Tech Talks

With recent attention to students' personal safety, The University Daily interviewed several students on campus concerning crime.

Students were asked if the university provides adequate protection for students against crime. Most of the students said they thought the university could do more to protect students.

Many called for more police officers — patrolling and on foot.

Bush: 'I'm that man'—Dukakis: 'pour it on'

By The Associated Press

Presidential race begins to wind down

George Bush said Wednesday that voters should pick a president who reflects their hopes and dreams for America and proudly proclaimed, "I am that man."

Michael Dukakis urged supporters to "keep pouring it on" in a drive for an Election Day upset.

Republican Bush and Democrat Dukakis made their rounds six days before the election while all around them the pace of campaigning quickened.

Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole went to three states Wednesday in a bid to help endangered GOP candidates for Congress. Sen. Edward Kennedy countered for the Democrats by campaigning in Minnesota, where Hubert H. Humphrey III is a Senate race underdog.

Officials in both parties agree Democrats are likely to retain control of both houses of Congress after next week's balloting, although Republicans harbor hopes of winning enough close Senate seats to reduce the current 54-46 Democratic advantage.

President Reagan campaigned in Ohio, where he tried to turn Dukakis' "On Your Side" rallying cry against the Democrats. They're "on your side when they want to get their hands on your wallets," he said.

John Howard in Owensboro, Ky.,

set up a sort of drive-through poll at his Crickets Classy Car Wash, and said the results were about even. Customers could drive into a bay named for the presidential candidate of their choosing. "It's very scientific," he said. "The margin of error is 100 percent."

Dukakis' aides said their private polls were encouraging while the public polls seemed to be pointing to a Republican victory next Tuesday. ABC said its latest Illinois survey was a dead heat, but Bush led in other surveys from Ohio, Arkansas and Connecticut.

Bush campaigned through Illinois and Michigan, two key Midwestern battlegrounds.

At his first stop, at Adlai Stevenson High School outside Chicago, he instructed an audience made up largely of students how to make an Election Day choice.

"You're not going to make your decision on some television (advertisement) or some sound bite, and what I want you to do is look beyond the charges, get past the shouting and choose as president the person who represents your values, your dreams, your hopes for the United States, and I am that man."

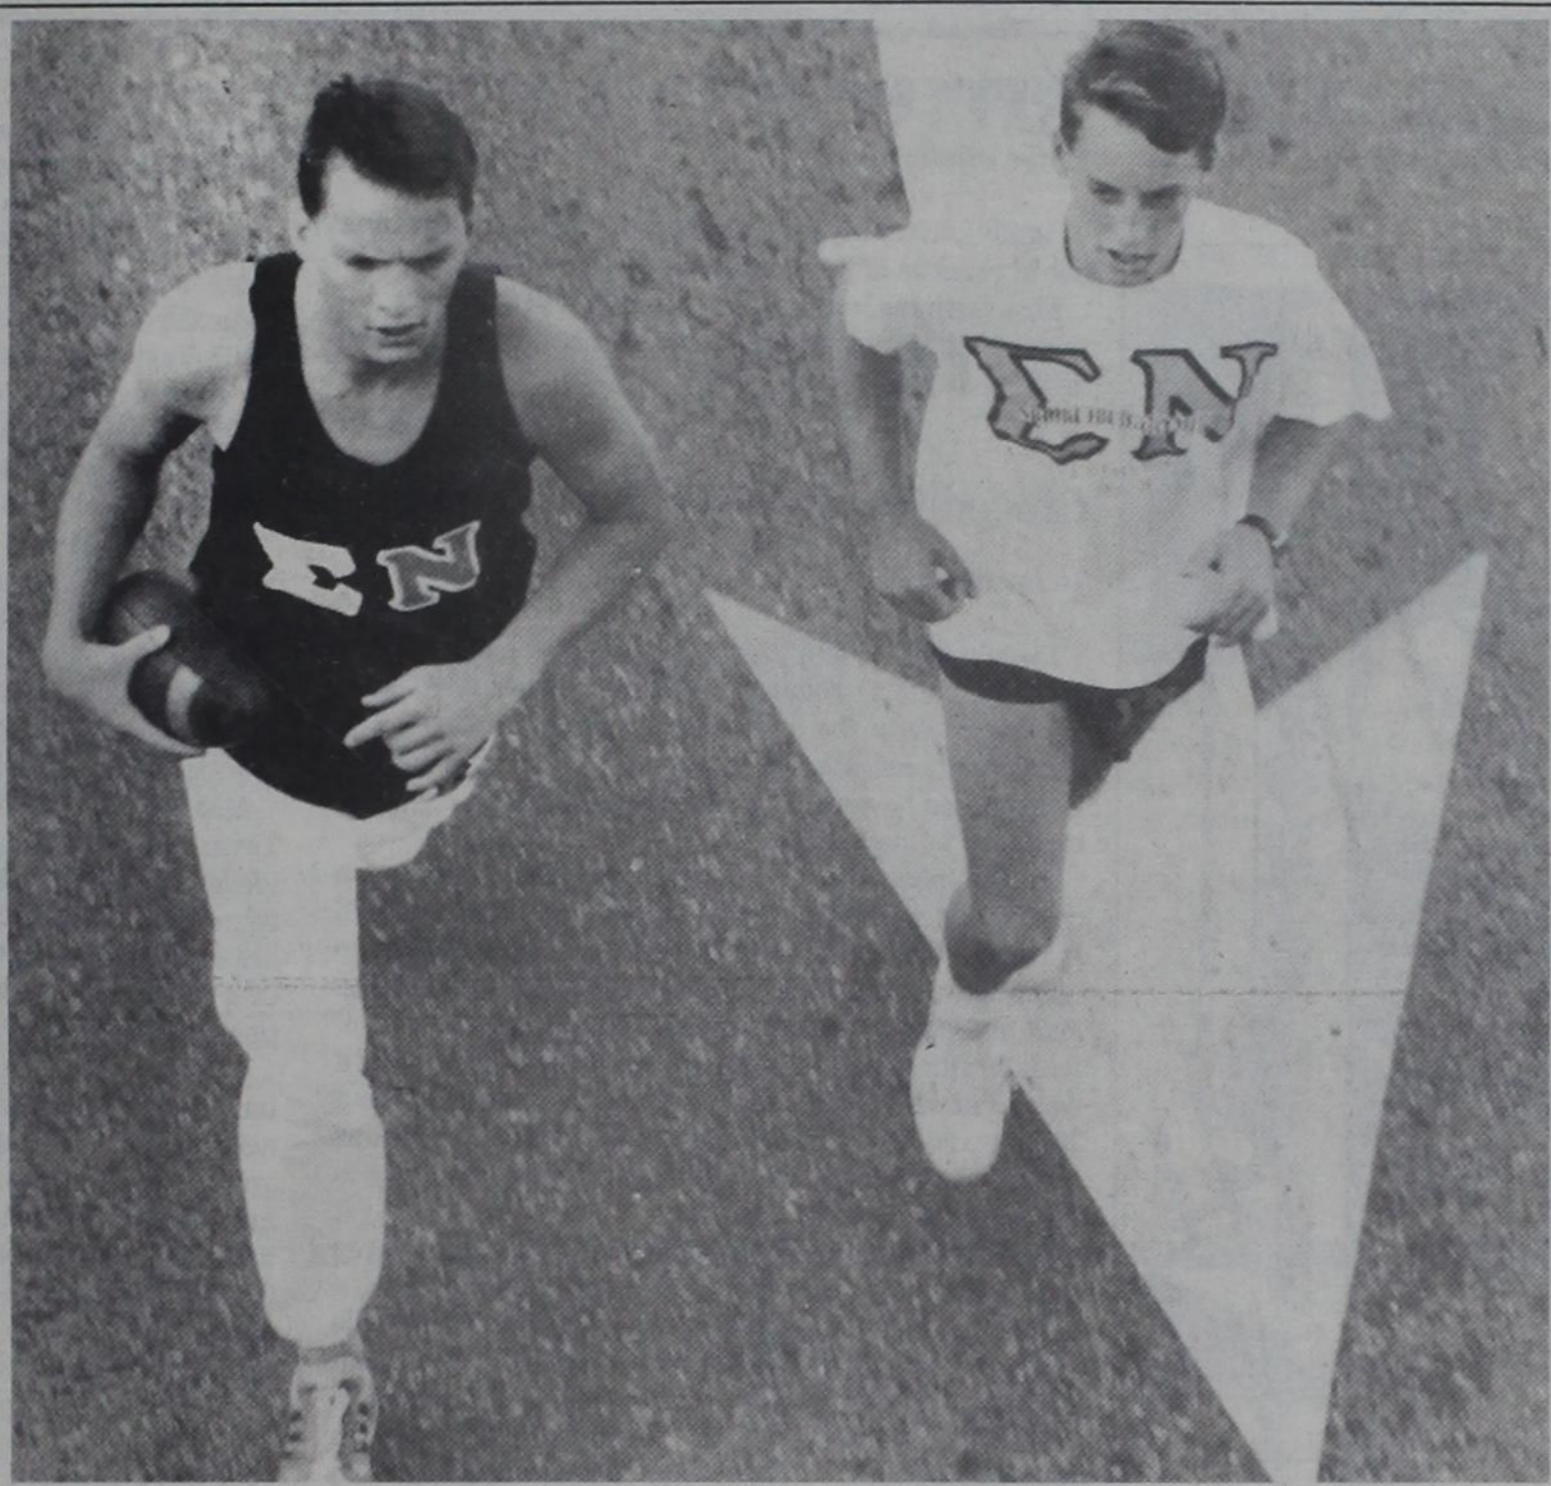

He returned to the theme later in Grand Rapids, Mich. "I represent the mainstream, the mainstream views and the mainstream values. If I win, it will be a mainstream mandate. That's what this election is all about," he said.

Bush also said Dukakis was conducting a "media blitz," appearing "on every television show except 'Wheel of Fortune.'" He was afraid that Vanna might turn over the L-word."

Dukakis began his day in Minnesota by visiting his wife Kitty, who is hospitalized for an upper respiratory infection.

At a downtown rally, the Massachusetts governor urged supporters to "keep pouring it on and pouring it on" as he summoned up memories of Harry Truman's upset victory of 1948, John Kennedy's closely won contest of 1960 and Hubert Humphrey's narrow defeat in 1968.

Holder says opponent's commercial outright lie

By BETH GEORGE
The University Daily

The Democratic candidate for the 83rd Texas Congressional District, Floyd Holder, denounced his opponent's newest campaign commercial as an outright lie.

During a press conference Wednesday afternoon at the Holiday Inn Civic Center, Holder said his Republican contender, Delwin Jones, was attempting to employ guilt by association tactics to portray Holder in a bad light.

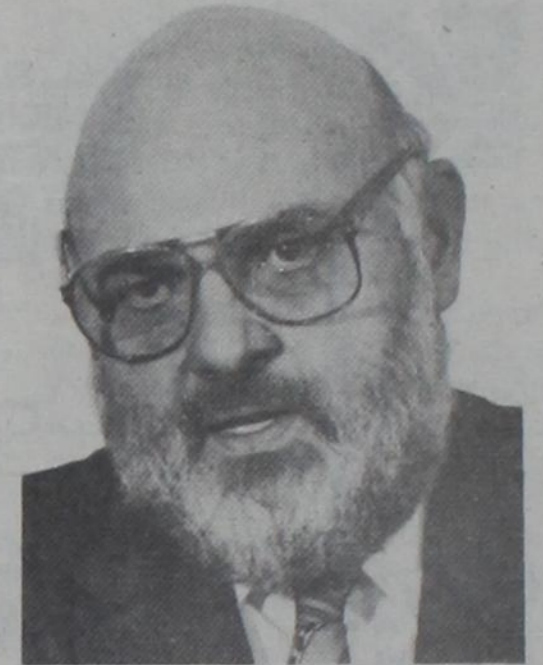

"He is running a TV commercial now that says in effect, and very point blank, that I approve of killing police officers, and I would do the same thing myself," Holder said. "That's an outright lie and you can't let that go unchallenged."

The commercial, which accuses Holder of defending a known murderer and saying he approves of the crime, began running locally on Monday.

"He's taken things out of context," Holder said. "He's used guilt by association to take advantage of the fact that I did my duty as a court appointed lawyer, and I think the voters know that's what he is trying to do."

Holder said he did not feel Jones' negative commercial campaign had damaged his campaign.

"I think this year voters have been subjected to the most negative of campaigns. I think most voters obviously see how distorted that sort of commercial is," Holder said. "I think it says more about him than it does about me."

Holder went on to denounce his opponent for misleading voters. Jones misrepresented his record and his representation of the 83rd Congressional District, Holder said.

"He asks the voters to re-elect him. He is not the incumbent. He has never served as the 83rd District representative," Holder said.

Holder indicated that election code article 255.006 defines misrepresentation of a candidate's status as an incumbent as a misdemeanor offense. Holder said, however, he has no plans to file a complaint against Jones for the infraction.

Director says college students prime candidates for alcoholism

By CINDY PANDOLFO
News Editor

Many people would describe Joan as a passive person, because she avoids stressful situations and is quiet, shy and super-independent.

Inside Joan hides her fear, loneliness and feelings of unimportance and unworthiness from the world and wonders, "Am I invisible?" She hides in a shell hoping to be noticed, but powerless to do anything about it.

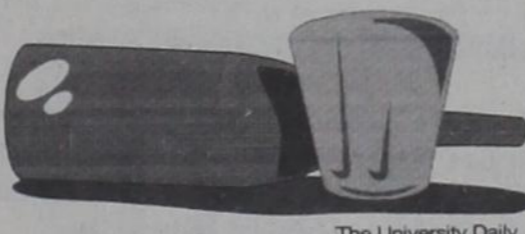

Sound familiar? Many people — children, teenagers, college students, even adults — know these feelings because they too are lost children.

Children who grew to adulthood, who have one or more alcoholic parent, come from a world where roles are misty, unclear and out of focus. Adult children of alcoholics take on role models — the dependent, the co-dependent, the hero, the lost child, the scapegoat or the family mascot — similar to role models assumed in other dysfunctional families, according to Renee Coke, executive director of the Lubbock Council on Alcohol and Drug Abuse.

Coke, whose father was an alcoholic, describes herself as a lost child. Her baby brother, she said, was the mascot. Coke and her brother had other compulsive behaviors — she was bulimic and he is a compulsive overeater. Coke said she also has two sisters — one of whom is chemically dependent and the other married an alcoholic.

The family might seem unusual to

The University Daily

Fourth in a series

many people, but in reality Coke said statistics indicate they are typical.

Gene Robison, director of Specialized Treatment for Adolescent Recovery (STAR), said generally one of three kids from kindergarten through graduate school have a practicing chemical dependent parent. Statistics indicate that seven of every 10 children or adults who come from alcoholic homes will become alcoholics, he said.

Of the remaining three, two will develop compulsive disorders — bulimia, anorexia, gambling — and the remaining person will marry an alcoholic, he said.

"Even though they vow, 'I won't be like them,' that is exactly what happens," he said. "Everybody becomes something."

Coke said family genetics are important because they can help identify people who are potential alcoholics.

"It is a combination of nature and nutrition," she said. "Alcoholism is definitely genetically disposed. The nature is learned from living with alcoholics."

Coke said American society is an addictive society.

"We are a society that says, 'If you don't feel good, take something for it,'" she said. "As a society, we bought into that whole 'haven't got time for the pain' theme. If life is painful, we escape with chemicals."

College students are prime candidates for alcoholism. Going to college creates major lifestyle changes, Coke said. The peer pressure as well as the stress of succeeding are overwhelming, she said.

"College is a hard age group," Coke said. "Family systems do not discourage dependence, they encourage it. How can parents tell their kids not to smoke a joint when mom has a cigarette dangling out her mouth and dad has a can of beer in his hand. Addiction is addiction, the drug of choice really doesn't matter."

Tech graduate student Michael Stoll, who is a STAR substance counselor, agreed that college students are susceptible to alcohol abuse. As a recovering alcoholic, Stoll is acquainted with stress and pain and loneliness.

"I didn't plan on being an alcoholic. It was not a goal for my life. It just happened," he said. "I was well established in my abuse when I entered college, I kept wondering, 'Why am I hurting so much?'"

People who become alcoholics are not stupid, Stoll said. Many are highly intellectual and creative people. Although anyone can become addicted, Stoll said no one plans on becoming an alcoholic. But when the disease develops, he said there is hope.

Admission standards topic of meeting

By DAWNA COWAN
The University Daily

The Texas Tech University Board of Regents will discuss implementation of upgraded undergraduate admission standards at committee meetings today at the El Paso Regional Academic Health Center.

The board will discuss a report that outlines a plan to upgrade the university's undergraduate admissions standards in the fall of 1989. At the last meeting, regents requested a report of the projected impact of adding a fourth year to the already adopted plan to raise standards over a three-year period. A fourth year would bring Tech's admission standards equal to the standards of the University of Texas and Texas A&M.

Regents also will request a name change for the Department of Medical Technology to the Department of Clinical Laboratory Science to follow the national trends.

A report will be presented by the Health Sciences Centers department of family medicine on progress of placing physicians in rural hospitals.

In other business, regents will seek authorization to receive bids on a hydrodynamics test facility to be used for research on automotive design.

Regents will consider a proposal to establish a center for the study of addictions in the College of Home Economics. The center, which would be directed by Carl Andersen, associate professor of human development and family studies, will provide course work in addictive disorders.

Changes in the Office of Public Affairs and the General Council's office adopted by regents Sept. 2, in a reorganization plan also will be discussed.

The Board of Regents meeting will begin at 9:30 a.m. Friday.

Republicans vs. Democrats

Campus groups to face off in debate

By GUY LAWRENCE
The University Daily

The Texas Tech chapters of the College Republicans and the Young Democrats will face each other in a 7 p.m. debate today in the University Center Coronado Room.

The debate was organized by the UC Programs ideas and issues committee, the Forensics Union, Pi Sigma Alpha and the Society of Professional Journalist, Sigma Delta Chi.

Guest panelists will direct questions concerning national issues and party ideology to Republican and Democrat representatives.

The panelist are Abner Euresti, anchor for KCBD-TV, Gladys Maynard, president of the League of Women Voters and Cindy Pandolfo, news editor for The University Daily.

Alan Bojorquez, UCP ideas and issues committee chairman, said the committee wanted to do something for the Tech students that pertained to the election.

When approached by the committee, the College Republicans had already begun work on a debate with the Young Democrats, he said.

The committee was concerned about the Tech students, Bojorquez said.

"We wanted to give Tech students a chance to hear how other college students feel about the election and the issues," Bojorquez said.

The debate format will follow a format that allows the two groups to answer questions from the opposing groups as well as from the audience.

Mathew Thomas, a Forensics Union member, said the debate format will be similar to debates seen on television with the exception that the College Republicans and the Young Democrats will have no prior knowledge of the questions.

He said the two groups will prepare three-member teams.

First Lady's love of 'flub-dubs' mocks ethics

William Safire Columnist

BOSTON — The first woman to bear the title 'First Lady' was Mary Todd Lincoln. Maligned as a Southern sympathizer and suffering mental strain that ultimately led to her institutionalization, she infuriated her husband by her obsession with finery acquired at public expense.

President Reagan's reaction to the revelation in Time magazine of his wife's "borrowing" of haute-couture dresses and diamond jewelry is different: his ire is directed not at his wife, who can do no wrong in his eyes, but at the persnickety press for daring to suggest a whiff of venality or illegality in his wife's actions.

The facts so far developed are not in dispute. Six years ago, to avoid the appearance of impropriety and to comply with the gift-disclosure requirement of the Ethics in Government Act, the White House counsel advised Mrs. Reagan to make public any loans of gowns. She agreed.

But for six years, she has been cheating on what her spokeswoman now calls "her own little rule." Why? "A woman's prerogative to change her mind." That sexist claim has no place in ethics, politics or law.

When asked recently by Time about the scores of expensive dresses she failed to report as loans, Mrs. Reagan at first apparently lied, claiming they were her purchases.

The president's press secretary was sent forth to declare: "There is no legal problem, period. There is no ethical problem, period."

Now let's get down to the fashion business. Designers do not lend gowns to celebrities out of friendship; they make their creations available for the strictly commercial purposes of publicity and association.

Thus the well-publicized modeling of clothes by the First Lady has a specific value to the "lender." (Let's presume the garments and jewels were returned in timely fashion; if not, they may be construed as gifts subject to taxation.) The value to the "borrower" also is evident — she gets to wear the finery rental-free.

That's fine for a rock star or a Nobel Prize winner, but for a public official it is unethical. You may not use public office for private gain has this modern corollary: You may not use your spouse's public office for your private gain.

The East Wing Dinner-Invitation & Source-Protection Association will spring to Mrs. Reagan's defense, as E.W.D.I.S.P.A. members so fiercely did when she meddled behind her husband's back in staff railroadings and intervened in presidential scheduling.

Hang a sign on the White House: No tipping allowed. No royalties for White House Cookbooks; no honoraria for speeches while on the public payroll; and no flub-dubs for presidential spouses. "Family values" should not include the value of being in the First Family.

Safire is a syndicated columnist for the New York Times News Service.

Plaudits awarded for inciting debate

To the editor:

Miss Bethune, allow me to commend you on your admirable ability to stimulate one of the most responsive debates in The UD this year.

Cacy Saffery

Crocodilian article was good, but ...

To the editor:

I would like to compliment Audra Spray on her article (Oct. 26, page 1) about the research that is ongoing in my lab. Most of the information that she reported was absolutely accurate. To ensure that no misinformation is dispensed however, I would like to correct a couple of mistakes in the article.

In the photograph accompanying the article, the crocodilian in question is an alligator, not a crocodile. In the text, the nests of alligators are about 4 feet in diameter, not the eggs (the eggs are about 4 to 5 inches long and about 2 inches across). Regarding the size of female alligators, the largest one I have ever caught was somewhat over 9 feet long and she weighed about 300 pounds. A typical female will be from 5 to 7 feet as Audra reported, but will weigh much less, generally in the range of 70 to 150 pounds.

Although including turtles, snakes and fish, a large part of the alligator's diet is also made up of nutria, a South American rodent that was introduced into the United States during the last century. Finally, it was not necessarily clear from the article that our (myself, a graduate student — P. Scott White and an undergraduate — Stephanie Kain) research on crocodilians involves analyzing mitochondrial and ribosomal DNAs isolated from blood to assess crocodilian relationships and evolution.

I realize that The UD reporters are largely in a no-win situation in presenting all of the information regarding what researchers at Tech are doing, because they have to generate articles that are both interesting and understandable to many readers. Given that difficult and unenviable task, I reiterate that Ms. Spray did a fine job.

Research something besides party line

To the editor:

Someone should inform Ms. Kim Bethune of the Surgeon General's latest warning: reading too much political party propaganda can cause blindness. No, I'm not referring to physical sight, either.

In her most recent display of misinformation, she states that Dukakis has balanced 10 budgets in a row. According to the Office of Management and Budget in Massachusetts, they are $9.4 billion, yes that's billion, in debt. An example of Mr. Dukakis's so-called balancing act is the fact that on the fiscal year ending June 30, 1988, he avoided an embarrassing deficit just hours before the Democratic National Convention began.

In the words of the October 1988 Nation's Business, he balanced the budget "with a lot of creative accounting and borrowing." On Oct. 24, 1988, the Massachusetts State Treasurer's office reported that if tax revenues did not increase significantly within two days the state

Russell Baker Columnist

NEW YORK — "Fidem meam oblige ..."

At my old high school they now say the Pledge of Allegiance in Latin.

Nobody told me before I got there, so I couldn't check with the Bush Americanism Committee to find if it was OK.

The kids looked OK., though, while they were saying it.

Not like a wild-eyed gang of card-carrying members of the you-know-what, and I don't mean Communist Party, nor do I have anything against civil liberties.

Although, of course, I wouldn't want my sister to demonstrate for one.

"... vexillo civitatum Americae ..."

Truth is, I went over there to be out in the country, out in the real America, out where you can enjoy feeling the mud between your toes and smelling the hay in your teeth, outside the Beltway, out with real people in the midst of the real world again.

Although, to be perfectly frank, that isn't the truth at all, but just a little Gusno Politico, a babble issued by people who have been marinated in politics at times like the unfortunate present.

The true truth is, I went over there for a gathering of old-timers who still remembered the place lovingly.

"... foederatarum et rei publicae ..."

My old high school is Baltimore City College, founded in 1839.

I used to know why they call it a college, but the reason was too dull to keep in mind.

Fifty years ago it was a steamy mass of 3,000 boys, all white in segregated Baltimore, presided over by men who were not to be trifled with.

The teachers wore three-piece business suits, some with Phi Beta Kappa keys on their vest chains, and smelled of boiled cigars and the secondhand cigarette smoke that filled the privacy of the teachers' lounges.

For a student caught smoking on campus the punishment was Draconian in nature.

The hypocrisy of smoky teachers forbidding students to light up never stirred an uprising against a corrupt system, possibly because cigarettes, at 12 cents a pack, were so expensive that a generation of streetcar riders brown-bagging their lunches couldn't afford to smoke until they went to work.

Old-timers going back to high school can't help affording a macabre spectacle to the students.

It's hard when you're 17 to look at one of these human antiques and realize the ruin contains a man who still goes through life subconsciously imagining himself a youth until a nastily situated mirror startles him with the reality.

When we decided to let the young recoil at our tremors and wrinkles the other morning, it may have been because we felt there was an unpaid debt to the school that we had to settle.

For a long time the school had declined until it seemed doomed to close.

Then, thanks to the exertions of a few old-timers, it had started a recovery.

It was reorganized as an elite school for specially qualified students, a place where high-school people could study calculus and pledge allegiance in Latin.

"... Uni nationi, Deo ducente, non dividendae ..."

The rebuilding also aimed to make it a school reflecting the sentiment embodied in the phrase about a nation undivided.

The auditorium on which we looked out was filled with people black, brown and white, male and female.

It was an elite place made possible by the conviction of a few old-timers that "one nation, undivided" could be more than a hollow phrase for political rogues to abuse at election time.

Of course it didn't hurt that the men who refused to let the school die included alumni with deep pockets as well as some who knew how to get things done politically.

People like William Donald Schaefer, former Baltimore mayor and now governor of Maryland, and Kurt Schmoke, the present mayor.

It was instructive to measure the students' cheers. For athletic old-timers Tommy Byrne, who pitched for the Yankees in their glory days, and George Young, general manager of the New York Giants, applause was thunderous.

It was even louder, though, for Rowan LeCompte, whose stained-glass windows help glorify the Washington National Cathedral.

The loudest applause of all, however, went to Bernard Manekin, a Baltimore businessman, when he confessed that he knew no Latin.

"... cum libertate iustitiaeque omnibus."

would have to borrow as much as $200 million dollars to pay its bills. (Wall Street Journal, Oct. 26) Guess where Dukakis gets the money? He raids the state pension fund. This is a fact no matter what he said in the second presidential debate.

Regarding these so-called experts on the minimum wage, the only experts that agree with your point of view are Dukakis's campaign staff and Jesse Jackson. Why, Ms. Bethune, don't you read some real material on the minimum wage done by real economists?

Some examples are Jacob Mincer's "The Economics of Wage Floors," in Research in Labor Economics 6 (1982, pages 311-333) and Edward Gramlich's "Impact of Minimum Wage on Other Wages, Employment, and Family Incomes," in Brookings Papers on Economic Activity 2 (1976, pages 409-451). There are many others.

Come on, Ms. Bethune, do yourself a favor! Read and listen to something other than straight Democratic Party propaganda. I believe you are smarter than that.

Also, Mr. David Fisher and Mr. Wade Laing (as did Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox) expressed their feelings about the Republicans stealing and defacing signs. This is a dreadful practice. However, Democrats are equally guilty of this action in Lubbock and probably every other city in the nation where people know an election is going to take place.

I believe it is a misuse of a public office when the attorney general of this state can appear on the evening news saying "... Republicans caught stealing signs are guilty of a misdemeanor crime." Jim Mattox has been involved in politics and law for many years and is well aware that both parties participate in these types of activities. It is fine to be concerned about this practice, but unless you can say that your side isn't doing either, these "He stole my sign" comments should be withheld.

Accusations may prove inaccurate

To the editor:

This letter is in response to Robert Williams' letter printed in The UD on Oct. 26.

In your statement in which you said Mr. White and "several others have shown on several occasions your unwillingness or inability to try to expose yourself to the ideas, life patterns and music of other people," you make a gross error. Mr. Williams, have you ever heard of a band named the Talking Heads? The Talking Heads is a band that is very diversified, their music has been influenced by reggae, ska, big band swing, jazz, and various other folk musics from the world. Now, since it is such a diversified band, it would probably be highly improbable that Mr. White, "because of your closed-mindedness," would listen to it. Wrong! The tacky "ain't motifi" which you criticize Mr. White for using is actually a rephrasing of the Talking Heads album Fear of Music's song "Life During Wartime." So, actually you should be criticizing David Byrne of the Talking Heads for writing this excellent song. Our suggestion to you is for you to "grow and mature" a little bit before you criticize others. Obviously, KTXT is not as "musically and ethnically" diverse as you believe.

Lastly, Robert, we too are Tech students and Lubbock residents. Unfortunately, we are very dissatisfied with KTXT's format.

Tech prof finds art of 'doing it yourself'

By AUDRA SPRAY
The University Daily

Necessity is the mother of invention, Texas Tech art professor Gene Mittler discovered.

Mittler was unable to find a textbook suitable for an art appreciation class he was teaching, so he decided to write a book himself.

Mittler said he felt the existing art textbooks did not offer students a complete concept of the art world.

"I wanted the students to be actively involved in the four disciplines of art: criticism, aesthetics, history and studio," Mittler said. "There were a lot of good books on art history and studio, but no books covered aesthetics, and some briefly touched on criticism."

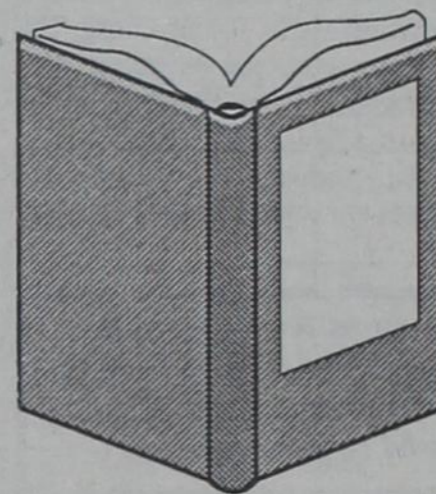

Art in Focus, the first of three art books Mittler has worked on, took three or four years to complete, he said. One full year was spent in Europe—primarily in Spain, France, Italy and Germany—securing permission to use illustrations for the text.

Mittler said he tried to use illustrations of unique pieces of art. The illustrations in Art in Focus are a blend of well-known and equally important but lesser known works of art, he said.

"For example, every textbook will talk about the Romanesque door at the monastery in Ripoll, Spain, which is identified as an outstanding example of medieval relief sculpture," Mittler said. "But the facade of the church in Sanguesa, Spain, is just as well done and is in a better state of preservation."

Mittler also co-authored Creating and Understanding Drawing with Mittler said the illustrations in Creating and Understanding Drawing are primarily from galleries and museums in the United States. A number of works by Tech professors also are included in Creating and Understanding Drawing.

"We tried to get works representative of U.S. artists in general," Mittler said.

Creating and Understanding Drawing and the second edition of Art in Focus were published this year. The second edition of Art in Focus was expanded to include the art of the Orient, Africa and Moorish Spain. Both books, which have been adopted for classroom use in Texas, are designed for use at the high school level, Mittler said.

Art in Focus also has been adopted in Florida, Indiana, Tennessee and North Carolina, he said.

James Howze, another Tech art professor, Mittler and Howze began work on the book in May 1987.

Mittler said they discovered that most drawing texts were studio-oriented, and they decided to include criticism and aesthetics in the text so students could learn from other artists.

Chief justice refutes opponent's TV ads

By BETH GEORGE
The University Daily

Texas Chief Justice Tom Phillips condemned campaign commercials of his opponent, Ted Robertson, that he said are a cynical attempt to confuse voters.

Phillips journeyed to Lubbock Wednesday to address his comments to a group of about 25 supporters at the Lubbock International Airport.

U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm accompanied the Chief Justice to lend his support and endorsement to the campaign.

Refuting charges made in Robertson's television commercials, Phillips referred to an advertisement that he said insinuates he was the subject of a 60 Minutes investigative report about the Texas Supreme Court and a tie between big money and court justices.

By running such a commercial, Phillips said Robertson demonstrates a disdain for the intelligence of voters and a disregard for truth in the campaign.

"In a cynical attempt to confuse the voters, he pretends that he is the reform challenger," Phillips said.

Gramm indicated Robertson was running misleading commercials because he was banking on the fact that voters have forgotten the names attached to the investigation.

The 60 Minutes investigation damaged the reputation of the Texas judicial system, Gramm said, and the blame has been unfairly reflected on Phillips.

"People don't pay a lot of attention to judicial races, so the shame has been imposed on Phillips," Gramm said.

Run to help foundation for children

By DAWNA COWAN
The University Daily

Sometimes wishes do come true and with the help of the Sigma Nu fraternity, a terminally ill Lubbock child will have his or her wish granted.

A 300-mile Gameball Run to benefit the West Texas Make-A-Wish Foundation began Wednesday afternoon at Jones Stadium.

Fifteen members of the Sigma Nu fraternity will run one-mile increments, carrying a football, all the way to Fort Worth where the Texas Tech Red Raiders will play Texas Christian University Saturday.

In January 1988, a wish was granted to 13-year-old Sean McDannel who lived his dream of flying over the Statue of Liberty and visiting New York City, said Phillip Sandino, Gameball Run chairman.

"It was beautiful," McDannel said. "I took a helicopter ride around the Statue of Liberty."

Sandino said only two children in Lubbock have had wishes granted.

"A lot of times they don't get their wishes granted because they are too sick," he said.

The runners will reach Fort Worth late Friday night or early Saturday morning, Sandino said.

"Some of these guys will end up running 50 or 60 miles," he said.

The money, which was raised through sponsorships from Lubbock companies and organizations, will stay here in Lubbock, Sandino said.

Facility renamed in honor of Emeritus professors

By JEFF PARKER
The University Daily

The Texas Tech engineering student support facility was renamed the Louise C. and James G. Allen Engineering Communications Center in honor of the former Tech faculty members who jointly received the Distinguished Faculty Emeritus Award for 1988.

An endowment of $10,000 from Noel and Christia Bryant of Lubbock provided not only the funding for the center, but also supports a scholarship program in the college's electrical department.

The center, which has been an integral part of the engineering curriculum since the spring of 1985, is dedicated to aiding engineering students with papers, reports, resumes and proposals, Jean Ann Cantore, director of the Allen Center, said.

Cantore said the facility helps students present ideas as well as develop them.

By working with engineering faculty, center employees help students create better papers for presentations, she said.

Mrs. Allen joined the Texas

Technological College publicity department in 1928, worked as an instructor in the journalism department in 1936 and retired in 1964 as an associate professor.

Allen served Tech as an English instructor in 1927, was the dean of men for 12 years and the dean of student life for 19 years before retiring in 1972.

Nominee discusses state's energy, trucking issues

By MICHELLE STRICKER
The University Daily

The need to deregulate trucking and revitalize the Texas energy industry were stressed as major concerns Wednesday by the Republican nominee for Texas Railroad Commissioner Ed Emmett.

Emmett previously served eight years in the Texas House of Representatives representing Kingwood. He is the former chairman of the House Committee on Energy and was a four-term member of the House Committee on Transportation.

Trucking deregulation is one of three main issues Emmett stressed. He believes the Railroad Commission is protecting large trucking firms causing manufacturers, farmers, ranchers and small businesses to suffer from high trucking rates.

"As long as the federal government has deregulated trucking, products can be shipped in from out of state for much less money," Emmett said.

"Businesses are moving out of Texas."

Secondly, Emmett believes a stronger emphasis should be placed on Texas natural gas. Natural gas surpluses have not been sufficiently developed in the past, he said.

Emmett said he has been told by many oil and gas operatives that Nugent solicited for campaign funds before decisions were reached on impending cases involving their companies.

Duchess has close call with ship cable

By The Associated Press

PERTH, Australia — A security man dragged the Duchess of York to safety Wednesday when a steel cable tying her husband's warship to the wharf snapped, narrowly missing the couple, officials said.

home in the care of a nanny. The duchess encountered controversy after extending an official 10-day bicentennial visit by another four weeks while she followed her husband around to various ports. Prince Andrew is expected back in Britain on Dec. 16.

The potentially serious accident occurred as Sarah stood chatting on Fremantle Port's Victoria Quay, with Prince Andrew, who was on a lower deck of his ship HMS Edinburgh.

The 2-inch steel hawser, which helped secure the ship to the dock, snapped with a crack toward the bow of the guided-missile destroyer and snaked back along the ship's side.

A television reporter said the duchess was less than 10 feet away and a detective with Sarah, hearing the noise, grabbed her by the arm and pulled her back from the side of the dock as the steel rope went past.

"It was pretty close," said a dock worker.

Channel 7 television said Prince Andrew and other crew members ducked for cover as the cable smashed into the ship's hull. It said Andrew appeared angry at the incident and had "stern words" with an enlisted man.

The couple soon recovered their composure and waved white handkerchiefs at each other as the ship sailed out on schedule.

The duchess was to leave for London later Wednesday after a visit that came under strong criticism from British newspapers over her decision to leave her newborn daughter at

Rebounding: Red Raiders hope to bounce back from 1987-88

By BRAD WALKER and JOEL WEST
The University Daily

Last season's 9-19 record gave the Texas Tech basketball program its first losing season since 1982-83. It had been 14 years from then since the Red Raiders had turned in a sub-500 record.

In 17½ years as mentor of the Tech program, Gerald Myers owns a 300-201 record and only two losing ledgers. His teams are accustomed to winning.

But the class of 1988-89 roundballers has seen a record of 42-46 over the last three seasons.

So how will the '88-89 Raiders respond to last year's disappointment? Myers believes it's all in ignoring how the team performed last season.

"We're going to be picked pretty low — down at the bottom," Myers said. "But I think the main thing is how we feel about ourselves — our own opinion about ourselves."

"I think that's more important than how we did last year than what everybody is going to think about us."

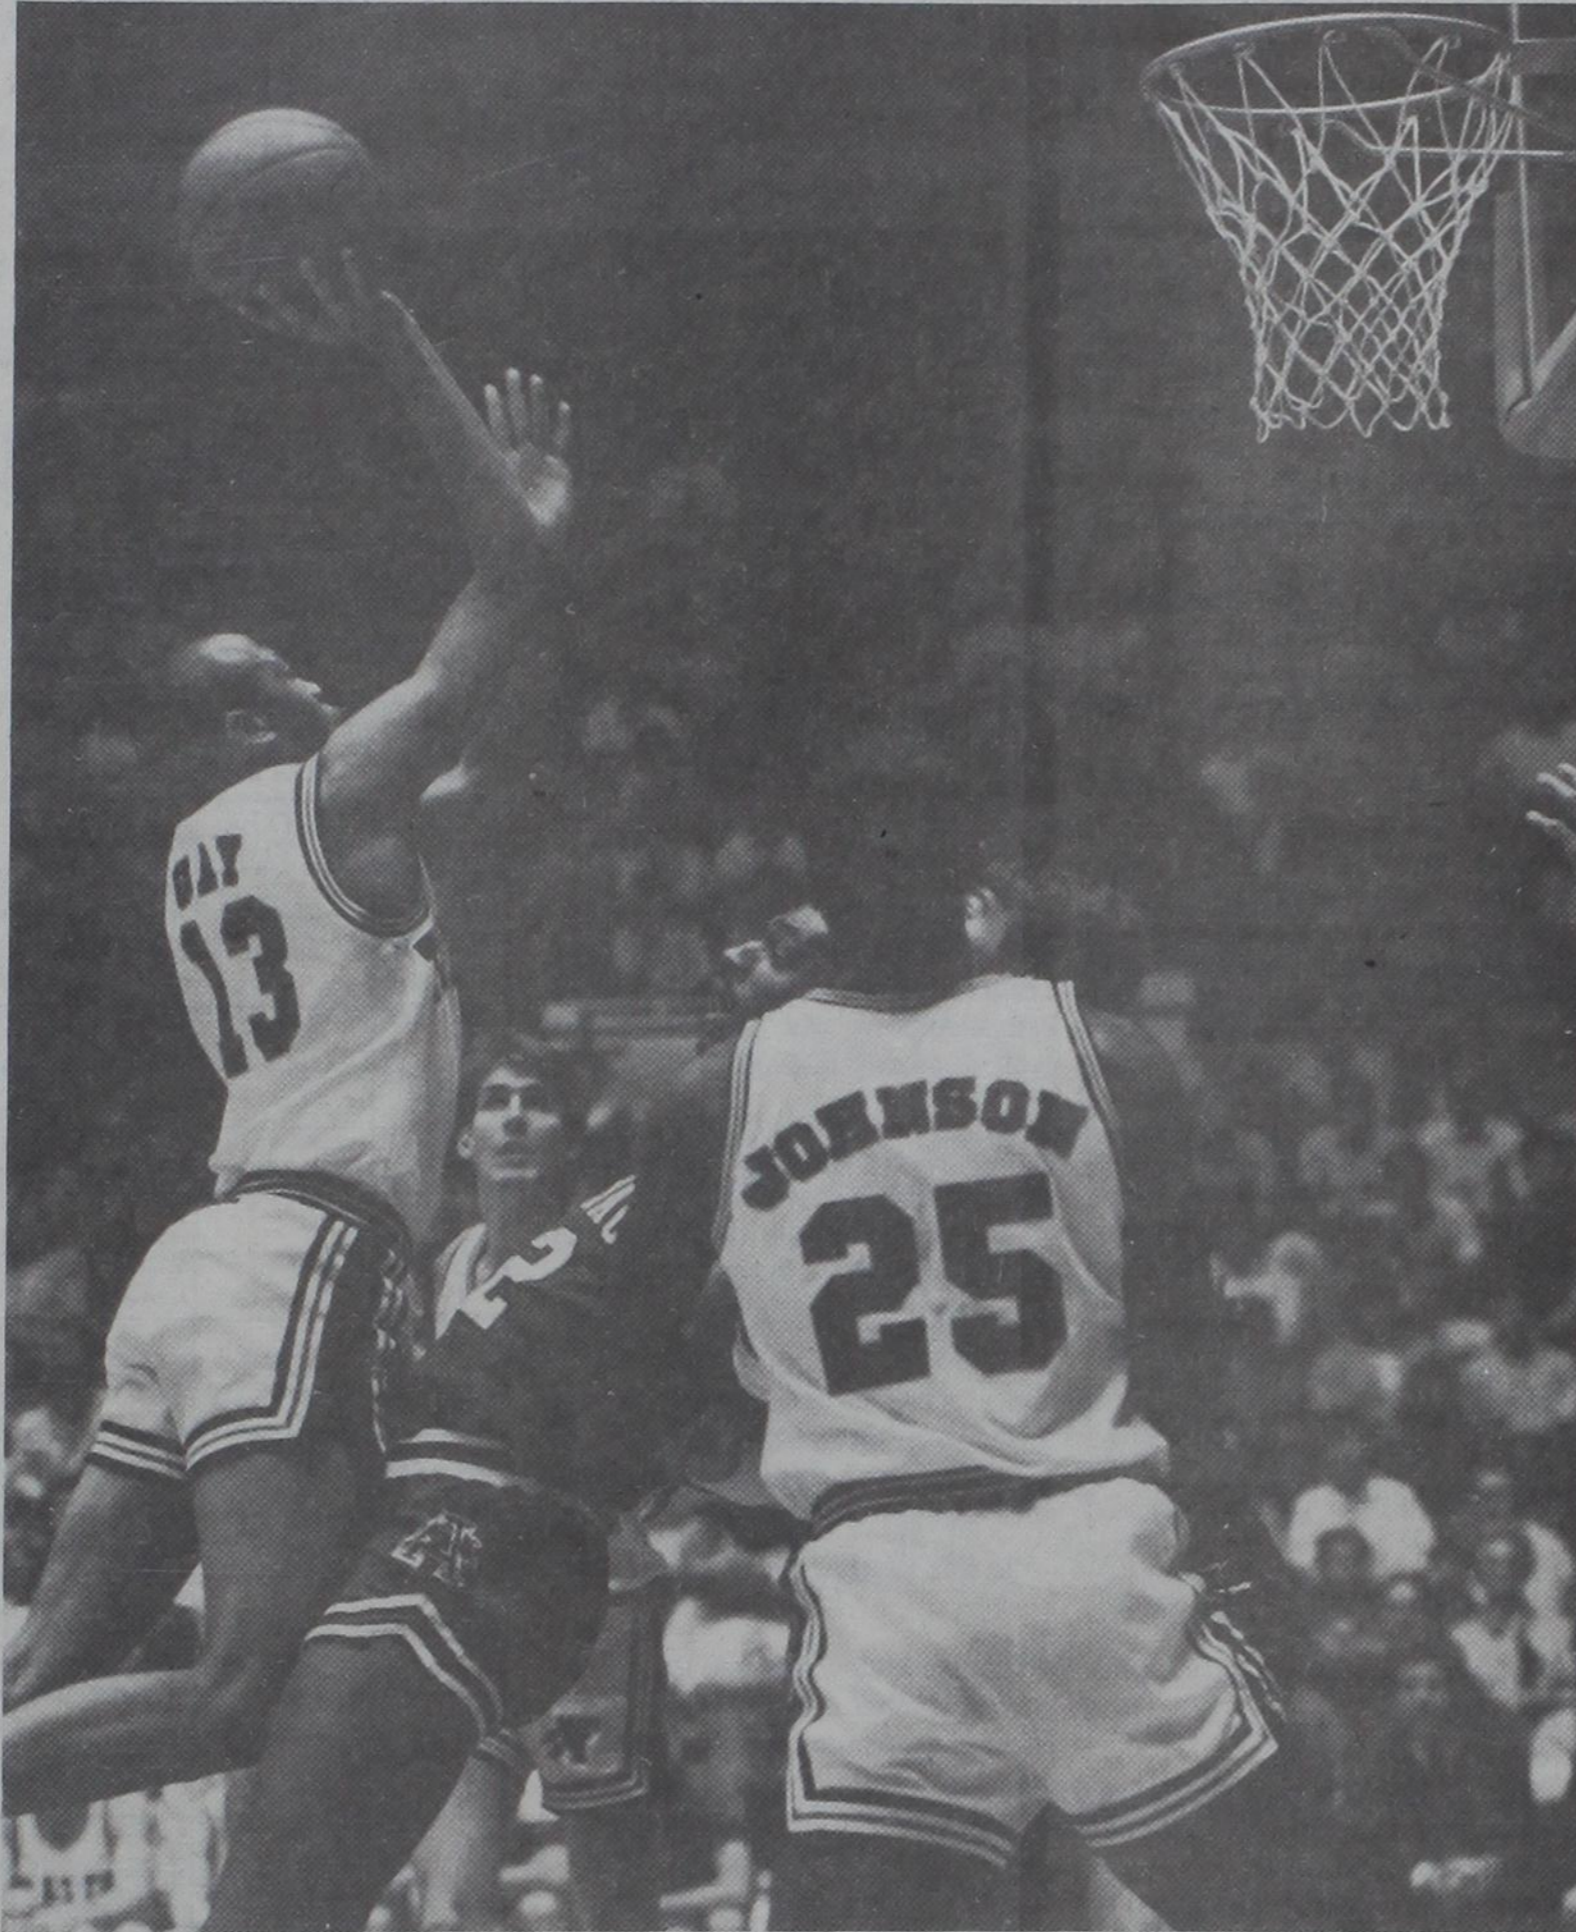

The Raiders return plenty on a team that abounds with youth. Tech has only two seniors on a squad that boasts nine lettermen. Of the four returning starters, only one — guard Sean Gay — is a senior.

The plethora of experience is not without drawbacks, though. Tech lost all three of its recruits this spring to collegiate entrance requirements.

In the lot, Will Flemmons, a 6-7, 230-pound forward from Paducah, failed to meet Proposition 48 SAT standards as did Rob Murphy (a McDonald's High School All-American) a 6-4 guard from Los Angeles. However, both Flemmons and Murphy are enrolled at Tech this semester and were redshirted for the 1988-89 season.

"It's not like we don't have any freshmen. They're just not going to play this year," Tech coach Gerald Myers said. "We'll have them, and they're going to be good players, too."

Marshall Taylor, another recruit, did not graduate from New Mexico Junior College but is attending classes there and is expected to graduate this fall. It is possible that Taylor could join the Raiders in the spring.

After last season's disappointing seventh-place SWC finish, the Raiders are looking to rebound this year. Tech lost but one player, forward Greg Crowe; the squad that remains is not inexperienced.

THE GUARDS

The guard position is the starting place for any basketball team. For the Tech squad, guard is more than a starting point; it is the focal point.

Sean Gay leads the Raiders in all phases of Myers' game. The senior has started the better part of four years at Tech accumulating 1,171 points, 403 rebounds and 309 assists.

After Tech's SWC Post-Season Classic win Gay's freshman year, 1986, he was quoted as saying, "This is why I came to Tech — so we could win some championships." In three seasons in Lubbock, Gay has one SWC tournament crown. "Some" would mean a second conference crown.

To help Gay obtain his lofty goal, 6-3 junior Jerry Mason and 6-1 senior Todd Duncan will have to provide scores from three-point range to help make a difference in close games. Duncan led the SWC in three-point shooting with 45.9 percent of his bombs falling true.

Johnny Grusing, a 6-foot sophomore walk-on, played in two contests last season.

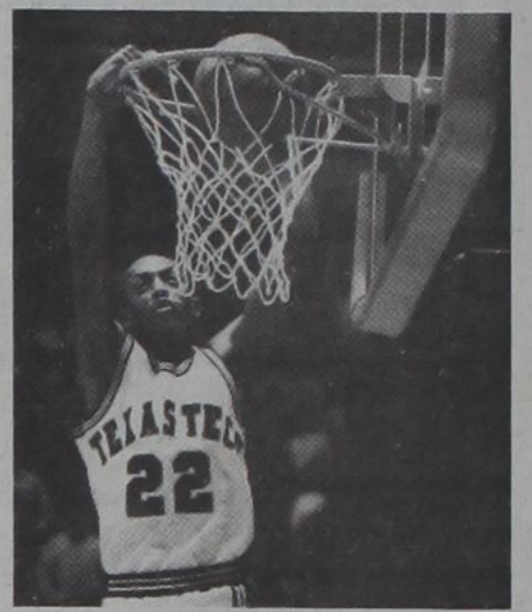

THE BIG MEN

The Raiders have some of their better prospects throughout their big men lineup than in the recent past.

Hitting 51.3 percent of his shots from the field last season, junior Wes Lowe (6-10, 230) averaged 10 points and 5.2 rebounds. Lowe should split time between forward and post positions.

At an even seven feet, sophomore Maurice Artis is the tallest Raider. Artis played in 25 games last season.

This season marks the long-awaited arrival of junior-transfer J.D. Sanders. The 6-9 Nebraska Western product was redshirted after failing to meet NCAA junior college gradua-requirements.

THE SWINGMEN

A starter in 12 games last year, 6-6 junior Scott Whillock hit 44.4 percent of his three-point attempts and averaged 3.4 points.

Sophomore Steve Miles was a pleasant surprise for a freshman last season. The 6-8 Miles came on strong at the season's close and tossed in 4.8 points and pulled 3.9 boards per game.

Another sophomore, 6-5 James Johnson, played in 25 games and averaged 2.6 points and two rebounds.

Highsmith wants confidence, carries after strong show versus Washington

By The Associated Press

HOUSTON — Houston Oiler fullback Alonzo Highsmith went into the 1987 off-season determined to come back this season as "hell on wheels."

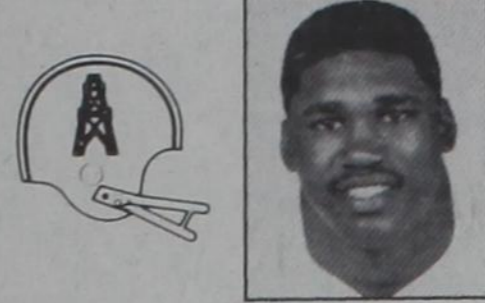

But Highsmith's wheels were used for blocking until Sunday's 41-17 victory over Washington when the Oilers allowed Highsmith to run down the clock and protect their big lead.

Highsmith, who lost a fumble early in the game, responded with a career best 75 yards on eight carries and had runs of 20, 21 and 27 yards.

Now the Oilers are preparing for a Monday night showdown in the Astrodome against the Cleveland Browns and Highsmith wants more.

"I think I can be a piece to the Super Bowl puzzle," he said. "I'm a 240-pounder, and I can pound on the linebackers all day and it doesn't wear me down."

Highsmith, the Oilers' No. 1 draft pick in 1987, missed part of his rookie year because of a lengthy contract holdout and the NFL players' strike.

He signed his contract Oct. 28 and was activated Nov. 8 but lost a fumble in his first appearance against San Francisco.

He's fought the fumbling rap ever since.

"I've struggled all season and not very many people have been on my bandwagon," Highsmith said. "I just need everybody to have confidence in me."

Highsmith has received high marks in his blocking but he feels something is missing. "I've struggled; it's been a long time coming," Highsmith said. "But I made a vow to myself last week that I was going to run the ball aggressively if I got a chance."

Highsmith got his chance in the fourth quarter Sunday against the Redskins.

"I just need the Houston Oilers to realize that Alonzo Highsmith can help this team other than just blocking," Highsmith said. "I need someone to say 'let's go with Alonzo, give him the ball.'"

Highsmith made the most of his fourth quarter call and finished as the game's leading rusher, including a career-long 27 yard run.

"I'm glad Alonzo had some key runs," Oiler quarterback Warren Moon said. "He was kind of down on himself because he hadn't gotten the ball a lot."

"He's doing such a good job of blocking and the other little things that people don't see."

LA hurlers come to terms

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Pitchers Fernando Valenzuela and Jay Howell, both eligible for free agency, have agreed to new contracts with the Los Angeles Dodgers, while pitcher Ron Davis of San Francisco filed for free agency, the players union said Tuesday.

Davis' filing raised the total to 51. Also, infielder Dickie Thon of the San Diego Padres filed a demand to be traded Tuesday. The Padres must trade him by March 15 or he becomes a free agent.

And the Oakland Athletics announced they would not exercise the option for 1989 on the contract of second baseman Glenn Hubbard, who is eligible for free agency.

Valenzuela, injured for much of the season, agreed on Monday to a one-year contract for $1.85 million, a $200,000 pay cut. He just completed a three-year contract worth $5.5 million.

Valenzuela was 5-8 with a 4.24 earned-run average this season in 22 starts. He went on the disabled list on July 31 and returned Sept. 26, making two appearances in the season's final week.

Howell agreed Monday to a two-year contract for a guaranteed $2.25 million. Howell, who made $595,000 in 1988, gets a $250,000 signing bonus and will make $800,000 next year.

Grandholm Rockets' final cut

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Rockets Tuesday waived Jim Grandholm, the final cut required to bring the team's roster down to the maximum 12 players, team officials said.

Grandholm, who played the past three years in Europe, was originally drafted by Washington four years ago out of South Florida.

He averaged 4.6 points and 2.6 rebounds per game during the Rockets' preseason, shooting .563 from the field and .833 from the line.

On Monday, the Rockets waived centers Ron Cavenall and Steve Hayes.

Cavenall, a 7-foot Texas Southern graduate who played one season with the New York Knicks, saw limited time in four exhibition games, averaging two points and 1.3 rebounds per game.

Hayes, also a 7-footer, averaged 2.8 points and 1.5 rebounds per preseason game.
