Tech employees receive 1 percent pay raise

by RACHELLE CAMERON
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

Texas Tech employees will benefit from a statewide 1 percent pay increase effective Aug. 1 due to the early implementation of the lottery, and additional funds may be available as early as this fall.

Provision was made for a statutory salary increase up to 3 percent for all state employees during the last legislative session, contingent upon State

Comptroller John Sharp's certification of funds availability.

Last September, Sharp certified availability of funds for a 2 percent increase, and because of money made available through the lottery's success, an additional 1 percent pay increase was recently certified.

"This is the final 1 percent that the comptroller certified the state had funds for relating back to last year when the Legislature provided up to 3 percent per each fiscal year of '92 and '93," said Don E. Cosby, vice president of fiscal affairs.

Cosby said that normally the schools' salaries are set by this time of the year, but because of the success of the lottery, future increases are possible.

"We're hopeful that another 2 or 3 percent pay raise will be implemented as early as Sept. 1 as a result of the upcoming opening of the new lotto number game," Cosby said.

The game is slated to begin in December, and Cosby said he hoped it would start up early and be just as well received as the scratch-off portion of the game.

The last big salary increase for Tech employees was in September of 1989 when staff members received a 5 percent increase. The faculty received a 3 percent increase the following September.

"Numberwise, we had a lot more people not getting the 1990 raise than those who did," Cosby said.

"With inflation and the majority of employees not getting additional pay the last couple of years, this raise is very much needed for people struggling just to stay even with the rising cost of living," he continued.

While certain positions such as teaching and administration are funded by the state, Cosby said most other entities such as Housing and Dining and Athletics are paid through local funds, and the pay increase will be expanded to those employees as well.

Bush shakes up campaign, names Baker chief of staff

by TOM RAUM
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Bush named James A. Baker III, his longtime friend and troubleshooter, as chief of staff Thursday in a shakeup designed to energize his lagging re-election campaign and end months of White House drift.

Baker's resignation as secretary of state to take on a largely political rescue mission drew praise from Republicans. But Democrats ridiculed it as an act of desperation.

Baker himself appeared to have mixed feelings, his voice quivering as he told an auditorium full of State Department employees it was "one of the most difficult decisions of my life."

He will displace Samuel Skinner, who took the staff chief's post last December in an earlier Bush effort to impose order at the White House. Bush said Skinner will be general chairman of the Republican National Committee, largely an advisory post.

Deputy Secretary of State Lawrence Eagleburger, a widely respected career diplomat and protege of Henry Kissinger, will serve as acting secretary of state.

The changes take effect Aug. 23, right after the Republican National Convention — and the day before the next round of Middle East peace talks are to resume in Washington.

Democrats praised Baker but criticized the job shift.

"I hope it doesn't hurt the Middle East peace process," said Democratic presidential nominee Bill Clinton. His running mate, Tennessee Sen. Al Gore, called the change "a sign of extraordinary political panic."

Said Democratic party chief Ron Brown: "Taking James Baker off his post as secretary of state to salvage a troubled and directionless campaign reveals just how desperate President Bush and the Republican Party really are."

But Rep. Henry Hyde, R-Ill., called the overhaul "smart, not desperate."

Baker's job change parallels one in 1988, when he quit as Treasury secretary to manage Bush's campaign. Earlier, he had been President Reagan's chief of staff, but in a narrower version than his new job will be.

On your mark, get set ...

Members of the Texas Tech football team begin conditioning for their Sept. 3 meeting with the Oklahoma Sooners. The team ends its practice each day by running sprints and will begin practicing in pads at the beginning of next week. The freshmen began working out last week, while veteran players began workouts Thursday. Tech will play OU at Jones Stadium.

U.N. action expected in Yugoslavia

by JOHN POMFRET
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — The United Nations on Thursday laid the groundwork for sending troops into Bosnia-Herzegovina to ensure aid deliveries, as Turkey stood ready to assemble hundreds of soldiers to be part of a U.N. force.

In Geneva, the United States urged the U.N. Human Rights Commission to appoint an investigator to compile information that could be used in war crimes trials. The Red Cross reiterated its accusation that all sides in the fighting are guilty of abuses.

Also Thursday, a journalist driving into Sarajevo with Milan Panic, premier of Serb-dominated Yugoslavia, was shot and killed by a sniper.

David Kaplan, 45, an ABC-TV producer, was the first American killed in more than a year of fighting in Yugoslavia's bloody disintegration. At least 30 journalists have died covering the wars in Slovenia, Croatia and Bosnia and scores have been wounded.

Panic angrily declared that the snipers were "terrorist" and out of anyone's control. The identity of the sniper who killed Kaplan wasn't known.

In addition to the attack on Panic's convoy, a woman was killed and four people were wounded in overnight shelling that hit the main hospital in Sarajevo.

Panic's unexpected trip to Sarajevo did not bring any conclusive results.

Bosnia's Muslims and Croats voted on Feb. 29 for independence, and since then Serb fighters who want to remain part of Yugoslavia have captured two thirds of the country. More than 8,000 people have been killed and more than a million have fled their homes.

A Bosnian military official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Panic offered to recognize Bosnia-Herzegovina's independence if the republic stopped calling for U.N. intervention.

George Bush: Dead horse in the race?

KENDRA CASEY

It was to one of my daily routines of complaining about something that my manager at a local retail establishment responded, "sometimes change is slow in coming." It was not necessarily what I wanted to hear, but in some small way it erased my fears that all hope was not lost.

The more I thought about that glimmer of optimism, I stepped back and thought about having to sacrifice another week of prime time sitcoms to political campaigning starting Monday.

It's off to Houston for the Grand ol' Party convention.

No change there.

Unfortunately, sacrifice is how many of us see it, including those who feel pressured to become as educated as possible about the issues at hand in a presidential election year only to discover in November there isn't a candidate on the ballot we would vote into the Oval Office.

This election year doesn't hold any new promise for voters. With Ross Perot officially out of the race, the spice is gone.

Last month, the Democrats succeeded at their national convention in garnering significant support for a man from Arkansas and his running mate from Tennessee; a feat impossible without a stable party platform outlining worthy and specific goals for the next four years and a active first lady-hopeful.

The Democrats' success was enough to portray George Bush in public opinion polls as a dead horse in the race.

The fact of the matter is, next week may very well be the defining point for Bush in this election. Maybe.

The politically disappointing part about it all is that George's poor rating isn't all his fault. The GOP has not made the task of securing the White House another four years an easy job.

While the Democrats are boasting one of their strongest tickets in more than 20 years, the Republicans can't even agree on what they support.

Here's how it's shaping up:

•Abortion. What's the deal?

In 1988, Bush was not pro-abortion, but his campaign did not disregard the possibility of a more flexible policy.

In 1992, there has been an about-face on the issue with the party officially denouncing this week a woman's right to an abortion and her privacy.

•Taxes.

It's the same old story of no new ones, but the platform this year necessitated the word "mistake" in order to cover up for those tax increases in 1990.

Party officials claim that by admitting to the tax mistake, which some economists peg as the primary recessionary force during the past two years, it will show voters that the GOP has a backbone and will live up to the no new taxes promise this time.

"Give us another chance. We won't do it again." Maybe.

•Campaigning. What campaigning?

The Republicans don't have a bad ticket, just a mysterious one. Unfortunately, voters haven't had the opportunity to get to know Bush after his first four years. He has been trapped behind the politics of his party.

Remember the wimpy George Bush who stood up to a Democratic Congress in his first year as president and unleashed support for himself? Remember the George Bush who was strong about his military and foreign policy? The GOP seems to have the stronghold in 1992, not Bush.

•Barbara. She's quite a woman.

She won't admit it, but she is a mainstay in her husband's campaign and the Republican Party. She's one of the only healthy promises the GOP has to offer. Unfortunately, we're not voting for her.

Who needs those motivation seminars?

LAURA O'QUINN

Having been in an upper management position this summer, I look back on my experience as editor and wonder what really motivates people. Is it fear, anger, compassion or the desire to do the job at hand and do it well?

I have been to countless seminars where these extremely hyperactive, perky and all too bubbly men and women tell me I can have it all if I follow three simple steps.

During the day-long seminars the group plays some "ice breaking" games, eats lunch, listens to countless lectures and hopefully walks away with the knowledge of three easy steps to motivate you and your employees.

You learn that while one person may enjoy having the fear of God placed in him or her at the beginning of each work day, another may need coaxing and carefully chosen words gently spoken to him or her before punching the time clock.

However, just as quickly as I walk out the door feeling renewed and ready to conquer the world, I return to my everyday routine not remembering the three simple steps and wondering why I spent $80 on the damn seminar.

If it's not a seminar it's a great book your supervisor or friend suggested you read.

Of course after I finish reading the book that will "alter the course of my life," I wonder if my friend could use a few sessions with my therapist.

So after watching all of my hair fall out strand by strand this summer — I've called a plumber twice in three months to unclog my bathroom sink — my conclusion became clear and simple. Motivation comes from within.

If a person does not want to do an exceptional or even an adequate job where he or she works, that person won't. No matter how understanding the boss or co-workers are, that person has to have the desire to do the job expected.

Americans are spending millions of dollars on books and seminars that will tell them how to live a virtually worry-free life. My suggestion is to save your money and listen to yourself.

However, I do believe that people need someone or something to lean on in order to survive life's curve balls.

There's nothing wrong with looking to others for help, as long as you remember that what works for someone else may not work for you.

With that in mind, I understand now why I blanked out when it came to remembering information from those seminars — it worked for them, not for me. Oh sure, it gave me great tips on the dynamics of working relationships, but it didn't change my life. Thank God.

Separation of church and state

A few months ago, I offered a compromise on abortion. I suggested that state and federal governments would neither fund abortion nor deny the right to abortion. This compromise provided a separation of church and state. Those religions advocating anti-abortion would not have their tax money paying for abortions. Those individuals wanting to exercise choice would be free to do so. Those believing the issue of abortion is determined by human spirituality would not have their philosophy suppressed. Those believing the issue of abortion is determined by physical and scientific facts would be free to pursue their theories.

G.S. Chong rejected my compromise in a reply to my letter. I was willing to not impose through laws my philosophic (religious) convictions on anti-abortionists. The anti-abortionist did not reciprocate. I personally would be willing to accept some limitations on abortion such as a seven-day waiting period in exchange for guarantees to the right to privacy and freedom of religious choice.

Give an anti-abortionist an inch and they'll take a light year. Anti-abortionists as demonstrated by G.S. Chong are unlikely to give up their political crusade.

New engineering office to protect minority enrollment

by LYDIA GUAJARDO
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

Texas Tech's department of engineering recently has created an office to fulfill the needs of minority students entering and exiting the department.

Stephanie Adams recently joined the dean's office as director of minority engineering programs. She has been employed four weeks and is working on new programs targeting minorities for the fall semester.

The purpose for the office is to increase enrollment of minorities in the engineering department and to offer a support service for the students currently enrolled in the school.

"Our goal is to implement programs to prevent students from transferring or being placed on probation," Adams said.

Adams said the department also is working on tutor programs and new library areas for the students to have at their disposal.

This is the first year Tech will have a full-time person staffed in this position. In prior years, the position has been filled on a part-time basis and has not received a lot of attention.

"The commitment has always been there, now it is there full-time and that is all I am here for," Adams said. "There will be no chance for us to get side tracked."

One of the objectives for the fall is to increase the number of students graduating from Tech's engineering department, Adams said.

In 1991, 17 minority students graduated from the department. That number means that 7 percent of the undergraduates from the engineering department were minority students.

Of the 391 graduate students enrolled in the department last fall, none were minority students, Adams said. During the spring semester, minority enrollment rose to two students.

"I think it is a big challenge, but I like challenges," Adams said.

She added that part of the reason for low minority enrollment is the fact that many of the minority students are first generation college students. She said it often is difficult for families to adjust and understand the importance of a college education.

"The numbers speak for themselves, you have to make drastic changes for there to be changes," Adams said.

Adams' duties will be to make scholarships available to students and help them find information about intern positions. She will recruit members of various corporations to inform students of employment opportunities and intern positions.

"The university needs to nurture the students," Adams said. "The whole minority effort is not just minorities working for minorities, it is a commitment to students by all."

She also said there would be an effort to bring more students in from the area to be a part of the program. The program would target minority students from the Lubbock area, something that is not in ratio with city population of minorities.

"I like to get in on the ground floor and work up from that. There is no place to go but up now."

Bush officials promote trade agreement

by MICHELLE MITTELSTADT
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Senior Bush administration officials fanned out across the city Thursday to promote a trade treaty that would link the United States, Mexico and Canada in the world's largest trading bloc.

The continent-wide accord, which would phase out tariffs and other trade barriers over 15 years, faces a tough sell in Congress.

Organized labor, many environmental groups and some business interests are opposing the treaty on grounds it will spur an exodus of jobs to Mexico and worsen the environment along the U.S.-Mexico border crossing.

But U.S. Trade Representative Carla Hills, Environmental Protection Agency Administrator William Reilly and other high-level officials held briefings around town Thursday to counter those claims.

"Access to this huge, integrated market helps make the United States globally competitive and creates more and better-paying jobs," Hills told members of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce during an hour-long briefing.

She rejected claims that Mexico would benefit at the expense of the United States and Canada, saying the treaty would spur new growth in all three countries.

"The pie will grow overall," she said. "A dollar invested in Mexico is not a dollar lost to the United States."

Hills also went on the offensive against those who contend job flight to Mexico will result from a treaty, leaving hundreds of thousands of Americans jobless.

Most economic studies show there will be a net job gain, Hills said. Those showing the opposite are based on faulty assumptions, she said, singling out an Economic Policy Institute study projecting U.S. job losses of 550,000.

"This is really very harmful," she told the business leaders.

Hills also said the new North American alliance will not come at the expense of the Asian and European trade blocs. Japan has called the agreement a blow to free trade, while other Asian nations have expressed fear that their exports could face discrimination. The European Community has had no official comment on the pact.

"We have not raised our barriers to the outside world," Hills said.

Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady extolled the virtues of a trade treaty, saying it "uses open market-based principles to achieve growth and secure more opportunities for the American people."

"The success of that strategy is reflected in the dramatic turnaround in Mexico, which is one of the fastest growing markets for U.S. exports," Brady told reporters at a Treasury briefing.

Brady said the agreement will for the first time in 50 years allow U.S. financial firms to set up wholly-owned companies in Mexico and compete on the same terms as domestic firms.

In investment, he said the pact establishes rules "that eliminate most barriers to the free flow of investment between the United States, Mexico and Canada."

Separately, the Treasury Department announced the United States and Mexico have initialed a proposed agreement to avoid double taxation of income as a complement to the free trade pact.

Continuing ed offers 'shower singing 101'

by RACHELLE CAMERON
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

Have you ever wanted to improve your shower singing voice and earn credit while doing so, but didn't know where to go for help?

Well, try Singers Anonymous. Created for beginning singers, the class specializes in the basics of good singing techniques in a non-threatening environment, and it is one of the courses offered by the Division of Continuing Education this fall.

"We have something for everyone, whether it be learning time management or medical Spanish. Continuing education is here to provide programs that help the students solve problems," said Martha Hise, assistant director of the Division of Continuing Education.

Hise said programs for professional development and personal enrichment are offered to students, government, business, private citizens and other institutions seeking solutions for a variety of problems.

"We deal with social problems such as effective public speaking and assertiveness, and a great many businesses take advantage of our leadership training seminars," Hise said.

The division also offers classes in acting, creative writing, porcelain jewelry making and sign language.

For the adventurous person, there is the Texas Tech Adventure program designed to challenge people to go beyond their perceived boundaries and work with others. This entire course is taught on a ropes course constructed of telephone poles.

In addition to educational and informational services, the division has the second largest Independent Study Program in the United States with over 22,000 students enrolled worldwide.

"We have overseas students wishing to earn college credit in the U.S., and we also have a great deal of A&M and UT students enrolled in our program," Hise said.

She added that the majority of people taking advantage of the independent study program were not Tech students, but that numerous students participated in the test reviews offered for the GMAT, GRE, LSAT and SAT which are designed to help students prepare for the exams by developing test-taking skills.

New movie takes strange look at eternal youth

'Death Becomes Her' lacks strong plot

by KENDRA CASEY
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

It is everyone's dream: To secure eternal youth.

It is also the driving force behind Madeline Ashton, Meryl Streep's character in one of this summer's latest releases "Death Becomes Her."

The film boasts an impressive cast with Streep, Goldie Hawn, Bruce Willis and Isabella Rossellini, and proves to be an Oscar hopeful in the special effects department.

Streep's character, Ashton, is an overbearing actress concerned solely with her appearance which enlightens the audience to her greatest downfall — her fear of growing old.

When she manages to steal away her longtime friend and rival Helen Sharps' (Hawn) fiance, plastic surgeon Ernest Menville (Willis), Sharp is thrown into a 14-year eating binge brought on by her hatred for Ashton.

Hawn is transformed into a grotesquely large woman who spends her days in a cat-infested apartment eating frosting and watching scenes from films where Ashton is being murdered.

After surviving a stay in a mental hospital, Sharp appears in society as new woman.

When Sharp makes her first social appearance as the new and improved Helen Sharp, the audience is presented with a thin, beautiful, youthful woman shrouded in public envy and awe.

It is here that Ashton is faced with her aging youth and the possibility that her husband in a failing marriage might be attracted to his old flame.

Following a brutal emotional battle, Ashton visits Lisle von Rhumen (Rossellini) who offers her a potion that secures eternal youth and a warning to take care of her body.

Upon her arrival at home, she stumbles onto a murder plot gone bad.

Among all the film's foolishness, a few, rare good scenes stand out, including a party where all Lisle's customers have gathered. Among them are Elvis, Marilyn Monroe and James Dean.

The film no doubt was not intended to make a profound statement other than perhaps that eternal youth and/or beauty is not all it is cracked up to be.

Otherwise, the cinematography leaves much to be desired and the plot, pre-murder, is lacking.

The film succeeds in serving up a healthy taste of a warped sense of humor in a superb special effects package.

KTXT-FM undergoing changes for new semester

by KENDRA CASEY
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

Texas Tech's "New Rock Spot" is undergoing some architectural changes this month in preparation for the fall semester.

The executive staff at 88.1 KTXT-FM, along with help from Tech's building maintenance staff, is remodeling the station's on-air room to better accommodate KTXT's staff and equipment.

"That area wasn't built for a radio station when KTXT moved to this building," said James Faust, operations director. "The building stayed the same but the technology expanded."

The station has been off of the air for a week, and Faust said the project should be completed by the end of the month.

Among the modifications being made are the expansion of the on-air room and the addition of new turntables as well as the placement of new carpet and foam acoustical tiles.

News Director James Morgan said the expansion of the on-air room will allow the disc jockeys and newscasters to work more closely and improve the sound of the news shows.

"The newsroom was too difficult to use fully before," said Clive Kinghorn, station director and faculty adviser.

"We can better use the space by knocking out a wall."

The $3,000 project will modernize the sound of the station and provide a more professional work atmosphere, Faust said.

He also said that the changes will expose employees to the various aspects of the station, improve personnel relations and ultimately improve the sound of the station.

In addition to the physical changes, Sept. 1 will mark slight music changes for KTXT.

The station continue to host an alternative format, but will be adding more older alternative music.

"There will be more emphasis on older alternative, progressive '80s type," Faust said. "There will be no lack of new music. We're just making additions."

Remains of first century man found in Israeli cave

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The bones of a first century man named Caiaphas have been discovered in an ancient burial cave in Jerusalem, and archaeological evidence indicates they may be the remains of the high priest who handed Jesus over to the Romans.

The age of the bones, the elaborateness of the ossuary in which they were found, and the inscriptions with the name Caiaphas found on the side of the casketlike box point to the man described in the Gospels, although the Israeli archaeologists who found them say they cannot make a positive identification.

The finding reported in an upcoming issue of Biblical Archaeology Review is particularly striking since it represents the first archaeological evidence of the remains of any major figure in the New Testament, Ronny Reich of the Israeli Antiquities Authority said in an interview Thursday.

Reich said it's also one of only a few figures from the late Second Temple period. "Now, to that small list, we may add in all probability the high priest who presided at Jesus' trial," Reich wrote in the magazine's September-October issue.

Archaeologists happened upon the bones in November 1990 during the building of a water park in Peace Forest on the outskirts of Jerusalem.

The burial cave's roof had collapsed, and archeologists discovered 12 ossuaries, or boxes usually made of limestone in which the bones of the dead were stored, said Zvi Greenhut, Jerusalem's city archaeologist.

Wallace's contract not renewed for 1992-93 season

by LEN HAYWARD
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

Texas Tech Director of Athletics T. Jones said Thursday that assistant men's basketball coach Phil Wallace will not return for the 1992-93 season.

"His appointment was not renewed and we are now beginning our search for a new coach," Jones said.

Wallace declined comment on the situation Thursday. His contract expired on June 30 and was not renewed.

"I wish I could comment right now, but I think it would be best for me not to," Wallace told The University Daily.

Men's basketball coach James Dickey defended his decision not to renew Wallace's contract by stating that it was an "in-house matter."

"That is an internal matter and I didn't think that it needed to be released, to keep it inside the program,"

Dickey said Thursday.

Both Dickey and Wallace declined to comment on Wallace's employment status earlier this summer.

"I didn't feel good about the timing of the situation and I don't think there is ever a good time to release something like that," Dickey said.

Jones said head coaches in the Tech athletic department have complete control of their staffs.

"Absolutely every head coach we have has the responsibility to control and monitor their own staff," Jones said.

Wallace served as assistant basketball coach for one year under Dickey, who enters his second year as head coach after his team went 15-14 in his first year.

Wallace, 29, was part of the 1985 Southwest Conference Championship team under former coach Gerald Myers. A native of Dublin, Ga., Wallace transferred from DeKalb Central Community College in Georgia in 1983.

Wallace left a job with First National Bank to come to Tech last summer.

Guzman strikes out 11 in 6-1 win over Minnesota

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Jose Guzman, rumored to be on the trading block, showed on Thursday why he might be a pretty good acquisition for a contender.

Guzman held the Minnesota Twins to six hits, using his fastball to get ahead and his palmball to collect 11 strikeouts as the Rangers beat the Minnesota Twins 6-1.

Guzman (10-9) allowed only an unearned run in pitching his fourth complete game.

"That was a pretty good ballclub he shut down," Rangers manager Toby Harrah said. "He made it look easy and it's not easy."

The first two Texas batters hit the ball right at Scott Erickson's ankles. The No. 3 hitter almost took off his head. Kevin Reimer, batting cleanup, sent one over the World Championship banner, 395 feet away.

Erickson survived the first inning — thanks to his fielding, not his pitching — but he walked in two runs in the third as the Twins split the four-game series.

The book on the Rangers is that they're a fastball-hitting team, a myth Erickson repeated afterwards. Harrah has heard it before, and has been trying to get his batters to stop pulling the ball so much and making themselves easy targets for off-speed stuff.

In the first, Erickson gloved a bouncer from Al Newman at his feet, then deflected a line drive from Rafael Palmiero to third base, where Mike Pagliarulo relayed it in time to first.

Ruben Sierra lined one past Erickson's ear before Reimer made it 2-0.

Palmiero led off the third with a single — up the middle, of course — and one out later, Reimer singled to right-center to move him to second.

Erickson (8-9) struck out Dean Palmer, then went to 3-0 counts on three straight batters — Monty Fariss, Ivan Rodriguez and Jeff Huson — walking them all. It was Erickson's shortest outing of the year, going 2-3 innings and giving up four runs on six hits and three walks.

Sports briefs

Raiders to face UT on ESPN in spring

The Texas Tech men's basketball team will likely make an appearance on ESPN this season when it plays host to the Texas Longhorns Feb. 25 at the Lubbock Municipal Coliseum.

Coach James Dickey said he feels this is a step in the right direction for Tech and the Southwest Conference.

"We have a marquee player in Will Flemons and Tom (Penders) has said a lot of nice things about us down there in Texas," Dickey said.

The game is scheduled to tip off at 6:30 p.m.

Six athletes named to All-Decade team

Six Texas Tech standouts in three sports were among 128 athletes in eight sports named to the Southwest Conference Women's All-Decade team.

The Red Raiders had three players from volleyball including former All-Southwest Conference performers Lisa Clark (1987-90), Chris Martin (1988-91) and Becky Boxwell (1984-87).

In addition, two All-Americans from basketball, Sheryl Swoopes and Carolyn Thompson (1980-84), were named to the team and former Red Raider All-American triple jumper Amanda Banks (1986-90) also was selected.

Banks, who was a two-time All-America selection, won the 1988 and 1989 SWC triple jump titles and finished second at the 1989 outdoor nationals.

She was sixth indoors nationally that same year.

Auto builders, race fans looking for piece of history at Foyt car auction

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Auto builders were looking for bargains, race fans were looking for souvenirs and the Indianapolis Motor Speedway was looking for history. A.J. Foyt's auction had something for all of them. Thousands of pieces of auto parts and equipment went on sale Thursday as Foyt began unloading everything he no longer wanted or had room to store. The glamour items — old race cars, boats and personal vehicles — will be auctioned on Friday. "I collect memorabilia, like drivers' suits and helmets and things that are real hard to collect. I'll see what he has later on and maybe I'll bid on some of them," said former Indy 500 winner Arie Luyendyk, who stopped off on his way to Michigan for this weekend's IROC race.

First to go was a complete Foyt-Ford racing engine, which the Speedway's Hall of Fame Museum bought for $19,000.

Most of the items sold Thursday were engine parts, including crankshafts, dampers, oil pans, cam covers, rods, pistons, valves, seals, fuel injectors, spark plugs and bearings. Prices ranged from the hundreds to thousands of dollars.

"I've been asking A.J. to give me stuff, but he won't do it, so I'll have to buy it, I guess," Luyendyk said.

Some of the cars to be sold on Friday are expected to bring hundreds of thousands of dollars, including the 1977 Coyote Foyt built and drove to his fourth Indy 500 victory, a Lotus race car he put on the pole in 1965, and a 1984 Ferrari that had been gathering dust in a barn at Foyt's ranch in Houston.

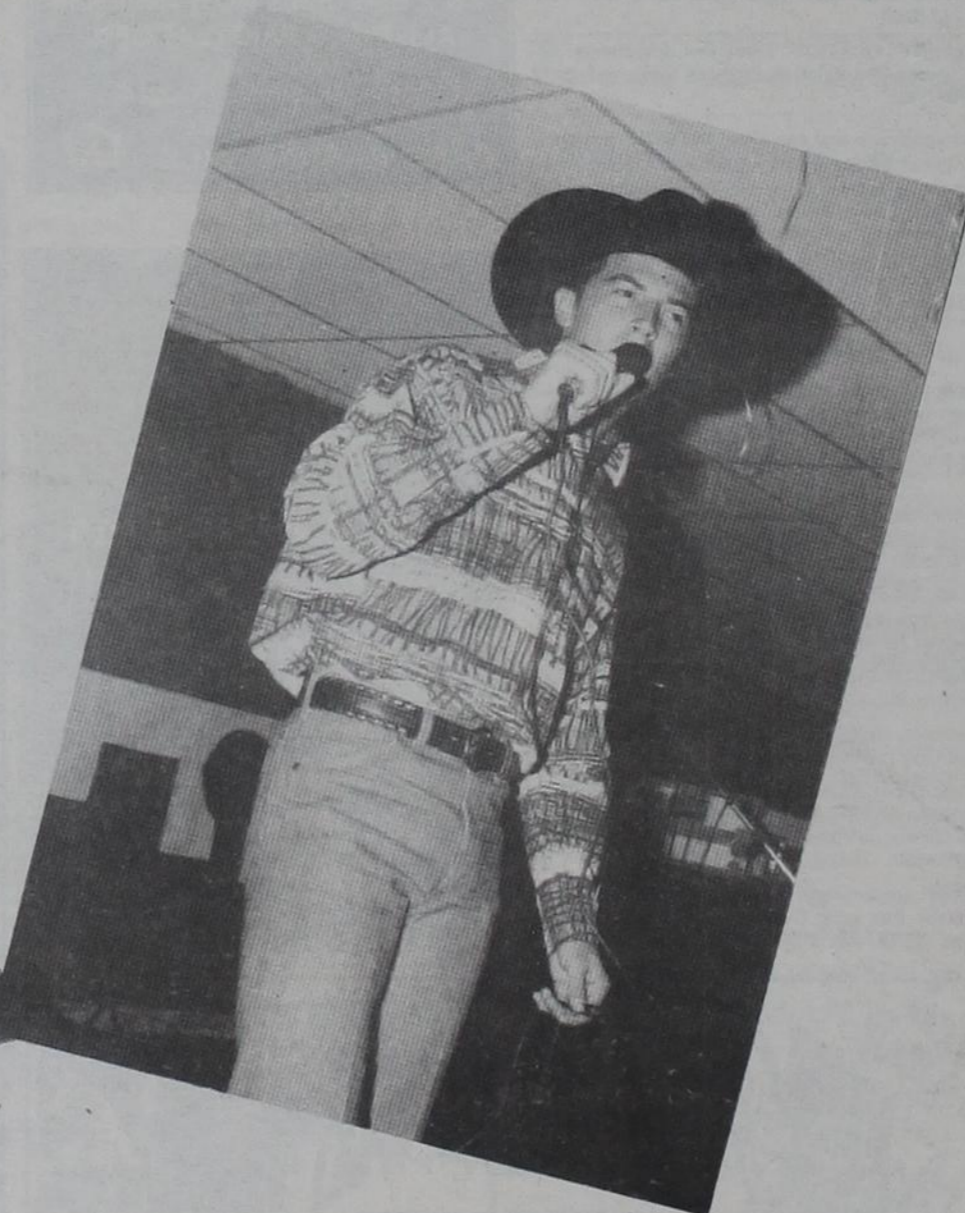

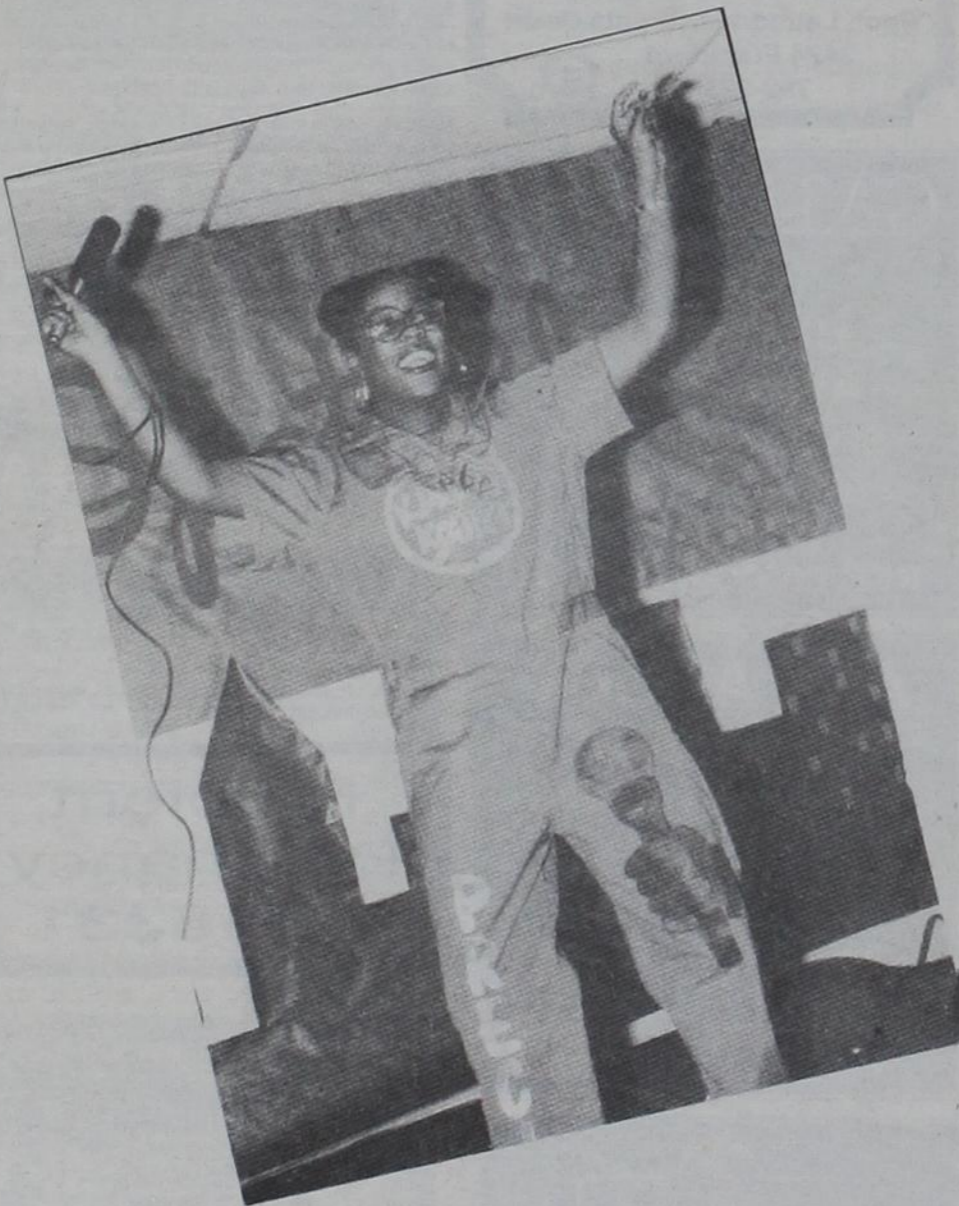

Former Indy car builder Grant King was one of the busiest buyers, walking from table to table to examine whatever he thought he could use for his restoration business.

"We've got some engines we're restoring ... two complete engines now. We'll just be using this for restoring old cars," said King, whose purchases included two engine blocks for $500 apiece, one lot of 66 crankshafts for $2,500, five dampers for $250, a complete set of heads for $1,750, and another lot of 18 Foyt-Ford cylinder heads for $4,000.

One item was enough for John Taylor, a Carmel High School teacher from Indianapolis and a longtime Foyt fan who bought a set of four Foyt-Ford cam covers for $400.

"I just came to buy something," said Taylor. "I don't know what I'll do with them. I just wanted a souvenir. Maybe I'll frame them."
