School tax system found unconstitutional again

by PEGGY FIKAC
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

AUSTIN — The Texas Supreme Court on Thursday declared unconstitutional the state's new public school tax system and gave lawmakers until June 1, 1993 to fix it.

"There remains for the Legislature and the governor the responsibility for reforming the public school system to comply with the sovereign will of the people expressed in our constitution," said Justice Raul Gonzalez, writing for the majority.

The court deferred the ruling's effect so that it will not interfere with the collection of 1991 and 1992 property taxes in the new county education districts (CEDs).

The court voted 7-2 against lawmakers' latest effort to meet its mandate to equalize school funding. Justices Lloyd Doggett and Oscar Mauzy joined in a blistering dissent. The court has twice before, unanimously, struck down previous school funding laws.

Justices Bob Gammage and John Cornyn wrote separate opinions. They agreed that the regional property tax system was unconstitutional, but they disputed the majority's decision to defer the order's impact for so long.

"The court veers from the straight and narrow path of judicial propriety ... by, in effect, telling taxpayers that an unconstitutional CED tax must be endured for an additional tax cycle because this is an election year," Cornyn wrote.

Doggett called the decision "an immense wrong" and raised the spectre of a state income tax.

"For the school children, there is delay — perhaps infinite delay — in achieving equal educational opportunity; for the taxpayers, most probably an income tax," Doggett wrote.

Gonzalez said that an income tax is not the only remedy.

Doggett and Mauzy also charged that the majority "turns a deaf ear both to the commanding voice of the law and to the whispered pleas of the children." They said that in devising the new system, the Legislature and the governor had followed prior court instructions.

The new school funding system is designed to shift hundreds of millions of local property tax dollars from wealthier to poorer school districts within 188 new taxing regions, made up of one or several counties.

The court ruled that the plan violates the Texas Constitution by imposing a statewide property tax, and by levying a property tax without voter approval.

Despite state leaders' call for the Supreme Court to give them clear direction if this latest plan failed constitutional muster, Gonzalez said:

"Our role is only to determine whether the Legislature has complied with the constitution. We have not, and we do not now, suggest that one way of school funding is better than another."

The decision came in a legal challenge filed by more than 50 property-rich school districts — and just one day before the deadline for paying the school property taxes.

The court's opinion said it "is not to be used as a defense to the payment of any such taxes."

Economic decline to continue

by JOHN D. McCLAIN
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — In a rash of discouraging economic news, the government said Thursday that orders to factories for durable goods dropped sharply in December and business layoffs were continuing to rise through the middle of this month.

A separate report said consumers' spending was up only slightly last month in yet another sign of economic stagnation. Americans' personal income was up, but that was partly due to rising jobless payments because of the national economic slump.

U.S. businesses are anxiously seeking any sign of revival.

President Bush did not comment on the new reports during a speech to businessmen in Philadelphia but saw reason for hope in other economic signs. He said, "Inflation is down; inventories are down; the market has been expressing optimism in the future; interest rates are down and this is no time for gloom and doom."

The Commerce Department reported that orders for long-lasting, usually expensive durable goods such as cars and computers fell to a seasonally adjusted $117.7 billion in December. The 5 percent decline was the largest since orders plunged 11.2 percent in November 1990.

Orders were down 4.6 percent for all of 1991, the largest loss since the recession year of 1982 when they fell 6.7 percent.

Transportation orders were down 13.9 percent in December, accounting for most of the overall decline. If not for the transportation problems, total orders would have been down just 1.6 percent.

Military orders soared 86 percent and without that gain the overall orders decline would have been a staggering 8.9 percent. Military hardware orders are expected to decline in coming months because of cutbacks in the Pentagon budget.

The Commerce Department said consumer spending slowed to a 0.3 percent gain from November's 0.4 percent increase. Spending was up just 3.9 percent for the year after rising 6.4 percent in 1990.

Treasurer allots $200 million for export markets

by BRIAN COFER
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

As part of a tour of the South Plains, State Treasurer Kay Bailey Hutchison spoke at a press conference in Lubbock Thursday, stressing statewide economic development efforts.

In the conference at Becknell Wholesale Company, Hutchison said the Treasury Department has allocated $200 million of the treasury for investment of the guaranteed portion of loans that will be used to open export markets for Texas agriculture and manufacturing.

The loans would also be used for the development of small businesses.

"It's a good investment for the treasury," she said. "But if I can bring the money into the agricultural businesses that would be able to grow for Texas, that would be my goal."

This investment would have an immediate impact on the Lubbock area's agriculturally-dependent economy, especially in the marketing of cotton.

Hutchison added that she is cautiously optimistic about the economic and fiscal outlook for Texas. This, she said, is partly due to the fact that Texas finished the last fiscal year with a budget surplus of $150 million.

"We know the economy is in a tough position," she said. "But I think it's also important to know that Texas is in a better position than most of the other states."

Although the economy is still in the throes of recession, she said that a stronger economy is around the corner, primarily because of the policies President Bush outlined in his State of the Union address Tuesday.

"I think they (the public) see that the president wants to stabilize real estate and real estate is a very important part of the economic recovery because that provides collateral," she said.

Collateral allows individuals to receive loans to start small businesses.

Hutchison said that Bush's agenda would also create jobs through an increased number of housing starts and through the recently passed transportation bill, which will stimulate highway construction.

Nuclear disarmament Yeltsin may call for more arms cuts

by THOMAS GINSBERG
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — President Boris Yeltsin may urge still deeper cuts in nuclear arsenals during his meeting with President Bush, Russian officials said Thursday.

"The policies of Russia in arms reduction and disarmament will be an active policy. I would even call it 'offensive,'" said Alexander Obukhov, a senior arms control official, during a news conference.

Yeltsin, in a sweeping disarmament package announced Wednesday, said Russia was cutting defense spending by 10 percent and halting production of heavy bombers, air- and sea-based cruise missiles, and warheads for land-based tactical missiles.

On Thursday in London, Yeltsin called on Britain, France and China to follow American and Russian pledges for deep cuts in nuclear arms. But that call was rebuffed.

The Russian president stopped in Britain en route to the United States, where he will attend a U.N. Security Council summit on Friday and meet with President Bush at Camp David, Md., on Saturday.

Obukhov said Yeltsin plans in his meeting with Bush to discuss an even lower limit on all strategic warheads than that set under the current Strategic Arms Reduction Treaty.

He also may raise the issue of long-range missiles with several individually targeted warheads, or MIRVs, Obukhov said.

As Yeltsin began his trip, he came under new pressure at home. Russian Vice President Alexander Rutskoi asserted Yeltsin's reforms could spur breakup of the Russian Federation.

"As a result of the activities of a few of our 'giants of thought' and fathers of Russian 'democracy,' we really might turn into more than 100 'banana republics,'" Rutskoi wrote in the former Communist newspaper Pravda.

"One must be absolutely naive to think that the Soviet Union's disintegration will not trigger a corresponding chain reaction within Russia," he wrote in Pravda's Thursday editions.

Rutskoi was a reform-minded Communist and Afghan war hero who was recruited by Yeltsin last year because of his support among centrists and servicemen. Although still publicly committed to Yeltsin, Rutskoi has made clear he is prepared to lead a conservative opposition to the president.

The right-wing opposition has hammered at Yeltsin's economic reforms, which have sent prices soaring across the new Commonwealth of Independent States in the past month.

Rutskoi and other Yeltsin critics also may be in a position to capitalize on discontent in the military that is expected to grow if Yeltsin and the commonwealth fail to hold together and support the former Soviet military.

Yeltsin's cuts, along with previously planned reductions, will slash the entire force to about 2.5 million men, Maj. Gen. Viktor Koltunov said at Thursday's news conference. Western and Russian estimates of its official size are about 3.7 million, including conventional and nuclear forces.

TTHSC offers hotline on pesticides, endangered species

by STEPHEN ARMOUR
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

Questions concerning disinfectants and endangered species will now be directed to national hotlines being installed at the Texas Tech Health Sciences Center's National Pesticide Telecommunications Network.

The antimicrobial hotline is now operational, said Jill Haukos, associate director for special projects at Thompson Hall. The hotline concerning pesticides and their effect on endangered species will be operational in September.

"The reason for the endangered species hotline is to provide information bulletins on counties within the United States that have endangered species," Haukos said. "The bulletins are not fully prepared yet and there is a lot of red tape. The hotline has already been funded. We're just waiting for the word to make it operational."

Haukos added that the hotline will provide information on pesticides that may harm endangered species and has had good response.

"It is funded by the Environmental Protection Agency and was established after concerns that certain sterilants were not being effective," she said. The hotline is mainly designed to be used by hospitals and people in the medical profession who are attempting to control viruses and bacteria.

She added that the hotline will allow medical professionals to inform the EPA about problems with certain disinfectants and sterilants.

"They can also get information on other chemicals that are available for disinfecting and sterilization," Haukos said. "The EPA began retesting sterilants currently on the market because they were concerned these sterilants were not effective as labeled."

She said this means that labels on certain sterilants said to dilute the product, although this actually caused the sterilant to lose its ability to kill bacteria.

"As defined, a sterilant is something that kills every living organism," she said. "These products were not doing this."

Haukos added that the hotline has received a lot of attention from the medical community.

The hotline for antimicrobials, sterilants and disinfectants can be reached by calling 1-800-447-6349. It is open from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. Monday through Friday.

According to a news release, by 1993, the EPA will require that labels on affected pesticide products carry a statement instructing the buyer that use must comply with limitations in the appropriate county bulletin. The label will list the hotline number users can call to determine if their county is affected.

"It is the concern of people to determine which chemicals might harm certain species and what precautions should be taken before the chemical is applied," Haukos said.

Crime damages, thefts total $550

by JENNIFER SANDER
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

Within the last week, several crimes have been committed throughout campus, most of them involving theft or damage to university property totalling $550.

A University Police Department's car window was broken with a value of $100, a telephone was stolen from Wall residence hall and an unidentified object was thrown at a room in Gaston apartments, breaking a window.

An $80 plant was stolen from the University Theater, and a stereo and telephone, worth more than $300, were stolen from the theater's costume room. A cassette recorder, with a value of $70, was taken from the Texas Tech University Libraries.

Gene Minnick of UPD said it will be hard to find the people who committed the crimes.

"Most of these incidents were isolated situations," he said. "They occurred after hours when there weren't many people inside. The only way to catch them is if there is an eye witness, then we could probably track them down."

Minnick added that in some cases, UPD is able to locate assailants while investigating other cases. He said that sometimes the crimes are connected, or they will run across evidence of one case while investigating another.

Minnick said that some of the stolen items, such as the phone or plant, have no monetary or re-sale value, but are used to decorate dorm rooms and apartments. He said that crimes on campus such as these always come in cycles.

"It seems like when one crime occurs, another like it will follow," Minnick said. "They will subside for awhile, but always return."

James Burkhalter, director of Housing and Dining Services, said that damages to the residence halls, such as broken windows or damaged and stolen telephones only result in higher housing fees for the residents.

There are no absolutes

I agree with Ms. Dunn that a woman's right to choose whether or not to carry a pregnancy to term should be preserved. However, I do not accept the premise that ending the life of a human embryo or fetus is an act of murder.

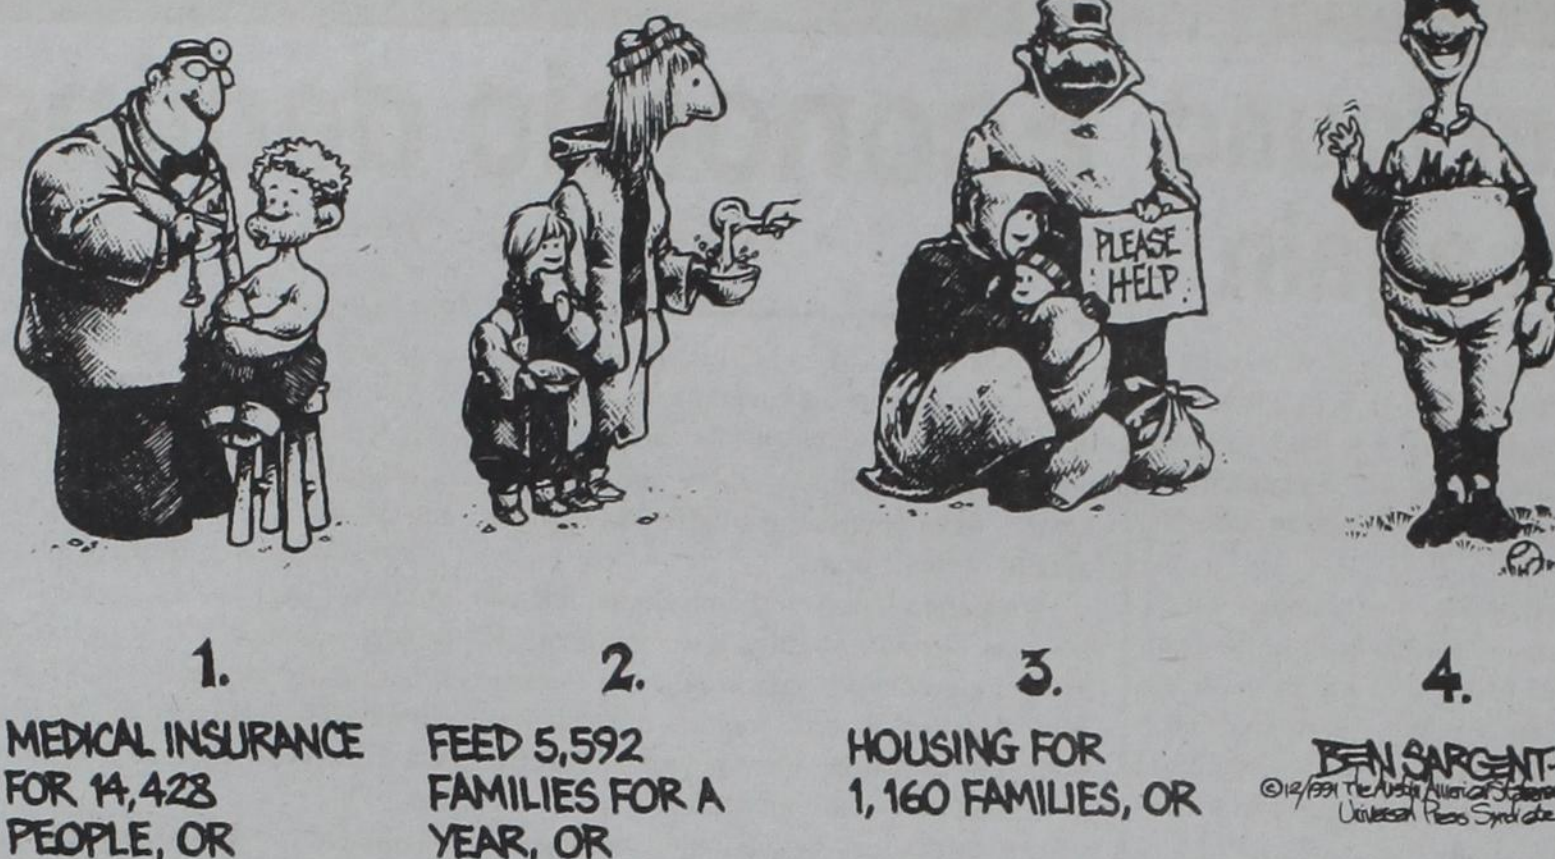

Termination of a pregnancy and killing a fetus constitutes a decision based upon the relative values of a woman's right to control her own destiny balanced against the right of a fetus that has the genetic potential of becoming a human.

Consideration should be given to the potential quality of life the fetus may face if carried to term. Mr. Smythe's contention that "life is intrinsically good no matter how it is lived..." does not measure up to the reality of life. Did Ted Bundy, Jeffrey Dahmer, and John W. Gacy live lives that were "intrinsically good" (to mention only a few on the honor roll of life)?

However there is one issue I do agree with Mr. Smythe, people are not machines (eg... computers). We do not view problems in an absolute manner, +5mV versus 0 mV or life at any cost versus death. In making a decision to terminate a pregnancy, the potential quality of life for the child and the potential social costs to the mother and society must be taken into consideration. Only humans have the capacity to analyze facts and use reason to arrive at a decision.

WHAT $29 MILLION WILL BUY IN OUR SOCIETY

Bye, Tom

The following is part two of two of an interview with Tom Wicker, who recently retired as national affairs columnist for The New York Times.

Q. Newspapers have changed too, of course, since you began as the editor of The Sand Hill Citizen in Aberdeen, N.C.

A. You really can't get away from the influence of television on newspapers, either. But to the extent you can, the major changes I've seen have been cyclical, one might say, circular. Following the war in Vietnam and on into the '70s with Watergate, journalists became much more skeptical and inquiring than they had been. They began to go behind things more clearly, to challenge political candidates, because they had been burned by too great a willingness to acquiesce in the views of politicians. Unfortunately, that lesson didn't last too long and by now journalism has lapsed too nearly back into acquiescence.

Q. There's been a lot of speculation over the last 25 years about what John Kennedy would have done about Vietnam. In an ancillary way, this has come up again because of the Oliver Stone movie. What's your view — where was Kennedy really going before 1963 and what sort of policy would he have followed in Vietnam?

A. Well, in my book "J.F.K. and L.B.J.," I speculated on that — and I think my evidence has grown since then — it's entirely possible that Kennedy, if he wouldn't actually have withdrawn from Vietnam, would never have carried us as far into it as President Johnson did. This is one of the very few things I agree with Oliver Stone about in his new film.

I base that primarily on the rather subjective judgment that all presidents feel the need to prove themselves as tough guys. Kennedy had already done that, if not at the Bay of Pigs, certainly in the Cuban missile crisis. And I think he didn't feel that necessity anymore. President Johnson did when he took over. And it's true, I think, that Kennedy had looked at that situation in Southeast Asia and seen it as one that could lead us into great difficulties.

It's possible that he would have over the years eased us out. I hasten to add that I do not think that that's established as fact.

The fact of which Oliver Stone makes a great deal — that they were going to withdraw 1,000 troops at the end of 1963 — I don't think is tremendously significant. I've always regarded that as being much more nearly a political manifestation for 1964.

Q. Relations between the races; this is an abiding concern of yours. Where do we stand today? Are we making progress or not?

A. I think the attitudes between the races, the fear and the animosity that exist today, are greater than, let us say, at the time of the Brown case, the famous school desegregation decision in 1954. Now that's a judgment that's very difficult to make, and I'm sure if you were living in the worst parts of Alabama or Mississippi at that time, you wouldn't agree.

The great triumph of the civil rights movement, in fact, is the progress in the South. A great deal needed to be done. And, of course, that's why so much has been done: segregation was obvious and it was state-supported; it could be attacked in the courts; it was, and it was ended.

But even there, the attitudes have not necessarily been changed. And the attitudes meanwhile in New York City and Boston and other places — my own feeling is that racial animosities and fears in New York City are far greater than anything I ever knew growing up in the segregated South.

Q. You have been identified with a number of other issues that aren't what most people would call light entertainment — criminal justice, nuclear weapons, the global environment, to name some. Does a columnist choose topics like that, or do they choose him?

A. Some of these things come about circumstantially. I've written a great deal since 1971 about criminal justice issues, primarily because of my most accidental involvement in the Attica prison revolt in 1971. I was called in there as a sort of an observer to — as I thought at least — to observe whatever agreement was being worked out and to give it some validity, to see to it that the state would keep its part of the bargain. That wasn't the case at all; those of us who went to Attica, we turned out to be the negotiators, which is a rather odd role for journalists and one in which I was uncomfortable.

Q. You've had a close-up view of so many extraordinary people over the years. Do you have any heroes out of all that?

A. I think it tends to work the other way. Which doesn't mean that I look at all those people with contempt — quite the opposite. But the journalist's perspective makes you see the feet of clay and the warts, and that's a good thing. I found them in many cases to be truly engaging human beings and admirable persons but not really, in the long run, impeccable heroes, or even just heroes without the "impeccable."

We should try to see people as clearly as we can. Then if a hero does come into view, why, we can give him his due.

Who can judge?

Dear Mr. Rodriguez:
As a person who came very close to having and knows people who have had abortions, I write in response to Miss Dunn's and other editorials on the subject.

Each person's circumstances are very different. I was very lucky, in the fact that I did not have to choose. The "Morning After Pill" (MAP) worked. If it had not, I would have been forced to have the abortion because of the risk to my own life.

My friend who chose abortion wasn't given the option. Her doctor told her she would have to go to the hospital immediately (in her second month) if she were to carry the baby to term. Even then, the chance of miscarriage was still very real.

I do not presume to suggest that the MAP is the answer, or that abortion is not murder. But as a child of a loving God, I have faith that He will be the judge of all my actions, NOT someone that proclaims the Word of God while picketing an abortion clinic. It was my choice then.

Education is the key to more responsible youth, but would you rather a sixteen-year-old girl crawl into a VW Vanagon on a back street somewhere? I certainly don't want to be responsible on Judgment Day for her young life, because I fought to make abortion illegal.

Moron mail

This letter is in regards to several degrading editorials written by the editor of The University Daily, Francisco Rodriguez. How did this guy become the editor of our newspaper? Was it on a dare, or is it just a bad joke that someone is playing on us, the student body. Everything he has been writing has been one big put down.

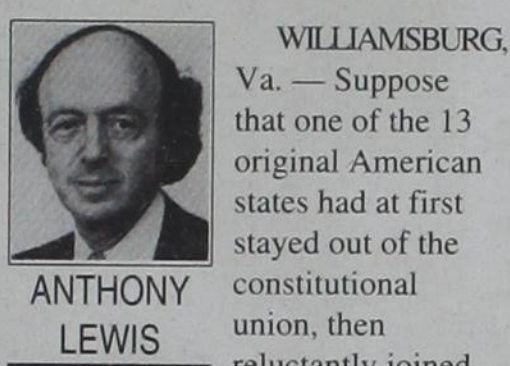

Francisco, if you are having a problem with some department on campus, go over there and ask some questions. You may or may not get the answer that you desire, but at least you'll have a better understanding of what is actually going on and hopefully you might learn something!

One of the biggest problems that I have encountered here at Texas Tech is miscommunication and correct me if I am wrong Francisco, but I thought your field of study was communications. You should teach students to learn how to be more knowledgeable and responsible, as well as inquisitive. Hey, wake-up, you're supposed to be a senior, act like one!

I personally do not care if this gets printed or not, as long as you, Mr. Rodriguez, reads it. Therefore, I feel there is no need to give my name.

EC a time of hope for Europe

ANTHONY LEWIS

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. — Suppose that one of the 13 original American states had at first stayed out of the constitutional union, then reluctantly joined but repeatedly dragged its feet on great national enterprises. Suppose that state had demanded, and won for itself, exemption from parts of the constitutional system.

That analogy, inexact though it is, gives an idea of Britain's attitude toward the European Community. Standing aloof at first, Britain finally joined — but continues to act as if membership were a burden, or even a menace instead of an opportunity to share in one of the most promising ventures in contemporary history.

This is a time of hope for the Community. Meeting last week in the Dutch town of Maastricht, the heads of the 12-member governments committed themselves to establishing a common currency and European central bank by no later than seven years from now. They pledged to work for a common foreign policy and perhaps, in time, "a common defense."

In these and other ways the Maastricht meeting took dramatic steps toward the "more perfect union" that the treaty creating the Community set out as its goal. American history demonstrates how making the critical monetary and economic decisions at the center may draw political power there, too — may make citizens look to federal rather than local institutions for leadership.

And where was Britain as the Community thus made concrete its vision of a united Europe? Prime Minister John Major was in Maastricht — resisting all the way. Major rejected a move to adopt European-wide labor and employment laws. The other 11 members thought that step was a necessary accompaniment to the single European market that becomes a reality next year. When Major, obdurate, blocked a treaty amendment, the 11 adopted the proposal as a separate agreement among themselves.

And Major said he would veto the proposal for a common currency and central bank unless Britain were allowed to stay out when the moment of creation comes. The others agreed on an opt-out clause for Britain.

To stay out of the European monetary union would be quite unrealistic for Britain, indeed suicidal. The financial institutions of the City of London, which are so important now in the world of finance, would be relegated to the sidelines.

Germany's Bundesbank is today the dominant influence on monetary policy in all the European countries. Under the proposed monetary policy in all the European countries. Under the proposed monetary union, the Bundesbank's role would be played by a central bank in which all member countries would have a part. Britain would have more influence than it does now.

The still larger point is political. The newly-reunited Germany is the big player in Europe, and its powerful economy is going to make it ever bigger. At a time when angry nationalism is flaring up in so many places, it is in everyone's urgent interest to knit Germany into a larger Europe. That is the reason that German Chancellor Helmut Kohl has been so strong an advocate of strengthening the Community and its political character.

For all those reasons no sensible British government is going to stand apart in the end. The Community is solidifying, Britain will in time join in that process, and Major knows it.

Yet at Maastricht Major played dog in the manger. He forced a solution that creates something like a two-tier Europe, with Britain alone in the second tier. And when it was over, he told reporters happily that it had been "game, set and match for Britain." Some game, some match.

Why would Major crow over isolating his country? Domestic politics is the answer. A handful of irreconcilables in the Conservative Party, led by Margaret Thatcher, are paranoid about Europe.

Major thinks he needs to placate them so he can go into an election with a united party.

But that only points to a profound and long-term failure in British politics. Ian Davidson of the Financial Times, London, wrote after Maastricht that the failure was "the direct consequence of the defensive and adversarial vocabulary adopted consistently for the past 40 years by almost the entire political class in Britain towards the European Community."

Or to put it another way, too many politicians have fostered the delusion that Britain can Go It Alone. That is Little Englandism, the state of mind that produced the headline: Fog in Channel, Continent Cut Off

Interfraternity conference this weekend

by STEPHEN ARMOUR
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

Students in the Greek system who are interested in improving their leadership skills will be attending an Interfraternity Council conference in Dallas this weekend.

The conference was coordinated by Chris Loveless, a senior advertising major and student senator from the College of Arts and Sciences.

He was elected to the national Interfraternity Council conference last March and will represent Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

As part of his responsibilities, Loveless said he had to select 10 people to help him coordinate the conference.

"About 20 people applied for the positions," he said. "I interviewed them and selected the ones I wanted on the committee."

Loveless said the committee was responsible for designing the registration packet and hiring security for the hotel.

"When a lot of Greeks get together, it can get wild," he said.

"Close to 700 people will be there since the conference is being targeted toward individual sororities and fraternities. This is the largest area conference in the country."

Loveless said Texas Tech is the host school for the conference.

"Seventy fraternity and sorority leaders from Tech are attending as well," he said. "There has never been that many who attended before. What excites me is that they will hear speakers from across the country."

Loveless added that the whole university will take a step forward with the information obtained at the conference.

"This is a great opportunity for Tech to take an advance toward the future," he said. "Thirty speakers will make presentations, and many are motivational speakers. Others will speak about drug use and hazing as well as officer motivation and philanthropy."

More than 50 individual sessions will be offered during eight separate time blocks. There will also be special sessions for advisers.

"It helps when people meet others and see how good a shape we are in at Tech as compared to other schools," Loveless said. "It is very refreshing."

Loveless said other issues to be discussed include diversity in the organization, how to improve unity between fraternities and sororities and grades.

"A big emphasis will be placed on grades," he said.

"Many members have trouble keeping their chapter GPA up. It is helpful when they go to the conference and then come back to Tech to use what they learned. This is good for Tech," he said.

Loveless said that after the conference, students will have heard a number of different perspectives from around the state and country.

"It will allow us to take something that might be working at another school and apply it at Tech, especially as far as rush is concerned," he said.

"Lately, the number of people who are rushing has dropped because of the bad publicity it receives. People don't want their sons and daughters involved with it."

Commission calls for release of JFK files

by PETE YOST
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — U.S. government agencies, including the CIA and the FBI, should release all their records on the assassination of John F. Kennedy, 13 former employees of the Warren Commission said today.

The 13 lawyers and former staffers called for "the broadest possible accessibility" to evidence in the probe of Kennedy's death.

They asked the archivist of the United States in a letter to release all Warren Commission files on the assassination.

And "we urge ... that all agencies of the government that possess undisclosed materials assembled in the course of investigating President Kennedy's assassination make those materials available for public examination," they said in a news release.

Former President Gerald R. Ford, the only surviving member of the Warren Commission, has asked House leaders to press for release of all files concerning the assassination.

Ford made the request in letters to House Speaker Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., and Rep. Louis Stokes, D-Ohio, who was chairman of the House Select Committee on Assassinations. The Washington Post reported Ford's request today and Stokes' office confirmed it had received his letter.

Ford said he still holds firm to the commission finding that Oswald acted alone in killing Kennedy, but he hoped disclosure of the records would "resolve any doubts of others."

Most of the Warren Commission files have been publicly released. But much of the material from federal agencies has not.

The National Archives holds various files from the CIA, the Secret Service and the FBI on the investigation of Kennedy's killing. Some of the material is public, while portions of it remain classified.

The Warren Commission probe immediately following the 1963 assassination concluded that Lee Harvey Oswald acted alone in gunning down Kennedy with a rifle.

The 13 Warren Commission staffers join calls by Stokes for more complete public disclosure of material from the assassination.

Stokes headed the two-year House committee probe in the late 1970s which concluded Kennedy's death probably resulted from a conspiracy and that there was a high probability that two gunmen fired at the president.

The Warren Commission staffers reiterated their confidence in the commission finding, but noted the "desirability" of complete disclosure "in a free and open society."

The calls for release of the material followed the release in December of Oliver Stone's movie "JFK." The film suggests that Kennedy's assassination was the result of a conspiracy by elements of the U.S. government.

King's Singers entertain UC audience with harmony, humor

by STEPHEN ARMOUR
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

Texas Tech students and the Lubbock community were entertained Wednesday night by a performance from the English vocal ensemble, The King's Singers.

The group, which was founded at King's College in Cambridge in 1968, showed no signs of age as their performance appealed to both the young and old members of the audience.

Starting their performance with a rousing rendition of the North American folk song "The Feller from Fortune," a song reminiscent of an Irish jig "without the dancing," The King's Singers immediately established a connection with the audience before singing the ballad, "She's Like the Swallow," a song about a woman whose lover is not true to her.

One of the best aspects of the performance was the group's ability to switch back and forth between serious ballads such as "The Gift to be Simple" and songs that were just for the sheer enjoyment of the audience like "I Bought Me a Cat."

A series of Renaissance madrigals from England followed the folk songs, and they were surprisingly enjoyable. Not knowing what to expect, The King's Singers put all doubts to rest and performed yet another collection of songs that crossed the gamut from fun to serious, something at which they are very good.

And if that is not enough variety, try listening to them perform a series of South African songs written especially for them 12 years ago by South African refugees Lewis Nkosi and Stanley Glasser.

Although some may scoff at this, The King's Singers once again proved themselves very versatile performers, musicians capable of handling anything from the Middle Ages to contemporary pop music. "Lalela Zulu," the segment of the act featuring these songs, was an absolute delight to listen to.

Songs like "Ilihubo," "Uhambo Ngesitimela," "Egoli" and "Umdanso Wasegoli" were both beautiful and thought-provoking. But "Umdanso Wasegoli" was definitely the best song in this set. The story of people in a dance hall on a Saturday night, "Umdanso Wasegoli" was a foot-tapping song that got the audience in the mood (to borrow a Glenn Miller phrase). They created a definite sense of the African culture and gave the audience one of the evening's best performances.

After a short intermission, The King's Singers took to the stage once again, this time performing "On the Beautiful Blue Danube," a series of songs by Johann Strauss. This set seemed to appeal to everyone in the audience, especially the last song "Picnic in the Vienna Woods," which allowed the singers to show off their comic talents. The audience responded accordingly with deserved outbursts of laughter.

The King's Singers ended their memorable performance with their trademark, "Arrangements in Close Harmony: Selections From the Lighter Side of the Repertoire." With songs like "I Am a Train," "New Day" and Queen's "Seaside Rendezvous," The King's Singers left a lasting impression on the audience. And the singers also dazzled the audience with their renditions of songs by Billy Joel and Alabama.

Not willing to let the evening end, the audience called The King's Singers back for two encores - the first a rendition of the "Overture to the Marriage of Figaro" and the second a song entitled "MLK."

The King's Singers were wonderful performers and if the audience members were not fans coming in, they were when they left. If they ever return to Tech, tickets should go quickly.

Mr. Big, Tall Stories show tonight

by JENNIFER SANDER
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

Lubbock will be the kick-off location for the Mr. Big concert tour when the hard rock band headlines a show starting at 9 p.m. today at West LA. Tall Stories will be the opening act.

Mr. Big recently finished their third album that included the hit single, "To Be With You", which could become the number one record in the nation, according to Mr. Big's publicist, Mark Fisher.

"This is a real breakthrough period for the band," Fisher said. "Their new album, 'Lean Into It', is the hottest record in the country now."

Fisher said that the band is made up of accomplished musicians who have played with some of hard rock's greatest performers.

Eric Martin, lead singer for Mr. Big, had a solo career in the late '80s and teamed up with Billy Sheehan, bass player for the band. Sheehan played with the David Lee Roth band, Fisher said. Paul Gilbert plays lead guitar and Pat Torpey was a former drummer for Robert Plant.

Fisher said that he expects a "huge turnout" Friday night and that the band plans on making stops during the day at local radio stations KFMX and KZII. Fisher said both stations have been supporting Mr. Big's new album in Lubbock and that "To Be With You" has reached number five on KZII's Hot Top 40.

Metallica brings show to Lubbock Monday

by JOSEPH HAYES
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

Does the sound of a piercing guitar make you search for a bottle of aspirin? Do all of your notebooks have "Barry Manilow Rules!" neatly written across them? Do you have an intense desire to go roller skating with the New Kids on the Block?

If you answered "yes" to any of these questions, here is a suggestion: stay away from the Lubbock Municipal Coliseum at 7:30 Monday, because that is the time and place Metallica will be in town to rock the Hub City.

For a band whose roots are based around the works of Motorhead and other punk and rock bands of the early 1980s, it has been the release of the band's fifth album, "Metallica," which has completed the group's full-circle trek from cult-underground status to respected mainstream popularity.

With more than a year to go until the tour's end, Metallica has once again shown its non-traditional style by making a number of changes to the standard arena show.

Probably the most radical aspect of the show will be the ability for fans to tape the concert on both video and audio. The taping section, which will be located behind the soundboard, will be limited to 50-100 seats for those who buy their tickets at the box office only.

Despite the music industry's effort to eliminate bootlegging, the taping section has only been used by the Grateful Dead.

Typically, a headlining band will have an opening act to draw a broader audience and help ticket sales. But do not expect to see one Monday.

In its place for this year's tour will be a video documenting everything from the band's early beginnings in San Francisco, to the group's modern-day success. Included in this presentation will be the highs, lows and personnel changes of the band's 10-year career.

According to an interview with rhythm guitarist James Hetfield, the video concept was designed to give all of the newer fans a better idea of what Metallica is all about.

Another innovation to the show will be the stage itself. To support the band's first number one album, a unique diamond-shaped stage will be incorporated to provide two front rows and better view for all of the fans.

There will also be what is called a "snake pit" located in the center of the stage. Admittance to the pit will be granted to those who show up early with the letters KFMX written somewhere on their body.

Large video screens will be placed throughout the venue to insure good visibility for all.

Tomorrow, they would be mortal enemies. But on the eve of the great hunt, feelings were put aside for the traditional Mammoth Dance.

Mavericks should trade aging Donaldson

KEVIN CASAS

It was my sophomore year at Grand Prairie High School. As usual our annual basketball banquet featured a guest speaker.

But this banquet was like no other. It featured Dallas Mavericks center James Donaldson. I remember the excitement of the event because when he walked in, immediately you thought he was a winner. You just automatically had to like the guy. He was a hero. Donaldson had the look of a champion standing a gigantic 7-2. His statements were the same as any other athlete, "stay away from drugs, always work hard in practice and in the classroom."

He made an impression on you. But Donaldson's actions of the past few months have been far from his sentiments of three years ago. He was once a force for the Mavericks inside, but personal problems with head coach Ritchie Adubato and the front office has put a damper on this one time raging bull.

Donaldson scuffled with guard Rolando Blackman on Tuesday and guard Derek Harper received lacerations under his eye while breaking up the fight. At first it was dismissed as "frustrations" of the Mavs losing 13 of their last 14 games, but Harper told The Dallas Morning News the losses had nothing to do with it.

"James is a seven-foot punk," Harper said. "There's no reason why he has to go picking on people on his own team."

Wednesday, Donaldson was banned from the Mavericks North Dallas practice facility and notified of a one game suspension without pay. He served the suspension when the Mavs played the San Antonio Spurs on Wednesday night.

Hooray to the Mavs and Rick Sund, the franchise's vice-president of basketball operations. The suspension was long overdue. Tuesday's incident was just the latest of a season full of problems for Donaldson.

He lost his starting position in early January and due to his lack of playing time, asked publically to be traded.

Trading him is something the Mavs should have done a long time ago. With the Mavericks in a state of rebuilding, the older Donaldson should be used to acquire some young, undeveloped talent. After all, he wants to go. So let him go.

Donaldson "accidentally" elbowed forward Terry Davis earlier this season in another incident. Davis received four stitches in that affair.

Speaking of Davis, he obviously should get the minutes Donaldson uses up. Davis has been the workhorse for the Mavs and with two more years of flagrant fouls and inside bashing, he should be the Mavs' white knight in rebuilding.

In the words of Dallas Morning News sports columnist Randy Gallo-way, "Let the hammer hammer."

Donaldson has lost the fire he once had against other big men in the NBA. The Mavericks need some rejuvenation, and Donaldson isn't George Foreman.

Tech looking to extend SWC lead

by MIKE HEWLETT
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

The Texas Tech women's basketball team takes its Southwest Conference lead on the road Saturday to take on Texas A&M.

The Red Raiders, 5-0 in conference play, will try to improve on their record with a win over the Lady Aggies (4-2). Both teams are coming off losses this week with Tech losing a close one to Louisiana Tech 69-66, and A&M losing to Houston in overtime 79-78.

Freshman guard Noel Johnson said the Raiders were leaning in favor of the Aggies in their Wednesday night match-up opposite Houston.

"I guess we did kinda want the Ags to win because we've seen what Houston can do and we're not real sure about A&M," Johnson said. "It seems like it's easier to beat a team that has just come off a big win because they have to strive to keep that intensity level up—and that's hard to do week to week."

A&M will be led in the upcoming contest by junior 6-foot, 3-inch center Dena Russo who is this week's Sports Illustrated National Player of the Week. In the Aggies win over Texas and an overtime loss to Rice, Russo shot 63.3 percent from the floor (19-of-30 including 5-of-6 from 3-point range). Three times this season she has had double figures in both field goals and rebounding.

Countering this high scoring and physical A&M player for Tech will be the top scoring women's roundballer in the SWC, junior forward Sheryl Swoopes.

In the Raiders last two outings, Swoopes has been on a mission, it would seem, scoring 33 points in the win over Houston and 32-of Tech's 69 points- in the losing effort against Louisiana Tech. Swoopes' numbers are impressive but basketball is not a one person sport. Tech has a talented group of starters, however, the added luxury of having a strong, deep bench to go to has helped the Raiders on more than one occasion.

"Bench" starting guards sophomore Stephanie Scott and freshman Noel Johnson have stepped in to provide the extra spark for the home team this season.

Johnson said the Raiders are planning to use a tight zone defense against the strong inside game of the Aggies' Russo while on offense Tech will try to push the ball up the court quickly and expose A&M's man-to-man defense.

"They run a man defense so we are going to pinch the gaps and find the seams to the basket," Johnson said.

With the Aggies as well as the Raiders running style of offenses, lots of scoring should be evident at G. Rollie White Coliseum on the A&M campus.

This game will be broadcast live at 7:25 p.m. Saturday from College Station via KJAK (92.7 FM) radio.

Raider track teams ready for second meet at LCU

Both Texas Tech track teams will be in action once again this weekend, as they will stay in Lubbock to compete in the Hugh Rhodes Relays at Lubbock Christian University.

The meet is slated for Saturday with the field events beginning at 9:30 a.m. and the running prelims starting at 10 a.m.

Other schools scheduled to compete in the meet are Midwestern State, Odessa College, Northwood Institute, South Plains College, Abilene Christian, Wayland Baptist, Tarleton State, Howard Payne and Lubbock Christian.

"We know more of what to expect and where to place our runners, as far as in what event," women's coach Louise Ritter said before going into her second meet as a head coach.

"We will do some experimenting this week to try and improve on some things."

Pole vaulters Tim James and Jeff Meyers and sprinter Donny Brooks will travel to Norman, Okla., to compete in the Oklahoma University Indoor Meet, also scheduled for Saturday.

Raiders ready to take on last place Texas A&M

by KEVIN CASAS
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

When Texas Tech and Texas A&M square off at noon Saturday in the Lubbock Municipal Coliseum, each team will try to snap conference losing streaks.

The Red Raiders (9-8, 1-4) are looking to break their four game skid and the Aggies (3-12, 0-5) will try to stop their winless SWC campaign.

Tech, which drilled Houston Baptist 118-53 on Wednesday, had two new faces in its starting lineup and head coach James Dickey is pleased with their performances.

Freshman guard Chad Collins and sophomore forward Allen Austin each had 11 points in the win over Houston Baptist.

"They seemed to be comfortable out on the floor," Dickey said. "Chad seemed to get going after he made his first basket."

Dickey said he changed the lineup to prepare for Saturday's game with the Aggies. Senior guard Lamont Dale said the change is positive but notes the A&M game as the true test.

"They played well and executed well, but we should see something more after this weekend," he said.

Dale, who had six points and four assists in 18 minutes on Wednesday, said the Raiders must play good defense against a tough Texas A&M team.

"They're coming to play and we've got to realize that," he said. "A&M played Houston tough on Wednesday."

The Aggies average 68.8 points a game and receive solid scoring from David Edwards. The sophomore guard averages 16.7 points a game and is complemented by Shedrick Anderson's 13.4 points per contest. Anderson pulls down an average of 7.6 rebounds a game.

"A&M is a scary team," Dickey said. "Edwards is one of their top players and we've got to contain him. It seems like every time I watch them play, they play like their winning the national championship."

Dickey attributes the Aggies' never-say-die style of play to first-year head coach Tony Barone.

"They play really hard and Tony has done an excellent job with them," he said.

The Raiders hit 53 percent of their shots against Houston Baptist and were led by Stacy Bailey's career-high 24 points. Will Flemons had his tenth double-double of the season with 17 points and 10 rebounds.

"I'm just trying to elevate my game after the last couple of outings," Bailey said after Wednesday's game.

Big fish abound in South Texas

MIKE HEWLETT

In the months of August, October, and November 1991, three state fishing records were set and as of Jan. 24, these new marks have been officially recognized by the Texas Parks and history. The funds went to the purchase of tour buses for Big Bend Ranch State Natural Area and Matagorda Island State Park, to the Operation Game Thief program and to the new Parks and Wildlife Foundation of Texas, Inc.

This foundation was established in May of last year to help TP&WD with its vast projects throughout the state. This donation is expected by state officials to provide a cornerstone for building a strong private sector counterpart to the TP&WD.

For those of you with outdoor career aspirations this next notice could interest you—the TP&WD has announced that applications will be accepted through Feb. 7 for admission to the 43rd Game Warden Academy. Approximately 39 cadets will be accepted to this year's academy which is expected to begin its six month training Oct. 1 in Austin.

Applicants must meet the following requirements to apply: be at least 21 years of age on or before Oct. 1, have a B.A./B.S. level degree from an accredited college or university by July 1. (At least 60 hours of college credit and two years experience working with the public may be substituted for a college degree.)

To be accepted, applicants must meet the minimum eligibility requirements and successfully compete in a written examination, intense background check and an interview before advancing to the next step.

New game wardens are placed in vacant stations throughout Texas and assume the duties of protecting the state's natural renewable resources and the enforcement of the Water Safety Act and other regulations related to the outdoors.

If pursuing this opportunity interests you, call the local office of the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department at 744-6847.

Tech baseball team preparing for No. 19 Arizona State

by JOSEPH HAYES
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

After greeting the Grand Canyon Antelopes with a home-opening loss Thursday 15-8, the Texas Tech baseball team will try to extend its win streak by facing Grand Canyon again at 4 p.m. today in Arizona.

Following the series against the Antelopes, coach Larry Hays and his team will remain in Arizona to challenge the nationally-ranked Sun Devils of Arizona State.

In preseason polls, the Sun Devils have been ranked No. 19 by Baseball America and No. 21 by Collegiate Baseball. ASU coach Jim Brock, who led his team to a 35-27 record in 1991, currently is the seventh-ranked coach in Division I play with 977 career wins.

In the previous eight meetings against the Grand Canyon Antelopes, the Raiders have held a 5-3 advantage, including a two-game sweep last year.

Tech has not been as fortunate against the Sun Devils. In seven attempts, the Raiders have yet to find the win column.

Taking the mound for today's game will be junior righthander Mike Copple. In his first start last week against Howard Payne, Copple struck out four in nine innings, to register his first win for Tech.

At 2 p.m. Saturday, junior John Macatee will return for his second start of the 1992 campaign. Macatee, who was used sparingly last year, helped the Raider cause by striking out four in as many innings and allowing no runs against the Yellow Jackets.

After pitching three scoreless innings Sunday, junior J.J. Varney will get his first start for Tech, which will finish up the series with the Sun Devils.

With tough pitching expected from ASU, the Raiders will need a repeat performance from senior outfielder Kent Blasingame. Although Blasingame hit a lowly .167, it was his nine stolen bases and seven runs which earned him Whataburger "Player of the Week" honors.

At the plate, senior outfielder/designated hitter Wes Shook will be looking to continue his hitting rampage of a week ago. Shook shredded the Howard Payne Yellowjackets' pitching by going 6-of-12 during the series and hitting for the cycle during the series.

Expectations also are running high for junior third baseman Trent Petrie. In his first at bat for Tech, Petrie put one out of the park.

The junior college transfer from Hill College also registered two doubles.

For Hays, a sweep of this weekend's play could launch his team off to its best start in school history at 8-0.

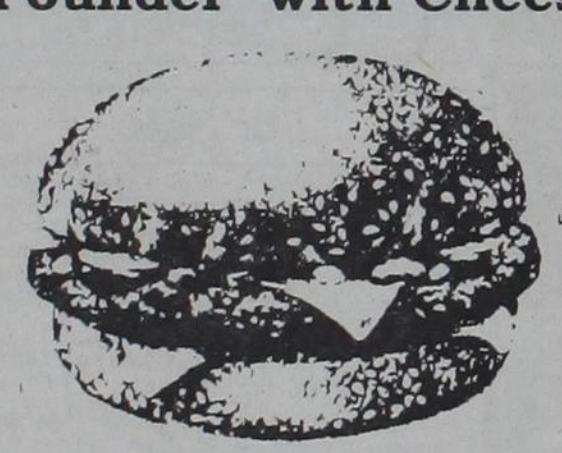

Following the ASU series, the Raiders will begin Southwest Conference play against Texas next weekend in Austin.
