assault case

By BETH GEORGE The University Daily

Texas Tech football players Eddy Anderson and Merv Scurlark tentatively are scheduled to appear before a grand jury at 9 a.m. Thursday, said Don McBeath, chief administrator for the Lubbock County criminal district attorney's office.

Anderson, a wide receiver from Dallas, and Scurlark, a defensive back from Monahans, face charges in connection with the Nov. 12 sexual assault of an 18-year-old Tech freshman.

McBeath said the case against the two men was added to the grand jury's December docket and will be heard as soon as possible.

The grand jury for December con-

The grand jury meets once a month for a period of four days, McBeath said, to hear about 120 to 130 cases. The case against Anderson and Scurlark was added to the end of this month's docket, he said.

"The grand jury meets only once a month, but they will get to this case because now it is scheduled," McBeath said.

The case against Anderson and Scurlark was filed with the criminal district attorney's office Nov. 21. The two men turned themselves over to authorities Nov. 22. Both men were released on personal recognizance bonds of $10,000.

Slippery fortunes of oil

Petroleum nosedive bears grim financial omen

Flora Lewis Columnist

PARIS — Even the winners have lost. Fifteen years after the explosion of oil prices in 1973, the price of petroleum in real terms is not a lot higher than it was just before.

But the damage wreaked is far from over. Several countries that thought they had, by divine indulgence, become rich forever still are suffering from the binge.

Others are falling ever more hopelessly into debt.

Piecemeal efforts have been made to patch the system enough to keep goods and services flowing, but there is still no overall scheme for a reasonably expanding balance to meet the world's needs.

Bumbling through has been possible because those responsible did learn something from the Depression about the wages of economic

The lesson remaining to be learned is that abrupt upheaval with attempts to establish a "new world economic order" winds up hurting

There is no longer any substitute for deliberate cooperation among the cut dependence on the traditional world's nations, in economic as well raw materials that provided as in security, political and environmental affairs.

Helmut Schmidt, the former West German chancellor, startled African officials meeting in Nigeria recently when he said never again could they expect the torrents of capital that poured out of the industrial world in the 1970s.

They were created by the sudden shift in terms of trade, flooding oil producers with money turned over to Western banks for investment, wasted, or to a lesser extent used for their own development.

That in turn produced the vast Third World debt crisis, which also afflicts some oil producers now, Mexico and Nigeria among them.

SAY, DIDN'T YOU USED TO BE

Top Nigerian economic officials say ruefully that, after all, their country would have been better off if they had never struck it so rich on oil.

"It is like the man who wins a lottery and builds a castle," said one. "He can't maintain it, and then has to borrow or move out."

Expectations destroy prudence, too-easy money promotes profligacy and corruption, and there is no chance to win again.

What remains is "structural readjustment," the most ominous phrase in the Third World now.

It is International Monetary Fund jargon for the imposed austerity that is undermining the fabric of Third World societies as they try to recover and reorganize financial sustenance through petroleum production.

Brazil's fragile democracy is an example of the strain that may be turning into too much to bear.

The collapse of commodity prices as a consequence of the industrial world's painful efforts to deal with inflation and then recession after the oil crisis will probably never be turned around.

Trade patterns were changed. New materials have been developed.

The third industrial revolution has livelihood and hopes for development in the non-industrial world.

The lucky ones have been the 'newly industrialized countries," which were able to make the best of cheap labor and determined management, with no illusions of either massive aid or sudden unearned wealth while markets were wide open and consumer appetites

Nations such as South Korea exemplify this new breed of economic

Those coming later aren't likely to find the same advantageous conditions.

The United States imagines it has got over the hump, but it is living on borrowed money. Western Europe knows it has not yet succeeded.

Its biggest problem remains unemployment, a chronic average of about 10 percent which masks much higher figures in some countries, notably Spain.

Decline of some industries was inevitable, but the rate that made it so hard to absorb was aggravated by the oil crisis which plummetted the Western world's economy into the lowest points in recent memory.

The country most devastated was the one most eager to raise and raise and raise the golden stream -

Other factors contributed, but it was above all the frenzy brought by so much oil money that provoked the Iranian revolution.

That led to the Iran-Iraq war and the ruination of both countries.

Partly because of the distortions in both rich and poor countries, partly as well because the idea was never acceptable to most people, the proposal of zero growth as a way to make the world cleaner and happier was soon dumped.

The Club of Rome had some points, but not the right ones.

Now the effort has to be for a new balance, but one more accommodating to the diversity of needs.

New frictions are accumulating between knowledge that neglect of the environment is by no means benign and urgent yearning for continuation of the growth stimulated by petrodollars and then stunted.

Energy is a key factor. Extensive studies are needed on economic costs that must be included in development plans to assure environmental protection.

As the world moves on into a surprising new period, the notion of security must include economic relations.

Anger, helplessness accompany theft

To the editor:

ROCKY MIN. NEWS. NEA

I would like to thank whoever stole my backpack out of the bookstore on campus last Friday for making my first round of finals at Tech harder than they would have otherwise been.

You stole two of my books, a calculator and the backpack itself, but more importantly you stole some very needed notes (actually, you stole all my notes) and previous tests that were my main study material for finals.

The books and backpack can be replaced, but the notes — which are no good to you — cannot.

While you may have no conscience and not care, I think that if you are a student you must realize how helpless I feel.

For many people, eating is an enjoyable experience involving sight, taste, touch, and smell. But for the individuals suffering from an eating disorder, such as anorexia nervosa or bulimia, eating is not enjoyable at all. They use food in unhealthy ways to deal with their feelings of emptiness and ineffectiveness. Eating becomes their primary emotional outlet, and they use it in ways that are physically damaging.

Charter Plains Hospital offers a structured therapeutic eight week program, through which you can gain control of your life without having to quit school or work.

If you do need some help in gaining control, our program begins in January 1989. Don't put it off any longer. Enrollment for the January session is starting now. For a free confidential assessment, please call 744-5505 today.
