinda Denham received an honorable mention nod.

Houston's dominating center, 6-5 Monica Lamb, was voted Player of the Year after averaging 16.7 points and 10.1 rebounds a game. She blocked an incredible 112 shots and her 65.3 field goal percentage possibly was the nation's best.

Selections for the 1985 University Daily All-SWC basketball team were determined by the votes of the four members of the UD sports staff, which includes Reagan White, Danny Davis, Kent Best and Colin Killian.

Tech women open tourney play top coach, player

By REAGAN WHITE
University Daily Staff Writer

DALLAS — The Texas Tech women's basketball team enters the Southwest Conference Post-Season Basketball Classic tonight against the Houston Cougars in a 6 p.m. semifinals contest at Moody Coliseum.

The Cougars, 22-7 for the season, advanced to the semifinals after defeating Texas A&M 84-72 in Tuesday's first-round action. Houston's Monica Lamb and Sonya Watson each contributed 22 points to the win, with Lamb making 11 of 12 field goal attempts.

Arkansas also advanced in the tournament Tuesday night, defeating Baylor 78-69. The Razorbacks will play the No. 1-ranked Texas Longhorns at 8 p.m. today at Moody Coliseum.

The winner of the Tech-Houston contest will meet the winner of tonight's Texas-Arkansas game for the tournament championship at 7:30 p.m. Saturday at Moody.

Talented Houston has come on strong through the last half of the SWC race, winning eight of its past nine games, including a 70-66 victory against Tech Feb. 9 in Lubbock. The only setback in the streak came at the hands of Texas, a loss that gave Tech

Raiders try to make Lamb chops of talented Coogs in semifinals

the No. 2 seed in the tourney.

Houston has shot accurately from the field this season, averaging 53 percent efficiency. The Cougars finished the regular season on a strong note, crushing the Ponies of SMU, 114-76.

Tech's last outing of the regular season also was against the Ponies. Tech won, but by a less impressive 77-74 margin.

The Raiders put together a modest streak of their own to finish the regular season, winning their last four outings after losing three of the four previous games.

The streak has enabled third-year coach Marsha Sharp to post her third 20-win season at Tech. The Raiders stand at 21-6 and finished with a 12-4

SWC mark.

One face Sharp will be glad to see back on the hardwood will be the return of Lisa Wood, who has been absent suffering a concussion Feb. 17 in Rice.

The 5-9 forward from Sudan spent the night in a Houston hospital following the injury. After rejoining her teammates in Lubbock, Wood experienced dizziness and other complications and was admitted to Lubbock General Feb. 18, where she spent a week.

Wood, who had averaged nine points and 26.4 minutes of play per outing before the injury, did not play in Tech's final five games. Tonight against the Cougars, she is expected to play for the first time since her injury.

Camille Franklin will need just four assists against the Cougars to break Janet Mears' career assist mark of 200. Franklin has dished out 171 assists this year and has 286 in her 87-game Tech career.

Besides Franklin, probable starters for Tech include Sharon Cain, who has averaged 11.7 points per game, Lisa Logsdon, who has average SWC tallies per outing, Melinda Denney, who has averaged 9.8 points a game, and Tricia Clay, who has pulled down seven rebounds a game as well as scoring 16.9 points
