Sports research

Five Texas Tech students will present their research on the involvement of women in sports during a conference Thursday in San Antonio.

The research the students conducted was part of the Women in Sports class taught last spring.

One student's research found that college students tend to exercise for aesthetic benefits while those participating in corporate exercise programs do so for health benefits.

Kirby spoke to about 150 school administrators in the University Center Allen Theatre during the Ninth Annual Conference for Administrators of Community Schools.

He said the state has not increased money to improve the quality of education since the 1984-85 school year. The state has, however, provided money to accommodate the increased number of students in school, he said.

As a result of the lack of state funds, local school districts have had to raise local property taxes, Kirby said.

"It is unfair for school administrators to get the heat for high local taxes," he said. "Local school districts have gone about as far as they can go. Many (taxpayers) are resisting because property tax levels can't go any further." He said that to fund schools fully, $2.5 billion to $3.5 billion of new money is needed from the state, but even $2.5 billion exceeds the amount that is likely to be available.

"We might get $600 million," he said. "It will be difficult for us to get even that much new money for the next two years." Kirby said schools need funding

Dykes' disciplinary decision may prove ethically ingenious

College athletics in the United States is reaching an all-time low, and nowhere is it more evident than in Texas - home to eight of the nine members of the Southwest Conference, of which Texas Tech is a member.

The National Collegiate Athletic Association has come down on the league in much the same way the pope visited America a year ago — with stern warnings to clean up its act or pay penance.

Already, one team in the conference has received the NCAA's so-called "death penalty," and two others are under intense scrutiny and investigation for allegations of recruiting and other rules violations.

With this lesson learned (we should hope), it was refreshing to see Tech coach Spike Dykes leave two Red Raider football players who are awaiting trial for sexual assault charges at home while the remainder of the team left for Tokyo Tuesday to play in Saturday's Coca Cola Bowl against Oklahoma State.

Dykes disciplined Tech wide receiver Eddy Anderson and cornerback Merv Scurlark — both starters — Monday morning for undisclosed violations of team rules.

Obviously, football coaches expect their players to be asleep before 5 a.m. the night before a 2 p.m. kickoff. Fans expect that much, and rightfully so. Regardless of the amateur status bestowed upon college athletes, they are paid in the form of a scholarship to perform to the fullest of their athletic talents while representing the school they attend.

Anderson and Scurlark, regardless of the outcome of their trial, were cheating everyone associated with Tech football on Nov. 12 when the Raiders played Lamar.

They were caught and penalized. Too much partying cost the two a culturally enlightening visit to Japan, a trip that many Tech students would not jeopardize in any fashion.

Dykes' action showed class, something not always found in college athletics these days. He had the option to take an ethical stance on behavior expected from Tech athletes, and he stood

Similar instances have occurred at other schools, particularly at Oklahoma and Texas A&M, where winning a football game is known to be very important and the coaches chose to let the judicial system or the NCAA levy any penalties.

Just last week, Notre Dame head coach Lou Holtz sent two starters home for missing a team dinner. The Fighting Irish had their number-one status on the line, yet Holtz displayed a high regard for team discipline.

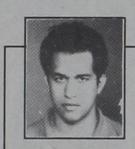

College athletes cannot be expected to be angels. Football is a violent game requiring a unique mentality. However, there is no reason why football players cannot behave within regulations and guidelines set for them by a coach, team or by societal laws...

Mitchell's legacy marks definition of constancy

William Safire Columnist

WASHINGTON — "Watch what we do, not what we say," Attorney General John Mitchell advised reporters at the start of the Nixon administration.

Coming from the law-and-order campaign manager with the visage of a bloodhound, that epigram was interpreted as the epitome of political deceptiveness.

But his intent was to reassure blacks that, footdragging poses aside, the Nixon Justice Department would accomplish desegregation. John Mitchell knew that the appearance of a tilt toward white Southerners would ease the way for acceptance of steady civil rights progress for blacks, and sure enough, what he did in that area was much better than what he said.

Many of the Nixon clan that gathered for the funeral of John Mitchell recently understood that abyss between the persona and the man. Dour, stern, taciturn, forbidding on the outside, and warm, loyal, staunch, steadfast on the inside; few public men have so deliberately cultivated the widespread misconceptions of themselves.

Yes, this was "the Big Enchilada," the first man tossed off the sled for the culmination at Watergate of the series of previous lawbreakings that he came to call "the White House horrors." Nobody denies his transgression: The spying plan put forward by the Magruder-Liddy toadies and crazies, which John Mitchell reduced but ultimately approved, was plainly criminal, and the former attorney general should have known it.

However, the familiar faces of a short generation ago were gathered to salute the private John Mitchell. Ron Ziegler, Pat Buchanan, Len Garment, Dwight Chapin, Rose Woods were there, and we knew Richard Nixon would attend — he goes to the funerals that matter. Most of John's key Justice Department aides came, notably excepting Chief Justice William Rehnquist, whose record of self-serving abstention in re: Mitchell is now

What was it that made John Mitchell different from the Nixon men? In a word: constancy. The heat of Watergate's crucible transformed everyone else. John Erlichman loosened up and became a novelist; Bob Haldeman's crewcut disappeared with much of the toughness it symbolized; Chuck Colson and Jeb Magruder were born again; even Richard Nixon adapted and changed. But through it all John Mitchell remained John Mitchell — always the villain outside, often a hero inside.

About the hero part. The clips all say he was the commander of John F. Kennedy's PT boat unit in the Pacific during World War II. Less well known are his two Purple Hearts for wounds in combat; John Mitchell, an athlete who played professional hockey to earn his way through law school, would wear long pants to the beach later in life because one leg had been riddled by machine-gun bullets.

He never spoke of his war record; such modesty is rare in politics, but exploitation of his naval service would have been out of character. One sad night, medals and citations were committed to the fireplace, which did not embitter him; nothing did. His friend Richard Moore, in a eulogy, pointed out that near the Mitchell grave in Arlington was the headstone of Col. Gregory "Pappy" Boyington, a Medal of Honor winner who used to call John Mitchell every year to thank him for saving

Aware of his wife Martha's propensity to make wild phone calls during sleepless nights, John sought no job after the campaign ended.

He was proud of his many offspring, busy with his business, happy with the woman he loved, surprised by the gutsiness of the Bush campaign and especially delighted with the Rehnquist success on the Court. He stayed in touch with the president to whom he had proven so loyal; the inner fortitude of both brought them back from the depths of disgrace.

To paraphrase: Judge constant John Mitchell for the totality of what he did — both right and wrong — and not merely by what his detractors said.

By TIM WEINHEIMER The University Daily This year's Fifth Annual Holiday Home Tour, sponsored by the Texas Tech College of Education, will feature everything from a Georgian home to a country Christmas theme, according to coordinator Mackie Bobo of the College of Education. Holiday homes can be toured from 3 p.m. to 6 p.m. Sunday.

The event is a benefit affair that enables the College of Education to award scholarships to Lubbock Independent School District high school graduates planning on majoring in education, Bobo said.

"We are hoping to generate enough funds to provide qualifying LISD graduates with five available scholarships," Bobo said.

"Everyone is encouraged to apply."

organizations have volunteered their music by LISD bands, choirs, services as hosts and hostesses for this year's tour.

Home tour planned for Sunday

"This will be a spectacular event," According to Bobo, student campus said Bobo. "Food of all sorts and live quartets and soloists will be provided adults and $6.25 for students. For in every home of the tour."

According to Bobo, the food will be provided by several local merchants and sponsors of the event.

Tour homes include the home of Mr. and Mrs. Carrol Holley, 2814 20th St.; the home of Mr. and Mrs. Bob Cass, 3012 20th St.; the home of Dr. and Mrs. Joe Vanderhoff, 4517 11th St.; and the home of Mr. and Mrs. Brent Jordan, 4602 23th St.

Other homes include the home of Dr. and Mrs. Guy Wells, 4901 19th St.; the home of Dr. Jim Chappell, 115 Utica Ave.; and the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jerry Williams, 9 Whisperwood Circle.

"These spectacularly decorated homes will really get you in the Christmas spirit," said Bobo. "One house has several thousand dolls, and another is in an antique setting."

The tour last year brought in enough funds to establish five $500 scholarships, said Bobo.

Leading scorers for the Liberals were Brian Christianson with 14 points and team captain Shawn Ralston's 12 points. Completing the scoring for the Liberals were Paula Kajs with ten points and Paige McNeill with six points. The Liberals gained the final game berth by defeating Reckless Abandon 58-52 in a fine game.

At halftime, the champions Nut-N-Honey held a slim lead, 31-26. They exploded in the second half to outscore the Liberals 30 to 16.

Dog Pile captures swim meet title

The Dog Pile three captured the Co-rec Swim Championship last week easily outdistancing the Barracudas and F-Troop. Dog Piles totaled 146 points to their competition's 68 and 12 respectively.

Dog Pile took the opening event (100 yd Medley Relay) and never looked back. Paul Duport and Jeff Serpan paced the dog pile men with Duport individually winning the 50-yd Butterfly, 100 Freestyle and the 100-yd IM while Serpan took the 50 Backstroke and 200 Freestyle.

In women's action, The Mustangs topped the 8AM crew 57-40, while in men's competition A Fish Called Bass outswam their nearest competition the 8 O'Clockers 35-24.

Six Amigos, Kappas take crowns

The Kappa Gamma easily took the women's intramural volleyball championship by sweeping the final match in two straight games over the High Riders, 15-6, 15-8. The High Riders advanced by defeating the Thetas in semi-final action 15-6, 3-15, 7-5 while the Kappas sailed into the finals by handing the Horn Netters a 15-2, 15-5 loss. Cat Collins and Cherie Shango lead the spiking offense for the Kappas allowing Lisa Lindsey to head the top of the scoring attack with ten total points followed by Naomi Spears with six points. Leah Kreig of the High Riders was the high scorer with five points. The Kappas ended their season with a 7-1 record.

In men's action, Phi Delt A rolled past Quit Squeezin in semi-final action taking the match 15-6, 15-3 while the Six Amigos downed Pike Garnet 15-7, 15-11. Despite the spiking action of the Phi Delt's Kyle Smith and his 13 points served, they could not overcome the team play of the Six Amigos and were defeated 15-8, 7-15, 15-12 for the championship. After losing the second game, the Six Amigos regrouped putting their offense back into action. With Richard Kelly's consistent sets, Billy Ontiverog's powerful spikes as well as Scott Lambert's spikes and defensive digs, the Six Amigos were able to rally back taking the third game and match. Roger Robertson was the leading scorer for the Six Amigos with 13 points followed by Jerry Kelly and Scott Lambert with eight and six points respectively. The Six Amigos finished the season undefeated with a 9-0 record.
