Pregnancy prevention pushed as health-cost cutting measure

By The Associated Press

AUSTIN — A House committee taking testimony on health care for the indigent Tuesday heard its chairman, Rep. Brad Wright, R-Houston, suggest that preventing pregnancies might be the most cost-effective measure.

"We've got to address that issue. We've already heard it will save money," Wright said after a brief session of the House Public Health Committee.

The committee was assigned the task of considering four bills recommended by the Task Force on Indent Health Care, including one that would levy a 1 percent tax on net profits of private hospitals.

Wright said the four measures probably would go to a "friendly" subcommittee chaired by Rep. Jesse Oliver, D-Dallas, author of three of the measures, to be returned for a vote next week.

Oliver said his bill would provide prenatal care and birth services for about 50,000 women, resulting in about 150 fewer infant deaths each year and about 3,200 fewer handicapped children to be educated.

"It seems to me we should have some means of dealing with repeat pregnancies and the voluntary way may not be the way to do it," Wright said.

During a committee recess, Wright was asked by reporters, if he was recommending sterilization.

"Is that (tubal ligation) sterilization?" Wright replied. "It's reversible."

"Perhaps the best preventative is not to get pregnant in the first place," Wright said.

"We have to consider the cost of providing health care not only for birth, but throughout their lives," he said.

City considers Coliseum roof repairs

By KEVIN SMITH
University Daily Staff Writer

The Lubbock City Council during a regularly scheduled meeting Thursday will consider hiring an engineering firm to study the problems associated with the gradual movements of the roof of Lubbock Municipal Coliseum.

According to a study done in the late 1970s, the northern part of the roof of the Coliseum is lower than the rest of the structure. The study said the displacement is a result of concert equipment being suspended from the northern end of the Coliseum.

Heavy objects, such as lighting and sound equipment, apparently lowered over a number of years the arches supporting the northern part of the roof.

A report prepared in 1979 by Evan Roberts, an engineer who helped design the building, said that between 1970 and 1979, concerts always were staged at the northern end of the Coliseum and the related equipment was suspended from the northern part of the roof, causing that part of the roof to move out of equilibrium with the southern part.

Roberts' report recommended that a 5,000-pound weight limit be set on objects suspended from the roof and the supporting arches at both ends of the Coliseum be restored to their original equilibrium.

Because of current renovation work being carried out on the Lubbock Municipal Auditorium-Coliseum, the city is considering ordering an in-depth study on the structure to determine the pros and cons of following up on Roberts' recommendations.

In other business, the council will consider entering an extraterritorial jurisdiction (ETJ) agreement with the city of Wolforth.

ETJ is an area around a city that is subject to being annexed. The actual size of an ETJ is determined by population. According to this formula, Lubbock's ETJ extends five miles from the city limits, overlapping Wolforth's ETJ.

Rather than settle in court who determines land usage in the overlap zone, the council is considering approving an apportionment plan that would be acceptable to both sides.

Out of court

Regional mediation service explored

By KRISTI FROELICH
University Daily News Editor

The establishment of a regional mediation service was authorized by the board of directors of the South Plains Association of Governments at its monthly board meeting Tuesday.

The mediation service would create an alternative for small disputes as a way to cut down on case loads and rising court costs.

According to mediation service guidelines, the service would use an experienced, trained and independent third party to act as a facilitator in the resolution of disputes between parties who have agreed to the process.

The mediator would not determine guilt or innocence and would not determine the resolution of the dispute. Final resolution would be accomplished by the disputants themselves, using the mediator as a mutual resource.

Then the final agreement would be put into the form of a legally enforceable contract.

The proposed mediation service plan, tabled from the SPAG meeting in March, was debated and then passed with four association members in opposition.

According to Jerry Casstevens, executive director of the SPAG board of directors, the service would be a good alternative to the ever-expanding court docket and rising court costs for small cases that could save time and money outside the courtroom. The mediation service would apply primarily to cases such as landlord/tenant conflicts and pre-divorce property settlements, he said.

Similar programs have been implemented in Houston, Dallas, Fort Worth and San Antonio. Other programs are being organized in Austin and Corpus Christi. None of those mediation services are regional in scope; the SPAG-initiated program would be the first such regional program.

"It's the first regional program of its kind as far as we know," Casstevens said.

The mediation service may be established as a joint venture of the counties in the region acting through SPAG. Each participating county would contract with SPAG to provide the service and would pay SPAG a $5 court costs fee for each civil case filed in the county and district courts in that county.

The $5 fee would be for the purpose of establishing an alternative dispute resolution fund.

The law also enables each county to contract for operation of the alternative dispute resolution system. The SPAG-based program would generate funds by tacking a $5 fee onto the current cost of filing a court case, which is $25. Based on the number of cases filed in the 15 counties of the SPAG region, the program potentially would generate $31,855 annually to operate the system.

Opposition to the plan came primarily from Alton Brazell, Precinct 4 commissioner.

"Remember it's not a free program. Adding $5 (to the existing court fee of $25) will keep people who need to be in small claims court and JP courts out because of cost. And they'll get no benefit from their $5," Brazell said.

But County Judge Rod Shaw said if SPAG developed a mediation service, those people may not have to file in court and could save money.

"Higher court costs might force people to use mediation. I think we ought to approve this and give it a chance to be explored," Shaw said.

In cities already using the mediation service, a high success rate has been reported.

"I think a program with a 90 percent success rate, like Dallas, I'd like to see us get involved with this," said board member Henry Rieff.

Casstevens said a commission to look into the organization of the mediation service now will approach the county commissioners in the 15 SPAG counties.

"We'll ask them if they're willing to help and levy the $5 and see if we can make this thing fly financially. Then we'll go into budget and develop an oversight committee. If approved, it will probably be ready for operation Oct. 1, the beginning of our fiscal year," Casstevens said.

In other business, board members voted to make April 21-27 "Severe Weather Awareness Week." Meteorologist Alfonso Castaneda asked board members to return to their counties and promote awareness of severe weather.

"I came to ask you to tell people out there they can get hurt and (tell them) how the severe weather warning system works."

Killian named summer editor

Colin Killian, a senior journalism major from Hobbs, N.M., was named summer editor of The University Daily Tuesday night by Tech's Student Publications Committee.

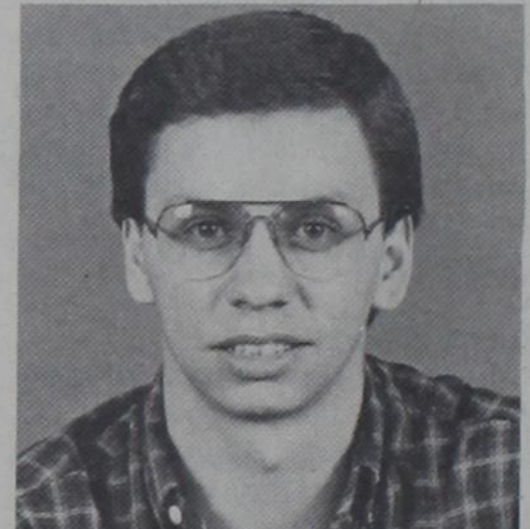

The University Daily will be published twice a week from June 5 through Aug. 16.

Killian, currently the UD sports editor, was one of two applicants for the position. The other applicant was Sarah Luman, a senior English major and a UD copy editor.

"I feel honored to have been selected by the committee since Sarah also was a well-qualified candidate," Killian said.

"I would like to expand the coverage of local and campus events since most students don't realize the abundance of activities that occur in the Lubbock area in the summer."

Killian graduated from Hobbs High School in 1980 and enrolled at New Mexico Junior College in the fall of 1980. He briefly played golf at NMJC before transferring to Texas Tech in spring 1982.

Killian

He joined the staff of The University Daily in the fall of 1983 as a sports writer, becoming sports editor in the fall of 1984.

"The summer term has its peculiar challenges, because of the brief time I'll spend in the position. The challenge is to do something constructive, perhaps even outstanding, in that short period," Killian said. "I hope I'm up to the job."

Killian worked for the Corpus Christi Caller-Times in the summer of 1984, gaining experience as a sportswriter.

"I'm looking for a talented staff with which to work this summer," Killian said.

The summer editorship becomes available when the student chosen as editor for the next regular academic year chooses not to serve as editor during the summer terms.

Killian said The University Daily welcomes applicants for all positions for the summer staff. Summer positions available include one copy editor, three reporters and a photographer.

WICI honors Lubbock's outstanding celebrities

By CARLA R. McKEOWN
University Daily Staff Writer

Bob Nash, a Lubbock city councilman, was awarded the 1985 George Mahon Award for Extraordinary Public Service at a Lubbock Celebrity Luncheon, sponsored Tuesday by the Lubbock professional chapter of Women in Communications Inc.

The George Mahon Award is awarded to someone WICI members believe is a person who has dedicated his or her adult life to a broad array of efforts to improve the quality of life in Lubbock and West Texas.

Nash, who moved to Lubbock in 1932, has been involved in many city organizations and events. In April 1984, Nash was elected Lubbock District 4 councilman. Nash also is the general manager at television station KAMC, channel 28.

"This is a big surprise to me," Nash said. "To receive an award named for George Mahon—I don't think I can live up to the honor."

A George Mahon Award also was given to the former congressman for which the award was named.

"Congressman Mahon represented the 19th District of Texas for 44 years. He was dean of the House of Representatives when he retired in 1978, and he was the only congressman the 19th District had had until that year," said Jane Prince Jones, first vice president of WICI.

An illness prevented Mahon from attending the ceremony, but Mayor Alan Henry accepted the award in Mahon's behalf.

"It's very difficult for me to stand here and accept this for Mr. Mahon. One thing I learned while working for Mr. Mahon was that nobody speaks for him," Henry said.

"I think that they (Mahon and his wife Helen) would say that throughout their public life, communication was their goal. That's how you get to stay in Congress for 44 years; build a trust that people understand. When you say it, you mean it," Henry said.

The Headliner award was given to people who made headlines during the past year with actions reflecting a good image for Lubbock and West Texas.

Gerald Myers, head coach of the Texas Tech men's basketball team, was awarded a Headliner award for winning with style. John Conley, athletic director, and Dwight Phillips, starting center for the Southwest Conference champion Red Raiders, accepted the award for Myers.

T.J. Patterson and Maggie Trejo were given Headliner awards for being the first to represent Lubbock minority populations as members of the City Council and for their quality of service as council members.

The Maines Brothers Band was awarded a Headliner award for its representation of Lubbock in the field of entertainment. Steve and Donnie Maines accepted the award.

"They (the Maines Brothers) are gaining a national reputation and are doing it in a way that makes Lubbock look good," Prince Jones said.

Gold medal awards were given to five Lubbock citizens for work in the development of programs that improve the quality of life for a broad spectrum of people in Lubbock.

Gold medals were awarded to Tavita Dorow, member of the organizing committee for the City Commission for Women; Marjorie Kastman, owner of Kastman Investments and president of Kastman Oil Co.; Jeannine McHaney, director of women's intercollegiate athletics at Tech; Charley Pope, president of First Federal Savings Bank of West Texas; and Rose Wilson, president of the Lubbock chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

William Hider, vice president for telecommunications for the USA Today newspaper, was the guest speaker at the luncheon.

Hider is responsible for implementation of the satellite facsimile network that transmits the pages of USA Today to 26 printing sites across the United States.

Hider explained how the pages of USA Today are transmitted by satellite across the country to provide a national newspaper.

"Until now, geography and lack of technology prevented the United States from joining other nations which have nationwide journals," Hider said.

Old-timers' containment philosophy still applies

JAMES RESTON

WASHINGTON — Any newspaper reporter worth a dime pays attention to the clock and the calendar, and keeps a future book about the passage of time.

Mine says that John McCloy of New York was 90 last week and that J. William Fulbright of Arkansas will be 80 in a few days. But that can't possibly be true.

McCloy makes retirement look easy. He was down here Tuesday and made a little talk in the caucus room of the Senate Russell Building that was so quiet and modest that nobody could hear him.

But privately he goes like 60, as if he were still at the War Department, or president as high commissioner in Berlin, or running the World Bank. Fulbright is another quiet character, but speaks out, when asked, loud and strong. He is a former president of the University of Arkansas.

He was for many years chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and still is presiding over his adoring Fulbright scholars and working on his slice at the Burning Tree golf course outside Washington.

Assuming that the clock and the calendar are reasonably accurate, something should be said for these old geezers, who in their day played an important part in the passage of America from isolation to the defense of freedom in the last half-century.

It is popular in the days of muscular diplomacy to mock these old "establishment" types out of Washington and the Council on Foreign Relations in New York. But when the history of these troubled times comes to be written, the McCloy and the Fulbrights are not likely to be forgotten.

McCloy came out of Berlin with the conviction that nothing would restrain the expansion of the Soviet Union but military force. But at the same time, he was almost the only voice to oppose dropping the atomic bomb on the Japanese until we had sent a solemn warning to Tokyo that we had such a weapon and would use it unless they surrendered.

McCloy had and still has some other anxieties about the conduct of our national affairs. For years, I have had long letters from him protesting that the executive and legislative branches of the government are being run by unelected officials who are writing the speeches and stating the questions for decision by the president and Congress.

Fulbright has been insisting on the same questions. As a former university president and student of foreign affairs, he lives down the street from this house wondering why so much money is going into the Pentagon and why the budget for education, the farmers and the old folks are being cut back.

This city is full of ghosts who one day exercised great power but are now out of office in the last years of their lives and can't go home and don't even know where home is.

There is, for example, Clark Clifford, who had the bad luck to be born on Christmas Day (having to share his Christmas with his birthday presents), and now has the consolation as an old man of having helped his buddy Lyndon Johnson try to get out of Vietnam.

There also is George Kennan, former ambassador to Moscow, author of the nation's policy of "containment" of Soviet power, now living in Princeton in his 81st year and writing like de Tocqueville about the inevitable destiny and conflict between the two great continental powers of America and the Soviet Union.

This is not to forget Averell Harriman, also a former U.S. ambassador to the Soviet Union and to Britain and a former secretary of commerce, among many other things. Now in his 94th year, he is drifting into the shadows, but still, with the help of his wife Pamela, with her Churchill connections, doing the best he can with his money for the study of U.S.-Soviet relations at Columbia University.

These are the "lost voices" of the past, but echoes of them still are heard from both political parties.

The tragedy of it on the side is that family life can't always bear the pressure of time and events. McCloy and Fulbright, for example, no longer are concerned primarily about the conduct of the nation's foreign policy.

They are concerned above all else about the frail health of their wives. They have said all they can about public affairs, and now in old age think mainly about the security of their families.

..all the way to the bank

To the Editor:

Richard Leakey came, spoke, collected his fee and went. Was he worth that fee? He started out by saying that his research into man's origins is not contrary to Christianity. What does he mean by that? If he means that everyone who wants to call himself "Christian" is a Christian and teaches Christianity, then the Moonies, Mormons, Christian Scientists and the word "Christianity" means everything and nothing.

For Mr. Leakey to use "Christianity" that way shows sloppy, non-precise thinking.

Historically, the Bible defined the teaching called "Christianity," and if Mr. Leakey means that he doesn't contradict the Bible, he either is deliberately lying or doesn't know what he is talking about. The Bible clearly teaches creation, not evolution.

Mr. Leakey went on to claim that Charles Darwin was the first to present the idea of evolution. Fiddlesticks! Darwin's uncle did some evolutionary speculation and Charles Lyell's geology work was based on evolution; both, like many other evolutionists, preceded Charles Darwin. This claim is an example of poor scholarship, at best.

If Mr. Leakey uses sloppy thinking or deliberate lying, and poor scholarship in his claims where we can go to the library and check them out, how can we trust his claims where we cannot so easily double check them, such as the claimed results of his excavations?

I'm glad now I didn't waste my time and money to go listen to him speak, I trust Joni Johnson reported accurately, but I suspect that Mr. Leakey is laughing all the way to the bank at the credulity of students and public who paid to listen to him.

States. They are themselves victims of a war that is being imposed upon them.

It is most unfortunate to see a person like Reagan White, whose writing causes such sadness and agony among many people, waste valuable editorial space to do nothing more than spread his personal prejudice and lack of human decency. I wouldn't be surprised that Mr. White's next article will declare his joy over the starvation of the African people.

Thank God there are not many people as cold-hearted as Mr. White; otherwise this world would be Hell for mankind.

Nasser Momayezi

To the Editor:

I have never been critical of any of Colin Killian's articles in The UD sports section but his write-up on the Shot Clock (4-4-85) deserves criticism. He obviously does not know anything about the true essence of college basketball and in particular the Big East Conference or Villanova University for that matter.

The Big East, as all close followers of NCAA basketball know, is a dominant conference that proved its superiority against a powerful Atlantic Coast Conference during the 1985 championships. It is also important to note that the Big East was one of the 19 conferences implementing a shot clock during regular season play.

Villanova's SHOCKING upset of powerhouse Georgetown may come as a shock to the people unfamiliar with the rugged play exhibited by Big East rivals. In regular season play Georgetown defeated Villanova by a mere two and seven points respectively, in which Villanova led at the half on both occasions. And as I mentioned earlier, the shot clock was used.

If any team can be called one of the leaders of the stall, it would be Georgetown, used effectively by coach John Thompson, the same John Thompson who worked as an assistant under North Carolina's mentor Dean Smith whose Tar Heels are the real forefathers of the four corners stall.

You seriously contradicted yourself when mentioning the stall because Georgetown coach John Thompson would have stalled if he had the opportunity.

I personally am for a shot clock in NCAA tournament play, but you must give a team its due for accomplishing the "improbable dream." Friends still ask me how a team like St. John's was ripped by Georgetown. The rout was not of particular surprise to me because, in all truthfulness, St. John's does not match up well against a much faster Georgetown team.

The reality of this championship game and in the regular season as well is the simple fact that Villanova matches up better against this particular Hoya team than, say, a St. John's.

Many intangibles determine the outcome of a game of any magnitude especially one of extreme importance as a championship showdown. In conclusion, to evaluate something, you have to get all your facts and insights straight as well as see the whole picture before you put your words in print.

So Mr. Killian, give the UNDERDOGS their just rewards proper for a championship, because the Villanova Wildcats deserve to win and they did.

Shame, shame, shame

To the Editor:

Congratulations, Danny Davis. You're one of the many heterosexuals who can enjoy a heterosexual life. I, like you, am repulsed by the thought of a homosexual relationship. In fact, most heterosexuals find this repulsive. Doesn't that tell you anything about the homosexual?

Doesn't that clue you in that they have feelings that are quite obviously foreign to you and I? Can't you see these feelings are as natural to them as our feelings are to us?

Why don't you continue feeling what is natural to you and allow others to do the same — without using terms you don't understand, like "psychological problems" and "unnatural feelings."

The "idea," as you say, is not "to be heterosexual;" the idea is to be happy with what you're given and to let others do the same.
David Ritchie

To the Editor:

Well, well, well! While strolling through the park one day, I casually picked up a copy of The University Daily, and much to my surprise I found out KAMC-TV weekend anchor Scott Kamp doesn't like KAMC-TV weekend weatherman Kevin Parker.

My, my, my! That's interesting, especially since The UD editor didn't ask me if I liked Kevin; Kevin says likewise. Tsk, tsk, tsk! Don't your top staffers have better sense than to personally attack friends who happen to enjoy good-natured horseplay without checking the facts? Shame, shame, shame! Let's talk about inefficiency, poor journalism and a bad product, after you clean your own house.
Scott Kamp

To the Editor:

I would like to address the letter written on April 3 by Teresa Powers. I don't know what Ms. Powers's idea of what a university's purpose is, but I strongly disagree with her comment that a university is not designed to weed out the good from the bad.

Universities don't graduate everyone that enrolls in them. The freshman classes are designed to help you determine whether you have any ability in that field. Since Ms. Powers claims she spent 40-70 hours per week to study for this first semester computer course (and she still received an F), then maybe she should consider changing from MIS to another major because she obviously does not understand computers very well.

College classes are very different from high school classes, Ms. Powers. They are difficult and the student is expected to do a great deal of learning on his own.

The computer science instructors in the electrical engineering department are doing an excellent job and I would like to congratulate them.

I would also like to congratulate the Texas Tech computer programming team, trained by these instructors, for winning second place in regional competition and then taking 10th at international competition.
Virginia Hill

To the Editor:

I am a citizen of Texas, but more importantly, I'm a supporter of the Republican Party. The issue of tuition increases results from the control (or lack of control) by the current Democratic governor, Mark White.

Anyone who suggests that the real problem is otherwise is short-sighted and unintelligent, despite being enrolled in graduate school.

Laine Biggerstaff obviously supports the same old "tried and failed" Democratic policies, which the majority of enlightened people voted down.

It's clear that there will always be partisan disputes between Democrats and Republicans. In our great country founded on Christian principles, which the Democrats have abandoned for humanism and socialism, we have the opportunity to inform others with facts and opinions.
Martin Murray

To the Editor:

Ms. Biggerstaff, you must have the I.Q. of beandip! How narrow-minded can one person get? I am thrilled that you are a Texas Democrat and that you pay taxes (how patriotic). I for one know that whatever our representatives do in Congress must be right, because we voted for them. We never make bad decisions, do we? We are not trying to run Texas politics; we are just trying to make education more affordable.

You and Rep. Delco have shown to me that you care for and know little about personal finance and the "university" system. No matter what price I put on my education I still cannot afford $12,000 a year anywhere. I am fighting for an affordable education. Texas Tech provided that, until recently.

Apparently, you would rather see Tech shrink to 17,000 (Texas) students. A "university" education should, in fact, provide a more diverse group so as to abolish narrow-mindedness.

You mentioned that Reconstruction ended over 100 years ago, and then have the nerve to call other taxpaying American citizens "carpetbaggers." Seems to me that you are living in the past. Wake up, Laine "Xenophobic" Biggerstaff!
Jack A. Atkins

To the Editor:

"Buttonged-bodice rectitude"? — Nuts! Try short-shorts and skimpy halter tops and total abandonment of all not having to do with the flesh. Far-fetched, too, huh — but no less fictitious!

Also fictitious is the assertion of a male-dominated status quo. There is a multitude of women who not only prefer, but actively resist changing, the status quo. You did quote a woman as saying Gerry Ferraro's vice presidential bid was "not a woman's place." I dare say there is just a bunch of women who would tell you that a house-husband is a no-good bum and a moocher.

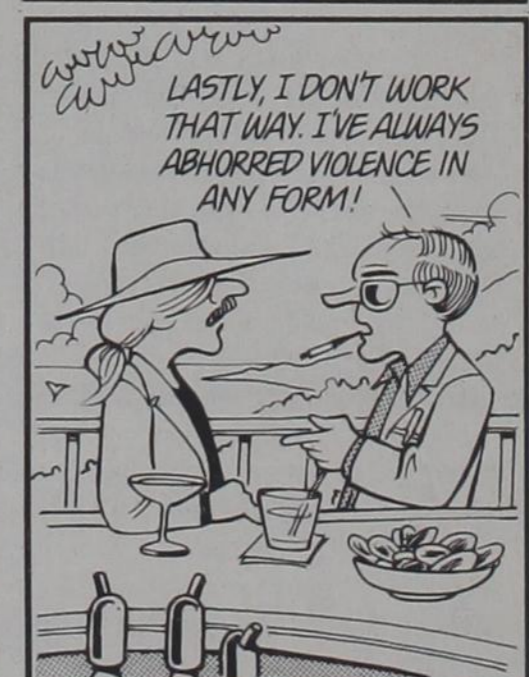

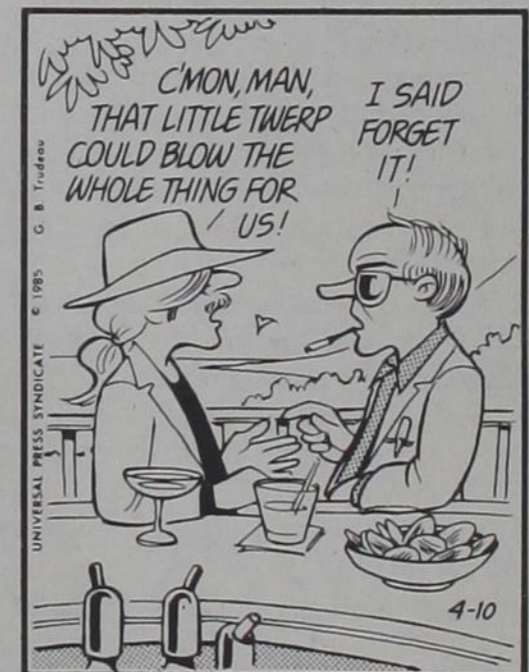

There is an idea, widely acclaimed (only half-jokingly) by men, that the institution of marriage was created and is preserved by women. Perhaps "the preacher's summary dismissal of the persona of Alison Golightly" was something she had already consciously, readily, and happily agreed to. For her, love and becoming Mrs. Wade Walker may be a quantum jump in growth in the persona that only began as Alison Golightly.

If she is truly a viable individual, we must respect her determination and decision that being Mrs. Wade Walker is being her best self.

As always, it is fashionable to attack West Texas and us backward Honkies who populate it. Perhaps we would be less backward if you had compared the local status quo — as you imagine it being — with the status quo in Jamaica.

HSC seeks approval for doctorate degree

By KELLI GODFREY
University Daily Staff Writer

The Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center (TTUHSC) School of Nursing is petitioning the Texas College and University System Coordinating Board for approval of a doctor of nursing science (DNS) degree.

Approval of the graduate program would make the Tech program the first doctoral program of nursing available in Texas and the ninth of its kind in the United States.

According to Pat Yoder Wise, associate dean of the School of Nursing, a DNS degree emphasizes advanced skills in the clinical care of patients with complex or chronic diseases rather than research.

"The DNS degree is a professional degree rather than a research degree. The nurse who does clinical nursing can help in terms of health maintenance, illness intervention and health evaluation," Wise said.

Traditional Ph.D programs in nursing prepare graduates for administration, education or research employment rather than clinical nursing.

Dr. Mary Challela, a doctor of nursing at the Eunice Kennedy Shriver Center for Mental Retardation, exemplifies the importance of a DNS program as she works with parents of handicapped babies and newborns with physical or mental abnormalities as they adjust to their child's handicap.

Challela said parents of handicapped newborns cope with two crises: the birth itself and handling the abnormalities after birth. She said a DNS program gives nurses knowledge about educating parents of handicapped children and helping them understand their special responsibilities.

According to Wise, the TTUHSC School of Nursing employs two nurses who have Ph.Ds in research. She said a DNS program would prepare nurses to expertly administer health care to patients of all ages with diverse health problems.

Wise said the TTUHSC Board of Regents approved the DNS program request last spring but that the request awaits final approval of the Coordinating Board, Texas College and University System.

The Coordinating Board will review the request after the Southern Regional Education Board report of Doctoral Programs in Nursing is presented, she said.

"It's possible in terms of the evaluation process they (Coordinating Board members) may say that at this time it is not possible," Wise said. "The question they will first ask is, 'Are more doctoral programs in nursing needed in Texas?'"

Rebels call for Duarte to bargain

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Dismissing March 31 elections in El Salvador as an "evident deceit," Salvadoran rebels have called for President Jose Napoleon Duarte to come back to the bargaining table to seek an end to their country's civil war.

Although an official vote tally won't be available until next week, Duarte's centrist Christian Democratic Party has claimed victory over a conservative coalition. Its results from pollwatchers have been accurate in past elections.

The results would give Duarte a majority in the National Assembly for the first time since his inauguration last June 1.

FBI holds man claimed to be neo-Nazi

FORT SMITH, Ark. (AP) — A man who the FBI says is an official in a neo-Nazi group linked to a $3.5 million armored car holdup was denied bond Monday on charges of receiving stolen money.

"We're not talking about tax evasion here," federal Magistrate Ned Stewart said in refusing bond for Ardie McBrearty, 57, of Gentry. "We're talking about robbery. We're talking about murder."

McBrearty was arrested Thursday at a farmhouse in northwest Arkansas and is being held at the Sebastian County Jail. Authorities have said he is the internal security officer of The Order, a white supremacist group.

Also on Monday, the FBI released an affidavit in Boise, Idaho, that said McBrearty used stolen money to set up a training camp in northern Idaho for recruits in the militant group.

FDA outlaws DHEA steroidal hormone

WASHINGTON (AP) — Distributors and manufacturers of a hormone preparation sold for weight reduction were ordered by the government Tuesday to quit selling the product because it has not been approved as safe and effective.

The Food and Drug Administration, in regulatory letters to the makers and distributors, said a steroidal hormone called DHEA, also known as dehydroepiandrosterone or dehydroandrosterone, is an unapproved new drug and cannot be sold legally.

DHEA has been marketed through retail stores and by mail order for weight loss, enhanced sex life and longer life. No substantiation has been submitted for the claims, the FDA said.

Computer crime

Legislators molding technology-related laws

By REAGAN WHITE
University Daily Staff Writer

Oliver W. Jones, the cheerful computer whiz in Berke Breathed's Bloom County cartoon strip, soon could find his computer-cracking habits threatened by new computer-crime legislation; that is, in the state of Texas.

State Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, along with three other legislators, is getting closer to making Texas the 38th state with computer-related crime statutes.

Montford and state Sen. Ray Farabee, a Wichita Falls Democrat, recently combined their versions of a computer bill modeled after legislation already on the books in states such as California into senate bill 72, which since has passed the state Senate and awaits confirmation in the House.

The bill, which is being considered in the House Sciences and Technology Committee, is sponsored in the House by state Rep. Barry Connelly, a Houston Republican, and state Rep. Lloyd Criss, a Galveston Democrat.

Jimmy Rodman, a legislative aide to Montford, said the Texas House is likely to pass a version of the bill with few differences from the bill that already has been approved by the Senate.

Vagueness in the laws on the books is allowing many computer criminals to escape punishment, although that is not always true, Rodman said.

One of the problems legislators have encountered in putting together comprehensive computer-crime laws has been avoiding overlapping laws already on the books, Rodman said.

Another difficult problem with writing the new legislation has been writing an adequate definition of what a computer is, Rodman said.

"You want to include all the things that are computers, but avoid picking up things like pocket calculators and telephones. You want to cover what needs to be covered, but not too much," he said.

Legislation already enacted in California and since fine-tuned by the California Legislature has been especially useful for Texas lawmakers confronted with these problems, Rodman said.

He said the bill passed in the Senate has three sections. The first section deals with defining what a computer is and what computer security systems are, he said.

The second section deals with breaching computer security systems by such means as unauthorized use of security codes, he said.

The third section of the bill deals with harmful access to computer storage banks, Rodman said.

"The harmful access section deals with cases of people tearing things up in a memory bank once they get in," he said.

Tech offers health organization management degree

By LIZ REYNA
University Daily Staff Writer

Because modern day hospitals are becoming more like regular business organizations, health care professionals not only need training in medicine but also require business skills.

As a result of the need for knowledge in the area of business, a master's degree in business administration with a concentration in health organization management and a certificate of professional studies in health organization management (HOM) will be offered next fall at Texas Tech.

The HOM department will offer a MBA/HOM degree that provides specialization in hospital managerial skills and business research.

The Certificate of Professional Studies in HOM is offered through the College of Business Administration and the Graduate School. The certificate will provide a selected but limited set of courses from the MBA program, including the HOM concentration for students who already are working in the health care field, according to John Blair, associate chairman of the HOM department and associate professor of management in business administration.

Hospitals are becoming "normal" organizations, and people should be taught standard business training and some specialized skills in medical organizations, Blair said.

Hospitals now are in the competing market for patients, Blair said. He said some illnesses are going to be profitable and some are not.

The hospitals operate by using the cost plus environment-cost plus insurance profit, according to Blair.

"They are now working on fixed revenues. Hospitals can't charge the federal government for a diagnosis. Now, first the diagnosis is made, and then the federal government gives the hospital a certain amount of money to take care of the patient," he said. "If the patient needs additional care the government will not pay for it. The hospital loses then."

"People (in the health care profession) are now dealing with the financial and people side of management. The program will provide this training. It will serve the local community and people in the management area in medical organizations."

The MBA/HOM is one of 13 concentrations offered in the College of Business Administration.

"The HOM department is using existing courses. It (HOM) is not a new degree — just a specialization," he said.

The HOM department was deactivated in 1975, but the courses still existed, he said.

"We're trying to be a model of efficient management (in health care organization)," Blair said. "The faculty is jointly appointed. It is not a full-time staff, and they are paid by the respective departments of each professor and accordingly to their rank."

"The traditional way to do this is to have started a whole new department, hire full-time staff, but we provided the state with a cost efficient department. The cost is half of all that because we brought in experts from the business and medical fields."

"We don't know of anyone who has something quite like this ... this is a non-traditional department. It is a joint venture between the College of Business Administration, which is doing the educational program because 80 to 90 percent of the education comes from the business courses, and the medical aspect is taught in the medical school."

The students will be taught traditional business skills and given situations of unique problems in the health care organizations, Blair said.

"It is an enhancement (to the master's degree in the College of Business Administration)," said Ridgley Denning, counselor in the research and graduate programs in BA.

"Already about 20 people have called about the program. Lubbock is the health care hub in the West Texas area. It's a natural for this area. There is no other such program close to West Texas. Trinity University in San Antonio offers a masters degree in Health Administration, but with a MBA/HOM, the student receives more in-depth business training."

The certificate is something manageable for full-time professionals already in the health care profession, Blair said.

Because of the length of the MBA program and the fact the professionals are employed full-time, the professionals may not have the time to complete the full degree. Therefore, the certificate is aimed at professionals, as stated in the proposal of the certificate to the Graduate School.

Students expected to apply for the certificate are managers or those persons who anticipate to be managers and want to receive additional education both in some general managerial area and also in areas that deal with their type of organizational setting in health care, also stated in the proposal.

The program will not be of much value to people who are not involved in the management area in a health care organization, Blair said.

"It will only be valuable to those in a health care organization in the management area but have had no formal training," Blair said.

He said two reasons for offering a certificate were to first provide a new service for the local health community, and secondly to interact professionals with students learning business and medical skills.

The graduate Certificate Professional Studies in HOM is an 18-hour program. Upon completion of the 18 hours, the student has the option to receive the certificate or continue in the MBA program.

The length of the appointments is two years and appointments are made by the dean of the School of Medicine.

Faculty opt for research leaves

By RICK LEE
University Daily Staff Writer

While some Texas Tech faculty members may be considering leaving the university permanently, 18 others have been granted temporary leaves during the 1985-86 school year to pursue research that will benefit the university.

Faculty development leaves are granted to relieve faculty members of academic and classroom duties so they may engage in research, study and writing.

A faculty member may request leave for one semester at full pay or two semesters at half pay.

The faculty member, to qualify for a development leave, must prove that what he will accomplish during his leave will benefit himself, the students and the university.

The leaves are competitive, and a 15-member committee, elected by the faculty, reviews the applications before granting the leaves. The faculty member requesting the leave must be a tenured assistant, associate or full professor and must have worked at Tech for at least five years.

The professor also must agree to a three-hour or equivalent workload increase before or following the leave.

"What (a leave) usually involves is research or study in a place or with an individual some distance from the university, something requiring a substantial amount of time to accomplish," said Len Ainsworth, assistant vice president for academic affairs.

"Texas has not had a strong development leave program in the past and Tech has tried to improve it. We are now up from two (development leaves per school year) to around 18," he said.

Notwithstanding the actual knowledge and experience gained through research conducted by faculty members on leave, the university itself gains much from granting the leaves.

"It revitalizes the faculty," Ainsworth said. "It gives them some time to accomplish something which is important to them."

"This translates into better teaching and (the research) also adds to the reputation of the university."

Replacing a professor who is on leave is handled differently by various departments, according to Ainsworth. Larger departments use part-time instructors or re-arrange existing workloads to assume a professor's responsibilities. Smaller departments may hire a temporary replacement.

The 18 leaves during the upcoming school year were granted pending adequate funding. The leave policy is funded by the university through interest-earning monies which are devoted to the program.

According to Ainsworth, only a drastic budget cut to the university would cause an effect on the leave program.

"A 4 to 6 percent cut would not have any effect," he said.

Faculty members who received approval for leaves this year include:

Robert Baker, biological sciences, who will test hypotheses of how genetic change in chromosomes is accomplished under natural conditions; Clarke Cochran, political science, who will study "Religion and Politics: The Role of Public Policy Values;" Donald Dietz, Classical and Romance languages, who will investigate Spanish sacramental dramas.

Bruce Ebanks, mathematics, who will conduct research in functional equations and measurements of information; Nelson Dometrius, political science, who will develop an executive data bank on political executives; William Hartwell, music, who will study in the area of voice science; Leona Little Soldier, elementary and early childhood education.

Wolfforth beginning water audit program

By LIZ REYNA
University Daily Staff Writer

Wolfforth is the first area city to implement a water resources audit in a self-help effort to learn to conserve water, according to Kate Trauth, a graduate in the Texas Tech civil engineering department.

The water resources audit packet is mainly for small cities in the West Texas area because the municipalities don't have city engineers to work on the planning of the water system, Trauth said.

Cities such as Lubbock and San Antonio have their own engineers who deal with planning the city's water system. Small cities such as Wolfforth have only one or two people working on planning the water system.

"Wolfforth is doing it on a purely voluntary basis. They will make an evaluation (of the audit) at the same time of the audit," she said.

Wolfforth, which has a population of about 2,350 to 2,400, started the water resources audit April 2, according to Roe Dalton, director of public works. He said the results will be in within a few weeks.

The city of Wolfforth has four persons who work on the water system, and two persons will work on the water resources audit, Dalton said.

"As time goes on and water is more expensive, people will be more willing to conserve water," Trauth said. "The level of the water of the aquifer is going down, and it is more expensive to pump the water out, and people will realize then that water conservation is important."

A statement in the water audit packet said water is a necessary commodity, especially in arid and semi-arid areas, such as the West Texas area, which is an agriculture area.

The purpose of the audit as stated in the introduction is to improve the water situation and to be able to understand current conditions, to identify problem areas and to structure planning and management strategies to meet the goals.

The water resources audit packet states a variety of suggestions to conserve and reuse a municipality's available water resources.

The packet contains instructions of how to implement the water resources audit. The packet also contains a glossary of terms useful to a water systems planner.

The main part of the audit packet is questions on water supply, water collection/treatment/disposal, storm-water management and conservation.

Doctors claiming success with Swiss heart implant

By The Associated Press

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — Doctors at Karolinska Hospital have performed the first artificial heart implant outside the United States, placing a metal and plastic Jarvik-7 heart in a Swede with an "enormous will to live."

Dr. Bjarne K. H. Semb, a Norwegian surgeon who led the 12-member team that carried out the world's fourth artificial heart transplant on Sunday, said the patient was in "unexpectedly good shape" Tuesday afternoon.

He was identified only as a Swede in his mid-50s. Semb said the patient had requested anonymity and that all personal details be withheld "as long as he is helpless."

Semb, 45, told a news conference the patient was "off the respirator, awake and talking."

He said Robert Jarvik, the American inventor of the artificial heart, was present at the operation to offer advice. He added that Jarvik would not be available for comment until today.

Semb said there was "no other alternative" for the patient, who had a history of heart disease and had suffered two severe heart attacks.

Semb said "the patient himself brought up the possibility of an artificial heart. His enormous will to live made him a candidate for it."

"The last thing he said before going into anaesthetics was 'We're gonna make it, you hear me?'"

Semb said that after the heart was implanted Sunday there was a second operation because of "technical problems." Semb would not elaborate on the problems, but said the two operations lasted more than five hours.

The operation in Sweden was performed a day after the world's second recipient of an artificial heart, 53-year old William J. Schroeder, was allowed to live outside the hospital.

Schroeder was discharged Saturday from the Humana Hospital Audubon in Louisville, Ky., where he received the Jarvik-7 heart on Nov. 25. Murray Haydon, the world's third artificial heart recipient, on Feb. 17, remains at Humana's coronary care unit.

Houston ballerina's ambitions mix dance, stage

By KELSEY CUPPLES
University Daily Contributing Writer

Career opportunities never were in question for Rachel Jonell Beard.

"Something inside of me wanted me to dance. It's the only thing I've ever wanted to do other than act," said Beard, the 24-year-old "Swan Queen," who has been dancing with the Houston Ballet for seven seasons.

Beard will appear as the "Swan Queen" with the Houston Ballet at 8:15 p.m. Tuesday in the Lubbock Municipal Auditorium.

Beard said she has been dancing every day since she was 8 years old and that her mother enrolled her in pre-ballet when she was 6 years old.

"I didn't mind," she said, "It's what I've always wanted to do."

Beard is from Salt Lake City, and she said, "I was always around the ballet. I even went to a dance boarding school in Hammond, England."

"Goals seemed so much clearer (at the boarding school). It never occurred to me that I was missing anything. I cared about it (dancing) so much that I didn't care," Beard

"I even went to a dance boarding school in Hammond, England. — Beard" explained.

Next, she attended the Royal Academy of Dance in England.

She then spent three summers with the New York School of Ballet before coming to Houston.

"When I first came in the (Houston) company, the most important thing was technique, the movement. Now it is the artistic side of ballet — the acting subtlety. I was inspired by Ben (Stevenson, artistic director for the Houston Ballet) and watching him dance. Now, I dream of going into acting," Beard said.

Beard was promoted to principal dancer in mid-season when she danced the "Swan Queen" in "Swan Lake." She has danced the role on tour and in Jones Hall in Houston.

"Swan Lake" was a dream answered," Beard said. "I would also like to dance Giselle. I love the classics."

Beard said the most exciting thing that ever happened to her occurred when she was on tour in Europe at the Monte Carlo Opera House. She was in the corps de ballet, and Suzanne Longley, who played "Etudes," was injured. Beard went on in Longley's place after only one rehearsal. Beard said that Princess Grace of Monaco was in the audience.

Beard said after she was promoted to soloist position from the corps, the dancing was the same. "At first there is more pressure, but it's basically the same."

Beard always has danced with the Houston Ballet, but she said, "I think sometimes about changing companies, a change in atmosphere, people — but Houston has so much going for it. I wouldn't change now. Only if I felt that I was floundering, or not furthering myself artistically, then I would look."

In 1982, Beard won a bronze medal at the International Ballet Competition. "That was a neat experience. The medal wasn't so important, but the competition — all the different styles (of dance), the people, the experience, that was neat."

Beard said she believes that the biggest sacrifice she has made has been in her schooling.

"I never went to college. I think I'll eventually go to college just to keep my education and mind going. I still study and I read a lot," she said.

Beard said that if she did return to school, she probably would study drama or theater.

"I would really like to go into acting," Beard said. "In the summer I am planning on taking acting in Houston. I'm trying to get into Robert Redford's place in Utah. He has a school up there; but their scheduling is so different. It's so hard with my schedule."

Beard said that she usually practices from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m., and she will go on tours for three weeks, returning for a month before leaving again.

During her four- or five-week vacation, Beard said she usually lets her body rest.

"I do some kind of exercise, swimming or something, but mainly I let my body rest a little," she said.

About two weeks before the end of her vacation, she will start practicing again, she said.

Beard said she probably will dance for about eight more years.

Tickets for students and senior citizens for the ballet are $9, $11 and $12. Other tickets are $12, $14 and $15.

Tickets are available at the Lubbock Civic Ballet office, 2345 50th St., 793-9107; the Texas Tech University Center Ticket Booth, 742-3610; and at Hemphill Wells in the South Plains Mall, 795-4333.

'Alamo Bay' film infested with unlikely stereotypes

By The Associated Press

"ALAMO BAY" is French filmmaker Louis Malle's latest glance at American shores. It attempts to examine the real-life conflict that flared between Vietnamese refugees and Texas fishermen along the Gulf Coast in the late '70s.

After the fall of Saigon in 1975, some of the hundreds of thousands of Vietnamese who had fled from Southeast Asia settled along the Gulf of Mexico where they thought they could practice their fishing skills and pursue the American Dream.

As Dinh, played by newcomer Ho Nguyen, quickly discovers in "Alamo Bay," the dream is difficult to nab. As he hitchhikes to the mythical town of Alamo Bay, he sees a bumper sticker: "The American Dream Is for Americans." So he takes out an American flag and waves it in order to get a ride.

He discovers a bitter and hostile town. With a dwindling shrimp harvest, the whites who depend on fishing for their livelihoods are threatened by the Vietnamese, who are willing to work harder and longer hours. The problem is exacerbated by racism and the presence of the Ku Klux Klan.

However, Dinh finds a friend in Glory (Amy Madigan) who helps her father run his shrimp business. She also is the lover of Shang (Ed Harris), whose family has shrimped in the area for generations.

Shang, a Vietnam vet, is a violence-prone bigot. He's married to an ignorant woman who's never seen without her hair curlers. His way to deal with the situation is to blast all the Vietnamese fishing boats right out of the water.

Dinh, meanwhile, dons a western hat and carries his sunny optimism right into the town's redneck bar. He miraculously escapes without a scar.

And that's one of the problems with this movie. Dinh is nicer than apple pie and just as American. As Glory tells him: "You might very well be the last cowboy in Texas." But he is impassive to the racial slurs and threats. It is hard finding the dramatic moment in him because he simply isn't believable.

The characters from Alice Arlen's screenplay often are stereotypes and Malle at times treats the situation with all the subtlety of the Klan. He hammers away almost as though he doesn't believe the audience knows who the bad guys are. And in this movie, the bad guys are real bad with no redeeming qualities.

Still, the performances are tight and smooth, especially Madigan and Harris. The dialogue captures the flavor of the Southwest.

The film is rated R because of some nudity, language and violence.

Hollywood rebel returns in TV movie, 'Stark'

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Dennis Hopper, once one of Hollywood's most rebellious young actors and filmmakers, has mellowed in middle age.

In the 1950s he appeared with James Dean in two pictures, "Rebel Without a Cause" and "Giant." In the '60s, he wrote and directed the most successful of all anti-establishment pictures, "Easy Rider." Fifteen years ago, he abruptly left Hollywood in a blow-up over editing of "The Last Movie."

"James Dean and I were method actors and we had a lot of problems because we wanted to block out our scenes," recalled Hopper, who has a starring role in CBS' movie "Stark" tonight.

"We didn't want to be told how to act. Now it isn't a problem, but in the 1950s we were considered unmanageable. If you were a star, it was okay, but if you were a young actor you were supposed to do as you were told. If you look back, we were better than the other actors because they gave a stiff reading.

"And as a director I got into trouble because I wanted the final cut. My social behavior wasn't amenable, either. I was sort of an amoral animal. I was into drugs and alcohol." He smiled. "April 2 marks two years that I haven't touched drugs or alcohol."

In "Stark," Nicholas Surovy stars as a Midwestern cop who takes on the Las Vegas underworld. Hopper plays Lt. Ron Bliss of the Las Vegas police.

"He's a guy who goes by the book," Hopper said of Bliss. "It's a very unglamorous role. I've never been a by-the-book person."

The movie, which was not available for previewing, also stars Marilu Henner, Pat Corley, Seth Jaffe and Arthur Rosenberg. Rod Holcomb directed on location in Las Vegas from a script by Bill Stratton and the late Ernest Tidyman, who won an Oscar as screenwriter for "The French Connection."

Hopper now lives in Venice, the Bohemian beach section of Los Angeles, where he divides his time between screen appearances and turning out abstract paintings and doing photography for magazines such as Vanity Fair.

He lost more than 300 canvases in the 1961 Bel Air fire. "I couldn't get back to painting a long time after that," he said. "I started writing screenplays and that's when I wrote 'Easy Rider.'"

After that he went to Peru to direct "The Last Movie" and spent nearly a year editing it. It won the Venice Film Festival in 1971, but the distributor, Universal Studios, didn't like it and pulled it after a few weeks.

"They wouldn't even show it in Europe, where it had won a prize," he said. "That ended my career as a director. I had final cut and I was very stubborn. I couldn't see winning the prize and then having to re-edit my film."

Marathon today

The "Marathon Jam," conceived to benefit the battle against Multiple Sclerosis and planned to last for several days, will commence with Mike Pritchard's jam today at the Main Street Saloon, 2417-A Main St.

Owner Pyrrha Malouf said Pritchard will take the stage "around 9:30-ish" p.m. There will be a $1 cover charge in effect, changing to $2 at 2 a.m.

Malouf said that before the Jam started, she wanted to stress the fact that the Main Street Saloon will make every effort not to disturb the peace. She encouraged acoustic acts between the hours of 1 a.m. and 9 a.m. to cut down on the noise levels during the night.

Malouf said that she would like to see the patrons enter and leave the pub quietly, and absolutely no liquor will be served after 2 a.m. The Saloon will not serve any patrons who are considered to be inebriated.

Malouf said the Jam is for charity and asks that everyone involved be considerate. The slogan for MS is "Be A Volunteer," and the Saloon will be counting on volunteer musicians, regardless of style, in order to make the Marathon Jam a success.

If you are a musician, now is the time to present your wares.

Basketball signing day arrives

Tech coaches set to ink many of state's top court prospects

By COLIN KILLIAN
University Daily Sports Editor

Usually after a college basketball team wins its conference championship, it can expect to have a banner recruiting year. Texas Tech is no exception.

The Red Raiders are expected to ink several of the state's top prospects today, the national signing day for college basketball players.

Coach Gerald Myers already has received four verbal commitments and is awaiting a decision from 6-8 Amarillo College star Andrew Kennedy, generally regarded the top junior college player in Texas. Kennedy has called a news conference to announce his decision at 2:45 p.m. today in Amarillo.

The Raiders signed Scott Whillock, a 6-6 guard from Clinton, Ark., during the NCAA-sanctioned early signing period in November.

The four players who have given the Raiders verbal commitments are 7-0 Rodney Henderson of Dallas Bryan Adams, 6-10 Wes Lowe of West Mesquite, 6-8 Bryan Barrier of Houston Jones, and 6-7 Dwayne Chism of Odessa College.

Chism's signing brought a bonus to the Tech women's team. Sharon Blair, a 6-2 JUCO All-America at OC who reportedly is engaged to Chism, gave her commitment to coach Marsha Sharp last weekend.

Also committing to the Tech women was Lynn Killough, a 6-3 post from Weatherford.

Blair set an OC regular season scoring record last season with a 22.6 average and set a new Western Junior College Athletic Conference standard with a 15.6 rebounding average in league games.

"Blair may be one of the best junior college players in the country," said Tech assistant Linden Weese. "She's really a strong post, probably as physical as any player on our team now."

"They (Blair and Killough) are good ones," he said. "Killough is more of a finesse player than a power player. She has super hands, and we think she'll develop into a great shooter."

Raiders try to regain pride against HSU

By KENT BEST
University Daily Staff Writer

Texas Tech's beleaguered baseball team once again will attempt to piece its diamond-shaped puzzle together today in a double-header against Hardin-Simmons at 1 p.m. at the Tech Diamond.

The Raiders, 17-21, are coming off a less-than-spectacular showing against the visiting Texas A&M Aggies last weekend. Tech coach Gary Ashby said the Raiders were beaten in every phase of the game.

"Against A&M, it was just everything," Ashby said, "every coach, every player and every bat girl. It was a total team effort to play that poorly last weekend. It's important for us to put it all together against Hardin-Simmons."

Tech and Hardin-Simmons, 23-22, have split their previous two meetings this season. The Raiders fell 8-7 in the teams' first meeting in Abilene, but rebounded for a 3-1 victory last week in Lubbock. Ashby hopes the Raiders can squelch some of their persistent problems against the Cowboys.

"The double-header against Hardin-Simmons will be important for us," Ashby said. "They have a good team and it should be a good baseball afternoon."

Senior Rich Klemke will be the likely starter for the Cowboys in the first game, with former Lubbock

Monterey hurler Johnny Bradshaw slated for the second contest. Klemke carries a 7-2 record and 2.61 ERA into the game, while Bradshaw boasts a 5-2 season ledger.

"This year's pretty much behind us," Ashby said. "Now we'll just try to save some pride. We just start two seniors and we've got all these kids coming back — you might say, 'Do you want them back,' but, yeah, we do."

Richardson succeeds Sutton at Arkansas

By The Associated Press

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. — Nolan Richardson, the most successful coach in Tulsa basketball history, was named Tuesday to continue the Arkansas tradition started by Eddie Sutton.

Richardson will be the first black head coach in any men's sport in the history of the Southwest Conference.

The announcement by UA Athletic Director Frank Broyles came a week after Sutton resigned to take the coaching job at the University of Kentucky. The other finalist for the UA job was Rollie Massimino, who guided Villanova to the national championship eight days ago.

Sutton, who coached at Arkansas 11 years and took the Razorbacks to nine straight NCAA tournaments, resigned to succeed Joe B. Hall as head coach at Kentucky.

Richardson visited the Fayetteville campus Thursday, and his name remained prominent as other coaches were mentioned and dismissed. As late as Monday, the job is believed to have been between Richardson and Massimino, although Massimino's name was not revealed until Tuesday.

Richardson Broyles

Richardson, 43, compiled a 118-37 record in five years at Tulsa. His Tulsa teams have been in the NCAA tournament three times, and the NIT twice.

His first Tulsa team, which included many of the players who won the National Junior College Athletic Association championship when Richardson was at Western Texas College in Snyder, went 26-7 and won the NIT. After that, Tulsa went 24-6, 19-12, 27-4 and 22-8. The Golden Hurricane won the Missouri Valley Conference championship this year and shared the title two years ago.

Richardson, who also served as an assistant athletic director at Tulsa, was the first coach in NCAA history to win 50 games in his first two seasons.

Ex-champ says desire key to fight

From Staff and Wire Reports

LAS VEGAS, Nev. — Sugar Ray Leonard and Donald Curry, past and present welterweight champions, feel that a desire to look great will serve as a major spur to Marvellous Marvin Hagler when he fights Thomas Hearns, another ex-welterweight champion, next Monday night.

The fight will be telecast in Lubbock via closed circuit television at the Municipal Coliseum. Tickets can be purchased for $20 and $25 at the Coliseum and at Lips Records and Tapes.

"For Hagler to knock Hearns out will get him the recognition he has always wanted," said the retired Leonard, who got major recognition

Hagler vs. Hearns

when he stopped Hearns in the 14th round and won the undisputed welterweight title here Sept. 16, 1981.

Curry, the World Boxing Association welterweight champion, saw Hagler working out at Palm Springs, Calif., last month when Curry was training for a non-title fight.

"He looked sharp," said Curry of Hagler, who will defend the undisputed middleweight title against Hearns, the World Boxing Council super welterweight champion, in a scheduled 12-round bout in a 15,088-seat outdoor stadium at Caesars Palace.

"He wants to show the world, he's the best," added Curry.

Hagler's first major attention-getting fight in a 60-2-2 career that started in 1973 was his defense here Nov. 10, 1983, against Roberto Duran, the former lightweight and WBC welterweight champion, who at the time held the WBA junior middleweight (super welterweight) title.

But Duran seemed to get more media praise than Hagler did. Hagler was criticized in some quarters for not knocking out a fading Duran, who, it seems here, fought more to last than to win.

Then Hagler lost what would have been the biggest money match of his career and could have been his biggest attention-getter when Leonard retired again after a one-fight comeback against Kevin Howard May 11, 1984.

Hagler will be making his 11th defense.

"This is going to be the highlight of Marvin Hagler's career," said Pat Petronelli, who manages Hagler along with his brother Goody, who also trains.

"This is the fight he wanted." But it's also a fight Hearns has wanted. He also feels he has paid his dues and has not received the public recognition due a fighter with a 40-1 record in a pro career that began in 1977. Hearns has scored 34 knockouts, while Hagler has scored 50.

Hearns missed his shot at the kind of recognition that extends beyond boxing when he was stopped by Leonard while leading on all three official score cards.

Hearns admittedly had trouble shaking that loss, but he appears to have his pre-Leonard confidence back, something he achieved when he knocked out Duran in the second round last June 15 here.

Tech golfers improve, but remain in 8th

The Texas Tech women's golf team improved 10 strokes Tuesday but remained in eighth place after the second round of the Houston Baptist Invitational in Houston. The final round will be played today across the 6,100-yard, par-73 World of Houston Golf Course.

The Raiders shot 318 in the second round to bring their total to 646, three shots behind seventh place New Mexico State. Texas led the tournament with 597, 17 strokes ahead of second place Oklahoma State.

Glenda Kissel led the Raiders Tuesday with a 78 and had a total of 159 after firing an 81 in the opening round. Kathy Fuertges, who shot a 78 Monday, had an 81 for an identical 159 total. Other Tech scores were Laurie Brower 85-79-164; Sabra Srader 84-80-164; and Kay Linda Shive 87-86-173.

'Rash of injuries' plagues Raiders' football drills

By REAGAN WHITE
University Daily Staff Writer

One of the basic strategies in football is to knock the other guy on his can. Understandably, many of the guys who get knocked on their can, and a few who do the knocking, get injured.

Injuries are such a common part of football that sports writers almost are required to use the tired, worn cliché, "a rash of injuries," to describe them.

"Rash" isn't quite the word for the injuries the Texas Tech football team has suffered in spring workouts. How about "cancer" or "leprosy?"

With four days remaining in spring drills, nine players have undergone surgery and nine others have missed practices with a variety of injuries.

"This is the first time since the first year I came here (1981) that we've had so many injured," coach Jerry Moore said.

Jeff Keith, OT	Knee
Tim Tannehill, OG	Separated shoulder
Bouvier Dale, RB	Separated shoulder

Aubrey Richberg, OG	Ankle

and run-and-shoot formations.

"We've been running the ball a lot more this spring. It's been more of a contact-type practice," Moore said.

Each of the injured players requiring trips to the cutting room were members of the offense. Only two defensive players have been seriously hurt.

Some of the injuries have been the once-in-a-blue moon variety. Offensive lineman Jeff Keith injured his knee during an extra point attempt, and tight end Vince Hubbard suffered a dislocated knee after being hit in the shoulder.

Perhaps the most notable victim of the spring is last year's starting quarterback Aaron Keesee, who suffered a separated shoulder on an option play.

The No. 2 quarterback going into spring training, junior college transfer Tim Tannehill, also separated a shoulder while running an option play. Both injuries required surgery.

Rehabilitation looms for all these players. One thing that should help them recover is the extra two weeks they will have before fall workouts since Moore began spring training two weeks earlier than in the past.

"Rehabilitation is a very personalized thing," assistant trainer Dennis Pruss said. "Some players respond better than others to rehabilitation exercises, just like some players can build muscle easier than others."

"None of these injuries are the sort that are impossible to come back from. We have the tools necessary for a proper rehabilitation, and we just have to motivate the players to use them."

Tulane pair pleads guilty in point-shaving scandal

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Two Tulane students, one a member of the basketball team, pleaded guilty Tuesday in connection with the Green Wave basketball point-shaving scandal, District Judge Alvin Oser said.

David Rothenberg, 22, a student from Wilton, Conn., and Bobby Thompson, 21, a little-used guard, entered the pleas in a surprise court appearance and face sentencing on July 9 after an investigation by the state's Department of Corrections, Oser said.

Thompson pleaded guilty to one count of conspiracy to commit sports bribery, Rothenberg to two counts of conspiracy and one count of possession of cocaine, Oser said.

'Gentle Ben' shucks troubles for Masters

By The Associated Press

AUGUSTA, Ga. — The pressure's off for Ben Crenshaw.

Masters week is here. He's been waiting for it for a year, coming to defend his cherished title with his game in tatters, the product of self-imposed pressure and personal problems.

"There hasn't been a day go by that I haven't thought about the Masters," said Crenshaw, who will defend his title this week in the 49th gathering of golf's elite on the rolling hills of Augusta National.

A student and recognized authority on the history of golf, the lore and legends of the game, Crenshaw was, quite possibly, the most appreciative winner ever produced by the Masters.

It was, he said, a dream come true. But, later in the year it assumed nightmarish proportions when an amicable divorce turned acrimonious.

"I went from the absolutely highest emotional level of my life to the lowest," Crenshaw said.

"I don't want to blame anything on the divorce. I don't think I should do that. But I'm a very emotional person. It hit me very hard. I had to reassess things, myself, my life," he said.

He played infrequently, and with indifferent success, following the Masters. He went home last fall and, alone, brooded. He lost weight to the point that he appeared gaunt.

In nine starts this season, he failed to qualify for the final two rounds six times. He's won $11,810 for the year. He hasn't been a factor in the chase for a tournament title since last May. He went from seventh in the Tour's putting statistics to 127th.

"I've been putting pressure on myself to perform. People, friends, fans, have expected me to play better. That's pressure, too," he said.

"I'm a little more settled now. I feel better about things in my own mind," he said. "Now, being back here, at a place I love, at a place where I've done well before, the pressure is gone. I'm anxious to make a defense."
