Russian gas prices quadruple

MOSCOW (AP) — In the latest blow to price-battered Russians, Moscow authorities unexpectedly quadrupled gasoline prices on Monday. Now it costs the average Russian a week's salary to fill the gas

Motorists grumbled they would have to take on extra jobs to pay for gas - or just stop driving.

"I can't do without my car," moaned mechanic Vladimir Markarov. "We are going somehow to find ways to cope." He said he might use his car as a private taxi, or moonlight with extra car-repair

Prices for everything from clothing to cabbage have skyrocketed in Russia since January, when President Boris N. Yeltsin lifted decades of government price controls on most goods and services.

Appeals court to review California murder case

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A federal appeals court Sunday agreed to review two appeals in the case of a double murderer, who was scheduled to become the first person executed in California since 1967.

The appeals deal with two federal court rulings on different issues. One blocked the execution of Robert Alton Harris in the state's gas chamber. The other ruling refused to delay his execution on Tuesday.

A 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals panel agreed to review the appeals after conferring by telephone with prosecution and defense attorneys. Prosecutors are seeking to overturn a 10-day restraining order issued by U.S. District Judge Marilyn Hall Patel. She agreed Saturday with Harris, lawyers that there was sufficient evidence to consider whether death by lethal gas is unconstitutional under protections against cruel and unusual punishment.

Board trustees named defendants in lawsuit

AUSTIN(AP) - A federal judge Monday declared more than 1,000 school tax board trustees to be defendants in a lawsuit challenging use of the public education property tax system, which has been ruled unconstitutional.

U.S. District Judge James Nowlin said defendants and plaintiffs only are certified as classes in the case for next school year's county education district taxes, which are due in January 1993.

More than 8 million Texas taxpayers earlier were certified as plaintiffs in the case.

The defendant class named in Nowlin's order includes Texas' 188 county education districts (CEDs), each of which levy school property taxes within one or more counties; and their trustees.

OTHER OPINIONS

The (McAllen) Monitor on the Gotti conviction:

It was a victory for the government over organized crimes, but don't expect the conviction of John Gotti, up until then the "Teflon Don," to make the world a much safer place.

The case against Gotti, who now faces life in prison for murder and bribery, is among a series of successes scored by the government in jailing the heads of many of the so-called crime "families" operating in this country's major cities. ..

However, despite the headway against mob capos, crimes continues to worsen in America. Washington, D.C., the very center of the federal government, scored a record number of murders last year. The "war" on drugs has been a dismal failure, and gangs plague most inner cities.

One big reason: The gangs fight over illegal activities that should be made legal. In particular, drugs and gambling should be legalized. This proposal no longer sounds as revolutionary as it once did. And there are strong indications that legalization would be the best prescription for reducing violence. ...

Austin American-Statesman on presidential campaign:

The history of the United States is dotted with periodic episodes of sanctimony that invariably lead to dangerous tunnel vision.

There are signs that this may be one of those times. In politics, at least, those indications are clear. An overly pious national temperament may inhibit the country's ability to address and solve the myriad of problems it now faces ...

So far, the "issues" in both the Democratic and Republican primaries have had more to do with bleached blondes, 23-year-old induction notices and lip reading than anything even approaching substance ...

But all of us would do well to remember that sanctimony is inherently arrogant. At this precarious time in our history, such arrogance is fraught with peril.

Lubbock Avalanche-Journal on Noriega's case:

The gavel has fallen on a guilty verdict for Gen. Manuel Noriega, the former dictator of Panama, and that is good. An American jury that was not playing politics heard the evidence and convicted him on eight of 10 counts of drug and racketeering charges.

We say it is good in part because it would have been unthinkable for the U.S. government to have undertaken this costly prosecutorial effort only to see Noriega exonerated.

Was it worth the effort? That is debatable although we have no qualms about seeing Panama's former tin horn ruler spend the rest of his days in a cell for his drug world double-dealings. ... But in conducting a get-Noriega campaign, the U.S. government exposed dirty hands of its own — and perhaps for only a limited gain. ...

So there are lessons to be learned from this unsavory saga, ...

We can ponder those lessons, taking some satisfaction that Gen. Noriega can ponder his own lessons as he whiles the years in an American prison where his ill-gotten gains should bring him little comfort.

El Paso Times on prison board decision:

Texas Board of Criminal Justice proved once again Friday that, in the minds of the state's top officials, Texas ends somewhere east of the El Paso County line. The criminal justice board announced the locations for three new maximum security prisons, six medium-security prisons and 14 substance abuse facilities.

El Paso County was in the running for a 2,250-bed maximum-security prison, but will have to settle for a 500-bed substance abuse facility, the smallest of all the projects. Put another way, less than 2 percent of the state's 25,300-bed prison expansion program will take place in Texas' fourth largest city. It's kind of insulting.

Gov. Ann Richards last year compared El Paso to Brownsville, Texarkana and Nacogdoches, cities less than one-fifth our size. Friday's action by the Texas Board of Criminal Justice pretty much confirms that El Paso has yet to rise in Austin's estimation. ...

Fort Worth Star-Telegram on the IRS:

After staying up late to complete forms they do not always understand, in some instances writing checks in amounts of money they have to strain to part with and rushing to the post office to get it all into the mail before deadline, millions of Americans ... manage to stay in the good graces of Uncle Sam. It is, of course, the income-tax filing deadline, and it's part of a system that works rather well because of voluntary compliance.

It would be damaging if that voluntary compliance diminished, and yet, as the filing deadline approaches, there exists a situation that could undermine it: the disconcerting news that many foreign firms might be escaping paying

U.S. taxes. House Ways and Means Committee investigators say the taxes that foreign firms are avoiding could amount to $30 billion a year. The Internal Revenue Service, though, says it does not know how much the loss totals. At the same time, word comes that the IRS is doing an excellent job collecting delinquent federal student loans.

Last year, it confiscated a record $371.1 million in tax-refund payments from those who have failed to repay the loans. Those who voluntarily comply — and that's most of us — have every right to expect the IRS to pursue the foreign firms that are beating the system with the same vigor and tenacity it has commendably demonstrated in making the student-loan people keep up their end of the deal they made.

Bill, Bill, he's my man

QUINDLEN

The daffodils are pressing skyward, the winter coats are ratty and in need of rest, and July will be here before we know it. It is time to get serious.

We've had our season of None of the Above, the complaints that Mr. Right never stepped up to a podium and into our lives. Like the stages of serious illness, we've passed through anger and denial during this primary season. It is time for resolution, reconciliation, what the existential or the insurgent might call peace.

Bill Clinton is going to be the Democratic candidate for president.

He has the experience; he's done the time. A brokered convention would mock the primary process. For a few more minutes we can entertain the notion of a composite candidate: the oratory of Cuomo, the war record of Kerrey, the labor support of Harkin, the sheer decency of Tsongas, Bradley's vision thing, a bit of Nunn and Gore and Gephardt. And a good deal of regret, too, at all the candidates who stayed out of the race and must be kicking themselves today. Enough Identikit scenarios.

It's been a hard primary season, filled with questions. Clinton wasn't very good at some of the answers. He seemed to be doing a complicated minuet with his real self, the dance of the apologist for the person he once was. His evasions made big news.

folks who are uncomfortable with him, who think he's too slick or too polished or just not quite quite. And of executive clemency to halt the then they meet him. And their personal opinion changes. Bill Clinton is the guy who does better up close and personal. Still pictures and print quotes do him no service. They lack the twang.

For months he's been telling newspaper reporters that the American people have more important concerns than who he's bedded, and it read like excuses, excuses, excuses. But when he threw it back at Phil Donahue, told him they were going to be sitting in silence for a long time if this line of questioning continued, he won the audience in no time flat.

"Donahue" is just what Clinton needs, even if the political snobs think it's declasse. That, and any other venue that lets him behave in a way local politicians do on a swing time to get pragmatic. I hate down Main street. Clinton needs to shake the voters' hands and look into their eyes.

He is good on many of the issues, Every four years idealism seizes although he has a Democrat's unfortunate propensity for pie-inthe-sky, for spinning social welfare wish lists without really explaining But over and over you hear about where the money will come from. And I remain deeply troubled by the fact that he refused to issue an order execution of a brain-damaged murderer earlier this year.

> But at least he knows what the issues are, knows that we need some new deals. His Republican opponent will be a man who, if he had a heart tattooed on his biceps — all right, suspend credulity with me for the sake of the image — would have the words "status quo" emblazoned in the center.

Clinton's empathy for the poor and the striving seems genuine, the natural outgrowth of his own hardscrabble childhood. He needs to communicate that to the people and, in the process, bring them his own self. Ronald Reagan needed TV to abet a fantasy. Clinton needs it to communicate his reality.

It's time for a reality fix. It's pragmatism in presidential politics; I suspect that makes me not so different from a lot of other people. me by the throat and I wait for a white knight.

Perhaps this is the character flaw of someone whose first seminal political act was kneeling on a linoleum floor, saying the rosary with the sixth grade the day John F. Kennedy was killed.

But what I hate more than pragmatism is the idea of the Democrats expending their political capital bickering and what-ifs, the idea of four years of disaffection with a White House that, now more than ever, seems to hover on some astroplane above the workday world.

It no longer serves to compare Clinton with Jerry Brown, or Paul Tsongas, or some fan sy man we yearned to embrace in the face of our natural disasters. This has been a season of hard questions, but at its end comes an easy one. At a certain point, None Of The Above begins to sound dangerously like Four More Years. Is that really the message we want to send George Bush?

Aid to Russia should be more practical

WASHINGTON — Hastening to beat Bill Clinton to the foreign-policy punch, President Bush proposed to assist democracy in the former Soviet republics with a package that not even James Baker could price or explain.

WILLIAM SAFIRE

As it stands, the Bush-Kohl-IMF proposal seems to be a project by an international bureaucracy to prop up the Russian government in its hour of need. The payoff to us, under this theory, is that our aid will produce a less dangerous Russia, which will let us save money on defense.

That's the governmental way to think and a negative way to sell. Our purpose should be both more idealistic and more practical: to help root private enterprise in the new republics and to encourage their prosperity. The payoff to us is in expanded trade and a stable world economy, which will in turn provide incentives for peace and limit wasteful

You might expect that the first American president who once headed an oil company in Texas would zero in on the resource the new nations have in abundance: oil. Their oil reserves are their money in the bank.

Their current crisis is caused largely by their inability to get their oil and gas out of the ground and onto the sea lanes and pipelines. Twenty

Once in production, along with the development of new fields already identified, this resource would produce hard currency that would up January meetings between U.S. and Russian dwarf any foreign assistance now contemplated.

The central economic question of the year: How would we help the new republics get oil out of the ground and to market? For them, the right answer means the salvation of nascent democracy; for us, as Gary Hart points out, it also means the end of the OPEC cartel's ability to inflict inflation on the West.

The answer: a bit of "industrial policy," the use of government coordination to direct free enterprise toward a global economic goal. From the Caspian Sea to Sakhalin, the future of cheap non-nuclear fuel is in the land mass that is presently down on its luck. There's money to be made and jobs to be had for owner, developer, seller, transporter, buyer and user. What's obstructing development? The vestige officials. of communism is one obstacle. The old apparatchiks at Pravda denounced "White Nights," a Siberian joint venture of a Russian company and the U.S.' Phibro Energy, for "plundering Russia's underground riches."

The reformers have been slow to make decisions about contracts and ownership, and Boris Yeltsin blundered by imposing an oil export

Former communists see only a zero-sum game.

Bush has been half-hearted and uncoordinated.

His energy Department was helpful in setting oilmen, but not until last week did the State Department sign an agreement that gives some impetus to the kind of investment incentive that will get new wells drilled.

Now Overseas Private Investment Corp. (OPIC, not OPEC) is authorized to make loans and sell risk insurance to U.S. companies that establish ventures in Russia. OPIC's Fred Zeder contends that 200 companies have registered interest in investing $7 billion so far, many of them centered on oil and gas.

That's one way to start profitable enterprises in the U.S. interest when risks of expropriation or tumult are otherwise too great.

OPIC's loss ratio is less than I percent, and it adds needed official coloration to meetings between U.S. businessmen and overseas public

"We don't lend money to governments," says Zeder. "That's how you lose your shirt."

The only way to help the new republics build free markets is to stimulate private investment. The main magnet is oil. The White House and the Kremlin should set up a joint task force to focus on this and start the wells and hardcurrency profits pumping.

Conductor leaving LSO for El Paso

by JOEL BURNS THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

The 1992-93 concert season will be conductor Gurer Aykal's final season with the Lubbock Symphony Orchestra.

According to a report Friday in The El Paso Times, The El Paso Symphony Orchestra announced Thursday at a reception for Aykal that the Turkish maestro has signed a new four-year contract with the group. Under the contract, Aykal will conduct a minimum of seven classical concerts each year through the 1995-96 concert season.

Aykal is currently the music director and conductor of both the Turkish Presidential Symphony Orchestra and the Lubbock Symphony Orchestra. In the past, he has taught conducting at Texas Tech as well as at other universities.

In addition to conducting seven concerts in El Paso next year, Aykal will continue to conduct in Lubbock and Turkey, but will drop his position in Lubbock at the end of the 1992-93 season.

Plans for a replacement for Aykal have not been announced and calls from The University Daily to LSO publicist June Rogers were not returned. Clinton Barrick, the program director at KOHM-FM, which publicizes LSO events, said Monday that the 1993-94 season would probably be conducted by a series of guest conductors nominated by a search committee. From these guest conductors, a permanent selection would be made for the following Aykal was one of approximately 120 conductors who applied for the El Paso position. He replaces Abraham Chavez who had been the symphony's music director since 1975. Gay Brown, the executive director of the El Paso orchestra, refused to discuss with The University Daily the orchestra's reasoning for replacing Chavez with Aykal or salary aspects of Aykal's contract.

MIKE HEWLETT

As we begin the 13th week of the spring semester and head into the homestretch of another academic year many Texas Tech students are starting to make plans for numerous end of school get-the-heck-out-of-Dodge road trips. If your semester end blowout will entail camping, the Coleman Company (with some added input from me) has compiled a "must" list for that killer camping trip that won't be easily forgotten.

•Don't be embarrassed to ask for help — Would-be campers who simply lack the gumption and experience to take to the woods - never fear help is out there. Local libraries and bookstores are full of books and pamphlets on beginning camping and hiking and the Outdoors Shop at the student rec is always a good starting spot.

•Make your first trip a short one — Fine tune your skills at a nearby location; don't bite off more than you can chew the first time out. A trial run in the backyard can be fun and can aid in such survival skills as conquering fears of things that go bump in the night. Some good advice is to make that first outing at a developed campsite that has more of the comforts most of us city dwellers are accustomed to: i.e. running water, bathroom facilities. Make the eveningstweekends move to more remote areas as your confidence and experience allow.

•Keep it simple — Remember you are not setting out to take the north face of Mt. Everest. Try to pack only what you need; this means persuading your significant other to leave behind such "essentials" as her curling iron or his autographed picture of Hank Williams Jr. Try to plan your necessities by following a check list such as the ones provided by most outfitters. From this point you can determine which gear you can afford to leave behind, but Never THE PAGE FACTORY compromise safety.

•Planning is important — Especially when it comes to the food. Plan a sonable prices 762-0661. menu for each day and try to stay away from things you are unaccustomed to LIBRARY research, word processing, laser prints home with two other girls. $200 bills paid. 792-8856 cooking as cooking problems tend to multiply on trips such as these. Attempt to pack all utensils and spices that you will need but if something is forgotten don't panic, improvise.

•Be prepared — Particularly for extreme changes in weather. Nothing can ruin a camping adventure faster than a blue norther or that sudden monsoon if you're not ready for it. Even in August the nights can get chilly so don't diminish the value of an extra blanket. To be kept aware of the weather conditions it is recommended that campers purchase an emergency/weather theses, prompt professional service, rush jobs welradio. There are many models to choose from and most can be left on to alert you with an attention signal in the event of severe weather. A real must on the LQ Printing (letters, reports, etc.) Call: 746-6101, or "must" list is an official Red Cross approved first aid kit.

•Take (at least) two coolers — Keep beer-verages in a separate ice chest from the cold food supply. Constant reaching in for drinks can diminish the effectiveness of the cooler for your food and will definitely put the melt to your ice supply. The drink cooler can be a smaller size to facilitate easier handling and storage. Freezable ice packs are recommended if you intend to venture far from "civilization" because of their longer ability to keep foodstuffs cold.

•Take reference materials — Books on wildlife, plants and stars can add to the enjoyment of the trip and can keep outdoor know-it-alls in check. A deck of cards, dice, or a board game can come in handy should the weather turn bad or spirits sour. Many times after a full day in the sun a card game is all some woodsmen can handle. Oh - and don't forget the radio/tape player with fresh batteries. After a successful camping trip wouldn't it be a shame if all the goofy stuff that happened was just forgotten? Take your camera and lots of film.

Raider tennis teams come up short at tourney

Both Texas Tech men's and women's tennis teams finished their 1991-92 seasons at the Southwest Conference Championships this weekend at the Penick-Allison Tennis Center in Austin, with both squads coming up empty.

The men were shut out by Texas A&M 6-0, with Fabio Walker and Thomas

Cook both taking their matches to three sets.

The women fell to the Texas Christian Lady Horned Frogs in the first round for the second year, 5-1. Debbie Biswell was the only Raider to triumph, as she beat Margot van Overloop 4-6, 6-3, 6-2.
