

NO RESPECT for signs, moan Central Park officials. Maybe, but either this New York bird couldn't read or he knew the warning was for people, not pigeons.

BABSON'S POINT OF VIEW

Language Barriers

Babson Park, Mass. Communications and transportation developments continue to make our world smaller and to knit the whole human family into closer patterns. But differences of language still present formidable barriers to economic progress, education, understanding, and peace. For the languages and dialects of the world number into the many hundreds. Indeed, 135 of them are each spoken by at least one million people.

Diverse Tongues

Because of the great diversity of tongues within her borders India had to write her Constitution in 14 languages. Misunderstandings arising from language differences are rife throughout India and quite common in Communist China where many millions neither speak nor understand, the official Mandarin but converse in other tongues such as Wu, Min, Hakka, and Cantonese.

In France, German is the dominant language in a number of the border towns, some of which, down through the centuries, have at times been under German rule. On the Franco-Spanish border, sizable numbers of Catalan-speaking people have settled. And in Spain itself, fierce political differences—stemming in part from language barriers—features everyday relations between the Catalan-speaking inhabitants of the Northeastern sector and the rest of the nation. While, by contrast, Italy is fairly free of serious language troubles, Romans often have a time making themselves understood in places like Bologna and Naples.

Canada And Belgium

During much of this century the English-speaking majority and the French-speaking minority in Canada have squabbled over language and its use in business, in schools, in parliament, and in courts of law. The French in Canada are still agitating to obtain for their language equal status with English, in a struggle which has threatened to jeopardize Canadian federation. A recent accord may ultimately solve this problem, but it must still be implemented.

In Belgium, over the past several months, the whole nation has been racked by a language war between Flemings and Walloons that at length resulted in the fall of the Belgian Cabinet. One of the glories of tiny Belgium is the prestigious University of Louvain situated in the Flemish-speaking sector. Bi-lingual since its founding in 1423, the university is now rent as the dominant Flemings press for expulsion of French-speaking students and faculty, charged with importing French culture into Flanders!

Spanish- And Portuguese-Speaking Americans

Nothing so jars a tourist from the United States, proud of the title "American," as the term "North American" with which he is constantly greeted in Central and South America. And in these Latin lands, so vast in population, resources, and potential, yet so backward in social progress, lack of knowledge of Portuguese and Spanish is the rock on which a great many of our well-meaning and often expensive efforts to aid these peoples has foundered.

"Every language," wrote Oliver Wendell Holmes, "is a temple in which the soul of those who speak it is enshrined." Until we become fully cognizant of this with respect to Latin America, and act accordingly, we just aren't going to make the progress in hemispheric solidarity which is so urgently needed.

A Second Language Is A Must

All of this points up the fact that a second language, at least, is a must for American students of today. If your children show any interest at all in the Spanish and Portuguese influence in the founding of this New World... or in the plight of the Latin American nations still steeped in poverty, disease, and in some instances virtual slavery, encourage them to study the languages of this vast continent.

But even if your children never do go to foreign lands knowledge of, and facility in, a second language will broaden their horizons and make them better and more useful Americans.

Each year thousands of Ringtail Cats are taken either by nocturnal hunters or trappers luring the winter season and are sold on the fur market. Traditionally, the pelt of a ringtail brings the highest price among all fur-bearers on the Texas market.

Yet surprisingly, few people have seen a ringtail outside of a zoo. They might be driving down a road at night and see one of the diminutive critters scampering in front of their headlights, but more often than not, they mistake the ringtail for a common raccoon.

Although the ringtail is a distant cousin of the coon and has the same striped tail, the two animals do not resemble each other in the least.

While the raccoon is chunky and heavy-set, the ringtail is a slim animal. One will weigh about two pounds and its tail, with 14 to 16 alternating black and white rings, will be almost as long as its body. The ringtail also is frequently identified by its large, bright eyes and oversized ears.

Although a few scattered ones are found in the Piney Woods of East Texas the ringtail is most common in west and central Texas. They are more abundant in the Edwards Plateau region.

Ringtails prefer to den in a rugged habitat of craggy ledges and cliffs. Since their survival prerequisite is a readily accessible water supply, the modern trend toward ponds and tanks on ranches and farms has accentuated the amazing propagation of the ringtails.

Actually, the name Ringtail Cat is a misnomer. The ringtail is not a cat, instead being a carnivore. It got its name because of its cat-like size and its predominant ringed tail.

Ringtails are almost entirely nocturnal. They spend the greater part of the days in dens, venturing forth only after nightfall. It is rare to find one out and about when the sun is shining.

Most young ringtails, tiny fuzzy creatures, enter the world in May with two to four in each litter. The young remain with their mother for about four months and upon weaning are nearly full grown.

Junior Culture Club To Sponsor Movie March 23

"Gentle Giant" is the title of the movie to be shown at the State Theatre Saturday March 23, at 10 o'clock. The color movie is sponsored by the Junior Culture Club as a benefit show for the Winters Library fund. There will also be a color cartoon.

The Paramount release features the stars Dennis Weaver and Vera Miles. It is designed specifically to interest children and is based on the novel by Walt Morey.

While playing in a forest preserve, seven-year-old Mark comes upon a bear cub and its mother. Unseen, Mark watches three poachers kill the mother and carry away the cub.

The child finds the shed in which the animal is held captive and secretly visits and feeds his new-found friend, whom he names "Ben." When the boy witnesses the cruel treatment of the animal and learns of the poacher's plan, to kill Ben for meat, he persuades his reluctant parents to buy the now full grown bear for a pet.

The warm and appealing story was filmed on location in the Florida wilds.

The entire proceeds from the show will go to the building fund of the library, it was stated by

Delicious Peanut Butter:

Ever seen a jar of peanut butter disappear? Peanut butter tends to do that. The reason it's so highly perishable is because it's so good. Peanut butter is a familiar favorite to the younger set. It's utilized from morning to night—on toast or plain bread—to make delicious peanut butter sandwiches.

Of course peanut butter's for the older folk, too, says Mrs. O'Connor. This high-quality, protein-rich food has many uses. It's a frequent ingredient in main dishes and adds new flavor to cooked vegetables. It's a welcome addition to salads and salad dressings as well.

Cheesy peanut butter gems are creamy taste captivators. Blend 1-3 cup peanut butter and a 3-ounce package softened cream cheese, adding milk as desired for that just-spreadable consistency. Then fold in 1-3 cup of a favorite flavor accent such as chopped ripe olives, chopped dates, seedless raisins or pickle relish. It's a superb sandwich spread for sesame seed-topped rolls.

Peanut butter dress ups highlight any sandwich tray. Stir crisp bacon crumbles and mashed banana into peanut butter and serve sandwich style on flavorful brown bread.

Saucy peanut butter is a delicious e a s y - d o sandwich spread. Blend equal amounts peanut butter and jellied cranberry sauce, spread atop fresh buttered bread slices, add sliced cooked turkey and crisp lettuce and close sandwiches with a mayonnaise spread bread slices.

Lawn and Vegetable Seed:

Are you tempted by those colorful displays of vegetable and grass seed in your supermarket? Retailers report that the first warm days of spring start a run on seeds. The image of the country squire growing his own vegetables and surrounding his estate with a lush lawn is still very much alive—even in urban America.

To make sure those vegetable and grass seeds are labeled truthfully, sample lots are constantly tested by the U. S. Dept. of Agriculture. Agricultural grass and vegetable seeds coming from other countries or moving from one state to another are subject to the Federal Seed Act, which is enforced by USDA's Consumer and Marketing Service in cooperation with state departments of agriculture.

Seed technologists of C&MS examine agricultural, vegetable and lawn seed to see how different varieties perform and run tests to be sure the variety named on the package label is correct and will perform as its label claims. To determine whether seed is correctly labeled, state seed inspectors visit seed stores and routinely draw samples for testing. Seed officials also examine seed catalogues and other seed advertisements to guard against false or misleading statements. By requiring truthful labeling and by prohibiting false advertising, the Federal Seed Act enables you to make an intelligent selection based on fact—not fiction.

Phyllis Diller registers indignation in Universal's zany comedy, "Did You Hear the One About the Traveling Saleslady?"

MOVIES

"Did You Hear the One About the Traveling Saleslady?"

Zany, wacky, nutty and wild are all adjectives that have been used to describe the antics of Phyllis Diller. All of them—and a few more—fit appropriately in delineating her role as the first woman drummer in Universal's "Did You Hear the One About the Traveling Saleslady?" The Technicolor-photographed comedy showing Friday, Saturday and Sunday at the State Theatre.

While Miss Diller is the major buffoon in the story which is set in a small Missouri town in 1910, she is ably supported by a cast which includes Bob Denver, Joe Flynn, Eileen Wesson, David Hartman and Jeanette Nolan. Tailored to the star's unique talents, the screenplay by John Fenton Murray is from the story by Jim Fritzell and Everett Greenbaum.

As a man-hunny doll who peddles player pianos, Miss Diller brings to the screen the same type of uninhibited humor that has made her a superstar of supper clubs and television including some of her famous ingredients: the mix-master hair-do, the perennial cigarette holder, and the guffaw-accompanied one sentence quips. She has been in show business for 13 years and while this is her sixth motion picture, it is only the third in which she has starred.

How often have we expressed the desire to have "a little peace and quiet." Yet the trend with most of us is to do anything, to go anywhere, to take our mind off ourselves. Could it be that we have such a low estimate of our own company that any chance to be alone is avoided?

Apart from the strife of tongues, every life desperately needs a Chapel of Silence. Away from the debates which rend the air with contending voices, the greatest things are said and heard in silences.

Great men and women of the past found the most vital things to say in public given them in brooding hours far from the crowd with its loud and distracting accents. A cloister offers the high privilege of listening to voices of abiding truth symbolized, not by the earthquake and whirlwind, but by the small voice.

The one who spake as never man spake, knew the creative silence of the hills and wilderness. Paul's immortal insights into life and death came out of three hours of silence apart from the haunts of man.

Silent arguments are the final effective answer. The unspoken arguments are the unanswerable. Truth can afford to wait in quietness and restraint. The fiery verbal missives hurled from the platform or legislative halls, the courts of law or the street corner demonstration, are at last answered by the truth which, assailed by words, abides in silence, uttering no indignant rebuttal but nevertheless eloquent in its disclosure.

What is said about things is not nearly as important as what things say about themselves. It often comes to pass that their silent testimony refutes and confronts noisy affirmation about them. For instance, John Lightfoot, Chancellor of Cambridge University in 1634 gave assurances that God's creation occurred at 9 a. m., October 27.

4004 but the wise old earth never believed anything of the kind. It spun on making no audible refutation regarding its alleged age. However, there were uncut leaves in the book of nature, in the coal and chalk beds, on the ocean floors, and in the rocks, all proving that the recent date was not inspired by truth. At last the record was opened and the planet had its say. As is usual, the unspoken argument finally prevailed.

Modern life with its hectic amusements, its grinding traffic, its crowded cities and its mob-movements, seems to be a giant conspiracy against the sacrament of silence and solitude. But, the most worthwhile human achievements, have come out of loneliness. Our utmost inward development awaits our practice of it. The disciplined mind can enter its own secret chapel anywhere, at a moment's notice, where beyond these voices there is peace and meaningful silence. Thomas Carlyle exclaimed, "I think the happiest of all men is one who can keep himself the quietest." Cardinal Newman matched Carlyle's insight when he said, "We are never less alone than when alone." These men may have been inspired by Isaiah's, "In quietness and confidence shall be your strength."

Solitude can be a garden enclosed where blooms the choicest flowers of grace. Perhaps we have to be touched by some sorrow in our lives before we seek the healing touch of the silent place. John Oxenham's prayer:

"A solitude where I can think.
A haven of retreat,
Where of Thy red wine I may drink
And of Thy white bread eat.
Come. Occupy my silent place.
And make Thy dwelling there!
More grace is wrought in quietness
Than any is aware."

MISS MYRA GLOVER . . . Local Librarian

Pitfalls Are Not Strangers To Local Librarian; She Just Keeps Working

By Charisic Poe

The fund drive for the enlargement campaign of the Winters Public Library is moving slowly at present, but disappointment is not a new experience for Myra Glover, librarian.

Miss Glover, physically handicapped since birth, has stayed with her desire to prove that she could be useful to herself and to her fellow citizens; and, establishing a public library.

Her high school work was done at home with the help of her family, and eventually she became a graduate of Winters High School.

Following graduation, she joined the vocational Rehabilitation Program of the Abilene Public Library. After training, she opened a small library in the Winters Chamber of Commerce building in 1954 with 200 books donated to her by the Abilene Public Library. When some of her books were ruined by a driving rain, Myra moved into the American Legion Building. Adversity appeared in the form of rheumatic fever and forced her to be absent from the library for six months, but with determination and unwavering faith, Myra returned and built the supply of books to more than 3,800 volumes after 1956.

Jerry Ward, an employee of an oil company, told Myra's story to the Lion's Club and proposed that the club assist her in establishing a library. A meeting of representatives of the 11 civic clubs was called and plans were formulated. Since that time the library board has consisted of two representatives from each civic or service club in the Winters area. The officers consist of a chairman, vice chairman, secretary and a treasurer.

Through the efforts of the library board and many interested citizens the library was moved into its own building in 1963. With the continued interest of the people and the inevitable growth, space soon became a problem. As early as 1966, talk of expansion was begun and an architectural firm completed plans for the proposed program.

But reverses again dogged the plans of the library board when F. R. Anderson, chairman, became ill. After J. L. Morrow, vice chairman, presided for one meeting he was severely burned.

The Winters Public Library provides a definite and valuable contribution to the cultural life of Winters youth and adults. A devoted librarian's desire to be of greater service in an expanded reading service to children should be fulfilled.

Blizzards Take Fourth In Brady Relays Saturday

independent American should and with supreme courage and intellectual application of his talent he has conquered difficulties and won his way to the delectable heights.

"A stalwart in the town where he lives, he could be a stalwart in a greater field. But he loves every fragrant bloom and blade of grass that quivers in the Western winds. He wouldn't part with his old home friends for a cushioned seat among the monied mighty on the golden shores of ice-bound Wall Street."

Now, MR. MAC has decided to slow up. He has stepped down as president of his bank--The Winters State Bank -- to let younger men shoulder the load he has carried these many long years. He will be chairman of the board, and will maintain his office in the usual location just inside the bank's front door. It's there we'll see him now, but with more time to spend doing the thing he loves, associating with his fellowmen.
