Smokeless butt

Premier, a smokeless cigarette, has debuted in test markets and is being touted as a revolutionary tobacco product by its manufacturer.

Opinions on Premier cigarettes, however, aren't as glowing among groups of smoking critics such as the American Cancer Society. The group is objecting to the fact that the product was not tested by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration before its release.

Whales escape to open waters

By The Associated Press

BARROW, Alaska — Two whales trapped for nearly three weeks in the arctic ice pack were freed Wednesday by Soviet and American icebreakers, superpower saviors who hacked a path to the open sea.

"The whales are loose and in the channel and headed out," said Lt. Mike Haller, a spokesman for the Alaska National Guard. "They looked good all afternoon. To look at them, you'd have thought they had their bags packed and were ready to head south."

"They're in the main lead, and I can't help but think they'll keep on truckin'. I don't know how much more we can do," said rescue coordinator Ron Morris of the U.S. National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

The work to free the migrating California gray whales progressed rapidly Tuesday when two Soviet ice-breaking vessels began smashing the ice that kept the pair imprisoned. A third trapped whale is believed to have died last week.

Morris, who followed the whales by helicopter, landed a little after 4 p.m. (9 p.m. EDT) to report that the whales had moved from the final man-made breathing hole to the slushy path the Soviet icebreaker Vladimir Arseniev cut Tuesday night.

Rescue officials were worried that the whales would have trouble breaking air holes through the partly frozen cut, but around 4:30 p.m. rescue workers found the two whales had opened a small breathing hole and were sharing it.

One of the whales was bleeding enough to stain the water red.

Spectators watched anxiously for several moments, waiting for the whales to surface in the new waterway cut Wednesday by the Arseniev — and cheered joyously when the whales broke the surface.

As darkness fell, the whales were swimming back and forth in the channel. Officials planned to discontinue the helicopter surveillance at nightfall.

Scientists and others involved in the rescue may never know the whales' fate. Rescue officials decided not to put electronic tracking tags on the already stressed animals.

Kohl: Soviets to free all political prisoners in U.S.S.R. this year

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — The Soviet Union will release all people regarded in the West as political prisoners by the end of the year, Chancellor Helmut Kohl of West Germany said Wednesday after talks with President Mikhail Gorbachev.

Such a dramatic move would be one of the boldest signs yet from Gorbachev that he seeks a clear break with past Kremlin human rights practices that have included imprisonment of dissenters from Communist Party policy.

However, Foreign Ministry spokesman Gennady Gerasimov refused to confirm or deny that a release of political prisoners is imminent.

He told reporters there are about two dozen such prisoners. Estimates from human rights groups abroad vary from 150 to more than 500.

Gerasimov said the fate of the prisoners was not on the agenda of the Soviet-West German negotiations that brought Kohl to Moscow.

Kohl's announcement was welcomed by Soviet human rights activist Andrei Sakharov, the Reagan administration and Amnesty International. But a leader of a group seeking emigration of Soviet Jews said he remained skeptical.

"Certainly we await the release of all of them (prisoners) and their rehabilitation," said Sakharov, the 1975 Nobel Peace Prize laureate.

In the past three days, Kohl conducted 10 hours of talks with Gorbachev and also met with other top Kremlin officials.

At a news conference called to sum up his visit, Kohl said: "The Soviets confirmed that they will release before the end of the year all political prisoners as we understand it in the West."

Kohl would not say whether the promise came from Gorbachev, only that it was made during the talks.

Asked how many people may be freed, Kohl's foreign minister, Hans-Dietrich Genscher, said: "We are not in a position to give final figures."

Neither Kohl nor Genscher identified prisoners who might be released. It was not clear how many Soviets classified in the West as political prisoners might be freed, since some have been sentenced on criminal charges, including espionage.

Amnesty International, the London-based human rights group, says it knows of 150 Soviets "imprisoned solely for their non-violent exercise of their fundamental human rights." It put their number at 10,000 a few years ago.

Amnesty's list includes about 30 religious believers, 30 conscientious objectors to military service, and about 20 people held for anti-Soviet propaganda and other offenses, said spokeswoman Carline Windall.

Kronid Lubarsky, editor of Country and World, an emigre publication in Munich, said there are at least 167 Soviet political prisoners.

A West German group, the International Society for Human Rights, said 503 Soviets are imprisoned on political or religious grounds.

Many of those sent to labor camp or prisons for political offenses have been convicted under two clauses of the Soviet Criminal Code.

Article 70 outlaws "anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda." Article 190 forbids "anti-Soviet slander."

"The only number we know is (those held under Article) 70, and only those in camps," Sakharov said in a telephone interview. He put the total number of those prisoners at 25.

"We don't know who is in psychiatric hospitals ... We can't in any way say how many," said Sakharov, who was kept almost seven years in internal exile for condemning the 1979 Soviet military push into Afghanistan.

Sakharov said it was also not known how many of his countrymen were imprisoned for violating laws that regulate the practice of religion.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Charles Redman said the United States welcomes the report by Kohl "as evidence the Soviet Union recognizes the importance of releasing all political prisoners" and said U.S. officials are looking forward to their actual release.

Roman Popadiuk, deputy White House press secretary said: "We are awaiting further details. If true, it is something we would look forward to."

In New York, the chairman of the National Conference on Soviet Jewry, Morris Abram, said he was skeptical. "One will have to wait to see whether or not the promise is confirmed by the practice," Abram told The Associated Press.

Republican group denies Vandalism accusations

By GARY HARPER
The University Daily

Several signs and bumper stickers supporting Democratic presidential candidate Michael Dukakis either have been removed or destroyed on and off the Texas Tech campus, Democratic supporters say.

Paul Schattman, a visiting assistant professor of political science and faculty adviser to the Young Democrats, said he was informed of the destroyed paraphernalia by the members of the Tech Democratic group.

"I've been getting reports of systematic vandalism," Schattman said. "A lady's bumper sticker was not only keyed, but they took a Bush/Quayle sticker and put it on her car."

Schattman, who said the problem has been occurring for more than a month, blamed an overzealous element of the Republican Party for the destruction of the Democratic campaign materials.

"This is a typically Republican kind of thing," Schattman said. "It has been my experience among Republicans that you find a moral arrogance, a conviction that they are right justifies their behavior," he said.

Schattman said the Iran-Contra affair and the Watergate scandal are examples.

"Being right puts them above the law," he said.

Clayton Trotter, an assistant professor of business law and faculty adviser to the College Republicans, said the Tech GOP group is not responsible for the destruction.

"This is the first I've heard of anything like that," Trotter said. "If they are overzealous individuals, it's certainly not the College Republicans," he said.

David Fisher, president of Young Democrats, said he knows of a Republican supporter who was soliciting for his party in residence halls.

"It's against the housing rules. That's a big violation," he said.

Fisher said a sign supporting Dukakis has been removed from the front yard of his house five times.

"It's amazing that the Bush signs weren't removed," he said.

Fisher did not specifically charge Tech's College Republicans for the destruction, but blamed Republicans as a whole. "It's obviously the supporters of the other party," he said.

However, Judith Henry, dean of students, said her office spoke to Michael Verdone, president of College Republicans, after receiving several complaints by telephone.

"We haven't had any formal complaints," Henry said. "If we had proof, we would definitely pursue it."

Verdone agreed that there is no proof of his organization is destroying Democratic paraphernalia.

"These allegations are not facts. Until they bring me factual evidence, there is nothing I can do," Verdone said.

Verdone acknowledged that a member of College Republicans was discovered soliciting Republican information in a Tech residence hall.

Tech college plan taps federal drug grant

By CINDY PANDOLFO
News Editor

The Texas Tech College of Education is the first American university education program to obtain a grant to provide community training programs for drug awareness.

Although 42 other Drug Free America programs currently are in operation, the Tech program is the first of its kind to be sponsored through a university.

The two-year $210,675 grant was awarded to Tech in May by the U.S. Department of Education.

A training project directed by Citizens for a Drug Free Community will provide instruction on drug abuse education and prevention to law enforcement personnel, judicial officials, community leaders and parents, said Dan Gomez, a director and trainer for the program.

Gomez said the national campaign for "A Drug Free America" is a bipartisan, national effort that joins together all agencies of the federal government, members of Congress and the private sector to mobilize and involve all Americans in steps to prevent illegal drug use.

The Tech project staff will consist of Herman Garcia, a principal investigator, trainer and assistant education professor; Gomez; Jesus Azua, a program coordinator and trainer in the College of Education drug abuse training program; Gloria Caudillo, secretary; and volunteer staff member Barbara Merrett.

Detective Portifirio DeLeon of the Lubbock Police Department's crime prevention unit, said 80 percent of criminals involved in burglaries test positive for drug and alcohol abuse.

"I worked for 13 years in the street," he said. "I can't think of one time that I was beaten by a clean, sober person."

The program is designed to teach Lubbock and Tech police officers how to react to drugs.

"They will be taught to identify and react to different drugs," DeLeon said.

Staff members will conduct workshops on the Tech campus on a continuing basis, Gomez said. Members of the group have been invited to speak in criminal justice classes and at student teacher seminars, he said.

When questioned about the effectiveness of the training project, DeLeon said estimates were not available, but other cities report success with the program.

"(LPD Crime Prevention Officer) Floyd (Price) and I went to a city that had crack houses," DeLeon said. "Two days later, with the community working together the city got rid of the crack houses. We have to educate our children."

Price agreed that education is the key to ridding the community of drugs.

"Education is the only way to stop drug abuse," he said. "You can

Allen Rose/The University Daily

lock the suppliers up, but they will get out of jail. You're just removing the cheese from the middle of the floor. To get rid of drugs, you have got to remove the rat."

Only 2 percent of the Lubbock population are involved in drugs, Price said. The remaining 98 percent working together can solve the problem, he said.

Call off Campaign '88

Americans want qualified candidates for race

Russell Baker
Columnist

After five weeks of vacation it was dismaying to get home and find the election was still going on.

I'd gone away hoping they might come to their senses, call the thing off for a year or 18 months, then start all over again with some new candidates.

No, I didn't have anybody special in mind.

President Reagan has lately been looking a lot better than he used to, though. Isn't it interesting how time improves these presidential types?

I remember back in the 1950's thinking President Eisenhower would rate way down there with the likes of James Buchanan and Franklin Pierce when the president raters got around to him.

Then we had six more presidents and Eisenhower's rating went a little higher with each one until now he's right up there near Lincoln and Washington.

Reagan, I used to think, would finish up in the pits with Millard Fillmore and Zachary Taylor, but after three weeks of practicing saying "President Bush," I've moved Reagan up into the James K. Polk class.

It's possible Reagan could even climb as high as Theodore Roosevelt or Harry Truman if Bush doesn't find something better than a thousand points of light to save the United States from becoming a wholly owned subsidiary of Japan.

Apparently there's no point discussing Dukakis's shortcomings.

The papers and television said he had to strike a powerful blow against Bush in their last TV performance if he didn't want them calling Bush the winner.

Nobody specified what the required powerful blow should be, whether Dukakis should surprise Bush with an uppercut to the chin or produce amazing documents linking Bush to the financial manipulations of Ivan Boesky and Kruger the Match King.

Apparently the press and TV wizards wanted really powerful juice out of Dukakis, though, and, lacking it, he was declared the loser.

That didn't mean the election was over, though.

It is a curious thing about American elections that the campaign continues right up until Election Day no matter that the press, television and polling wizards announce weeks before that it's all over.

If Bush has really won, it means that Senator Quayle will be vice president.

On vacation I met some Republicans who said not to worry about Quayle having to deal with the H-bomb and Gorbachev because the Republican platform commits Bush to staying alive for a full four-year term.

Reassuring as that is, I would feel even better if Quayle would promise that his first act, in the event of Bush's death, would be to resign.

Except that then Jim Wright, Speaker of the House of Representatives, would become President.

Jim Wright is the man whose writings, collected between hard covers, have made him the favorite author of the teamsters' union. Quite an honor indeed.

This is another reason to put the thing off a year or 18 months, then start all over again.

Or maybe the press, television and polling wizards could be persuaded to reopen the campaign and give Dukakis one more crack at the job.

Of course that would probably tempt Dukakis to start trying to be likable. The one thing about Dukakis so far has been his failure to be likable.

Likable has very little to do with running a government. Look at Mayor Koch, who used to be as likable as all get-out.

Did likable get the New York streets paved and the garbage collected? A mayor's job is to collect the garbage and keep the streets paved, and if he wants to be unlikable while doing it, let him.

Same for presidents. The president's job is to keep the United States from becoming a wholly owned subsidiary of Japan. Likable is incidental.

Dukakis's one strong point seemed to be that he understood this, and since he is not very likable we were spared the embarrassment of a phony performance.

Speaking of phony, where does Bush get his information about the origins of language?

Television reception was hard to pick up clearly in the Kalahari Desert, so I may have misheard and mis-seen him, but I could swear he said "phony" was a word that came from Boston.

Ah well, Reagan has left us with a taste for likable presidents, so maybe Bush is only giving us what we deserve. Bet the Japanese won't put up with such nonsense when they take charge.

Dukakis' campaign faces time shortage, ammunition surplus

Tom Wicker
Columnist

NEW YORK — No doubt fired up by the North Carolina barbecue he was eating during the interview, Michael Dukakis told Robin Toner of The New York Times that he finally was ready to slug it out with a "bankrupt" opponent who was relying on "disgraceful" tactics.

It's about time. Talking to Toner, the governor sounded rather like that character in the movie "Network" who electrified the nation with the cry: "I'm mad as hell and I'm not going to take it anymore!"

Unfortunately for him, that's not how Dukakis usually has sounded in these last six weeks that have so nearly sunk his presidential campaign.

Not only would some of the promised flash and fire live up to his own wooden performance, it might engender a candidate whose vigorous style would be seen as an extremely attractive alternative to Bush's perceived personality drawbacks.

A fighting candidate still could make an effective issue of the cheap and vituperative campaign George Bush has been waging, while nailing Bush for some of the weaknesses and deceptions that campaign has been concealing.

The recent second debate was the best — and maybe the last — opportunity for Dukakis to launch a fighting finish, throw his opponent on the defensive for a change, and campaign as forcefully as his party has a right to expect of him.

The jury is still out on his performance, but the real test of whether the Dukakis camp gained any ground from the encounter will be reflected in the shrinking campaigning time remaining before Nov. 8.

Why not, for one good example of how he might force Bush onto the defensive, stop apologizing because the American Civil Liberties Union has taken some positions Dukakis doesn't share?

Hit back instead at George Bush for siding with Ed Meese in a know-nothing attack on an organization that fights for every American's freedom of speech, religion, assembly, political views and right to be let alone.

Why not, for another example, quit dodging the word "liberal" and tell the voters forcefully that liberal government and liberal politicians brought this nation Social Security, Medicare, stock market regulation, federal deposit insurance (are you listening, Texas?), rural electrification, the G.I. Bill of Rights that educated untold numbers of American men, federally supported mortgages on the houses most of us live in — and on and on.

"Conservative" Reagan-Bush policies, in grim contrast, led to the wealthiest 40 percent of Americans receiving a record 67.8 percent of national family income in 1987.

The poorest 40 percent had to get by with only 15.4 percent.

Don't leave unsubstantiated the charge that George Bush would "raid" the Social Security trust funds if elected.

Point out that if Bush swears he'll never raise taxes, if he can't cut interest on the Reagan-Bush debt, and if he won't cut the bloated Reagan-Bush national defense spending, the only sizable target for reducing the Reagan-Bush deficit is Medicare and Social Security.

Stop playing beanbag on national defense and remind Bush that he believed as late as 1980 that nuclear war was winnable.

How? "You have a survivability of command in control...of industrial potential, protection of a percentage of your citizens, and you have a capability that inflicts more damage on the opposition than it can inflict upon you," Bush told Robert Scheer of The Los Angeles Times. "That's the way you can have a winner."

He didn't say what "percentage of your citizens" might survive.

Get tough on Bush's so-called "experience," too. Why should this nation do what it has never been asked to do before — elect a former director of the Central Intelligence Agency as president?

Who knows what skeletons are in that closet?

Wicker is a syndicated columnist for the New York Times News Service.

Door-to-door salesman article intended to inform, not scare

Michelle Bleiberg
Managing Editor

In the Oct. 21 issue of The University Daily, a story indicated that a black man was going door-to-door selling magazines and claiming to work for The UD. The story also provided crime prevention tips for personal safety.

The article created quite a stir as the newspaper, the Department of Police Services, the Lubbock Police Department and the Dean of Students Office were flooded with phone calls of panicked students who were scared to death.

It seems as though many students interpreted the story to mean that there is a mad rapist running around town looking to victimize Tech students.

The story was in no way intended to frighten students or start rumors that there is a mad rapist running around town. Instead, the intent of the article was to inform students that a man was claiming to work for The UD and that if students were approached by him to remind them that he is not affiliated with the paper.

The article also offered personal safety tips to make students aware of possible dangers and what to do if a suspicious person — whether he claims to work for the paper or not — comes to the door.

And although a local television station misconstrued an interview with myself and said that the article identified the man in the article as a rapist — despite the fact that the story made no such identification — students should be aware that we wanted them to be cautious of the man, but not because he is a rapist.

I encourage those of you who are scared or feel threatened to call one of the police departments or the Dean of Students Office and ask for help.

If you ever feel threatened or find yourself in an uncomfortable situation, then by all means call the police.

The three departments also provide programs to educate people about personal safety and are more than willing to share those programs with Tech students.

I encourage all students to inquire and participate in the programs as the programs are conducted by qualified individuals and law enforcement officials.

I especially encourage students to attend a personal safety lecture at 9 p.m. Nov. 3 in the University Center Allen Theater.

Opinion

Halt GOP prevarications

To the editor:

I have hesitated to write a letter to the editor in the past on political campaigns because I do not wish to engage in the trading of insults that has characterized the arguments between supporters of the two candidates in this presidential race. However, I feel the issue I am bringing up has to do with much more than just partisan politics.

This letter should not be taken as an attack on a candidate, as that truly serves no purpose; rather it should be read as information I have found helpful in making a political decision.

I believe in the democratic process and I believe in the right of every person to examine the beliefs of both candidates and choose the side which most appeals to him, yet through advertising one candidate is making it impossible for the message of Michael Dukakis to come through all the lies being told about him. This frightens me. It will frighten you also if you think about the many people voting for one candidate because of mistaken assumptions about Michael Dukakis. I want to touch on three points, which are as follows:

1. The Republican Party is tremendously distorting the facts in its commercials accusing Governor Dukakis of a revolving door prison policy. I will gladly tell you the name of the governor who instigated the furlough program in Massachusetts, and he may take all the credit or the blame for the program. His name is Frank Sargent, and he is a member of the Republican Party.

Michael Dukakis did away with the program after the highly publicized tragic incident occurred. One must understand that a new governor does not come into office and rip out all policies of the old governor, and it takes time for him to work out his own programs.

In my opinion, the accusations on television and in speeches made against Michael Dukakis by the other candidate are very hypocritical in nature since they do not apply to Governor Dukakis.

2. The National Rifle Association is also distorting the facts concerning the beliefs of Michael Dukakis. It pays for a commercial running in Lubbock that says Governor Dukakis wants to take your gun away. This statement is a lie. Gun ownership has increased in Massachusetts by three times since Michael Dukakis has been governor. He supports the seven-day waiting period to buy a gun, as do many other politicians, even members of the Republican Party. If you are purchasing a handgun solely for personal protection, why do you object to waiting seven days so that a security check can be done? This will in no way prevent you from buying your gun, but it will prevent criminals from buying a gun and it may prevent emotionally disturbed persons from committing a rash action. I repeat, Michael Dukakis does not want to take your gun away, he only wants to inspire sane gun ownership.

If you must own a firearm, why do you oppose making it harder for criminals to own one also?

3. The next falsehood circulating through advertising by the Republican Party is that Michael Dukakis will leave the country defenseless. Particularly outrageous is the claim that Lubbock's Reese Air Force Base will be the first thing to go, as is claimed in Republican radio and television ads running in Lubbock.

First of all, Michael Dukakis calls a strong conventional defense his first priority in the area of national defense. That means Reese Air Force Base is a top priority to Michael Dukakis since it is an area of conventional defense. On the other hand, Reese is now under the Reagan/Bush administration on a list published by U.S. News & World Report of bases targeted for possible cuts or complete abandonment.

Michael Dukakis has a goal, and it is to deter war. The other candidate seems to have the goal of tarnishing Governor Dukakis' reputation.

All the above points trouble me greatly because I have heard each one quoted as fact by people in Lubbock. Each of these falsehoods has been started by the Republican Party and its candidate, and these are only a few examples.

I hope all supporters of the democratic process and all voters in this nation will take time to find out what Michael Dukakis actually believes in and stands for instead of listening to Republican lies. If you do take the time, not only will you be rewarded but so will the nation.

South African elections show low black turnout

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Security forces ringed polling booths Wednesday as South Africans of all races, voting simultaneously for the first time, elected segregated municipal councils nationwide.

President P.W. Botha's National Party faced a fierce challenge from the extreme-right Conservative Party in white communities, many experiencing their first partisan local elections after decades of Nationalist dominance.

The turnout was low in many black townships where anti-apartheid activists urged an election boycott in defiance of state-of-emergency regulations. Police reported scattered arson and stone-throwing attacks but no fatalities or major clashes.

In Soweto, a township near Johannesburg where more than 2 million blacks live, only 4,000 people had voted by midafternoon, the state radio reported. The radio said 20,000 of Soweto's 347,000 registered voters had cast ballots in advance.

Nationwide, 7,229 council seats were at stake in 1,071 communities. The state radio said only 905 of the 1,839 black council seats were being contested.

Anti-apartheid clergymen such as Anglican Archbishop Desmond Tutu, winner of the 1984 Nobel Peace Prize, opposed the elections and urged South Africans to fast and pray during the day.

The government spent millions of dollars on advertising to promote a high turnout, contending that it was broadening democracy even though blacks cannot vote in national elections.

Critics say turnout percentages will have little meaning because millions of blacks were ineligible to vote. Many leading black opposition groups are banned.

Many schools in black, mixed-race and Asian townships near Johannesburg and Cape Town were virtually deserted as students stayed away to protest the elections.

In the white elections, the pro-apartheid Conservative Party hoped to capture the city council in Pretoria, the capital, and sweep to power in most northern towns.

Formed only eight years ago, and never before a factor in local elections, the Conservative Party won 26 percent of the vote in national elections in May 1987. Its leaders believe they could seriously challenge the National Party in parliamentary elections expected by early 1990.

The Conservatives view Botha's gradual race reforms as capitulation to the black majority and seek to reimpose strict segregation. Under apartheid, the 5 million whites control the economy and maintain separate districts, schools and health services.

The Conservatives want to toughen enforcement of residential segregation and restrict blacks' presence in urban areas.

Saddle Tramps kick off endowment fund drive

By DAWNA COWAN
The University Daily

The Texas Tech Saddle Tramps will present the first $5,000 endowed scholarship to the Student Endowment Fund Saturday prior to the kickoff of the Tech vs. University of Texas football game.

"The Saddle Tramps were established for the betterment of the University, and we feel very proud to be responsible for this endowment," said Saddle Tramp President Steve Morrow.

He said the Saddle Tramps raised the money through various fund raising projects with the intent to make a contribution to the Student Endowment Fund.

The Student Endowment Fund, a scholarship program established Sept. 27, 1987, allows students to solicit support and to award scholarships to other students.

The scholarship fund now totals $7,500, said Shayne Woodard, Student Endowment Fund committee chairman and Student Association president.

Students may contribute any amount to the fund, however, $5,000 will create an endowed scholarship, he said.

Morrow said the Saddle Tramps are proud to provide support to other students.

"Every year, from now on at least, one student will be given a scholarship and the Saddle Tramps will be responsible," Morrow said.

A scholarship of at least $200 will be awarded to a student each year. Morrow said the Saddle Tramps will be allowed to set requirements for the scholarship.

"It won't be set up where Saddle Tramps will receive the scholarship," he said.

He said the Saddle Tramps want to make the scholarship easy for anyone who wants to qualify. Woodard said the Endowment Fund Committee appreciates Saddle Tramps taking the initiative.

"The Saddle Tramps are always the initiators of new projects at Tech and this is no different," Woodard said.

Woodard said the Saddle Tramps are challenging other organizations on campus to give to the Student Endowment Fund.

Woodard said investing in Tech students is an investment in the university's future.

"For us to go into the future of higher education in Texas, it is going to be essential that we provide more resources to students," he said, "resources like scholarships."

Students interested in contributing to the Student Endowment Fund may contact the SA office at 742-3631.

Raider fans invited to attend spirit-filled weekend

By BRANDI RAY
The University Daily

Red Raider fans get ready because the Saddle Tramps are mighty busy with the "Say NO! To Bevo" weekend.

The Saddle Tramps are inviting all Texas Tech students to participate in an All-University Midnight Raiders on Thursday, said Mack Stidom, spirit coordinating committee chairman.

Students planning to participate in the traditional meeting to adorn

Texas Tech with pride and spirit should meet at Memorial Circle at 10:30 p.m., Stidom said, and be prepared to spread red and black streamers across Tech's America.

The Saddle Tramps will provide streamers and tape to be used on light poles around campus and the Will Rogers statue.

Stidom said students should show support for the Raiders on Friday by wearing red and black to classes.

The Red Raider pep rally Friday will continue the weekend's spirit fest. The pep rally starts at 7:30 p.m.

at Jones Stadium, Stidom said.

A skit will be presented and prizes will be awarded to organizations, resident hall groups and other large groups that demonstrate the most spirit, he said.

Prizes from various clothing stores, restaurants and health spas will be awarded to the loudest sections in the stadium, he said.

"We want everybody to wear red and black," Stidom said.

The Saddle Tramp's goal is to fill the stadium, he said.

Soviets to launch space shuttle

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW— The Soviet Union said Wednesday it will launch its space shuttle Buran on an unmanned mission this week, following months of delays similar to those that plagued the maiden voyage of its U.S. counterpart.

A government commission set the launch for 6:23 a.m. Moscow time Saturday (11:23 p.m. EDT Friday) after receiving reports from specialists following several thousand tests of the Buran and its booster rocket, the Energia, the official news agency Tass reported.

Preparations for pouring nearly 2,000 tons of liquid hydrogen, oxygen and hydrocarbon fuel into Energia, billed as the world's most powerful booster rocket, are to begin Thursday, Tass said. The rocket is capable of carrying more than 100 tons of cargo into Earth orbit, and up to 20 tons to the planets Mars and Venus.

State-run television on Wednesday showed the white delta-shaped Buran, with its name emblazoned in red, attached to the Energia on a launch pad at the Soviet Union's Baikonur Cosmodrome on the Central Asian steppes of the republic of Kazakhstan.

Launch was originally planned for the first half of this year, but was postponed as technical problems arose, officials said. A Soviet TV announcer indicated Wednesday the launch time could be pushed back because tests of systems may take longer than anticipated.

Soviet officials have said the first flight would be pilotless to prevent accidents like the Jan. 28, 1986, explosion of the U.S. shuttle Challenger.

Police offer tips to avoid car burglaries

During the month of October, 15 reports of motor vehicle burglary were filed with the Texas Tech Department of Police Services — pushing the property total from car theft over the $12,000 mark.

In an effort to deter increasing incidences of car burglary, the Tech police offer the following suggestions:

- Remove keys from the ignition of the vehicle and make sure windows are rolled up and doors locked.
- Lock valuables in the trunk of the car or remove from the vehicle.
- Mark valuables with your drivers license number. As part of operation ID, the Department of Police Services has engravers available that may be checked out free of charge.
- Park vehicles in well lighted areas.
- If you have expensive items in your car, such as elaborate stereo systems, consider installing some type of vehicle alarm.
- When possible, make periodic checks of your vehicle, especially during those times when you may not move the car for several days.
- Report any suspicious activity to the Department of Police Services.

Parking areas close for Saturday game

Because of the Texas Tech football game against the University of Texas, the following parking areas must be cleared by 8 a.m. Saturday:

- The band parking lot.
- In C-1, the north section of the lot from row H east to the stadium.
- In C-1, the south section of the lot from row F east to the stadium.
- In C-2, the first double row, and half of the second double row of parking closest to the stadium going north/south from Sixth Street to Fourth Street. These spaces have red numbers painted on the curb to indicate reserved parking for all home games.

Scholarship to study abroad available

The Office of International Programs is providing a $1,000 scholarship for education abroad to assist students in meeting the cost of studying in another country. The scholarship will be awarded to students who lack experience in education in a foreign culture.

Applicants must have an interest in international activities, a 3.0 GPA and financial need. Students who feel they can adapt to an overseas culture and environment and who show evidence of language proficiency will be expected to return to Texas Tech University to continue studies toward a degree.

For applications or more information contact the Office of International Programs at 242 West Hall or call 742-3667.

Program presents Turkish art, culture

Dr. Ali Arslan Gurkan, a visiting professor of economics at Texas Tech University from Middle East Technical University in Ankara, Turkey, will present the opening program on Turkish art and culture from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. Friday in the Garden Arts Center at 4215 University Avenue.

A slide show will be presented by Mr. Gunai, a Turkish student at Texas Tech, that will include Museum pieces and culture. For more information contact Linda Christensen at 762-6411, ext. 2725.

South section of C-1 to be closed today

On Thursday the south section of C-1 (the lot west of Jones Stadium) will be closed to commuter traffic; however, with the lot south of KTXT, there will still be plenty of parking.

Health officials doubt smokeless cigarette

By MICHELLE STRICKER
The University Daily

Premier, the long-awaited smokeless cigarette, has hit the market, but whether or not the innovation is as beneficial as the manufacturer claims remains to be seen.

Premier began test-market sales in St. Louis, Tucson and Phoenix, Ariz. in mid-October. Premier's manufacturer, the R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., indicated in the Oct. 24 issue of Newsweek that the product will revolutionize the cigarette industry.

Danny Ingram, Austin American Cancer Society director of communications, said the smokeless cigarette was primarily designed to reduce health risks and for use in areas where smoking is prohibited.

Premier does not differ from regular cigarettes in size, shape or color; however, the inner components distinguish the product from others.

The end of the cigarette contains a small piece of charcoal. Volatile substances, including nicotine and glycerol, are contained in a flavor capsule adjacent to the charcoal. The capsule is surrounded by tobacco leaves and a tobacco-paper filter.

When lit, the substances contained within are vaporized.

The vaporizing process produces a flavored aerosol that the smoker draws through two filters and out the end of the cigarette. The cigarette does not shrink, produce ashes or smoke since it merely runs out of fuel.

Sounds great, doesn't it? Not quite. Ingram said Premier is raising many questions from public-health officials and activists. Health-related organizations are questioning why the cigarette went to market without being tested by the Food and Drug Administration.

The FDA usually does not regulate cigarettes, except for the health-related advertising claims made by the manufacturers. The FDA does, however, regulate medical devices. Ingram said many health officials believe Premier is a medical device that vaporizes nicotine.

Richard Cooper, Reynolds Tobacco attorney and former FDA general counsel, told Newsweek the product's intended use determines whether the FDA may regulate sales. Premier packages will include the Surgeon General's warning and will not include any explicit health claims.

Ingram said, however, that Reynolds will aggressively market Premier with the idea that certain chemical compounds are significantly reduced.

"They are advertising Premier as a safe alternative," Ingram said. "The problem is, we're not sure if it's really a cigarette or not."

R.J. Reynolds also has hired public relations firms to organize scientific

Up In Smoke?

Two weeks ago R. J. Reynolds unveiled the controversial smokeless cigarette Premier in test markets. Unlike other smokeless cigarettes, Premier is more like a conventional cigarette in that it is lit and tobacco fumes are inhaled.

The cigarette emits little smoke from its charcoal tip, and an aerosol fume is sucked through the flavor capsule which clears quickly in air. Mark Harlien/The University Daily seminars designed to educate the public on Premier. If the FDA concludes the seminars are assertions of health claims, the FDA could regulate the product.

Ingram said the American Cancer Society was informed about the release of Premier a few months before the product was marketed. The FDA has been under pressure since that time to thoroughly test the cigarette. The American Cancer Society, the American Heart and American Lung Associations and the American Medical Association are working closely to complete a petition to the FDA that would require the testing of Premier, Ingram said. "Anything foreign that goes into the lungs should be thoroughly tested," he said.

BA's development center sponsors tax conference

By JEFF PARKER
The University Daily

Texas Tech's 36th Annual Tax Institute, sponsored by the Tech Center for Professional Development, begins today at the Lubbock Plaza Hotel and Conference Center.

The program consists of a series of seminars and training programs conducted each year to inform and teach professionals in business, government and industry about current tax law developments.

The two-day conference will focus on bank taxation, passive loss regulations and the 1987 Technical Corrections Act.

Thursday's morning session will deal with current development topics of individual and corporate taxation and tax planning for closely-held corporations. The luncheon will include a lecture entitled "A Time for Change."

Thursday's afternoon topics include the "Passive Loss Regulations," "The Uniform Capitalization Rules: Update on Significant Issues" and will close with the "Current Developments in Oil and Gas Taxation."

Friday's morning agenda will incorporate the "S Corporations After TRA of '86," "Current Developments in Estate and Gift Taxation" and "Effective Communication with the IRS."

The final program, which will be presented Friday, will feature "Dealing with Taxation in the Banking Industry" and "The Role of Financial Planning in the Tax Practice."

Show depicts planets explored by NASA

By GUY LAWRENCE
The University Daily

Seated in the cushioned, reclining chairs, patrons of the planetarium prepare to take an interplanetary voyage on the futuristic space ship Orion to worlds unknown.

"To Worlds Unknown," the current production of the Moody Planetarium of the Museum of Texas Tech, depicts revelations about the universe uncovered by National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

Patricia Martin, educational and program manager for the planetarium, said anyone attending will not only find the show interesting, but enjoyable.

The show, which will run through Nov. 13, takes viewers to the different planets explored by NASA over the last 20 years.

In relation to Earth, the atmospheric pressure of Venus is 90 times greater with temperatures reaching 900 degrees Fahrenheit.

NASA's Mariner spacecraft indicated that Mercury not only resembles the Earth's moon in size and surface qualities, but also in the inability to support an atmosphere.

In 1979, Voyager I revealed the presence of active volcanos on one of Jupiter's Io moon, a characteristic shared only by Earth with the solar system.

Martin said planetarium shows are a good way for the public to find out how tax dollars are spent.

Among the 20 slide projectors that produce the enjoyable show, the Spitz Ball is the main component of the planetarium.

"With the Spitz Ball we can show what skies looked like thousands of years ago by setting the right coordinates," Martin said.

A staff of volunteers perform some operations, Martin said. She encouraged students interested to work on a voluntary basis.

The shows are family oriented with showings at 2 p.m. Tuesday through Sunday and an evening showing at 7 p.m. Thursday. Shows begin at 3:30 p.m. on Saturday and Sunday.

The West Texas Museum Association purchased the first Spitz Ball in 1953 when the museum was located on the main campus. In 1970 the Moody Foundation granted the museum a $25,000 gift to purchase equipment and for the construction of the facility.

The special Christmas show, which will begin showing on Nov. 20, will be a presentation on the different aspects of the star of Bethlehem.

Menudo increases security after riot

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Security around the teen rock group Menudo will be beefed up for a concert today because an autograph session turned into a melee when fans jumped on a stage and began tearing the musicians' clothing, officials said.

The six members of the Puerto Rican rock group are to perform at 8 p.m. today at Freeman Coliseum and security will be much tighter there than at an autograph session, said

Menudo manager Jackie Kaplan. "Everything will go as scheduled and we will have a security meeting to increase it and this is not likely to happen again," Kaplan said. "I don't want to scare people away and I don't want mothers to be scared."

On Tuesday, more than 1,200 teenagers had gathered at Ingram Park Mall for an autograph-signing session and were getting rowdy before the group even appeared.

When the group made it onto a stage, the crowd got more rowdy. After failed pleas from the singers for the crowd to calm down, the musicians were forced to abandon the stage about 6:45 p.m.

The teen fans overpowered the 15 mall security guards and about 30 police officers were called into help quell the disturbance. It took police about 15 minutes to disperse the crowd.

New Jersey town plans 'War of Worlds' celebration

By The Associated Press

GROVERS MILL, N.J. — The Martians are coming again, 50 years after Orson Welles scared the bejabbers out of hundreds of thousands of Americans who believed a War of the Worlds had broken out on Halloween eve.

The hysteria over the radio broadcast clogged telephone lines and roads as the gullible thought huge cylinders carrying Martians were landing throughout the country, wiping out military forces with heat rays and poisonous gas.

Some who sheepishly recounted their terror said they headed for the hills after hearing the fictional newscast. Others said they grabbed their guns and headed for Grovers Mill to fight the invaders. Others just prayed.

Millions heard the broadcast; one survey gave the listenership at 6 million, another at 12 million. Of those who tuned in, according to the surveys, up to 1 million believed it was real, despite disclaimers before and after the program.

After 50 years, many people in Grovers Mill and surrounding West Windsor Township are tired of rehashing the tale every autumn.

Douglas Forrester, a state pension director and former West Windsor mayor heading up plans for the 50th anniversary celebration, said it's a good time to think about why "War of the Worlds" caused such consternation.

"It was a worldwide event, and it raises intriguing questions about human psychology, civil defense, the power of broadcasting, media responsibility and what kind of relationship we might have with other beings from another world," Forrester said. "There was a cascade of alarm that was just unstoppable."

Freda Remmers, a Kean College media professor, said many believed the broadcast because the popular show Edgar Bergen and Charlie McCarthy on a competing network ran long and those who tuned in late to the Mercury Theatre missed the disclaimer.

With radio's sophistication growing, listeners were becoming accustomed to hearing reports from Europe about the deepening threat of war, she noted.

A few days after the broadcast, New York Tribune columnist Dorothy Thompson said Welles and the Mercury Theatre deserved a medal.

"They have proved how easy it is to start a mass delusion," she wrote. "Mr. Welles and his theater have made a greater contribution to an understanding of Hitlerism, Mussolinism, Stalinism, anti-Semitism and all the other terrorisms of our times than all the words about them that have been written by reasonable men."

The fear that someone might believe the broadcast was discussed beforehand, Remmers said, and the CBS network requested 38 script changes inserting factual errors to tip off the audience.

Forrester, 35, said he was reluctant to get involved in the celebration until his wife, Andrea, persuaded him it would be a good way to raise money to preserve the pond and farmland where the "invasion" took place.

Organizers of the celebration, which will run today through Sunday, plan laser shows and fireworks that will recreate a Martian landing.
