State representatives to open tuition hike debate

By LINDA BURKE
University Daily Staff Writer

State Rep. Wilhelmina Delco, D-Austin, will bring her tuition bill 1147 to the floor of the House today for open debate. The bill passed the House Higher Education Committee last week.

The bill calls for resident student tuition to rise from $4 per semester hour to $8 beginning in the fall 1985. In fall 1986, tuition would triple to $12 per semester hour. By the fall semester 1987, tuition would be $14 per semester hour for resident students.

Tuition for non-residents would be raised from $40 to $120 per semester hour beginning in fall 1985. In fall 1986, non-resident tuition would be raised to $180 per semester hour.

In Delco's bill, medical and dental resident student tuition would be raised ed from $400 to $800 for the academic year beginning in fall 1985. Tuition would climb to $1,200 for the academic year beginning in fall 1986.

“My concern is that fast escalation of tuition costs will hurt (college) attendance — John Montford”

Non-resident medical and dental student tuition would be raised from $1,200 to $2,400 for the academic year beginning in the fall. In fall 1986, tuition would climb to $3,600 for the year.

Delco's bill also would set aside 25 percent of tuition fee payments for financial aid.

State Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, said there are enough votes in Austin to pass the bill. “My concern is that fast escalation of tuition costs will hurt student attendance.

“Hopefully, the gradual implementation of cost increases will not hurt the number of applicants at public colleges and universities,” he said. Montford said he will endorse the bill if it gets to the senate.

State Rep. Ron Givens, R-Lubbock, also is supporting the bill. “Tech students have encouraged me to support the (Delco) bill. I think students can see the reality that tuition needs to be increased,” he said.

Givens said the bill would implement the tuition increase gradually enough to avoid hurting student enrollment. “If students are truly planning on attending a college or university, the tuition probably won't be the deciding factor,” he said.

Givens said he would support a percentage of tuition being set aside for financial aid, but he said Delco's 25 percent allotment may be too much.

State Sen. Grant Jones, D-Abilene, has introduced a fees bill to the senate from the Senate Finance Committee which includes a tuition fees increase index.

According to Associated Press reports, Jones' senate bill 321 would raise resident tuition from $4 to $48 per semester hour beginning this fall.

Non-resident student tuition would climb from $40 to $60 per semester hour starting in the fall 1986.

Resident medical and dental student tuition would jump from $400 to $1,200 this fall and to $1,400 in fall 1986. Non-resident medical and dental student tuition fees would be raised to $3,600 this fall and to $4,200 in fall 1986.

Jones' bill provides that 9 percent of tuition fees be set aside for financial aid.

By fall 1987, Jones' bill would index the cost increase of a secondary education. Resident students would be expected to pay 20 percent of the total cost of their education in Texas. Non-resident students would be expected to pay 100 percent of the cost of their education.

Jones' bill has not been addressed by either house.

George Torres, a House Higher Education Committee staff member, said Jones' concept of indexing is easier than Delco's tuition plan. “Every time the cost of education increases so does the cost to the student,” he said.

Torres said the Delco bill probably will face a few changes as it goes to the floor today. “There will probably be an effort to amend the bill to agree with Jones' concept of indexing cost increases,” Torres said. “The 25 percent set aside for financial aid also will most likely be reduced.”

Givens said the Delco bill addresses reality better than the Jones bill. “A drastic change in tuition costs is gonna result in a loss of students,” he said. “If enrollment drops, then we're in worse shape than before.”

Tuition indexing measure sparks debate

A number of students are angry over a bill by Sen. Grant Jones, D-Abilene, that would increase tuition for residents at Texas colleges and universities from $4 per semester hour to $48 per semester hour beginning in the fall of 1985.

Meg Brooks, director of the Texas Student Lobby, said many students are upset with Jones' bill because the student lobbyists had attempted to compromise with legislators about the state's need to generate revenue. The student lobby supports state Rep. Wilhelmina Delco's bill that would increase tuition at a slower rate.

“We're kind of pissed off because we came out with a good, equitable plan to generate money for the state by paying more for our education and now they come out with this thing. It's really infuriating,” Brooks said.

Jones' bill, a general fee indexing bill, includes the tuition increase with a number of basic fees such as hunting and fishing fees and driver's license fees.

“I think education is far different than a driver's license,” said Brooks. “Jones is from Abilene and his constituents could care less if state tuition is increased because Abilene has three private schools.

“They'd love for state tuition to finally equal the price of their private schools,” Brooks said.

Brooks was referring to Abilene Christian University, Hardin-Simmons University and McMurry College, the three private institutions in Abilene.

The Student Lobby group and a number of student university leaders already have endorsed Delco's bill which would gradually increase tuition from $4 per semester hour to $8 in 1985 and $12 in 1986. Tuition would then increase by $2 a year until 1990.

Jim Noble, Texas Tech Student Association president, traveled to Austin Monday to express Tech's endorsement of Delco's bill.

While in Austin, Noble spoke with state Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, and state Reps. Ron Givens, R-Lubbock; Buzz Robnett, R-Lubbock; Jim Rudd, D-Brownfield; and Foster Whaley, D-Pampa.

“My message to local representatives and senators was to get the Delco bill passed through the House as unamended as possible. Everyone I talked to was very responsive. They seem to be very appreciative that we have taken the time to come to Austin and speak with them,” Noble said.

“I guess they are more sympathetic toward our concerns about the tuition increase than to our concerns about the legal drinking age.”

Noble said one reason he favors Delco's bill is because a specified percentage of funds would be set aside for low-income students.

Delco's bill would set aside 25 percent of the revenue generated by the tuition increase to lower income students. Noble said he believes since there must be a tuition increase, he wants to see the extra money generated be put to use in a constructive manner.

Noble said he considers Jones an enemy, especially since his bill does not allocate a special percentage to lower income students.

“Jones' fee bill surprised everyone, even those in the senate, because education has never been classified with general fees,” Noble said. “It was like this little conniving guy came up with this bill over spring break while there were no students here to oppose him. Initially the senate had sort of agreed to wait to do anything about the tuition increase until Delco's bill had had a chance to go through the House.”

Members of the House will vote on Delco's bill today.

Tech VP disputes college funding opinion

By KIRSTEN KLING
University Daily Staff Writer

A Texas Tech official disagrees with state Comptroller Bob Bullock's opinion that higher education institutions have enough money in their bank accounts and do not need more money from the state.

In a speech to the Texas Daily Newspaper Association Monday, Comptroller Bob Bullock said in addition to money appropriated to state colleges and universities from the Texas Legislature, higher education institutions have a $3.4 billion “bowl of gravy” that the Legislature never sees.

“The Texas treasurer and comptroller have a cash flow problem and are using our (higher education) money to solve their (the state's) money problems,” responded Eugene Payne, vice president for finance and administration.

Bullock said that in the past he favored a tuition increase but has changed his mind. He no longer advocates the increase for state colleges and universities because he said the amount of funds received from assorted programs, business enterprises and gifts almost equals the $3.8 billion the Legislature has given higher education over the past two years.

“In other words, the Legislature's appropriations to higher education are only half the picture,” Bullock said.

Payne said the state does not allow state funding for certain campus programs.

“We're doing what the Legislature told us to do, operate such facilities as the Recreation Center without state monies,” Payne said.

Bullock told the group he wants state budget writers to examine local funds of state colleges and universities before raising college tuition, according to the Associated Press.

Payne said Bullock and other state officials misunderstand the higher education funding process.

“One-half of the money (appropriated to higher education institutions) comes from state taxpayers,” Payne said. “The state pays nothing for dorms, the bookstore, student and athletic facilities and other facilities.

Bullock said universities and colleges in Texas should not receive additional state funds.

Payne said universities and colleges receive more benefit from local funds than if the same money was controlled by the state.

“It is incorrect that Texas Tech would benefit from money in the state treasury because they don't invest like we do,” he said.

The state treasury does not collect as much interest as higher education institutions, Payne said. In 1984, the higher education investments' earning rate was higher than the treasury's interest rate.

“We would lose $250,000 in funds and have to increase our staff to deal with the bureaucratic staff in Austin to get money out of the state treasury,” he said.

Local funds are not included in the comptroller's revenue estimate, Bullock said.

“It is money that never goes through the state treasury. It is money that isn't accountable to the Legislature. How it is raised and how it is spent rests solely in the hands of college officials,” he said.

Payne pointed out that the question of accountability raised by Bullock is “baloney.”

“Tech's funds are audited by state auditors, and they report we're accountable for every dollar,” Payne said. “We invest our interest well.”

Regents pass various measures on agenda

By KIRSTEN KLING
University Daily Staff Writer

The Texas Tech Board of Regents on March 8 approved separating the Division of Architecture from the College of Engineering, reorganizing the College of Education into three departments and increasing the price of football tickets from $12 to $14.

The board approved without opposition the designation of the Division of Architecture as the College of Architecture.

The College of Education was reorganized from six academic areas to three departments. The college currently operates from six academic areas administered by chairpersons. Reorganizing the college into three departments allows the college to become more efficient and cost effective in addition to making major programs more identifiable, according to the faculty committee study conducted by an Executive Advisory Council.

The three departments are elementary, bilingual and reading education; educational leadership and secondary education; and educational psychology, special education and technology.

In other business, regents approved a recommendation by the Athletic Council and the director of men's athletics to increase the price of football game sideline tickets to the general public from $12 to $14 per seat. The $2 per ticket increase would produce an estimated additional income of $90,000 compared to the 1984 season.

The board also awarded a contract to Lee Lewis General Contractor of Lubbock for the construction of a multi-purpose athletic facility. Regents also increased the project budget for the facility by more than $76,000.

In conjunction, the board authorized the issuance of $1.4 million in Athletic Facilities Revenue Bonds and accepted the Dean Witter Reynolds Inc. bid of 9.48 percent interest on the sale of the bonds.

Athletic income reserves and a $1.2 million gift from the Red Raider Club will help fund the $4.2 million facility along with the bonds.

The 300-foot-diameter facility will be located south of Jones Stadium. The two-level building will accommodate six to eight tennis or volleyball courts, a portable basketball floor, an artificial, 60-yard football field surface, a 235-foot-diameter track and a gymnastics and weight area.

In other business, board members named electrical engineering professor John Walkup as Tech's 31st Horn Professor. Horn professorships are named after Tech's first president, Paul Whitfield Horn. The designation of Horn Professor, which is the highest status award bestowed by the board, was established in 1966 to recognize outstanding teaching, research or other creative achievement.

Walkup, co-director of the Optical Systems Laboratory in the electrical engineering/computer science department, has extensively researched optical information processing, digital image processing, statistical optics and communication theory.

In 1980, he was named Outstanding Professor by students in his department and in 1981 he received the President's Award for Excellence in Teaching in the Engineering College.

Regents also granted academic promotions to 49 Tech university and Health Sciences Center faculty members and granted tenure to 37 faculty members.

In further board action, regents changed the name of the University Center Theater to the James G. Allen Theater, honoring an English professor who was a Tech faculty member for 45 years.

Allen served as executive director of the Dads Association until January and currently is writing a history of the Dads Association. He helped establish both the University Center and the Tech Dads Association, in addition to initiating the Artists and Speakers Series, now called Cultural Events.

The board approved the schematic design and authorized the re-establishment of the project budget for the renovation of the east campus research center (the former Devro Building).

Regents grant separation to College of Architecture

By KIRSTEN KLING
University Daily Staff Writer

The Texas Tech Board of Regents approved the designation of the Division of Architecture as the College of Architecture during the March 8 regents meeting and will seek final approval from the Texas Coordinating Board this year.

An ad hoc committee, appointed by Tech President Lauro Cavazos to study the implications of the separation of the Architecture Division, recommended that the Division of Architecture be established as a college.

Architecture Interim Chairman Dudley Thompson said the separation would cost an additional $40,000 to $50,000 to be included in the architecture budget.

Board members said the separation would not be difficult because the structure of a college is in place and the separation costs of the unit is comparable to the costs of a division. Currently, the division operates as a college with a chairman acting as a dean. Altering the status from a division to a college would not require major funding or hiring increases.

The ad hoc committee study reported that the visibility and identity of architecture as a school would enhance the quality of students and faculty attracted to Tech. A new structure also would correspond to the real-world professional relationships that exist between architects and engineers, according to the committee appointed by Cavazos. The committee was comprised of chairpersons, deans and alumni from the Tech engineering college and architecture division.

Regent J. Fred Bucy, who initially opposed the separation, cautioned the board that without special attention and development of the new college, it would be “very easy for an architecture student to turn into an art student.”

Whether the Division of Architecture will function adequately as a College of Architecture depends on its development, Bucy said.

“It can be a good thing or get them in trouble,” he said. “From my observation at TI (Texas Instruments), and we deal with this problem all the time, there is a tight coupling of architecture and engineering.”

Bucy said “there are two kinds of architects — those that draw pretty pictures and turn over the building to others and those who are the best architects and look at the process in industry and environment. To be a good architect, one must be a good engineer.”

“Our contention is that we can produce a more whole person without a loss of technical background,” Thompson said. “The truth is, there are thousands of different architects. We deal simultaneously with artistry and technical aspects. We deal with human behavior, environments, psychology, technology and economics.”

Tech President Lauro Cavazos said Tech will seek approval from the Coordinating Board, Texas College and University System, for the implementation of the College of Architecture. The separation item is expected to be on the Coordinating Board agenda in April or July. If the Coordinating Board approves the separation and the expected cost of the separation, the architecture division will become the College of Architecture.

Cavazos said he expects approval and college status by Jan. 1, 1986.

Goetz' case is heading to a second grand jury

By GILBERT DUNKLEY
University Daily Editor

NEW YORK, March 15 — Bernhard Goetz apparently is heading toward a second grand jury inquiry of his shooting of four teenagers aboard a subway train last Dec. 22. Goetz has said he shot the four in self-defense because he believed he was being accosted by them.

Goetz' shooting of the four was examined in January by a Manhattan grand jury, which returned an indictment against the 37-year-old engineer on illegal weapons charges. The jury did not indict him for attempted murder.

Since then, Manhattan District Attorney Robert M. Morgenthau has gone to acting New York Supreme Court Justice Stephen Crane, arguing for approval of new grand jury proceedings.

Crane, citing "significant new evidence" connected with the shootings, approved Morgenthau's request.

New York media have been buzzing all week with word that Morgenthau and the prosecuting team have uncovered a secret witness to be used in the second grand jury probe of Goetz' actions.

On Thursday, the New York Post quoted Goetz as replying "Hell, no" to the question of whether he was worried about a second grand jury probe. During that probe, Morgenthau will try to make attempted murder charges stick.

Thursday's Post further quotes Goetz as blaming the Daily News and The New York Times for Morgenthau's efforts to empanel a new grand jury.

"He was damned if he did and damned if he didn't," Goetz said. Goetz may be relying heavily on a largely sympathetic New York populace which rallied to his defense after he shot the four young men. His "Hell, no" reply to a question about his apprehensions probably is founded in confidence that no grand jury from this area will indict him for attempted murder.

Also, Goetz no doubt knows that this second attempt by Morgenthau to get him for attempted murder is the district attorney's last shot. State law bars Morgenthau from initiating a third set of grand jury proceedings against Goetz for the same charges.

Proclaiming his confidence in the face of this second whirlwind of controversy surrounding the shootings, Goetz is being haunted by one particularly damning statement he made during the Dec. 22 incident.

According to Wednesday's New York Times, Goetz told New Hampshire police, to whom he surrendered after the shootings, that he had examined the condition of each of the young men he had shot. Seeing that one was not bleeding, Goetz shot him again, saying, "You don't look so bad, here's another."

And as this city deliberates the case, what previously existed as a disturbing sidebar to the main story now is assuming greater proportions: the entire business is slowly assuming a division along racial lines. Some elements in minority communities are accusing Goetz of having entered the subway car with a deep-seated hatred of blacks. Those elements contend that Goetz' motive for shooting the four, all of whom are black, is precisely his alleged hatred of blacks.

But while some separation of opinion along racial lines is evident, there certainly is no absolute division. Members of some civil rights organizations have spoken in Goetz' defense. Police here on Thursday arrested several black members of the Guardian Angels organization who were protesting and agitating on Goetz' behalf.

The district attorney has been accused of buckling under political pressure in seeking a new grand jury hearing. I don't believe that particular horse will run this time. If Morgenthau is motivated by selfishness, he would have had reason to be contented with the determination of the first grand jury.

And he would have no fears about his political vulnerability. After all, Goetz still enjoys substantial public support here.

What may be motivating Morgenthau is the testimony of the secret witness he has corralled, along with a substantially different account of the shooting incident provided by one of the young men Goetz shot. That account was given to the new prosecutor in the case, but at this point, there is no indication the youth is prepared to tell that story to a grand jury.

Three of Goetz' victims had the opportunity to testify against him during the first grand jury proceedings but refused to do so in the face of numerous death threats and because Morgenthau would not promise immunity. The fourth shooting victim is out of a coma but has suffered brain damage.

The get-Goetz element here is hoping that that person, who remains paralyzed from the waist down, will recover enough to offer testimony to seal Goetz' indictment for attempted murder.

On the other side, those who believe Goetz should go free hope the teenager murmurs not a word.

As for me, I still believe what I believed at the outset: The Manhattan district attorney's office will give this case its all, because the lone-gunner tactics of Bernhard Goetz ought not to go unpunished in this national society.

And they particularly should not go unpunished in this city's environment, one in which so very many people ride the trains and buses and walk the streets with mania and paranoia shining from their lapels, just begging for an opportunity, and justification, to explode.

All is not well in Korea

To the Editor:

The recent accelerated political liberalization by President Chun Doo Hwan of South Korea caught many people by surprise.

The poor showing by pro-government candidates may have been the main catalyst for this action. However, let us not kid ourselves; the Feb. 8 return of the opposition leader Kim Dae-jung and the rough reception that he and his American entourage received from the Korean authorities did not do much to help the government.

Now he will be able to move around like a free man but he still cannot take part in any political activity, because the government has not lifted the ban imposed on him several years ago.

Nevertheless, the new Korean Democratic party did especially well in the big cities where they won a sizable amount of the votes. This was a major shock to President Chun. Ironically, of course, the opposition campaigned on a platform of liberalization, press freedom and an end to repression.

President Chun has promised to step down in 1998, and his action could not have come at a better time. With 40,000 American troops in his country and mounting pressure from the U.S. Congress for the administration to do something, the president hadn't very many choices left.

The United States has even gone as far as providing sanctuary for many of Chun's opponents. Now with the expected visit of the South Korean leader next month to the United States we can expect to see his critics silenced.

This move by Chun as much as it has surprised his critics has also helped to enhance the position of President Reagan, who has come under relentless pressure mostly from liberal Democrats in Congress to cancel the visit.

In the face of all these political problems the Republic of South Korea has managed to turn itself in the last 30 years from a far less primitive agrarian society to a semi-technological giant.

Although this is a very small step it is certainly a significant one and came just in time for the 1988 Olympic games which are due to be held in Seoul, South Korea.

IFC shows model form

To the Editor:

It is important to note that while fraternities and sororities are often the targets of unjustified criticism there is a strong drive for excellence at work within the 3,200-member student Greek community.

The Interfraternity Council of Texas Tech University walked off with top honors at the Mid-American Interfraternity Council Association and Mid-American Panhellenic Council Association Conference held March 7-10, 1985, at the Sheraton Hotel in St. Louis. The Interfraternity Council received the Jellison Awards, the award for excellence in all organizational operations. Four Jellison Awards are presented, based on Interfraternity Council size. Texas Tech is in Category III with 20 member fraternities.

The Jellison Award encompasses areas of organization setup and goals and services to member fraternities. The Tech IFC was specifically noted for its representative structure, committee structure, Judicial Board operation, rush program, and leadership development opportunities.

The Interfraternity Council also received the Rush Promotion Award. This award is based on excellence in rush structuring and programming.

Over 1,000 fraternities and sorority leaders from over 70 universities and colleges in 13 midwestern states participated in the conference.

These two awards indicated that there is a group of leaders willing to work for the strengthening of a fraternity system. These students are aware of, and admit to, problems with individual fraternal groups. However, they also realistically believe they can combat some of the negativism that is inherent in any Greek system. They also believe that only through the concerted efforts of a strong Interfraternity Council — one in which leaders from all groups work together to align themselves with the academic mission of Texas Tech — will the system improve.

I applaud the IFC leaders for attempting to deal with the behavior problems of its members. Also, the extremely successful non-alcoholic rush program has made the IFC's program a "model" for other schools. Decisions involving disciplining a fraternity or taking a stand regarding alcohol during membership recruitment are certainly not always popular, but these decisions indicate the Greek system, as evidenced by its recent awards, is moving in the right direction.

Special recognition must go to the 1984 executive officers — Dan Pope, Curt Leonard, Joe Stubbs, Bruce Frank, Doug Fusella, Ed Sandlin and Stuart Miller — for outlining reachable system goals. The 1985 executive officers — Bruce Frank, Mike Williamson, Peter Bambace, Lin Carter, Larry Chance, Greg Hackney, John Minter and Scott Phelan — must also be recognized for actively continuing the programs started.

Too often we are quick to criticize and not appreciate the positive work achieved by men such as those mentioned.

To the Editor

It would seem that most of the writers for The UD would be journalism majors. It would also seem that the editorial page would provide an excellent opportunity for these writers to express opinions on matters of import. This seldom seems to be the case, with the notable exception of Editor Dunkley.

I refer specifically to a couple of recent editorials. In the first one, written by Linda Burke, the author stimulates our senses by espousing her desire to eavesdrop on Spanish speaking people. Not only was this column blatantly discriminatory, it offered no humor, wit, satire or relevance to anything except perhaps Ms. Burke's personality flaws. In short: totally tasteless trash.

The second editorial, by Carla McKeown, appeared in the March 7 issue. In three successive paragraphs she tells us that we in the United States don't speak English — we speak American.

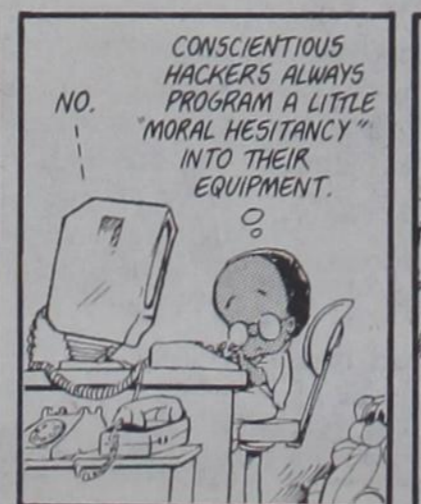

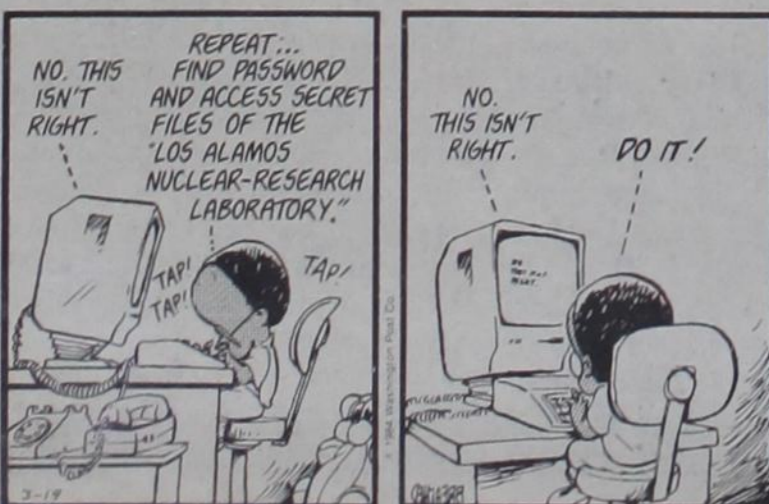

Between yawns I figured that this was just another editorial on how we've "destroyed" the English language in this country. However, when Ms. McKeown finally gets to the point, it seems she favors a proposed amendment to the Constitution making the English language the "official" language. At least it was refreshing that someone stated an opinion.

She uses the term American several times in the article. Anyone who speaks American needs to be fluent in a number of languages, for we are all Americans on this side of the globe. She doesn't understand how this amendment could affect non-English speaking people; a total lack of empathy. In the future, don't talk about "our" unwritten rules; they're yours, not mine.

The small number of white people speaking Spanish here in Texas is both surprising and disturbing, as is the general attitude toward Mexicans as second class citizens. I've lived in Texas for less than two months, but I'm already looking forward to learning Spanish so I can at least meet these people halfway.

League of Women Voters marks 65th year of service to Lubbock

By LINDA BURKE
University Daily Staff Writer

The Lubbock chapter of the League of Women Voters is celebrating its 65th birthday today as a multi-issued, non-partisan organization. The group has served the Lubbock community since the ratification of the 19th Amendment, which granted women the right to vote in 1920.

Nadine Bratsch, president of the Lubbock League of Women Voters, said the birthday celebration will publicize how the league has educated the public. "Our slogan is '65 and not retiring,'" she said.

Bratsch said the celebration also will kick off the league's annual finance drive.

"Our dues don't cover the costs of our program, so we are driving to raise money from contributions from businesses and individuals," she said.

Last year, members of the the organization raised $5,100 in their finance drive. This year's goal is $6,300.

"The purpose of our organization is to foster education and citizenship, promote forums and public discussions and support needed legislation.

"We are a political organization which doesn't support any candidate, but concerns itself with issues ranging from women's rights to national security," Bratsch said.

Bratsch said the league provides the community with such services as voter registration drives, voter hotlines and television debates between political candidates.

"We hope to continue working and being a watchdog organization of the government," she said.

Kathy came to a DermaCulture clinic for help. With DermaCulture's professional treatments and personally designed home skin care program, Kathy now enjoys the beautifully flawless complexion you see here in this unretouched photograph. Kathy is a Houston customer who freely tells everyone just how easy and inexpensive the DermaCulture program is and how it really works! Word play provides perplexing, 'provocative' points to ponder

By PETE WILKINS
University Daily Staff Writer

You know, I've been thinking lately. Actually, that's a misleading statement. It's not that I don't think much; I think all the time. Everybody does, right? Of course they do. As far as I know, there is no way to not think. You think when you're sleeping, when you're sitting around bored, even when you're watching television (although not much). The only way you really can stop thinking is to die or join a fraternity.

But that's not the point of this article. What I want to talk about is exactly what I've been thinking about. What have I been thinking about? Well, I'll tell you.

Have you ever noticed that certain sayings don't make much sense? Sayings that we use all the time in everyday speech but we never really stop to think about them. Like "in a nutshell." That one bothered me for quite a while. We all know what it means — basically, a condensed version or something like that.

But think about it. "In a nutshell?"

The first time I heard it used, I thought the guy was talking about pecans or something. Then I saw it in a book title — Chess In A Nutshell. Sounds pretty damn uncomfortable to me. Eventually, of course, I found out what it meant.

"Just a sec." There's another good one. If I was keeping time, somebody would be in trouble. People are always telling me, "just a sec," and then taking SEVERAL seconds, or even a minute or more! Boy, that makes me mad.

"Do you want a spanking?" Sure, mom. Lay one on me. I'd love to have a spanking. Can't think of anything I'd rather have. Work in a good, two-

Thanks, but you've obviously mistaken me for a sailboat.”

week grounding there if you would. "I like the cut of your jib." Thanks, but you've obviously mistaken me for a sailboat. I don't have a jib. If you want a sailboat, you'll have to check down at the marina.

"I'm gonna fix me a hamburger." What, was it broken? You don't "fix" a hamburger. You "build" it, of course. You "fix" a bowl of cereal.

"Quit beating around the bush." In all my life, I never have seen anyone beating around a bush. Sounds pretty intriguing, though. Why would anyone want to beat around a bush? I tried it the other day and almost was arrested.

What about "up the creek"? Where is this creek? And what's so horrible about it? Seems like everyone I know has spent some time in this fabled stream. What's more, they usually have to row their way back "without a paddle," for some reason. Sounds like quite a job, especially considering what the creek is said to be made of.

Well, I could go on, but I've got other fish to fry, as they say. Actually I don't have any fish to fry at all. But I've got to split, you know, so I'll catch you on the flip.

That would be pretty interesting. If I were to "split," we'd have a real mess on our hands. And I have only the vaguest mental image of catching someone on the flip. It involves a large spatula and a net. Just a couple more of those crazy expressions. Those zany words, I love 'em.

Stricklin's NCAA qualification highlights break

By REAGAN WHITE
University Daily Staff Writer

While most of you were drunk on the beach last week, many Texas Tech athletes spent their spring break competing in their respective sports.

One of the most successful performances was turned in by diver Lane Stricklin, who qualified for the NCAA national meet at the NCAA Zone Swimming and Diving meet at Texas Christian University March 15-16 in Fort Worth.

Stricklin won the 1-meter diving competition with a total score of 470, defeating a field of divers from the Southwest Conference, the Big Eight and several independents.

Stricklin placed ninth in the 3-meter diving competition. Only the top four places go to the national meet, so Stricklin will sit out that phase of the national competition, which will be March 28-30 in Austin.

The Tech women divers had less success, with Nina Fodor and Jenny Wikowsky placing 11th and 21st in the 3-meter competition.

The Tech softball team went into the break with a 2-2 record and emerged from the holiday with an 11-9 record. The Raiders' first challenge was at the Roadrunner Tournament in Las Cruces, N.M., where they finished second in a 22-team field.

Tech lost to Utah 5-2 in the third round of the tournament but bounced back to win three of its next four to land in the finals for a rematch against Utah. However, Utah proved too strong for the Raiders, winning 2-0.

After going 2-2 against four teams the next three days, Tech went to Norman, Okla., for the 24-team Sooner Invitational. New Mexico ended Tech's stay with a 7-1 spanking of the Raiders, who finished tied for ninth place.

The men's tennis team had a rough spring break, losing five matches while winning only one. The Raiders' record fell to 7-9 for the season.

March 9, the men lost to 11th-ranked California-Irvine, 9-0. Things improved March 10, but not enough as Tech lost to Kansas, 8-1. The March 11 effort against San Diego State also was an improvement, although Tech still lost, 6-3.

March 12 brought a close match, but not close enough, as the Raiders lost to San Diego, 5-4. And just when a win seemed conceivable for the Raiders, they were defeated 7-2 March 14 by Yale.

Tech finished the break on a winning note, finally, by pounding Cal State-Fullerton, 9-0.

Baseballers battle Chaps, try to end losing streak

The sporadic Texas Tech baseball team will try to get back on track today against Lubbock Christian College in a 2:30 p.m. contest at LCC.

The Raiders, 14-14, have lost four consecutive games, including three to Baylor Saturday and Sunday to open Southwest Conference play.

In the first game Saturday, Tech pitcher Bret Marshall (5-1) was going for his sixth win against no losses. Heading into the eighth inning and protecting a slim 2-1 lead, Tech committed a pair of errors with two outs, which led directly to two unearned runs. Tech lost by that 3-2 margin.

In Sunday's double-header, Tech lost a pair of close decisions. In the first game, Darryl Decker (0-3) was tagged with the loss as the Raiders fell by a 3-0 count.

The second game was even harder for Tech to swallow. With the score tied 3-3 in eighth inning, Billy Lance laid down a perfect squeeze bunt, scoring Amory Booker from third and giving the Raiders a 4-3 lead. That lead quickly evaporated in the top of the ninth. Baylor tied it 4-4 with a sacrifice fly to send the game into extra innings.

Tech had opportunities to score in the 10th, 11th, and 12th innings, but failed to do so. Baylor finally took the victory with a two-out double in the 12th.

1984-85 Raiders earned respect

By COLIN KILLIAN
University Daily Sports Editor

The pain and disappointment of being eliminated in the first round of the NCAA tournament will linger in the hearts of the Texas Tech basketball team for a long time.

But so will the joy and ecstasy of capturing the Southwest Conference regular season and post-season classic crowns.

Tech coach Gerald Myers looked anything but ecstatic Friday night in Houston after the Raiders fell 55-53 to Boston College in the opening round of the NCAA Midwest Regionals. The SWC Coach of the Year looked blankly at the Hofheinz Pavilion floor, not wanting to believe the season was, at long last, finished.

After the game, an emotional Vince Taylor could barely speak, his usual deep drawl reduced to a whisper. The rest of the Red Raiders, particularly the seniors, battled to retain their composure. At that moment, it probably seemed as if the world had come to an end.

The Raiders played perhaps their poorest game since early February against the Eagles, shooting a paltry 42 percent from the field. BC guard Michael Adams nailed a jumper from the top of the key with :04 left to close the book on the Raiders' Cinderella season. Tech scored only a single field goal in the final eight minutes of the contest. With 1:45 remaining, SWC Player of the Year Bubba Jennings' airball from 20 feet summed up the Raiders' fortunes.

It was ironic that the final shot of the 5-10 guard's college career didn't even draw iron. Yet, long after that shot is forgotten, Jennings will be remembered for his heroics. He became the second leading career scorer in Tech history this season and was named honorable mention All-America.

The loss to BC ended an 11-game winning streak for the Raiders, the school's longest in more than half a century. Most observers conceded that while other SWC teams had more talent, few had more heart. The 1984-85 Raiders were the epitome of teamwork and finished with a 23-8 record, one of the most successful seasons in Tech history. The Raiders were ranked 17th in the final Associated Press poll.

Myers became Tech's all-time winningest coach late in the season and finished the year with a 258-154 career mark. He led the Raiders, who were tagged for a fourth or fifth place SWC finish in most preseason polls, to a 12-4 league slate.

Then, as if to prove the regular season title was no fluke, the Raiders promptly won the SWC Post-Season Classic March 8-10 in Dallas, beating Baylor (83-76) and Texas A&M (72-63) in the first two rounds, then scoring an emotional 67-64 victory against Arkansas in the finals.

Long after the loss to BC is forgotten, the many triumphs of Tech's 1984-85 season will shine as brightly as the newest additions to the Red Raiders' trophy case.

Tech women in WNIT in wake of NCAA snub

The NCAA tournament selection committee obviously wasn't listening to all the noise the Texas Tech women's basketball team made in the 1984-85 season.

After being ranked among the nation's top 20 teams for most of the season, the 22-7 Raiders were snubbed by the committee. But the oversight didn't end Tech's season; the Raiders open play in the Women's National Invitation Tournament Thursday in Amarillo.

The 19th-ranked Raiders have been seeded No. 1 in the eight-team field and will meet No. 8 seed Cal State-Fullerton at 9 p.m. at the Amarillo Civic Center Coliseum. The semifinals will be Friday and the title game Saturday.

Tech finished second to nationally top-ranked Texas in the regular season Southwest Conference race, earning the No. 2 seed in the SWC Post-Season Classic March 7-9 in Dallas.

Tech rallied behind the determined leadership of post Melinda Denham and the offensive output of Sharon Cain, Tricia Clay and Lisa Logsdon to defeat Houston 81-67 on March 7 in a contest much closer than the score indicated.

The Raiders then met the powerful Lady Longhorns in the tournament finale March 9. The Raiders put forth a valiant effort but couldn't quite keep pace with the fast-breaking 'Horns in an 82-62 loss.
