Democratic candidate

Wray ignores gender prejudices

By JAY MILLER
News Staff Writer

She has heard some people say the criminal district attorney's office is not the place for a woman, but Wanda Wray isn't listening to them.

Wray, the Democratic candidate for the Lubbock County criminal district attorney post, said she is accustomed to the rigors of legal work. Her ability to handle herself in tough situations, both in and out of court, and extensive legal experience are two qualities, she said, that make her the best choice in the Nov. 4 general election.

Wray is in a heated campaign with Republican candidate Travis Ware for the office now occupied by Jim Bob Darnell.

"The D.A. should not be chosen on the basis of good looks, bad looks or sex," Wray said.

"I've heard people say, 'We're afraid a woman would be subjected to too much as district attorney,'" she said. "But as a defense attorney, I've been exposed to some of the worst scum in the world, going into a jail with rapists and murderers by myself, with no one to protect me.

"If anything, being elected to the district attorney's position would take me out of many threatening situations."

In her campaign, Wray said, along with telling people she is tough enough to be the county's chief prosecutor, she is promoting herself as "the people's lawyer." But Wray has not fared as well as Ware in securing contributions for her campaign during the past three months.

According to disclosure reports filed last week in the county clerk's office, Ware had obtained more than four times the contributions donated to Wray. Her contributions since July totaled slightly more than $4,800, including a $2,000 personal loan.

"The theory has always been that if you don't have contributions, you don't have support," Wray said. "I don't agree with that theory."

"I don't want $500, $600 and $1,500 donations. I've tried to keep my donations down to $100 and $200, so I don't feel like I owe someone my office."

"It concerns me when you have to raise thousands and thousands of dollars to run for public office. I want people to elect me, and I don't want to buy their vote."

Wray said that, if elected, her primary target will be the area's drug sales, trafficking and related crimes. She said drug sales and drug-related crimes such as burglaries, robberies, rapes, family violence and "hot check" writing are up in Lubbock County. The county's crime figures on drug-related and violent crimes are among the worst per capita of any city in the state, she said.

Wray's proposals for reducing crime in Lubbock County include:

- Planning court dockets based on case priority. Wray said drug-related cases should be given top priority and that she would work with local judges to place those cases at the top of the court dockets.

- Using plea bargaining to gain stiff sentences for repeat offenders. Wray said plea bargaining must be used by the district attorney's office because lack of time prohibits every case from being carried through a trial process. "I will not hesitate to plea bargain for a stiff sentence for a violent offender," she said.

- Filing denial-of-bond petitions for violent offenders. Wray said the district attorney's office has not been filing such petitions, which would deny bond for certain offenders.

- Working faster. Wray proposes working with judges in moving cases according to case priority, scheduling more grand juries and working for quicker arraignments. She said she would work to have criminals placed on a court docket one month after their arrest.

Wray said she has the experience as both a criminal attorney, ranging from Class C misdemeanor to capital murder cases, and as an administrator that the district attorney's office demands.

"Travis (Ware) makes the claim that he has tried 100 felony cases and not lost one of them," Wray said. "What he fails to tell you is the large number of cases that were overturned on appeal due to prosecutor's misconduct. That is costly for the taxpayers."

Republican candidate

Ware says support will win race

By JAY MILLER
News Staff Writer

Travis Ware, Republican candidate for criminal district attorney, said Lubbock citizens already have indicated that on Nov. 4 they want to elect a candidate to office who will wage an all-out war on local crime.

Ware is in the middle of one of the more heated campaigns in the Lubbock area with Democratic opponent Wanda Wray.

He said his experience as a prosecuting attorney under past-Lubbock County Criminal District Attorney John Montford from 1979 to 1982, his backing by a local law enforcement group and his plans to revise the county's position toward plea bargaining make him the best candidate for the office.

"Of course, crime is the number one issue in the upcoming election," Ware said. "With the local economy being in the shape that it is in, crime is not likely to decrease without the help of a tough, aggressive county prosecutor with the backing of local law enforcement officials."

Ware referred to an endorsement by the Lubbock Professional Police Officers' Association as an indicator of his support within the ranks of local law enforcement officials.

"I have the support of the local law enforcement officials; my opponent does not," Ware said.

Ware said he will implement many measures to reduce crime in Lubbock and make the criminal district attorney's office more accessible for citizens. Those measures include:

- Targeting cases involving violent offenders, burglars and drug pushers. Ware said he will toughen the standards for plea bargaining by refusing to negotiate with the defense on terms of probation for persons accused of burglary of a residence, sale or manufacture of illegal drugs, first degree violent offenses or sexual offenses.

- Emphasizing teamwork with local law enforcement officials, including having a member of the district attorney's staff on call 24 hours a day. Ware said during Montford's term as district attorney, members of the office were available at any hour in order to try to obtain search warrants and for other legal procedures that call for quick and immediate response.
- Re-establishing the business crime section of the district attorney's office. Ware said he will actively pursue writers of "hot checks" and investigate other business-related crimes. "The local businessmen are being victimized just like everyone else," Ware said.

- "Cracking down" on persons charged with driving while intoxicated. Ware said he will seek to prosecute second- and third-time DWI offenders as felons rather than as misdemeanor violators.

- Developing and working with community programs for crime prevention. Ware said that, if elected, one of the members of his office actively will seek to form and work with crime prevention programs such as Neighborhood Watch and Operation Identification.

In addition to those measures, Ware said he will attempt to inform Lubbock citizens of what a tough sentence should be for a specific crime. He said that through the media, the district attorney should be able to inform the citizens and potential jurors and avoid lenient decisions on sentences.

Ware said he has the prosecutorial experience required for the job and added that his opponent has worked primarily as a defense attorney with no experience in prosecuting felony cases. He said that in prosecuting 100 cases involving felonies, he has lost one. Ware said he has prosecuted one case involving a misdemeanor.

When asked if he has ever met his opponent in the courtroom, Ware said, "Yes, we have met in the courtroom two or three times and she has never beaten me."

Students face bombing charges

By MICHELLE BLEIBERG
News Staff Writer

Four Texas Tech students are expected to face charges today for bombings that have destroyed several Lubbock residential mailboxes, according to Don McBeath, assistant criminal district attorney.

Six Tech students are suspected of involvement in the case. Four of the students are suspected of participating in the manufacture, purchase and detonation of the bombs, McBeath said.

Several suspects were questioned Friday by the University Police Department, the Lubbock Police Department, the Lubbock fire marshal and the U.S. postal inspector in connection with the case. McBeath said the questioning led to the search of two rooms in Gordon Hall.

McBeath said evidence implicating the students was seized, but he would not comment on what was found. However, he said no bombs or other explosives were seized.

UPD could not say Monday what charges are expected to be filed. However, McBeath said both federal and state laws were broken in the incidents. He also said the state laws that were broken carry stronger punishments than the violated federal statutes.

McBeath said he does not think the bombs were made to hurt anyone. He said the suspects probably were not fully aware of the dangers involved.

"It appears with the knowledge we have, there was no intent to hurt anyone with their actions. It's what we call cheap thrills," McBeath said.

UPD was unable to comment on the case at the request of the U.S. postal inspector.

A press conference tentatively is scheduled for 3 p.m. today concerning the status of the case, McBeath said.

Combest praises summit efforts

By JAY MILLER
News Staff Writer

Americans can be proud of the way President Reagan handled himself and the negotiations at the recently collapsed Reykjavik summit meeting with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, U.S. Rep. Larry Combest, R-Lubbock said in a Monday news conference.

An Associated Press report Monday from the summit meeting in Reykjavik, Iceland, said the two leaders were on the verge of reaching an agreement to destroy all their offensive nuclear weapons over the next 10 years before reaching a hangup in the negotiations.

The hangup, according to the AP report, stemmed from Reagan's insistence that the United States continue testing and research of an antimissile defense system called the Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI), or the "Star Wars" program.

Combest, speaking on the day after reports from Iceland told of the breakdown of negotiations to reduce the superpowers' volume of nuclear weapons, said Reagan handled himself well during the negotiations by refusing to waiver in his commitment to the SDI missile defense system.

"The president realized the value of continuing research and eventually deploying SDI," Combest said. "He knows that support and full funding of SDI is the only thing that brought the Soviets to the negotiating tables in the first place and it is the only thing that will bring them back."

According to the AP report, Gorbachev said Reagan's stance on continued research for Star Wars is one that "only a madman could accept."

But Combest said the Soviets are scared to death about research and deployment of SDI. He said the prospect that SDI could eliminate the threat of billions' of dollars worth of Soviet offensive nuclear weapons has rendered them helpless at the negotiating table.

Combest said it is important that the two leaders continue meeting to work out differences.

Four applicants vie for dean's position

A search committee for the position of Texas Tech's dean of the College of Arts and Sciences has narrowed its list to four prospective candidates to fill the vacancy.

The position, vacated a year ago by William Conroy, now executive vice president of New Mexico State University, currently is filled by interim dean J.R. Goodin. Donald Haragan, vice president for academic affairs and research, also served in the College of Arts and Sciences interim position during the past year.

The search committee, headed by Frank Newton, dean of Tech's School of Law, recommended as candidates for the position: Goodin; Ronald Pollitt, interim dean at McMicken College of Arts and Sciences at the University of Cincinnati; Jill Rubenstein, a professor of English and former associate dean at McMicken College of Arts and Sciences at the University of Cincinnati; and Regina Yando, chief of psychology at the Harvard medical school.

Newton said a decision on the new dean will be made by Haragan and Tech President Lauro Cavazos near the end of the fall semester. The dean is expected to take the post in summer 1987, he said.

Reagan reviews summit collapse in national speech

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan told the American people Monday the United States and the Soviet Union "are closer than ever before" to eliminating ballistic missiles and said he remains ready "to pick up where we left off" in an attempt to break the impasse over the future of Star Wars.

In a speech broadcast nationally from the Oval Office, Reagan reviewed the collapse of his summit talks on Sunday with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev in Reykjavik, Iceland.

"I cannot promise, nor can any president promise, that the talks in Iceland or any future discussions with Gorbachev will lead inevitably to great breakthroughs or momentous treaty signings," Reagan said.

And he insisted that "we prefer no agreement than to bring home a bad agreement to the United States."

Reagan acknowledged that Gorbachev gave no indication "when or whether" he would come to the United States for the summit the leaders went to Iceland to prepare for.

After refusing to compromise with Gorbachev on the testing of his hypothetical strategic defense system known formally as the Strategic Defense Initiative, Reagan said, "We are dealing now from a position of strength, and for that reason we have it within our grasp to move speedily with the Soviets toward even more breakthroughs."

Reagan had worked on his speech up to the last hour. A U.S. official said that speechwriters reworked drafts that had been prepared in advance, and the president himself made some last-minute changes in the text that the White House customarily has ready well in advance of Reagan's delivery.

Reagan's national security adviser, Vice Adm. John Poindexter, told reporters Monday that U.S. arms negotiators in Geneva will try to salvage elements of the accord that won tentative approval at the summit.

Cheap gas will end to revive oil crunch

Laura Tetreault

ing for all the marbles, and they're willing to glut the oil market to keep oil prices low for as long as needed. OPEC is trying to knock out the smaller oil-producing countries by bringing the price down so low that the competition is forced financially to drop out.

The same government that bailed out Chrysler Corp. has turned its back on the three failing states. The federal government will not impose an import tax on OPEC oil. Reagan will not extend federal relief funds to the states that theoretically are on the verge of bankruptcy. The Reagan administration has turned its back on three states with a combined population of 24 million people.

The sad part is that the country is heading straight for the same situation that occurred in the early 1970s with the oil embargo — rationing of gas, high prices at the pumps, etc. The benefit of having small-time oil businesses in America is that the country becomes independent of OPEC oil. However, with small oil companies shutting down every day, the country gradually is growing dependent on foreign oil again.

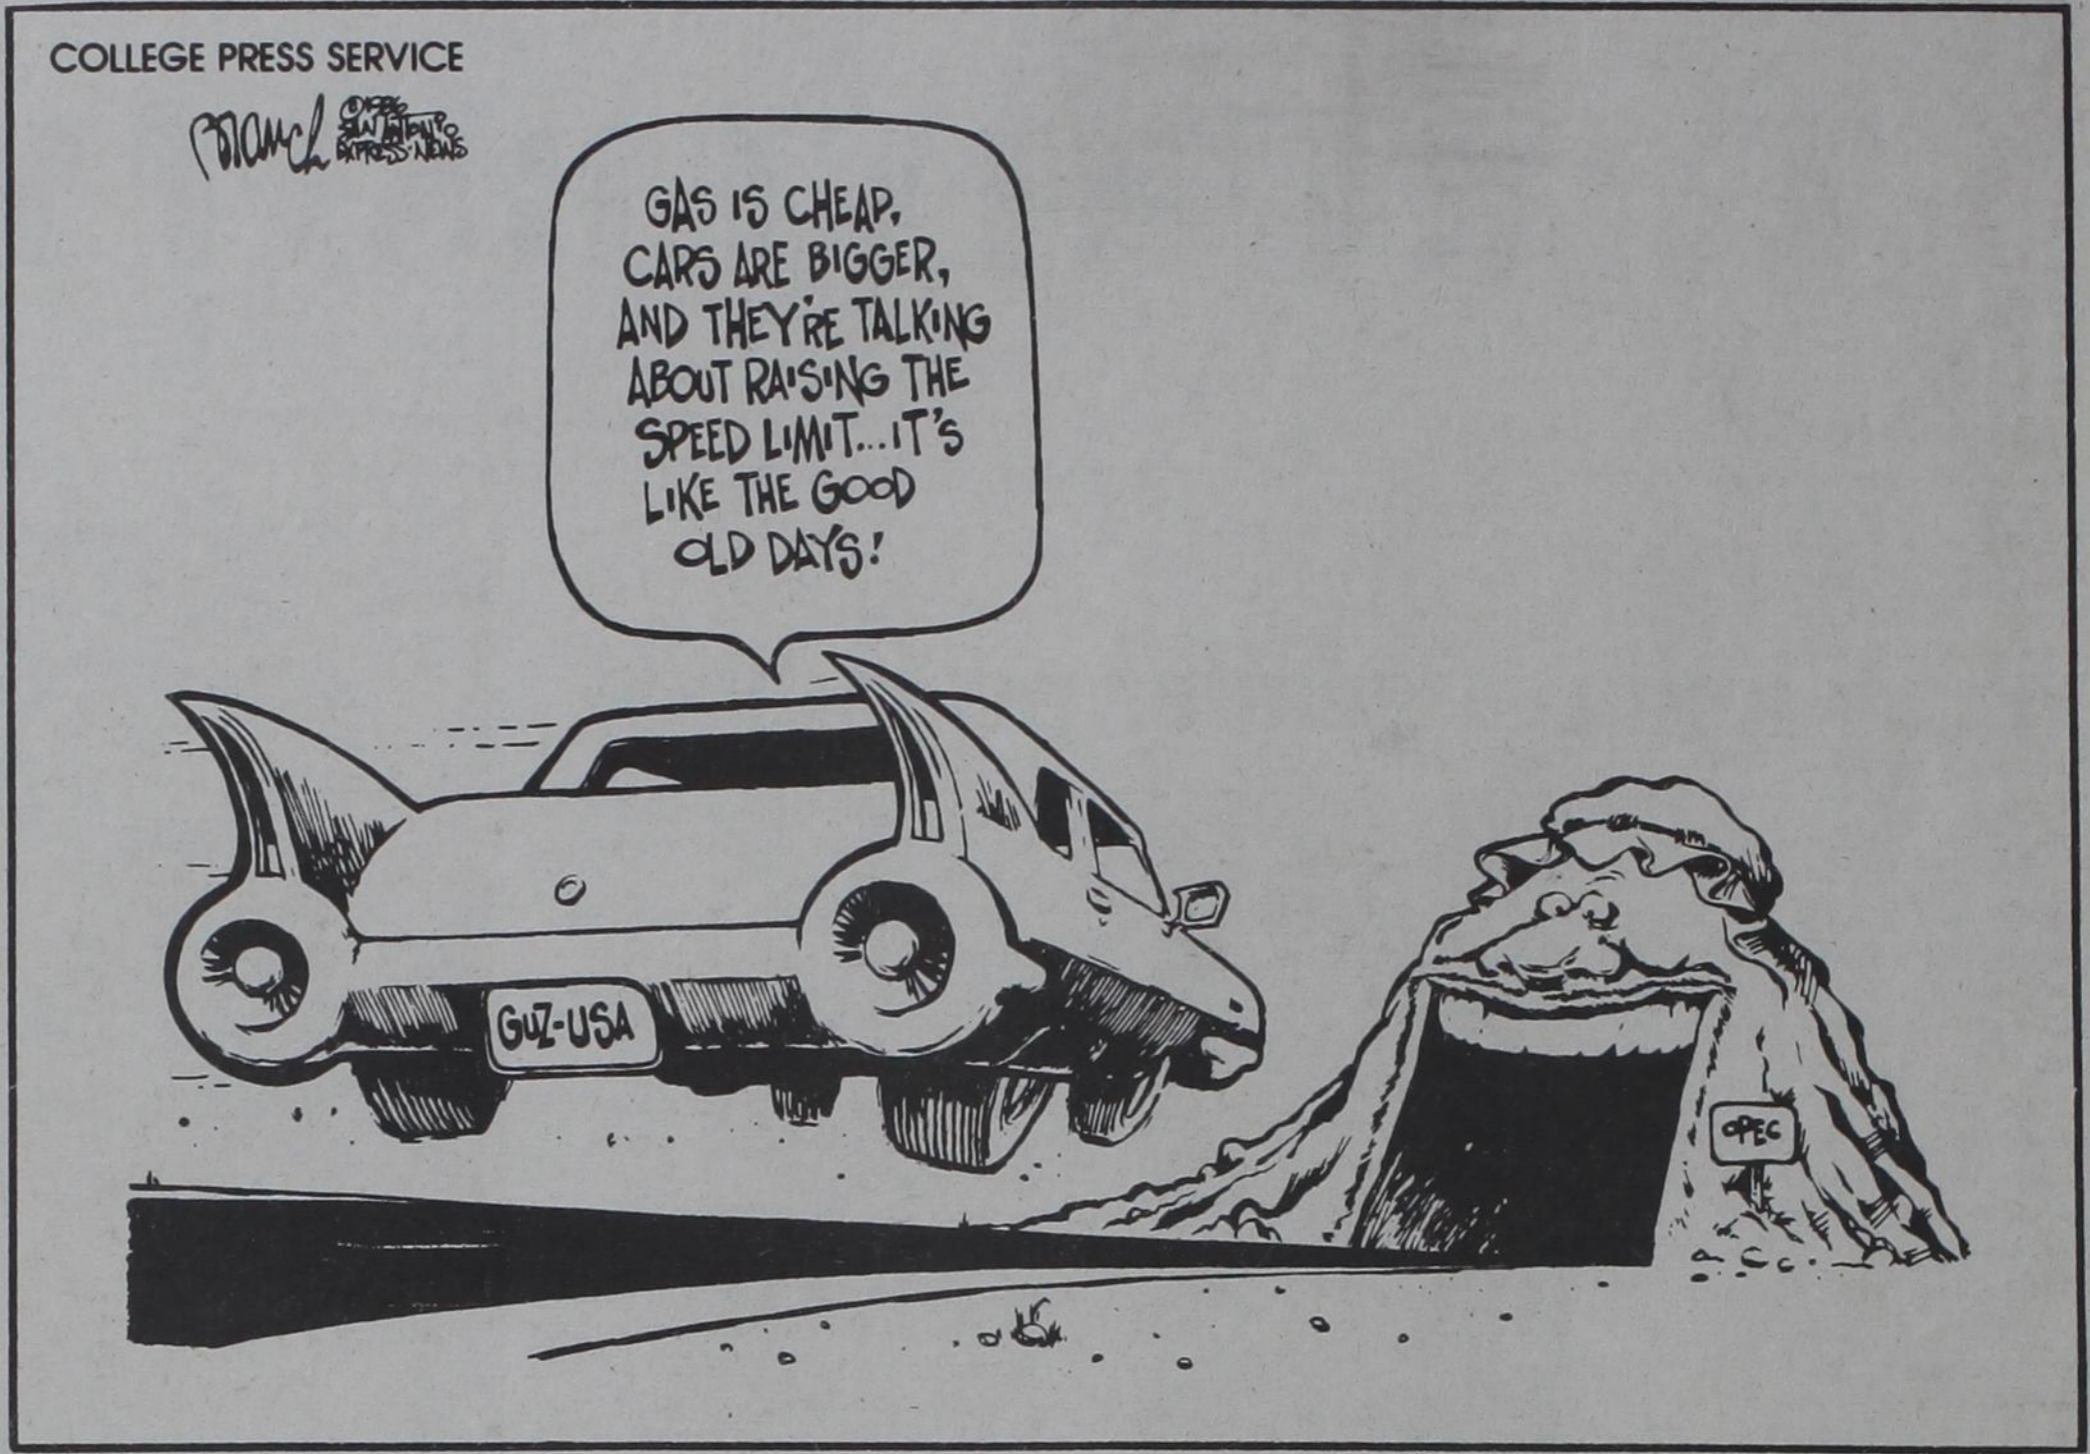

So enjoy the low prices at the pump. Take that car vacation across the country. Whoop it up about how bad good ol' Texas is hurting after so many years of boom. Such cheap oil and fun won't last long, though, so you'd better remember it before history starts repeating itself.

America has been doing well lately, at least from a general economic viewpoint. Unemployment is hanging around the 7 percent mark. The Dow Jones index has been setting records throughout the year. The prime lending rate is down, along with inflation.

With most of the country in a boom, why should people worry about Texas, Oklahoma and Louisiana being in an economic slump? So what if oil prices are down? So what if banks in the three states are closing their doors daily? Let the American economic system take its free course.

In the East, people are warming up to the idea of cheap gasoline. Congress is considering raising the speed limit in barren stretches. In the early '70s, when the debate raged over lowering the speed limit, a major consideration for the measure was the high gasoline prices. Such an argument is a moot consideration in this year's talks of repealing the law.

Go ahead, enjoy the cheap gas. In the long run, though, the final cost will be high. The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries is go-

On dorm life... No air warrants refund

Michelle Bleiberg
News
Staff Writer

I have lived in the dorm for a year and a half. Whenever I talk about living there, all I do is complain to my parents and anybody else who will listen about the living conditions there.

A normal gripe session goes something like this: "It's too loud; I can't study. Besides, the cafeteria only serves food during certain hours that don't match my schedule. I also can't stand living in a cubicle and sharing a bathroom with 40 other girls. Plus, my roommate gets on my nerves. I want out now, Dad."

My parents have heard this over and over again — at least once a week. I almost have Mom and Dad convinced that my grades, attitude and whole outlook on life will improve if I get an apartment of my own.

I know many other people feel the same way I do. The worst part about the whole situation, though, is the amount of money my parents are paying so I can live there.

I've been pretty cool lately when it comes to complaining about the dorm, especially since my parents are forking out more than $500 a month for me to live in one of the nicer ones (if there is such a thing) so I can have the comfort of air conditioning. However, for the past three weeks (when the weather was warm) the dorm has been without air conditioning — only air pressure. Needless to say, everybody was uncomfortable and sweating away. The room was so hot and stuffy that I couldn't sleep at night. Poor baby, right? I agree.

The office assistants in the dorm office didn't have anything to say about the situation except, "Keep your vents uncovered; we are working on it, and yes, it's OK to open your windows." When I tried to contact the housing office about the situation, the only thing I was able to contact was a busy signal. All my resident assistant could tell me is that the air conditioning will not be fixed for another month. Thank goodness for cold weather, only now my room is like the North Pole. Thank goodness for wool blankets.

What is the answer to this troubling situation? Most likely just chatter and bear it. Actually, I think the housing office should deduct the extra $100 my parents are dishing out for the comfort of air conditioning from my monthly room and board payment. That sounds fair enough to me and my parents.

Come on, this is the '80s. With all the technology in the world I would think that a broken air conditioner would not be that difficult to fix. Whatever the problem, I hope it is corrected soon. Dorm life is unstable enough without having to wonder if you're going to sweat one night or freeze the next.

Allow all to ride elevators

Carrie McHale
News
Staff Writer

When thinking of an elevator, what is the first vision that comes to mind? When I envision an elevator, I think of people. As far back as I can remember, I've seen people riding on elevators.

Elevators are an important means of business transportation, especially in large metropolitan areas with high-rise office complexes. Elevators also are used in department stores, factories and schools to help people move from one floor to another.

I'll admit that sometimes I've seen people using the elevator to carry large items, but for the most part an elevator is used to transport people either up or down. What I'm leading to is my complaint against the policy restricting the use of elevators in the smaller dorms to transporting freight and laundry.

I first found out about the policy when I tried to get on the dorm elevator to go up to the third floor and was told by a resident assistant that I could not use the elevator and had to take the stairs.

I'll admit that the third floor is not that far to climb, but once and a while it's nice to be able to hop on the elevator. For example, on days when I get up at 7 a.m. to attend classes, work and run errands and return home at 8 p.m., I would like the advantage of traveling on the elevator.

Another time I would like to use the elevator is after meals. Unless I've just finished off a huge ice cream sundae and need to feel I'm working it off by taking the stairs, I would like to ride the elevator because my food is not settled yet. Walking up the stairs usually gives me indigestion.

I don't understand that if I'm paying to stay in a dorm why I'm not allowed to use the elevators. I read nowhere in the student handbook that Walking up the stairs usually gives me indigestion.

Residents are not permitted to use the elevators for their own personal use.

I understand that residents in dorms such as Chitwood and Stangel can use the elevators because of the large number of floors. Even so, I still don't think the rule of depriving the students of using the elevators except for heavy weight is fair for the smaller residence halls.

I was informed that residents of the smaller dorms such as Horn-Knapp and Doak-Weeks are not allowed to use the elevators because there is too much traffic on the first hall where the elevator is located.

I don't think the strict policy on elevator use is fair. The rules should be changed. Riding an elevator should not be a privilege for residents but rather an asset of the hall.

Safety wins over good will

If you're hitchhiking down Highway 87, forgive me, but I will not stop to give you a ride.

I realize you may be a fellow Texas Tech student simply down on your luck and not able to afford bus fare to get you to your destination. Maybe your car broke down on this almost desolate highway and you're walking to the nearest phone.

If you're hungry and living on the streets, forgive me again, but I will not offer you a place to live or food to eat.

I realize life may have dealt you a bad hand. Maybe a million other people graduated from college the same year you did with the same degree you earned and you couldn't support yourself.

But I will not put my life in jeopardy to give you handouts.

Although you may be a Tech student as nonviolent as I am, I want to take no chances of you being some murderer or rapist. Recent reports such as the one concerning the Lancaster ax slayings make me turn away from anyone who even faintly resembles a vagabond.

Using the diary of one of the three women hacked to death in Lancaster recently, police have determined that a transient who was staying at the house could have committed the crime. Of the three women living in the Lancaster house where the murders occurred, two were related — aunt and niece. The younger woman obviously felt sorry for transients, because the third woman living there also was a transient.

The niece's kind heart and generosity resulted in death.

Reports abound of people being injured, killed or bilked of their wealth by seeming down-and-outers they try to help.

This is America. We all have the same opportunities to succeed. If I can do it, so can anyone else.

I cannot afford to risk what little I have to help someone who will not help themselves. Already my paycheck is smaller because of taxes that go to support welfare programs for those who cannot take care of themselves.

Sorry. But as much as I would love to aid those who cannot help themselves, self-preservation rules, and I will pass you up as I drive home down Highway 87.

Rain, rain, rain

To the editor:
As we have all noticed, there has been way too much rain on the South Plains. RAIN, RAIN, RAIN. I am sick to death of this overbearing rain. RAIN, RAIN, RAIN, every day! Something must be done. But, before one can solve a problem, one must examine the roots of its origin. Obviously, the maelstrom of thunderstorm activity that we've been experiencing must have some kind of logical explanation.

Now I'm no meteorologist, but I'm willing to bet it's got something to do with all these conservatives wanting desperately to ABOLISH LIBERALISM. Well, perhaps not. Then again, it just may be due to the mysterious disappearance of that dang CROSSWORD PUZZLE! Who knows, I'm sure these are all legitimate reasons.

I'm a busy man and I don't have a lot of time on my hands. I simply cannot worry about things over which I have no control. Therefore, I guess it's rather silly of me to concern myself with the rain, 'cause we all know that worrying will getcha nowhere.

Teams continue search for quake victims

By The Associated Press

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — Homeless Salvadorans set up makeshift shelters in fields, the Maternity Hospital delivered babies in the parking lot, and survivors Monday went about burying the nation's 890 known earthquake dead.

President Jose Napoleon Duarte estimated the number of injured in last Friday's catastrophe at 10,000 and the homeless at 150,000.

Rescue workers intensified searches for victims trapped under tons of twisted rubble, as aftershocks continued Monday.

The devastation was confined mostly to this capital city of 800,000 people, and Duarte told El Salvador in a broadcast Sunday night, "We are practically going to have to reconstruct all of the city."

He asked for more international aid, requesting medicines and supplies for battered hospitals where teams worked outside to treat patients.

Search teams struggled to retrieve victims from toppled buildings. Specially trained dogs led by Swiss, French and American teams burrowed into crawl spaces looking for signs of life.

U.S. Embassy spokesman Jake Gillespie said two Americans, who also held Salvadoran citizenship and lived in San Salvador, were killed. They were identified as Jose Mauricio Juarez, in his 40s, and Yolanda Suzanne Stets, 12.

Crowds downtown stood behind roped off areas Monday guarded by the army and watched rescuers use cranes, torches and bare hands. The stench of dead bodies rose in the stifling heat.

Some stores and restaurants reopened Monday, but in most cases owners only wanted to assess damages.

Duarte said the city suffered $2 billion in damage and that every government building in this Central American capital was hit, including the presidential palace.

Government operations were moved to the military command headquarters.

At Bermeja Cemetery on the southern outskirts of San Salvador, a line of 26 open graves awaited earthquake victims early Monday.

Within hours, the newly dug holes began to fill as families came to bury their dead, singly and in groups.

On the other side of the cemetery, near the administration buildings, workers were digging a pit 50 feet long, 30 feet wide, 20 feet deep.

"This is for people who don't have any money," said cemetery worker Alexander Cedeno, 20, motioning to the pit. "Over there," he said, pointing across the gently sloping hill where the graves stood open, "is for the people who can afford it."

Cemetery superintendent Humberto Lopez said 174 people had been buried at Bermeja since Friday.

Alums donate moon rock to alma mater

Texas Tech's Southwest Collection is the proud owner of a scandalously obtained rock — one secretly brought back to Earth by the first men to walk on the moon.

The rock, or rather half-rock, was donated Sept. 7 to the collection by W.B. "Dub" Rushing, a Tech architecture student during the 1930s and founder of Varsity Bookstore at 1305 University Ave. The rock's journey of more than 238,000 miles to Earth included passage through the hands of three students who met at Tech around 1934 and a quick stop at a Health Sciences Center operating table, and it finally found its place in the Southwest Collection.

The early days of Texas Technological College set the stage for the beginning of friendships that eventually would lead to the donation of the moon rock to the university. Rushing said the opening of two residence halls in the fall of 1934 set the scenario for a dormitory scandal that played an indispensable role in Tech's acquisition of the rock.

Rushing said the Tech campus was characterized by an active "boy-meets-girl" culture 52 years ago. Lack of student supervision led to an exchange of favors between friends, which resulted in the moon rock reaching a final destination at the future university.

Students from across the South Plains were drawn to the college during the Depression, not only for academic enhancement, but for the social opportunities it provided. One of those West Texans eager to sharpen his social skills was Merle Rose, an engineering student who had "$75 and the shirt on my back" when he fell off a watermelon truck as it passed through Lubbock.

A popular place for guys to meet girls in 1934 was Rushing's Varsity Bookstore.

"There wasn't much development beyond 19th Street in those days," Rose said. "The college girls would stroll up and down the street or go to the bookstore, so that's where I spent most of my time.

"It was like a recess in heaven!" he said.

Rose said his love of socializing with campus coeds and lack of funds during the tight financial times of the Depression could have brought his college career to a premature end. Rushing knew of the bookstore regular's hard luck and offered Rose a job along with some timely advice.

"You keep a stiff upper lip, drink water and have faith," Rushing said.

Rose's employment kept him in school, and he and Rushing forged a friendship that would last a lifetime.

Rose had become friends with another Tech student, Weldon "Moco" Cogdell, a supply sergeant at the National Guard Armory. Rose said Cogdell was a slouch, but a likable slouch, who had developed the unusual ability of getting around rules and taking care of his friends. Cogdell's talents played an important role in bringing the moon rock to Tech.

Cogdell, a business major, shared Rose's attraction to the opposite sex, and that fascination got him into a predicament. A dorm matron of the girls residence hall had caught a glimpse of Cogdell's back as he left after visiting a coed one night. He was reported to James Allen, dean of men, and was going to be kicked out of school for being on the premises of the girls dormitory.

Cogdell was in a predicament. He had an appointment to the Army's Officer Training School, but he could not go unless he graduated from college.

Rose said Cogdell's future was "about to go down the drain," so he decided to take the blame for being in the dorm. Rose said his flourishing social life and several jobs kept him so busy that he decided to quit school and help out his friend.

The girl involved in the scandal assisted the two by identifying Rose as her nocturnal visitor. Cogdell graduated from Tech, went on to officer training school and became a supply officer at NASA. The two friends parted in 1936, only to meet again years later.

As the years passed, favors Cogdell had done for others piled up, and one was repaid with an extraterrestrial treasure. Not forgetting the friend from Tech who made it possible for him to have been in a position to receive the gift, Cogdell repaid his debt to Rose by giving him a rock — a moon rock.

Cogdell had continued his practice of taking care of his friends, and one of those was an astronaut on the Apollo 11 mission, which landed the first men on the moon. Those men had the perfect opportunity to collect for themselves priceless pieces of the moon — and they did.

Astronauts Neil Armstrong and Edwin "Buzz" Aldrin collected 300 pounds of rocks and dust for NASA from their July 20, 1969, expedition of the surface while Michael Collins orbited the still moon alone. According to Cogdell, one astronaut gave him, as payment for a debt, a handful of rocks that had been hidden during the mission. Cogdell said he was given the rock on the condition that he never reveal the name of his benefactor.

Rose visited Houston a year after the historic moonwalk and Cogdell decided to settle his old debt. He took Rose to his back yard and unearthed a glass jar wrapped in lead containing the moon rocks. Cogdell gave a rock to Rose in return for saving his career 30 years earlier.

Rose said he brought his prize home to Lubbock, where he wrapped it in lead foil and buried it in his back yard.

"Having the moon rock was kind of exciting," Rose said.

"I had always told my wife, Elizabeth, that I would give her the moon," he said. "Well, I finally did, but she still wasn't satisfied.

"That's women for you."

While dining with a millionaire oilman a few years later, Rose mentioned his prize possession. After verifying the story, the man offered Rose $50,000 for the rock. Rose refused the deal.

Rose said that while reminiscing about the old days earlier this year, he decided to repay Rushing for giving him a job in 1934 by giving him half the moon rock. Rushing said he was pleased with his old friend's offer and agreed to take the rock on condition that his half would be donated to Tech.

At Lubbock General Hospital on July 9, a crowd gathered in an operating room to watch as Dr. Royce Lewis, chief of hand surgery at LGH, attempted to cut the rock with a CO2 laser. After the attempt failed, Lewis successfully performed the surgery with a reciprocating micro-saw, and Rushing's half of the moon rock was donated to the Southwest Collection.

David Murrah, director of the Southwest Collection, said although the rock has not been examined by a geologist, he does not question its authenticity. He said testimony of those who witnessed the cutting of the rock and the unique circumstances surrounding the acquisition have convinced him it is from the moon.

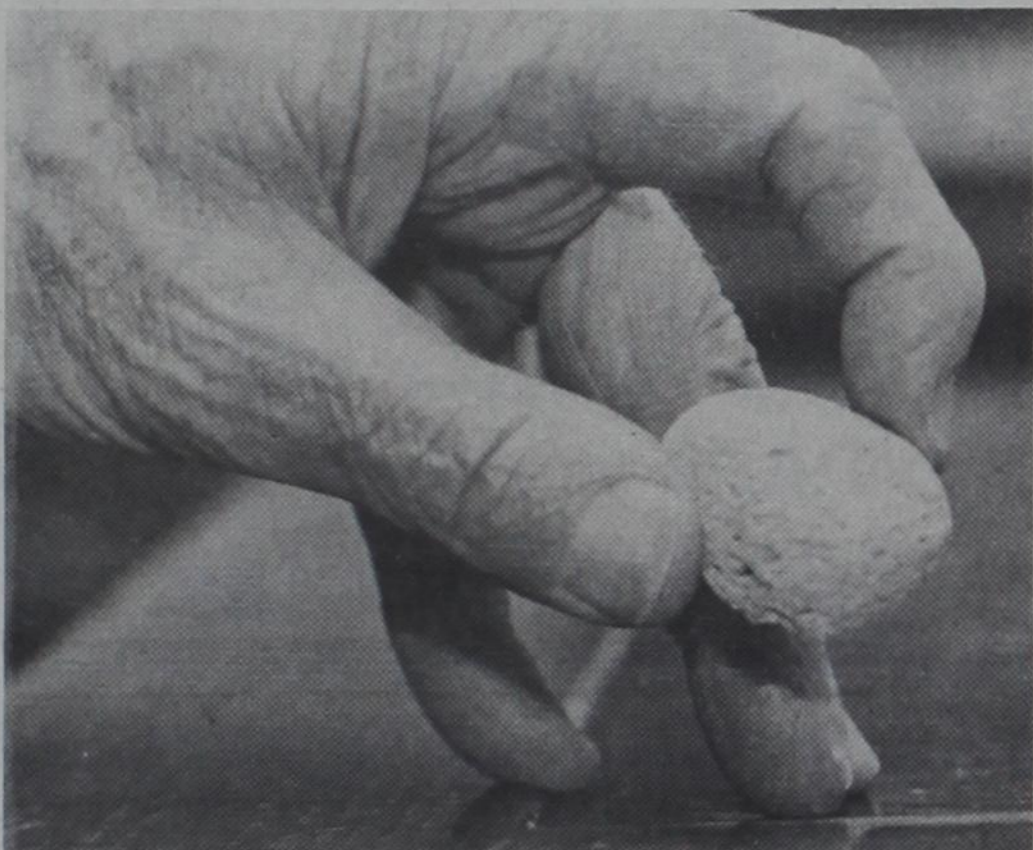

Gary Edson, director of the Tech Museum, who was present when the rock was presented to the university and has seen actual rocks from the moon, said he sees no need to question the authenticity of the rock.

"I have seen other moon rocks, and this one is of the same dense texture," Edson said. "I have no reason to feel that this rock is not a moon rock."

Rushing said he wanted to give the moon rock to Tech because he knows it will be preserved for future generations.

"History was the first course I ever flunked," he said. "When you get older, you realize the importance of keeping up with historical events."

Murrah said the moon rock is being prepared for display at the Southwest Collection.

MORE TOTAL THAN EVEN ADAM'S

Isolation, transportation, dedication

This United Press International report, relating the isolation of astronaut Michael Collins while he orbited the moon during the Apollo 11 mission, appeared in the July 22, 1969 edition of the Lubbock Avalanche-Journal. Edith Neil Armstrong or "Buzz" Aldrin, the first man to walk on the moon, is said to have brought a concealed bag of rocks back to Earth. One of the rocks buried in a Houston back yard for almost 20 years, has been donated to Texas Tech.

TCUers scam on fashion, use scary vocabulary

Missy Costello
Lifestyles
Staff Writer

As a transfer student from Texas Christian University in Fort Worth, I certainly had noticed a difference between TCU and Texas Tech. I was reminded again of that vast difference in frame of mind, however, when I revisited my old school last weekend.

Just in case any of you ever decide to visit Texas Christian, here are a few hints to help you fit in:

Rent a BMW for the length of your stay. EVERYONE at TCU drives a Beemer. Everyone. Except, of course, the faculty, who cannot afford them. The profs drive 1967 Fairlanses. Oh, and of course, the scholarship kids slum it in Volkswagens.

Uniform for guys: Anything from L.L. Bean or Banana Republic. Bleached 501s rolled up above the ankles. In shirtwear, anything paisley. Footwear? Bean mocs, top-siders, but absolutely, positively, NO boots unless a) you're headed for Billy Bob's (in which case boots definitely would be a wiser choice than Bean Mocs), b) your father owns half of Montana, or c) you like the label tourista/general social out-cast/fashion uncouth/leper.

For the women, the dress code calls for just that. Dresses are de rigueur, Laura Ashley preferably. Denim seemed to be in last weekend, and as always, silver jewelry, shoes, purses, and belts were in abundance.

One last thing about Horned Frog fashion: Ask everyone you meet what they think you should wear. Anyone and for any event. "What should I wear to the football game?" "Is it OK if I wear my black pumps with my teal Laura Ashley?" "How do you think my Merona/Dior/Ralph Lauren/any designer name sweater would look with my black pants?"

Last weekend, the student body president called my best friend Amy and asked her what to wear to a Chancellor's Reception. Really. We were awakened at 7:56 a.m. Saturday by Donnie Thomas, who neither of us had met before, who asked us what he should wear. Scary, isn't it?

Last, here's a short TCU vocabulary:

SCARY — most overused word on the campus. Denotes anything yukky, gross or polyester. Alternate form: SCARE. ("Oh, that shirt is such a scare!")

SCAM — to scope, etc. ("That scary guy has been scamming on you all night!")

WANCH — (said with a long A. Tex-anized form of wench.) Can be used as either a noun or a verb. ("Stop wanching at me!" or "You wanch!")

CLUE — (as in "I have no ...") Also can be used as an adjective. ("Greg, the clueless one, is scamming on you again! What a scare!")

Two last words on TCU words: Always speak in exclamation points! Sprinkle your conversation with as many designers' names and European cities as possible.

McWilliams not looking past rejuvenated Owls

By DON WILLIAMS
Associate Sports Editor

After facing four of the nation's 20 best teams in the past five weeks, Texas Tech Coach David McWilliams could be breathing a little easier with the perennially poor Rice Owls next on the schedule Saturday in Houston. But McWilliams is taking nothing for granted. Instead of discussing the Rice Owls who were blown out earlier this season by SMU (45-3) and Southwest Texas State (31-6), McWilliams spoke of Jerry Berndt's new and improved squad at his weekly press luncheon Monday.

If the Owls' 29-27 upset of Tech last year in Lubbock wasn't reason enough for the Raiders not to look ahead, McWilliams needed look at nothing more than Rice's last two game films for reinforcement.

"It's the best Rice football team that I've seen in the last several years," McWilliams said in reference to the Owls' 37-31 win over TCU Saturday and their 17-14 loss two weeks ago to Texas.

The Owls, under new leader Berndt, have charted a course similar to that of the Raiders, McWilliams noted, with both teams taking their lumps early but playing well of late. While Rice was winning Saturday in Fort Worth, Tech was busy shocking eighth-ranked Arkansas 17-7 in Fayetteville. McWilliams said he was impressed with a bigger-than-usual Rice offensive line that averages 258 pounds a man and the Owl attack that exploded for 30 second-half points in the win over TCU.

"They had 420 yards of offense against TCU and moved the ball very well against Texas," he said. "So they're really a much-improved football team the last two games."

McWilliams acknowledged that Rice's wide-open passing attack led by quarterbacks Mark Comalander and Quentis Roper will be a completely different look from the Arkansas flexbone which the Tech defense dominated.

"You're not able to play the same type of defense against Rice that you can against Arkansas," McWilliams said, "because all Arkansas' receivers are in pretty close and you can play the run and then react to the pass."

In contrast, the Owls offer a passing-first game plan with several one-back and unbalanced sets.

"I think that this is big challenge for us, because this is the type of offense that we haven't played as well against defensively," McWilliams said.

RAIDER NOTES: Flex end Tim Tannehill is expected to miss his second consecutive game with a bruised kidney. I-back Ervin Farris, with an ankle sprain, is questionable for the Rice game.

UT's Akers: We're not that bad

By The Associated Press

AUSTIN — Coach Fred Akers of Texas said Monday if Oklahoma had played as well against Miami as it did Saturday in thrashing Texas 47-12 the Sooners still would be undefeated. "That's the best they've played ... they played without errors, or a minimum of them — and no turnovers, which is very unusual for them," Akers said of Oklahoma. "If they had played that way a couple of weeks ago, they'd still be undefeated, but they didn't." Miami defeated Oklahoma 28-16 to knock the Sooners out of the No. 1 spot in college football. Miami now is No. 1.

Akers said of his own team's performance, "We're not that bad. We're better than that." "We played with real effort and I can't, as a coach, ask for more effort than that. We didn't play smart, and there were times when we were freelancing, individuals doing things on their own.

"I thought maybe Oklahoma overpowered us, but they didn't do that. They did not dominate the line of scrimmage," Akers said.

Akers said starting offensive right tackle Rick Houston will have knee surgery Friday and that no replacement has been selected. Houston was hurt in the third quarter against Oklahoma when an Oklahoma player was knocked into the back of his leg, Akers said.

He said defensive end Thomas Aldridge dislocated the joint of his little finger and probably will be in a splint for six to eight weeks.

Akers was asked if media reports about his job status had affected his team, and he replied, "I think it affects them some. The danger there is that they think that all people are that way. And that's not true.

"You've got some very strong and loyal Texas fans out there, but it seems that the ones that get interviewed are the ones that have on a T-shirt that says 'Fire Fred,'" Akers said.

Texas returns home Saturday for the first time since Sept. 13 to play Arkansas, which was upset by Texas Tech, 17-7, Saturday.

"It wasn't a fluke. Texas Tech played well. Now Arkansas didn't play flawlessly, (but) when you get on a roll like Tech was, sometimes great things happen for you.

"This conference has gotten to that point. You can't bat an eye without somebody punching it out for you."

Even though Texas is 2-2 after its loss to Oklahoma, the Longhorns are 1-0 in the Southwest Conference.

Mets, Astros rained out — try again today

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — National League President Chub Feeney called off Monday's Game Five of the National League playoffs between the Houston Astros and New York Mets because of rain, and there was little prospect for improvement in the weather until Wednesday.

With the best-of-seven series tied at two games apiece, rookie left-hander Jim Deshaies of Houston had been scheduled to go Monday against 1985 Cy Young Award winner Dwight Gooden of New York.

A constant drizzle forced National League officials to delay the 3:10 p.m. EDT start, and Feeney postponed the game at 4:22 p.m. The game was rescheduled for 1:05 p.m. today, but the National Weather Service predicted 100 percent chance of rain today.

A rainout today would postpone the game until 1 p.m. Wednesday, with Games Six and Seven on Thursday and Friday at Houston.

While saying he was aware of today's forecast, Feeney said: "I didn't want to start and then have to stop. We're going to try tomorrow

Rainouts would not affect the Mets' pitching rotation, with Gooden scheduled to be followed in Game Six by Bob Ojeda regardless of the schedule.

"It just gives Doc (Gooden) a day's rest he doesn't need," Mets Manager Davey Johnson said. "And the weather reports are very bad tomorrow." Johnson said another rainout would not change his rotation.

Houston Manager Hal Lanier said, however, that Deshaies would be dropped from his rotation, and be replaced by Nolan Ryan for Game Five. For Game Six, Lanier said he would come back with Bob Knepper, loser of Game Three.

If today's game also is rained out,

Lanier said Scott would be a possibility for Game Six, depending on what happens in Game Five.

"I could push Nolan back one day for Game Five, then come back with Scott or Knepper in Game Six," Lanier said.

Monday's game was scheduled to be televised by ABC, which also was committed to NFL's Monday night game between Cincinnati and Pittsburgh, starting at 9 p.m. EDT.

Feeney, however, said television did not play a part in postponing the game early in the afternoon.

Umpiring crew chief Doug Harvey said: "The game would have been played if, in the opinion of the president of the league, it could have been played safely."
