LONDON (AP) - The Church of England voted Wednesday to ordain women as priests, risking a schism with a stubborn minority that feels the move contradicts Scripture and tradition.

The vote allows the Church of England to join 12 of the 28 selfgoverning provinces in the Anglican Communion that already ordain women priests - most of them in the 2.5 million-member Episcopal Church in the United States.

In Rome, Vatican spokesman Joaquin Navarro said the vote was a "grave obstacle" to repairing the 16th century split between Roman Catholics and Anglicans.

"The church has been emotionally exhausted over this. Now we can get on with preaching the Gospel," said Cave Bergquist, a chaplain at Trinity College, Cambridge.

UT police officer discovers hazing

AUSTIN (AP) - A University of Texas police officer was surprised to find peanut butter and flour smeared in the hallway of a campus dormitory.

The officer was even more surprised to walk a few more steps to a student lounge and find 11 men clad only in diapers.

Lt. Ron Stalder says an officer walked in on a "hazing" shortly after midnight Tuesday that involved about 14 university athletes on the fourth floor of the Beauford H. Jester Center.

Stalder said no one was injured in the incident.

Freshmen, mostly members of the swim team, had to wear diapers, put on condoms and apparently were forced to eat goldfish, Stalder said.

Clinton to alter military policy

WASHINGTON (AP) - As president, Bill Clinton will be forced to deal with one of the most difficult issues affecting the military in decades — the Pentagon's 50-year ban on homosexuals and his promise to end

Clinton has not said when or how such a policy change would be instituted. And few inside the Pentagon have begun to prepare the military's 1.8 million members for such a major change, officials say.

But Lawrence Korb, Pentagon personnel chief during the Reagan administration, predicted, "Even if he doesn't act - which he could by signing an executive order - the courts will make the Pentagon do it."

Just Tuesday, a federal judge in Los Angeles reaffirmed his order that the Navy reinstate a homosexual sailor.

ADA proponents discuss Tech's progress at forum

BY JAMES DAVID THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

Texas Tech and Lubbock representatives discussed Wednesday in a public forum the progress being made to comply with the Americans with Disabilities Act, which became effective in January.

The forum, conducted in the University Center's Ballroom, was sponsored by Tech and the Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center.

Some progress being made at Tech includes upgrading facilities for the physically disabled at Jones stadium and making Dan Law Field handicapped-accessible for the upcoming baseball season.

"The goal is to make the entire campus completely accessible by January of 1995," Campus landscaper Art Gilick said.

At TTUHSC, elevator switches have been modified, the amount of time in which the elevator doors close has been increased, 3,680 doors have been adjusted to 5 to 8 pounds of pressure and public phones have been lowered for easier access, TTUHSC facilities planner Eric Williams said.

"Out of $100,000 appropriated for access upgrading (at TTUHSC), we have already spent $96,000," he said.

The University Police Department also is providing services for the physically disabled with a lift-equipped van, UPD police chief Jay Parchman said.

Gays in the military

The U.S. military is finally taking a step, albeit forced, into the modern era.

The Pentagon will reinstate Keith Meinhold, a Navy sailor, Thursday, after he was discharged for announcing his homosexuality on national television in August.

After World War II, the military implemented a ban on gays in the military. Meinhold's reinstatement is the first step toward determining the constitutionality of the ban.

According to the Associated Press, an annual average of 1,500 homosexuals have been discharged for their sexual orientation in recent

The military's ban on gays is just another block against equality in the armed forces that is based on ignorance, fear and hatred.

Military personnel claim that allowing gays in the military would disrupt the absolute cohesiveness required for military units. The reasoning is that the opinions of other military personnel who feel threatened or uncomfortable around gays are more important than the right of gays to serve in the military.

For the military to single out one lifestyle as harmful while other lifestyles are accepted is wrong. Personal lives should never interfere with one's job. The military, like all other business, has guidelines foracceptable behavior in the workplace. If those guidelines are violated, the appropriate actions are taken to prevent similar cases in the future.

Allowing gays in the military would not alter those guidelines. In the 1940s when President Truman integrated the military, a similar ignorant plea was made. Military personnel feared blacks would lower morale in the troops.

The military adjusted to integration; they will adjust to serving side by side with homosexuals.

It is ironic to think that the U.S. government has set rules for all businesses in America that the military is allowed to ignore.

The government believes sexual orientation is not a criteria for employment, yet the largest government employer has a ban that excludes applicants for solely that reason.

The grounds for harassment

To the editor:

The types of situations discussed in the Nov. 9 editorial "Too young to go to court" are precisely those that lay the basis for sexual harassment in universities and workplaces. Sexual harassers very seldom feel that their behavior is harassment. This is the case for adults, as well as for children. What victims see as violations of their dignity are seen as puberty. normal, natural and even invited behaviors by sexual harassment perpetrators, and often by others as

The behaviors that the editorial refers to as natural curiosity also lay the psychological groundwork for other forms of abuse, such as assault, rape and battering. It is never legitimate for one human being to violate the body of another human being. The notion that little boys are behaving normally when they peek up little girls' dresses is equivalent to saying that little girls' bodies are public property and that it and valuable person, quite the is silly for little girls to insist on personal control over who looks at their genitals — or who touches them where and how.

Children who learn on the school grounds that it is acceptable for boys to impose themselves on the girls out of curiosity are being conditioned to accept gender inequality as normal and natural. Little boys are learning that they do not have to control their sexual behavior. When little girls have to wear shorts under their skirts to protect themselves from prying eyes, they are learning that they are responsible for any violations that are perpetrated on

Acceptance of these types of childhood behaviors are the foundation of the belief that women, rather than men, are the foundation for the belief that women, rather than men, are responsible for rape. The psychosocial framework for sexual behavior is in place long before sexual drive increases in intensity at

The lessons children learn when little boys peek up the little girls' skirts are not about sex. They are about power. Both girls and boys are outrage and condemnation of Pi learning that men's power over women is legitimate and acceptable, natural and normal.

The parents who have chosen not to tolerate sexual harassment on the playground have served their daughter very well. This young girl is being told she does have a right to control her own body and that others have no right to violate her. She is being told that she is a worthwhile opposite message from the one so many girls receive when adults tolerate boys' satisfying their sexual curiosity at girls' expense.

If parents would teach their children at home about sexuality and University's Human Dignity about respect for others, sexual harassment would not occur on playgrounds or elsewhere. If teachers would refuse to tolerate expressions of sexual curiosity that occur at the expense of little girls, gender bias in educational settings would be greatly reduced. The gender inequality we see in adult life in whose name we pray," since has its roots in the experiences of childhood.

If it weren't for our tolerance of sexual harassment among children, there would be far less need for sexual harassment education on this campus.

Diversity in prayer

To the editor:

We write to express our personal Kappa Alpha and Fashion's Board's entertainment theme of "Party in the Projects" and all of the ensuing events at the party. Because of our concern about the negative connotations this party represented, we felt it important to attend the Oct. 22 forum at the University Center Allen about the diversity of their Theatre.

The meeting brought forth many students who were outraged that organizations could plan such a party without thinking about the consequences and feelings of people so negatively portrayed.

After an invocation the meeting started with a reading of the Statement. This statement condemned intolerance toward different races and creeds. Thus, as members of the Jewish community at Texas Tech University, we were dismayed that the opening and closing prayers referred to "Jesus Christ this excludes people of the Jewish faith from the prayer. Prayers are an important part of life, and as such, a non-denominational prayer can serve the valuable stressing common beliefs. Interestingly enough, while Pi Gwendolyn T. Sorell Kappa Alpha and Fashion Board claimed they intended no harm by their actions, they failed to think of the consequences inherent in their endeavor. Similarly, those participating in the forum on diversity did not fully consider the impact of an exclusionary

> Although well-deserved outrage was shown toward the party theme, we discerned no similar concern about the exclusionary prayers given at a public university in a public meeting. People should recognize different types of intolerance and think audience before they act. In the present case, this seems not to have occurred.

Clinton's name with hope, the first time I recall feeling that emotions since I cast my first vote for George McGovern in 1972. If ever a man has been tested for the presidency, it is this one, not in Vietnam or even in the trenches of long life, but in the court of public opinion.

My polling place was choked with voters; even children wanted to stay up and hear the news. Everyone is eager to say that this is because the American people seized the day. In time there will be many post-mortems of this election, but one thing they should all have in common is the admission that Clinton ran the best Democratic campaign in recent memory, and George Bush the worst Republican one. I began to believe that growing up struggling to make ends meet, learning to live with an alcoholic parent, losing the governor's office because of the hubris of the young and cocky, and moral spine that he had taken during this campaign might have taught him something about hard times.

Every once in a while I want a little hope, the way some people want a martini or a new pair of shoes. That's what Barbara Walters was trying to get at when she talked to Jimmy Carter. People said she didn't act like a journalist, and maybe there's some truth in that. But maybe there are simply some occasions when we reporters, despite our best intentions, can't help but act like human beings.

Election Day was one of them. I could be cynical about the possibility of real change and the manifest dangers of expectations. I could talk about the enormous challenges to come. But not right now. This is Clinton's moment; he deserves it and I am glad he prevailed. You walk into the voting booth and each time you pull the little lever there is implicit in the gesture a tiny leap of faith.
