Washington Officials Believe New Boom is Coming; Plan to Control It

Washington, Dec. 29.—Official Washington believes that the nation has not only entered upon an era of economic recovery but that something resembling a real "boom" is imminent.

That outlook, while encouraging in many ways, is not, however, to the liking of folk who have a keen recollection of the great boom of 1926-29, and of the crash which followed its collapse.

How to control the tendency toward rising prices and prevent the boom from developing into such a speculative wave as that which swept the nation ten years ago is the problem to which many of the ablest minds in the Administration are giving very serious thought.

The best opinion expressed here is that new efforts to control prices and curb speculation, either by Government action alone or by closer co-operation between Government and business, will be undertaken when the new Congress gets under way.

The recovery which is definitely here will be of little benefit to the great mass of the people if its result is to increase the cost of living by sending commodity prices sky-high. Official Washington is more apprehensive of that than of the recurrence of a speculative boom on the Stock Exchange.

The powers already granted to the Securities and Exchange Commission are regarded as being sufficient, if intelligently used, to prevent any such "run-away" market as developed in 1929; though the stock market naturally reflects increased business prosperity, and the price of stocks is based, in the main, upon the business outlook.

Pay and Hours Problem
 What Washington fears is that may be found difficult or impossible to prevent drastic rises in the prices of the ordinary commodities of life, especially in view of the growing strength of demand for higher wages and shorter hours for workers in industry.

There is a very real conflict now in progress on a number of fronts between those who accept the view that high wages and free competition are not incompatible with low prices to consumers, and those who still believe in the price-maintenance policy which underlay the NRA.

Those who hold that the general welfare is best served by fixing retail prices to consumers received considerable encouragement when the Supreme Court unanimously declared constitutional the laws of Illinois and California permitting manufacturers of trade-marked goods to fix the price at which retailers must sell them.

A similar law in New York State had been declared unconstitutional by the State Court of Appeals, but the Supreme Court of the United States now holds that any state has authority to abolish price-cutting to consumers by this means. Fourteen states now have laws of a similar nature. It is anticipated here that the project of a Federal resale price-maintenance law will be revived.

Industrial Progress Move
 What is looked upon as a move in that direction, if not actually a revival of NRA, is the trend developed at the recent conference held here under the direction of Major George L. Berry, the President's Coordinator for Industrial Cooperation.

Even though a definite plan did not come out of this Council for Industrial Progress, and many important leaders of business and industry were not represented, resolutions were adopted recommending the re-establishment of something like the old A. with agreements between labor and employers on wages and hours, and on fair trade practices among business interests in the same lines.

This cannot be accepted as the Administration's plan, but it is the basis upon which, it is believed, the Administration will attempt to re-establish NRA's basic principles.

The major weakness, as many large business enterprises see it, is that its control and direction are under a labor leader. Major Berry is president of the International Pressmen's Union. As a

MISS GREGORY AND ELDA HENSLEE ARE MARRIED THURSDAY

Miss Mayme Gregory became the bride of Mr. Elda Henslee Thursday evening, December 24, at 7 o'clock at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Gregory.

Rev. W. T. Hamor, pastor of the First Baptist church officiated for the service, reading the impressive ring ceremony in the presence of a few close friends.

Old English ivy and sprigs of holly banked at one end of the living room with large pots of fern formed an impressive altar where the vows were taken. During the ceremony Miss Anna Lee Cobb softly played, "Indian Love Call," "I Love You Truly" and "The Flower Song."

The bride was attractively attired in a powder blue costume suit with gray accessories and wore a corsage of pink rosebuds. She is the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Gregory and received her education in the Winters Public Schools graduating with the class of '31. She attended Baylor University and received her degree in 1935. For the past two years Miss Gregory has taught in the primary grades and has successfully taught classes of expression.

The groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Henslee of Farmersville and graduated from the high school of that city in the year of 1927. He later attended Danforth Pharmacy School in Ft. Worth and for the past few years has been employed with the Reid Drug Company of this city.

Immediately following the ceremony the couple left for a brief honeymoon trip to Fort Worth and Dallas. They also visited his family in Farmersville before returning to Winters where they are making their home.

Those attending the wedding were: the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Gregory, Mr. and Mrs. Barney Bryant and son, Billy, Miss Odessa Morris, Mrs. W. R. Franklin, Mrs. Noel Reid, Miss Doris Reid, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Lloyd, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Lloyd and Kermit, Mrs. C. S. Jackson, Dr. and Mrs. J. W. Dixon, Harold and Gerald Dixon, Miss Anna Lee Cobb, J. W. Dixon, Jr., Miss Fleda Howell of Rankin, Dr. and Mrs. T. V. Jennings, Miss Ruth Woodrow and Miss Christine Boone.

Miss Allen McCristy of Hardin-Simmons University is visiting in the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Henry.

result very few of the important industries of the nation took part in the conference. While that conference was on the National Association of Manufacturers was staging a Congress of American Industry in New York. A new spirit in the thinking of business in public relations was manifested, as the speakers pledged co-operation with Washington and promised to meet Government at least half way, in promoting economic security for workers, greater employment and better wages and working conditions.

The general purposes of the New Deal were approved, though all of its methods were not endorsed.

Big and Little Views
 The main divergence between the two points of view, that expressed by Major Berry's conference which represented the "little fellows" in business, and that of the large industries, is that the big fellows put the emphasis on lower prices to consumers and greater purchasing power for workers, while the other group fixed its eyes mainly on the insuring of profits to producers and dealers.

Therein are the makings of a real clash which will be echoed in Congress when proposals for new legislation affecting business come up for consideration.

In the meantime, keep an eye on Secretary Wallace, who is coming to the front as a spokesman for the Administration's economic program in industry and business as well as in agriculture. Under-cover gossip has it that Mr. Roosevelt is "grooming" Mr. Wallace as his successor.

MOVIES

AT THE QUEEN
 Today (Thursday Only) "Lady Be Careful"
 Friday and Saturday "Oh Susanna"
 Saturday Midnight, Sunday and Monday "Tarzan Escapes"
 Tuesday and Wednesday "Little Miss Nobody"
 Next Thursday "Adventure in Manhattan"

AT THE LYRIC
 Friday and Saturday "Hello Trouble"

"Lady Be Careful"
 The film introduces Lew Ayres as a timid job whose inexperience with women has earned him the name of "Dud" among his crew mates. Larry Crabbe, a Marine, has a reputation for having left a string of broken hearts reaching half-way around the world. Ayres gets his nickname changed from "Dud" to "Dynamite" by an incident during one day of shore leave. Crabbe has attempted to meet a group of society girls who are boating near the crew's battleship and failed. Then Ayres, fishing, is involved in an accident with the sailboat operated by the bevy, and not only meets them but is brought back to his ship in style by the group. On the basis of his new-found reputation, Ayres is made the subject of a bet as the ship docks at Panama City for several days of shore leave. His crew mates wager that he can meet, date, and get a memento from the sailor-hating, glamorous blonde dancer in the city, Mary Carlisle.

"Oh Susanna"
 Instead of rescuing fair heroines and galloping to the aid of others, Gene Autry spends most of the film footage trying to prove that he is not a killer and robber with a "Dead or Alive" price on his head. Nevertheless his talents for song and music have full sway when he arrives incognito at an old friend's dude ranch. He aids his friend's daughter in entertaining cash customers while ferreting out the killer, Smiley Burnette and Earl Hodgins, wandering troubadours, inject humor into the fast moving musical drama.

"Tarzan Escapes"
 Tarzan, amazing character of fiction of Edgar Rice Burroughs, comes once more to the screen, as Johnny Weissmuller and Maureen O'Sullivan are re-acted in the story. The present film marks the closest approach of Tarzan to civilization. He is captured by a "bring-em-back-alive" animal collector who locks him in a cage and plans to take him to London to exhibit. In a thrilling and dramatic climax the son of the primeval wilds outwits his civilized enemy, saves himself and also his animal friends.

"Little Miss Nobody"
 The story of "Little Miss Nobody" who incidentally turns out to be quite a somebody after all—is concerned with a mischievous orphan whose antics and pranks are the bane and at the same time the joy of the Orphan Asylum's heads. Jane Withers in the featured role is continually in hot water. As, for instance, when she befores the greaser's son into thinking he has found a valuable pocketbook and which turns out to be a ruse that douses him with a bucket of water—and when she steals a complete chicken dinner so that the children in the orphanage will not go hungry Thanksgiving day. When she tries to be "very, very good" and do her bosom pal a good turn, Jane really gets into trouble and is committed to the reformatory.

"Adventure in Manhattan"
 Jean Arthur and Joel McCrea, both at the peak of their respective careers, promise one of the most engaging screen teams since the Gable-Colbert rumpus that happened one night. Their diverting adventures run the range of high comedy and gripping melodrama with an engaging romance deftly entwined in the surprise-packed plot. The film relates the exciting escapades of a prominent detective story author who presumes to predict the theft of various art and jewel treasures. Furthermore, he is assigned by a newspaper to write about these crimes-to-be in a series of special articles. Jean Arthur, star of a play still in production, and launches the adventures that carry the two through every conceivable romantic and melodramatic complication that two young lovers on Broadway could possibly get into.

Make Believe Bride

by Ruth Harley

EIGHTH INSTALLMENT

SYNOPSIS . . . Maris Trevor is discouraged because Rod O'Rourke spends all his money developing an invention which he hopes will provide an income so that they can marry. Maris thinks they should enjoy the present rather than deny themselves for the future. She becomes uncertain of her love for Rod. Perhaps there would be more happiness with someone else . . .

"Of course you'll make good, Maris. Don't start acting silly now." Patsy spoke firmly, for Maris was verging on a hysterical state, after all her excitement. "Come, let me fix this," and keeping her interested in what she was doing, Patsy managed to get her calm again.

"There, you look swell!" exclaimed Patsy. "I can't think why Jimmy's so long in coming tonight. I did think he'd be here to see you before you left. It's too bad that Rod's still in the West."

But even as she spoke, the bell rang and a moment later Jimmy was standing awestruck, looking at Maris. "Going to beat us to it are you?" he questioned looking around. "I must say Rod didn't lose any time. Just saw Charley Gordon and he said Rod's gadget's going over big."

"Oh, Jimmy," laughed Maris hysterically. "I'm not a real bride tonight. I'm just going to wear this gown at the exposition—to advertise Fayson's crepe."

He turned with incredulous eyes to Pat. "What's that the girl's saying? She means she's not going to marry Rod?"

"Oh, sure she'll marry Rod when the time comes, honey, and be glad to," answered Pat. "Only it won't be tonight, for she's just a pretense bride tonight."

"Now I see a light, Patsy. Well, say, she should make a hit all right. Better not let anyone run away with you, Maris. Think Patsy and I had better come along?"

"Oh, no, there's no need for that. I know you'd rather stay at home. Gee, I bet that's my taxi! Where are the flowers?"

"They're in the ice-box, Jimmy. Get them, and wrap them up in the paper that's lying on the table, so they won't drop on this magnificent cloak." Then Pat caught up the evening wrap of glistening white and silver lame and draped it about Maris' shoulders.

But when she reached the sidewalk, it was not a taxi driver, but a liveried chauffeur who opened the door of the luxurious sedan which old Fayson usually rode in to his office. When he raised his eyes to hers, for a moment he looked as though he had seen a ghost. But, remembering his place, the look of surprise was quickly followed by the impersonal glance that is the mark of the well trained servant.

As Maris leaned back against the softly upholstered seats and glanced about her, she felt as though she was at last in her proper setting. All sorts of luxuries were revealed in the fittings of the car, and in the vases were delectable hothouse blooms whose delicate fragrance suggested exotic loveliness.

The car drew up to the curb. A man in livery hastened to open the door, and escort Maris within the hall. As she crossed the threshold, Stan stepped forward and eagerly clasp her hands.

"I'm so glad you've come. I wanted to call for you myself, but I've been in a frightful rush ever since you left."

"Well, it will soon be over," answered Maris.

"Oh, yes and I hope we put it across. You see the old man has been rather skeptical about my ideas, but I think he's beginning to see the light." Then as Mrs. Bryce approached, he added, "The other girls are in the dressing room. Mrs. Bryce will introduce you." Then with a whispered, "You look lovelier than ever," Stan hurried into the hall.

Sounds of music drifted to her through the half-opened doorway, and as the visitors hurried back and forth, Maris felt a strange thrill of excitement sweep through her. This was what she liked—music, soft lights, gaily dressed women with attentive escorts, and the pleasant tingling sensation that made her feel something wonderful was going to happen.

But in a moment she was in the dressing room and Mrs. Bryce was presenting her to the other girls, and giving them all some last minute instructions. There was frank admiration in their eyes as she took her wrap off and stood revealed in the magnificent gown that was destined to usher her into a thrilling adventure.

Once in the hall, they presented a series of tableaux, but it was not till Maris appeared in the role of a wistful bride, that a sudden roar of applause brought the spectators hurrying to the Fayson salon. Time and again she was recalled. At last, as she stepped down from the platform and sauntered slowly among the crowd, she saw Stan.

"You did splendidly," he whispered, as he caught her hand. "You were the hit of the evening. I'll see you later." And squeezing her hand he hurried away.

Then as she raised her eyes, she caught sight of the girl who had passed her in her limousine, but the once smiling eyes were now like two little daggers. Suddenly Maris felt afraid of her. But light-heartedly she turned to one of the debs who had been in the show with her.

"It's been awfully good fun," the girl said to her, smiling sweetly, "although I can't understand why Rowene didn't come." Then glancing upwards she caught sight of Rowene's friend and darted toward her. For a moment Maris was hemmed in by the crowd, but as she struggled to move forward, the girl to whom she had just been talking exclaimed as she glanced at her spitefully, "So that's the reason Rowene didn't come. Little gold-digger," she hissed, "and we were all so nice to her, thinking poor old Rowene had had one of her frightful headaches again."

"She might well have a headache when the man she was engaged to has probably been fooling around with this stenographer for dear knows how long," retorted the other girl with a cruel glance at Maris. "She's given him up. I asked Stan the minute I got here, for I passed this girl on the way and almost mistook her for Rowene."

"Well, if that's Stan's type Rowene'll be happier without him." Again she turned with a withering glance at Maris.

But the gleam in Maris' dark eyes was not lost on a young man nearby, who hurried toward her and tried to speak to her. However, she had had enough, and without even waiting to see Stan again, she slipped into the dressing room, got her wrap and hurried home in a taxicab.

So that was what they thought of her! Tears trembled on Maris' long dark lashes, but she would not let them fall. She would not let those girls have the satisfaction of knowing they had hurt her. And now as she stood at the door of her apartment she was glad she had held her head high when she had hurried down the stairs and reached her taxi.

Her wonderful evening had brought her nothing but disappointment. All the triumph that she felt in her reception by the spectators was poisoned by the chatter of the girls. What right had they to talk like that? How dared they hint that there was anything between Stan and her? She'd hardly spoken to him—and even if she had romantic dreams about him, certainly no one in the office had ever had occasion to link her name with his?

She caught back a sob. She would not let Patsy know of the bitter aftermath to her glorious evening. While they had been waiting to go on the improvised stage, the girls had been charming and friendly. They'd raved about her gown, too, had talked as though Rowene had been kept away by sickness. Was that the reason Stan had given for her non-appearance?

Everything would doubtless have been lovely if only that other girl—Vi Kent—had kept her mouth shut. But Maris knew instinctively that those girls saw the line that separated a girl who worked in an office from one who was born to wealth.

Yet as she opened the door, a faint ray of hope flickered in her mind. Stan was so pleased with her work. He had said he would see her again. Perhaps if she hadn't dashed home so impetuously he might have brought her back in his car, but the thought of staying a minute longer where those girls might point to her with scorn or hold her up to ridicule, was more than she could bear.

If only she had glanced back as the taxi sped on its way, she might have seen Stan rush frantically toward the curb; she might have realized he was sincere when he promised he would see her later.

She was glad when she entered the apartment that no one was around. Passing Patsy's room, she heard a sleepy voice cry, "How did it go, Maris?"

"Oh, great," she answered, glad that Patsy could not see her tragic face. There was no need of telling her how the girls had treated her. At least Stan was satisfied, and Fayson's would likely benefit by the show.

But as she took off the gorgeous gown and the filmy undies that had made her so happy a few short hours ago, all her dreams of stepping up in society lay crumbling at her feet. Slipping on her old silk kimono and pushing her dainty feet into her shabby mules, she huddled down into a boudoir chair by the window.

Over the roofs she looked, past the tall towers with their blinking lights, up to the dark blue sky where the moon, now beginning to wane, looked like an enormous half dollar against the sky. Her throat constricted. Tears were near her eyes, and somehow as she lived over again the humiliation that the girls had showered on her, her sensitive lips quivered.

How dared they act like that; how dared they speak so about her when there wasn't a word of truth in it? If only Stan had heard surely he wouldn't have stood for it.

The chilly air blew in and she drew her shabby bathrobe more closely about her. Maris would not have believed anyone could be so mean to a stranger, especially when she was taking a part at a moment's notice. She thought of the girls she worked with. Not one of them would have been guilty of such rudeness, such lack of fine feeling. Of course Milly was a bit of a vamp and didn't hesitate to take every chance of making a hit with the men, but never as long as Maris had known her had she done anything so contemptible as had those girls whose parents' names illuminated the pages of the Social Register. Perhaps, though, they weren't all like that.

Somehow she had always envisioned the daughters of the four hundred plus as lovely girls, whose manners and general conduct were something superior to the girls she worked with. Milly had told her that was all boloney—that they were a hard set; but as she studied their pictures in the papers, she was sure Milly knew nothing about what she was discussing.

"But now, Maris' soft lips curved in a smile of derision. "I bet Milly's right!" she thought. "This will never do I must try and forget those vicious society buds. I can't afford to let their gall keep me from sleeping."

Then, suddenly, as though a hand had pulled back a curtain in her memory she saw as plainly as though she were there, the dark Ramapo Hills and the wide waters of Greenwood Lake.

OBJECTS TO ARTICLE

Lee White informed us last week that an article pertaining to him in a recent edition of this paper was incorrect. He said that the statement that he filed a complaint in justice court against Mr. and Mrs. Jack Harrison was incorrect and that fines assessed against him totaling near $100 was also an error. White further stated that he was not "beat up" after a recent session of justice court here, however, he said seven men did jump on him at that time.

NEW YEAR RESOLUTIONS

No better resolution could be made by anyone this New Year's, than one resolving to pay cash for all foods used during the year 1937. Paying for foods after they are consumed is a hard bill to pay, besides everyone knows that it costs a grocer a lot to extend credit and that foods cost much more when charged. You will always save the most if your foods come from San Angelo's O. P. Skaggs System store.
