Yugoslavia ordered to stop genocide

THE HAGUE, Netherlands (AP) — Bosnia's embattled Muslim government won a moral victory Thursday when the World Court ordered Yugoslavia to stop acts of genocide.

But the 14 judges did not deal with Bosnia's request for an exemption from the U.N. weapons embargo against the former Yugoslav states.

While the emergency measures can sway world opinion, the court has no enforcement powers. Its rulings can be enforced by the U.N. Security Council, although none ever have.

Bosnia's chief counsel, Francis Boyle, said the Muslim-led government would use the ruling to exert pressure on the Security Council to tighten sanctions against Serbia. The court may issue further rulings in the case.

Leaders to relive Washington march

WASHINGTON (AP) — Calling for a renewed commitment to end the "violence of racism and poverty," Coretta Scott King and fellow civil rights leaders announced plans Thursday for a 30th anniversary March on Washington.

"The critical issues that faced us in 1963 are unfortunately still with us today," said Mrs. King, the widow of Martin Luther King Jr. "We cannot give up, or give out, if we are to fulfill Dr. King's dream, and our dream, of a better America."

The march would commemorate the historic rally led by Dr. King that concluded with his "I have a dream" speech before about 250,000 demonstrators at the Lincoln Memorial.

Mrs. King said "hundreds of thousands" are expected at the Washington Monument on Aug. 28. The twentieth anniversary of the 1963 march drew 300,000.

O'Leary defends supercollider project

WAXAHACHIE (AP) — Energy Secretary Hazel O'Leary allayed fears Thursday that she is lukewarm on the super collider, calling the giant atom smasher "science that has been dreamed of for decades."

O'Leary's visit was her first to the super collider, which would be the world's largest scientific experiment. Backers of the project used the visit to personally gauge O'Leary's level of commitment to the $8.25 billion project.

Collider supporters became concerned earlier this year when O'Leary told reporters that she does "not feel passionately" about the project. "This issue becomes, can we afford this?" she said.

One collider official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said "there are mixed signals" from O'Leary on the project.

City council focuses on summer program

by BETH RASH
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

Lubbock City Council members examined a presentation Thursday concerning implementation of summer youth programs, and requested that all city children be allowed to participate in the Summer Satellite Playground Program.

During the council's 8:30 a.m. work session, Lubbock's Parks and Recreation Superintendent Newt Wheeler presented the council an explanation of the department's existing and planned summer programs to benefit Lubbock-area children.

The programs are aimed at "working hand-in-hand with at-risk youth," he said.

Wheeler detailed several programs, including the Summer Satellite Playground Program, an ongoing project that would provide school children bus transportation to area playgrounds during the vacation months.

Wheeler said the department extended the number of parks used in the program from 12 sites in 1992 to 15 sites for 1993. The program costs were estimated at about $7,000 per site, a total of more than $100,000 in park use fees.

City council members expressed concern about several aspects of the program, including costs and the relatively low number of children affected by the program.

Lubbock Mayor David Langston said he would like to see a program addition that would allow children from the north and west quarters of the city to be able to participate in the program.

"It's doesn't seem quite right to me not to have any programs in the north and west quadrants," Langston said. "That would indicate (to residents) that all our problems are in the south and east quadrants."

One council member also said he is disappointed in the number of programs among the city's four sections, and said that all Lubbock youth should benefit from such programs as the Summer Satellite Playground Program.

Langston said solutions to the problem could be as simple as obtaining corporate sponsorship and acquiring play equipment and volunteers from area schools, which would cut costs and encourage a citywide program.

He also suggested that program officials examine the possibility of obtaining college credit for volunteers from higher education institutions such as Texas Tech and Lubbock Christian University.

"If it needs to be done, then we should dedicate ourselves to finding a way to get it accomplished," he said.

Wheeler announced several other programs for youth in the summer months, including a Summer Opportunities Fair scheduled for early May that would publicize the project's programs for school-age youth in Lubbock-area schools. The fair also would promote youth productivity by offering a wide range of activities for the vacation months.

Langston said the summer youth programs, especially when working along with the city's neighborhood development program, would be a "dream come true" for Lubbock.

"This might encourage Lubbock to help our children," Councilman T. J. Patterson said.

The council also heard a recommendation for a lease agreement with John Farquhar for the Meadowbrook Driving Range. The lease would require Farquhar to be responsible for capital improvements to the facility.

ACT helping students assess financial future

by SANDRA PULLEY
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

Before filling out mounds of financial aid paperwork, students can get an estimate of their financial aid eligibility from American College Testing by sending in a one-page form.

"This program is primarily targeted at high school students who are planning their college careers," said Joan Anderson, an ACT specialist. "But this is certainly an excellent tool for college students who are unsure about their financial aid."

ACT offers a one-hour fax service for the estimates provided through the Financial Aid Need Estimator program. The ACT office staff sends back students' mail requests within one day of receiving them.

"This service also allows students to find out the costs associated with colleges they might consider attending," Anderson said.

"It gives parents and students and idea about how to plan for expenses," she said.

After filling out a sheet listing personal and family resource data and sending in a $5 filing fee, students receive a packet with an estimate of college costs and an estimate of the amount a family will have to spend toward an education. Students also will get an estimate of their Pell Grant eligibility and their remaining college financial need.

The packet lists other sources of financial aid available to students, including programs in the student's state of residence and deadlines for scholarships and other programs at the requested colleges. Students can obtain financial information about three colleges.

Students also get information about filling out financial aid forms, general information about financial aid processes and strategies for saving money to fund a college education.

Clinton reveals $1.5 trillion budget to 'restore hope'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton unveiled his $1.52 trillion budget on Thursday, a blueprint for 1994 that boosts taxes on the rich and slashes military spending to break the government's deficit-spending habit.

The budget fleshes out the skeleton plan that the new president released in February. The biggest change is that the amount of deficit reduction — $447 billion in five years — is slightly lower than what Clinton initially announced.

Clinton's budget projects spending $1.52 trillion for the fiscal year that begins Oct. 1. That increase — 3.2 percent over current spending — essentially keeps pace with inflation.

The economic battle plan hews closely to the philosophy he campaigned on last year: more money for low-income students and other initiatives to bolster the economy and create jobs, and an attack on federal red ink led by higher taxes on the rich, energy users and higher income Social Security recipients. These changes would still have to be enacted in legislation.

"The plan flows from the demand of the American people for change and my vision of what America can be if we embark upon an economic strategy of investing in people and putting people first," Clinton wrote to Congress.

"Achieving this change will not be easy, but the cost of not changing is far greater."

"It's pretty much what they promised — more taxes, more spending," said Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan.

"Far from being bold or bringing real change to government that Americans voted for, this budget is nothing more than a return to the failed policies of the past — higher taxes on everyone, more federal spending and bigger government," said Rep. John Kasich of Ohio.

"Together we can get the American economy moving again bring federal finances back to a sound footing and restore hope in the hearts of the American people," Clinton said.

Grant provides additional prenatal services in Odessa

by JAMES DAVID
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

The Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center Odessa Extension recently received a grant from the Texas Department of Health to expand its prenatal services.

The Permian Basin Prenatal Clinic will receive $127,000 over two years.

The clinic, open since 1990, provides comprehensive prenatal health care to normal and high-risk pregnant women.

"This clinic is an important part of the prenatal health care improvement plan which will focus on the improvement of mortality rates in Ector County," TTUHSC Odessa spokesman Audra Allaire said.

David Baldwin, M.D., director of the prenatal program, said, "The grant will enhance our clinic by making it possible to add prenatal sonography, family planning services, an increase in the number of hours the clinic is open and transportation for patients who might need it."

The grant enabled the clinic to purchase a portable ultrasound instrument with an abdominal probe, Allaire said. Before the sonography equipment was purchased, patients had to be referred to another hospital or clinic for a sonogram, where the cost to the patient varied between $125 and $180.

"Having the sonogram capabilities here at the clinic is not only more cost-effective for the patient, it also increases our ability to identify potential prenatal risks or abnormalities," Baldwin said.

The clinic is staffed by three family nurse practitioners, two registered nurses, two licensed vocational nurses and a support staff.

The hours of operation are 1 to 9 p.m. Tuesday and 8 a.m. to noon Saturday.

Lake project delayed due to legislative gridlock

by KENDRA CASEY
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

Funding disputes have caused the Lake Meredith desalination project to remain in legislative limbo despite legislative approval last year of the package in which the project stands.

Appropriations for the project have been held up by unrelated water projects in California that also are included in the package.

Before the desalting process can begin, approval of funding appropriations for one-third of the package must be given.

The 11 cities that rely on Lake Meredith as a water source, including Lubbock, Slaton, Brownfield, Levelland and Plainview, have committed money to fund one-third of the project with the state approving funds to cover another one-third.

Desalting the water source is necessary for citizens who receive water from Lake Meredith, said U.S. Rep. Larry Combest, R-Lubbock, while addressing the project's future during last week's meeting of the House Appropriations' subcommittee on energy and water development.

The maximum level of chlorides recommended by the Texas Department of Health and the Environmental Protection Agency is 250 milligrams per liter. Lake Meredith levels are at 400 milligrams per liter because of seepage of salt brine into the Canadian River that supplies water to the lake.

Combest also said the water conditions are responsible for corroding pipes and other devices through which water is transferred.

"This is much more than a matter of taste," Combest said during the subcommittee meeting. "The high salt level corrodes pipes and air conditioners and threatens recreation and fish and wildlife."

Majority Democrats have already whipped a deficit-reduction outline through Congress. It closely tracks Clinton's thinking. Over five years, it would cut deficit spending by $67 billion more than the president proposed.

Combined, the two plans would produce $514 billion in budget cuts by 1998, exceeding the nearly $500 billion that the 1990 budget summit planned over five years.

The $447 billion in reductions Clinton proposed relies on $296 billion in tax increases, $108 billion in defense and domestic program cuts, and $43 billion in lowered interest payments on the national debt.

Clinton now said his budget would leave a 1994 budget shortfall of $264 billion, down from an anticipated record this year of $322 billion.

The red ink is expected to drop to $214 billion in 1997, but balloon again to $250 billion in 1998, due to the rapidly growing costs of Medicare, Medicaid and other government health-care programs.

Going for the gold in sleep deprivation

CHARLES POLLET

College students constantly amaze me. Actually, I never cease to amaze myself, but because I am a college student, I figured I could generalize.

Today, I believe I have outdone myself.

As of now (7:10 a.m. Thursday morning) I have not slept for 23 hours and 10 minutes. And I don't look to get any sleep for about 13 more hours (that's 8 p.m.). I've got things to do. Things that absolutely can't wait. Well, if I can just last until 2 p.m., when I get out of class, I'll probably hit the sack then. But I'm sure I'll be busy until then.

I would go home now and skip class, but I've been to class about as often as the Mavericks have won. And I haven't been fortunate enough to sign Jim Jackson, so I don't have a two-day attendance streak going for me in any class. I just pray that I have the first pick in the lottery.

"The first pick in the 1993 TTU lottery goes to ... Charles Pollet."

"Thank you, Dean Winer. I select an A in magazine writing."

I would say I'm dreaming, but since I haven't had any sleep, I can't be.

I find the whole concept of sleep deprivation most interesting, and being in college has allowed me to experiment on myself frequently.

To be honest, though, I'm not sleeping right now because, as my little newt says, "I've passed my sleep window." Translation: I've stayed awake so long that I'm no longer tired. I just haven't figured out why it's called a "window."

I guess it's kind of like space travel.

We're sorry, Discovery, you can't land right now because the Kennedy window is closed, you'll have to stay in orbit for 13 more hours until the window for Edwards opens.

An obvious reason for avoiding sleep is studying. I remember well the time I stayed up until 7:30 a.m. (I'm closing in on that record quickly. I do believe it will fall.) studying for an art history test. I also remember, although vaguely, my grade — 44. When the lights were turned off in the classroom to view the slides, I went off right with them. But studying is not the reason why I have been awake for almost a full day.

Notice how I have yet to say, "pulled an all-nighter." I refuse.

Wagons are pulled.

Girls' pigtails are pulled.

Hamstrings are pulled.

Ineffective quarterbacks are pulled.

Baseballs are pulled.

Neglecting shuteye is not "pulled."

Another excuse college students use to miss sleep is partying. Perhaps this is the most often-used excuse.

"What's that? It's 4 a.m.? Big deal! The keg hasn't been floated yet." Unfortunately, that is not my reason either.

The reason I've used more than any other for staying awake longer than I should is doing nothing. I've spent countless hours on my couch at home watching "Infatuation" with Bob Eubanks at 12:30 in the morning. Following the "Newlyweds Game" host's hip new show, I try to catch a 30-minute paid advertisement for Soloflex.

After that the really good programming, like "Escape from Witch Mountain" or "Herbie Goes Bananas," comes on. No one can turn off Buddy Hackett and that jokster wearing the big 53.

Alas, I am not awake to do nothing, either.

That leaves only one reason — work.

Yes, I have been working. I have been slaving away in front of a computer for about 21 straight hours working on The University Daily Lady Raiders Commemorative Edition. Get 'em while they're hot. Besides, if computers emit low-level radiation, I want to contract cancer as quickly as possible so that I can collect worker's compensation.

And if Casey Westenrieder, the sports reporter with a cult following, can lose his hair for the National Champions, I can lose sleep.

It's worth it.

At least I won't have people looking at me as if I recently tested the garden weasel on my head and I definitely don't have to wait three years before weeing into dreamland.

Did I mention that I am wired from caffeine so bad that McGyver couldn't disarm me? Ten cups of coffee, four Vivarin tablets and a Dr Pepper since 3 a.m., but who's counting.

My writing window just closed.

Minority recruiting

Tech should take the lead

KENNETH BOBO

The Institution of Affirmative Action is a target of conservatives throughout our country and for good reason. If all things were equal then I would greatly oppose it, but as we know, all things are not equal. There is a large segment of society that has only been "Constitutionally" equal for about 130 years.

In a conversation about solutions for our racial tensions, a president of a traditionally white fraternity stated, "I've been up here for four years and I've only had one black teacher and maybe two Hispanic."

He's got me beat. I've only had white professors. The only non-white teachers I've had have been TAs in the foreign language or mathematics subjects. He went on to say that it would be nice to get a different perspective of history, philosophy or any other subjective discipline. If we had such diversity, people would get an intellectual insight into our differences.

But, Kenneth, you are limited to your course load. Surely there are full-time black faculty members at our school. I thought I'd ask around and see what's up. I asked some faculty about the situation and got some numbers from the Affirmative Action office.

Out of the 780 full-time faculty at Texas Tech there are seven blacks and 12 Hispanics, (less than 3 percent). That is not equality. This shows that our school is still in the Dark Ages (no pun intended) when it comes to equality in faculty. I wonder what the numbers would be if we didn't have an Affirmative Action office.

MY QUESTION: DOES THE TECH ADMINISTRATION ACT WITH THE SAME ZEAL AND ENTHUSIASM WHEN RECRUITING BLACK FACULTY AS TECH COACHES WHEN RECRUITING BLACK ATHLETES?

I was told that there is no social life for black intellectuals in Lubbock.

I was told that Tech has tried, but has had no success in minority recruiting.

I was also told that there are not a lot of minorities qualified to be full-time professors.

Some aspects of the aforementioned may have some basis in fact, but there is a certain hypocrisy in this matter. Faculty is recruited.

Every year after the last game, Tech football coaches gas up their cars, purchase numerous plane tickets and write hundreds of handwritten letters recruiting the best athletes throughout our whole country. Over half I would wager are black. They sell this university and the Lubbock community to young men. They steal recruits from other more "attractive" schools and entice these black athletes to come and make millions of dollars for Tech. (Check the roster.)

My question: Does the Tech administration act with the same zeal and enthusiasm when recruiting black faculty as Tech coaches when recruiting black athletes?

I think not.

I will not call this racism. Too often minorities use that word as a crutch. I'll chalk it up to an oversight in judgement and prevailing West Texas attitudes.

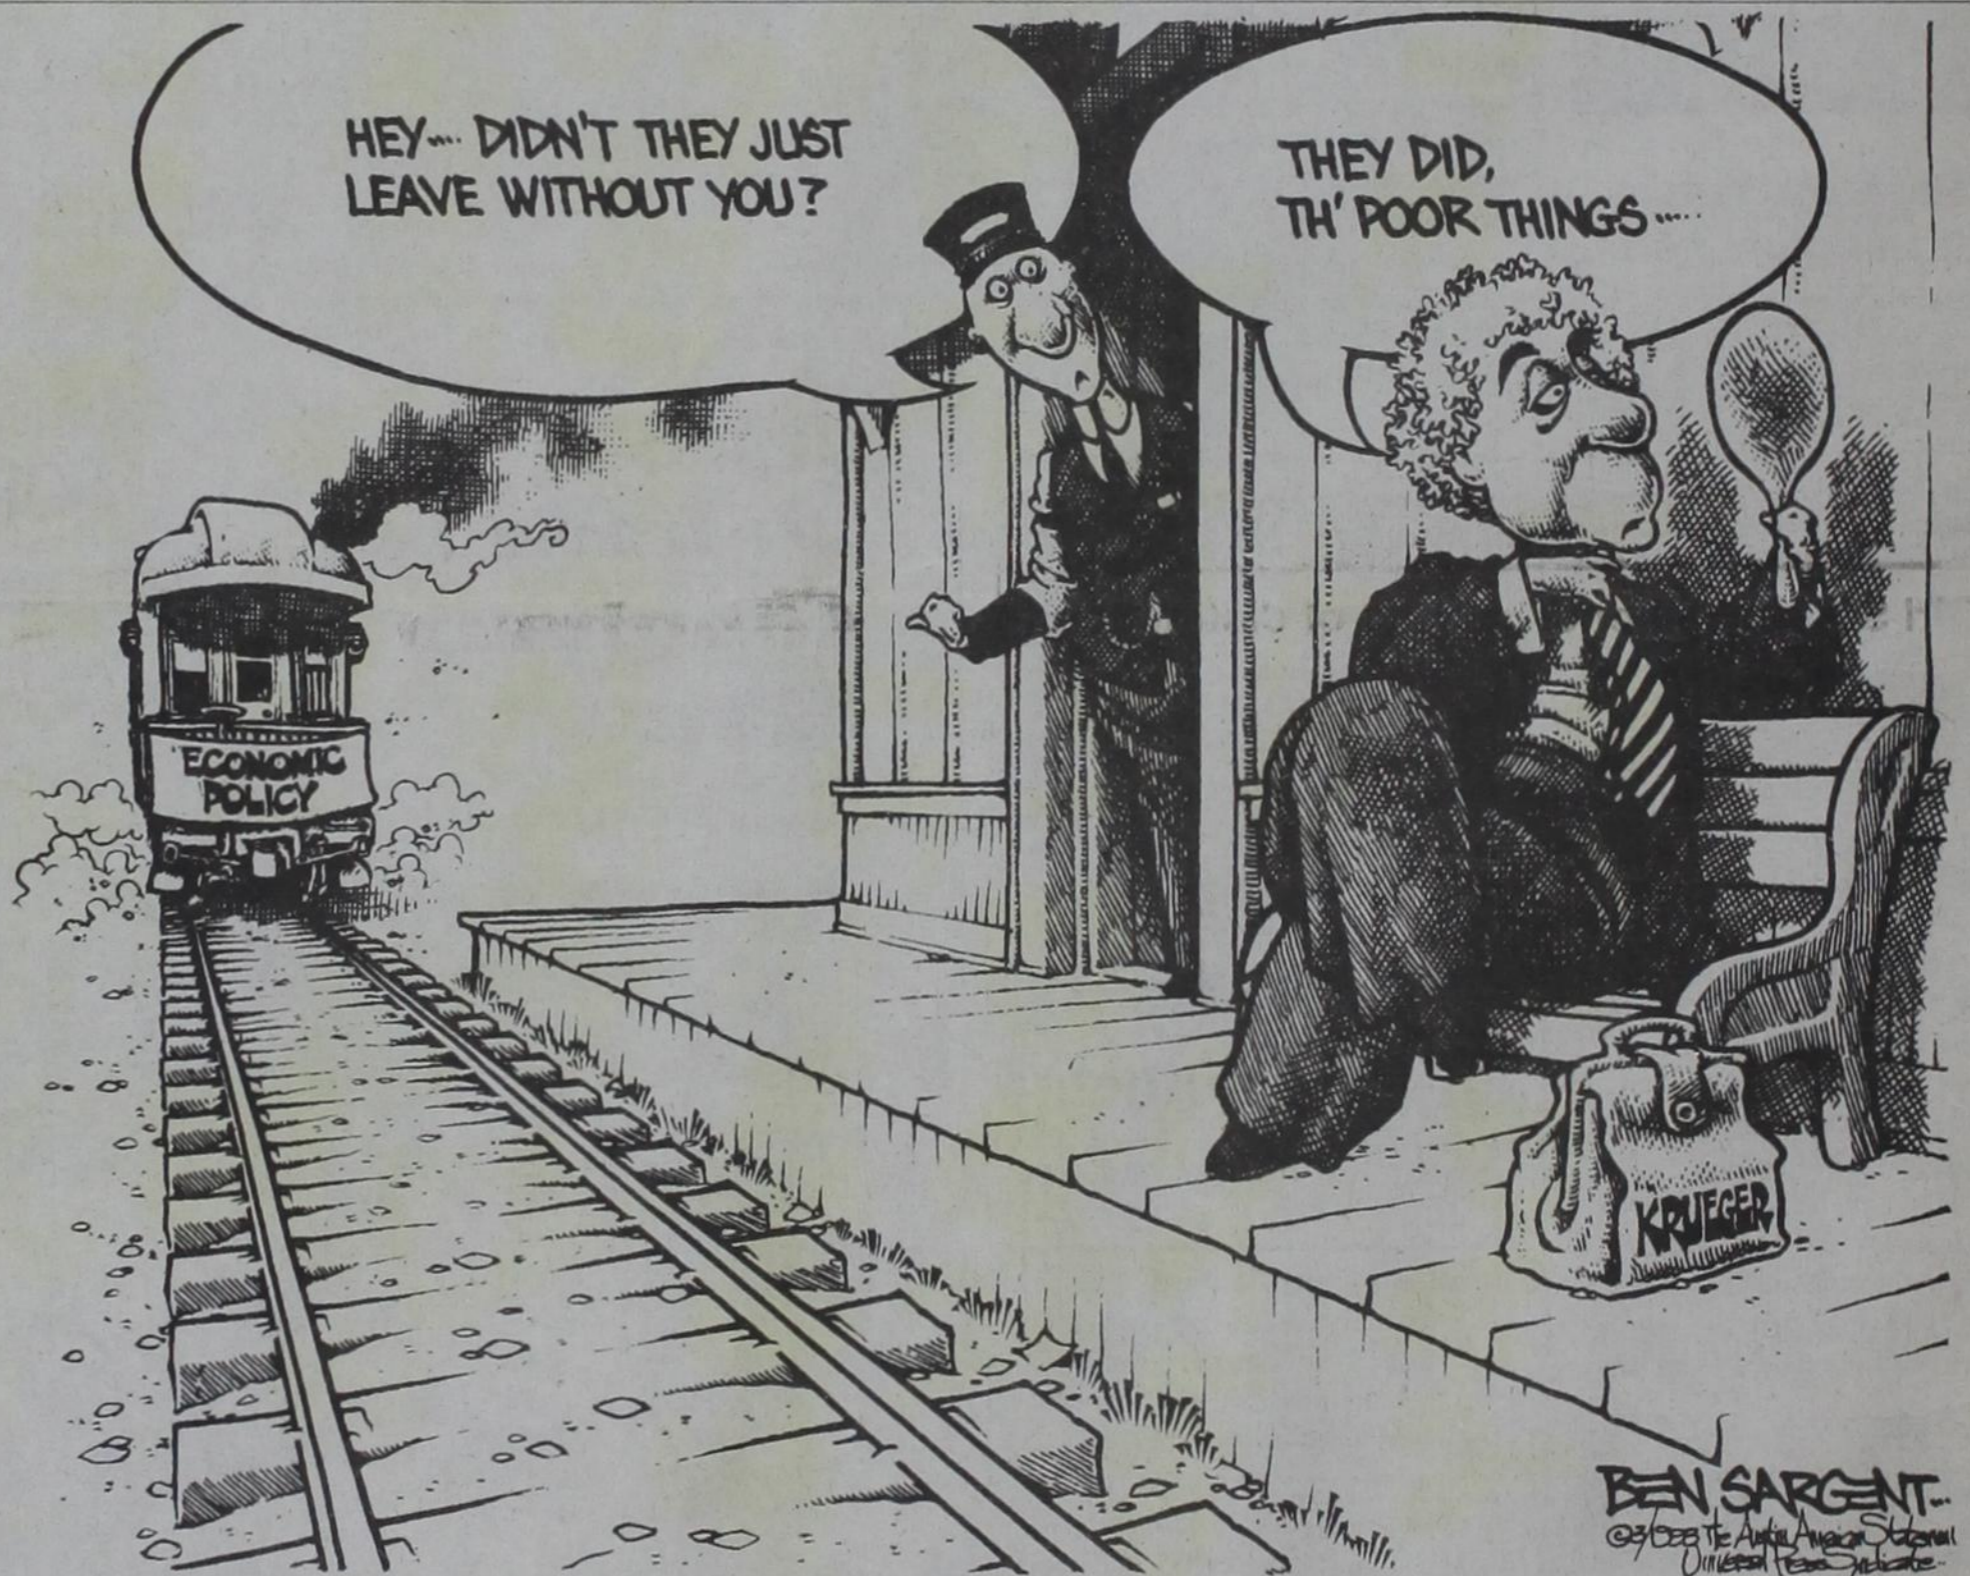

If all people who voiced opinions against the Pikes and Fashion Board really are concerned with the importance of diversity and cross-cultural understanding, then the pressure on the administration to hire and recruit qualified minority faculty should be substantial. The actions of the groups are not the source of racial ignorance, they are the product.

I have faith in our school. If I didn't, I would have transferred years ago. I have faith in our president. He's a good man and respects the position of minority students. He asks for suggestions and has positive objectives. My criticism lies in the fact that as a university, Tech has not maximized its potential.

Texas Tech is a major university, but acts like a struggling grammar school. We feel inferior to UT and A&M and constantly complain about funding. Here is an opportunity for Tech to blaze a trail and improve our image by instituting fair faculty hiring practices.

Immediate action in the area of equity in faculty would be more effective than a symbolic "Unity Day" where we act like everything is fine and smile for the brochure.

Breaking the domesticated mold

ANNA QUINDLEN

The standard gripe is that the First Woman is a monogram chameleon, tailoring what she's called to suit what she wants.

As a young lawyer and newlywed she was Hillary Rodham, her given name. When that was perceived as bad for her husband's burgeoning career, she transmogrified into Mrs. Bill Clinton. During the campaign she was simply Hillary Clinton. And afterward, when the world was presumably a safer place for strong-willed women, she became Hillary Rodham Clinton.

"Masquerade!" shouted her detractors, the same people who like to discuss why Americans hate and resent Hillary, a discussion based on an utterly false premise. Early polls have shown Mrs. Clinton with a high approval rating, and six in 10 Americans surveyed last month thought her both qualified and suitable to head the president's health care commission.

But no one has seemed particularly interested in why the masquerade was necessary in the first place, why she needs to pretend to be something she is not to convince us that she is something we believe she ought to be.

That masquerade starts early, and it's one of the reasons behind a new national project called Take Our Daughters to Work Day. Mark your calendar; tell your school. It's on April 28, and the plan is for mothers, fathers or other interested adults to take a girl with them to work, to show her that she is important enough to be given a guided tour of the world, whether that world is a hair salon, a precinct house, a law firm or a laundry.

I signed on to the advisory board for this in part because I figured it would be good for grown-ups as well as girls. Maybe we'll demystify our jobs for some of our kids, who think of our work as the enemy, the thing that keeps us away from them.

Maybe parents with work that's low-paying and arduous can communicate to their daughters why they want them to study hard, stay in school and go on to college. In that way the day may promote parent-child understanding, which is a close second to world peace.

I know it leaves the boys out; I've been asked why there isn't a Take Our Sons to Work Day. The answer is in the atmosphere. The Ms. Foundation, which came up with the idea, feels a certain urgency about showing the girls they count.

In recent years we've learned that they come to believe, sometime between elementary and high school, that they do not. A survey by the American Association of University Women two years ago showed that the self-esteem, confidence and expectations of girls go south during adolescence in a much more precipitous way than for their male counterparts. I saw this in action not long ago, talking to a group of smart eighth graders. The students who asked questions were overwhelmingly male. One girl stepped up to the mike, then put her hand over her mouth, mumbled an apology, and sat down again.

Like Scrooge in his nocturnal wanderings, I recognized my former self, a quarter-century ago, paralyzed by the dichotomy between the ideal girl and the girl I was. The chasm was considerable.

Maybe some of our daughters took notice of how Hillary Clinton was seen as abrasive, power-hungry and unfeminine when to some of us she seemed merely smart, outspoken and hard-working. Maybe they saw the masquerade and recognized intuitively the age-old message about how much more attractive women are when they are domestic, soft, contented, the message aimed over the years at Susan B. Anthony, Margaret Sanger, Eleanor Roosevelt and many, many others.

The message that sometimes makes you clap your hands over your mouth at the life mike.

It's better than it used to be. Just as most of us can't tell our kids stories about walking five miles through snow to school, so many of us can't lay claim to the problems of an earlier generation, in which women who graduated from law school were sometimes offered a secretary's job at a law firm.

But still our young girls, like our First Woman, often get contradictory and hostile messages about their lives, their futures and their selves. One day of unusual attention won't change that. But it's a way to begin.

Tech researching environmentally safe ways to clean up oil

by SANDRA RIEGLE
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

To help avoid the controversies of current oil spill cleanup methods, Texas Tech students and faculty are evaluating the use of low grade cotton and wool for oil absorption.

The research, a commercial undertaking to develop a superior natural absorbent, is a collaborative effort of Tech's departments of civil engineering, chemical engineering and biological sciences.

"In spite of considerable care and concern, we anticipate that there will be oil spills of various sizes," said Harry Parker, project director and chemical engineering professor. "The absorbent pads are best suited for smaller spills and final cleaning of larger spills."

The research, a response to environmental problems caused by oil spills, will focus on the biodegradation of cotton and wool's natural fibers. The biodegradation will help prevent hazards developed by incinerations and landfill pollution.

"Currently, the oil spill absorbents are predominantly synthetic and are not biodegradable and, therefore, must be burned or placed in an approved landfill," Parker said.

The research team also includes Philip Nash, visiting industrial research associate of civil engineering; Caryl Heintz, associate professor of biological sciences; and Cliff Fedler, associate professor of agricultural engineering.

"One of the benefits of the research is that it has combined individuals from engineering and biological sciences," Nash said. "It's a strong team that keeps getting stronger."

Project researchers are determining means of disposing the natural fibers that are environmentally friendly, such as in composts.

The project also will help boost the Texas economy by promoting cotton grown in West Texas.

"Cotton is a particular interest to Lubbock County, and in this application, lower grades of cotton can be readily used and, similarly, lower grades of wool," Parker said.

Researchers are attempting to improve cotton and wool fibers, which have similar oil absorption capabilities, he said.

The researchers are completing studies for Phase I of the project and are negotiating funding arrangements required to begin the next phase, Parker said.

The three basic strategies researchers use in testing cotton and wool in Phase I are absorbent product and oil degradation testings and the scaling up of cotton.

Oil absorption and low-rate oil absorption tests also are used to evaluate the amount of oil that various types of cotton and wool absorb and the amount that will be absorbed in water.

Phase II of the project will analyze the biodegradable aspects of the tested absorbents.

Appropriations for the project are provided by the Oil Spill Division of the Texas General Land Office.

Parker said additional funding may be provided by the U.S. Department of Agriculture and various manufacturers of absorbent pads.

Research results of the completed phases will be presented June 7-9 at the Arctic and Marine Oil Spill Program Technical Seminar in Calgary, Alberta.

Mechanical engineering students take top honors at conference

by SANDRA RIEGLE
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

Texas Tech's student chapter of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers received first, second and fourth place awards last weekend at the annual American Society of Mechanical Engineers Regional Student Conference at Southern Methodist University.

"The students brought a lot of recognition to the school by performing so well at the conference," said Jahan Rasty, associate professor of mechanical engineering and faculty adviser for the chapter.

Sophomore Jeff Hooker received first place honors in the technical poster category for his presentation, "Measurement of Electrical and Thermal Conductivity of Monolithic Carbon Aerogels."

Senior Robbie Truelock and junior Jeff Castleberry received second place honors in the technical poster category for their "Improving Mechanical and Fatigue Properties of Through-Holes by Cold Expansion Process."

Senior Gary Bourn received fourth place honors in the Old Guard oral presentation for his "CNG Challenge."

Twenty-five schools from Arkansas, Louisiana, Oklahoma, Texas and Mexico attended the conference.

"I think we did really well considering the number of students that were there," Rasty said.

Tech's chapter also received fourth place for the conference's Allied Signal Competition.

The chapter receives points from the national organization for promoting engineering, Rasty said. The points are reported to the national headquarters, and the chapters that accumulate the greatest number of points are honored at the annual conferences.

Reid McNally, the society's regional director, presented the award to Tech's chapter.

Lubbockites gathering to stop substance abuse

by JAMES DAVID
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

Lubbock residents from 19 neighborhoods will sponsor an open town meeting on preventing substance abuse from 7 to 9 p.m. Tuesday at the University Medical Center's McInturff Conference Center.

Members of the Lubbock Substance Abuse Prevention Partnership Coalition and UMC officials announced the meeting at a news conference earlier this week in the conference center.

UMC President and Chief Executive Officer James Courtney presented a check for $39,426 to Fran Scott, the coalition's president, during the news conference.

"The University Medical Center is now a fourth partner in our coalition," Scott said.

The coalition also includes neighborhood task forces and a state advisory committee headed by Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock.

"The meeting will help us kick off the solution phase of the task force's work," coalition member Ken Bastian said.

Alice Day of the Longview-East Texas Substance Abuse Prevention Partnership will discuss ideas implemented in East Texas neighborhoods.

Coalition member Leigh Mires also will report on the results of focus groups conducted in 14 of the 19 Lubbock neighborhoods.

"The members will then break up into discussion groups by neighborhood to discuss steps to take in their own communities," Scott said.

Bastian said the meeting is designed to give the coalition a starting point.

"Volunteers in the neighborhoods will receive training later," he said.

The coalition's meetings will take place quarterly in the McInturff Conference Center, and representatives of individual neighborhoods will report on their progress, Bastian said.

"The UMC has donated start-up funding for this project as part of our preventive medicine program and our ongoing commitment to preventing illness and injury," Courtney said.

Tech to honor graduating non-traditional students at luncheon

Texas Tech's Dean of Students Office is sponsoring a luncheon Monday from 11:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. in the University Center's Lubbock Room to honor outstanding non-traditional students graduating in May.

"This yearly event has proven to be a very positive way to honor the non-traditional students and to provide them with the opportunity to thank faculty, family and friends for their support and encouragement," said Assistant to the Dean of Students Jo Hutcherson.

"The traditional students have so many outlets to be honored on campus. The non-traditional students don't have as many opportunities to be honored," she said.

Academic deans from Tech's seven colleges nominated two students older than 25 to be recognized. The honorees will receive a certificate and a pin for their contributions to Tech.

"It's a very happy, emotional occasion," Hutcherson said. "It's one of the neatest things we do for the adults."

Tech President Robert Lawless is attending the luncheon where his wife, Marci, will be honored for being a

May graduate.

The non-traditional student honorees are Jack Thompson, Bradley Walters, Patricia Powell Hightower, Delma Gomez Perez, Olga Kilpinen, Teresa McGrew, Tina Marthaller, Stephine Andrews, Ruth Pruet, Bertha Lahart, Chester Camp, Joe Bob Brockman, James Greer and Sherrie Jones.

Former teen idols Duran Duran making comeback with new album

by SANDI RIEGLE
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

Just when you thought they had disappeared, Duran Duran, the notorious pop icons of the 1980s, is making yet another contribution to the music industry with its latest release entitled simply "Duran Duran."

And with the success of the album's first single, "Ordinary World," the band may reclaim some of its former status in the industry and in the public spectrum as well.

Duran Duran's prior fame and notoriety in the 1980s had 15-year-old screaming girls swooning in grocery store aisles over their photos in teeny-bop magazines which earned the band the title of the "Fab Five."

That nickname, a play on the Beatles' "Fab Four" moniker, has long since vanished, but the memory of those days still lingers in band member's attitudes and early buoyant videos.

"Our attitude hasn't changed," said Simon Le Bon, lead singer of Duran Duran, in a telephone interview last week. "Our attitude has always been that the most important thing about the band is its love of music, the passion for music. I don't think any band is any good if it doesn't have that."

Duran Duran's early videos, which depicted scantily-clad women and were filmed in exotic locations such as Sri Lanka and Antigua, helped warrant them the status of a superficial teeny-bop band lacking any real substance and talent.

According to Le Bon, those days are over.

"Our audience has become a much broader section of the public basically," said Le Bon. "If you go right back to when we very first started, we played to a club audience, so it was really an over 21 and under 30 audience."

Then we were pretty much aimed by the industry at teen-age girls. What I saw when I walked on stage in Los Angeles before Christmas and then New York after Christmas (in December, 1992 and January of this year) was a very different audience."

The band has managed to sustain a degree of respect in the music industry perhaps in part because of their continuing liaisons with MTV, the video network responsible for their initial success in the United States.

"We are inextricably linked with MTV," said Le Bon. "MTV has been crucial to the success of this band, so we've got an interesting relationship with MTV. We can't get live with them and we can't live without them."

The lineup of Duran Duran, since the departure of Roger Taylor, the band's original drummer, and guitarist Andy Taylor, has been one of continual change in the past few years. The band's newest addition, guitarist Warren Cuccurullo, became a permanent fixture in the band in 1989 after touring and recording with Duran Duran since the original band members' breakup in 1986.

That infamous breakup, which left teen-age girls heartbroken as to the fate of the pop messiahs, was due to friction within the band and also between the band and its managers.

When the two Taylors left the group, the remaining three members Le Bon, keyboardist Nick Rhodes and bassist John Taylor, continued to release albums for a maturing and smaller audience.

Duran Duran released three albums after the split, and also continued touring, although its profile diminished somewhat.

The group's extended lacuna from the music industry and also from civilization after its release of "Liberty" in 1990 left a number of fans wondering whether or not the band remained intact.

"I guess as far as people are concerned the band sort of fell down the back of the sofa when it should have been on the mantle piece and that's the job we feel we've got now in hand is to get the picture back on the mantle piece," said Le Bon.

Above all else things such as the production of videos are secondary to the band's essential role, the band's music, Le Bon said.

"We have different things to say now. I think we are becoming more honest, we don't feel like we have to be an escapist kind of band," he said.

Le Bon said his role as band lyricist has also changed in his approach to writing. The band's songs have become surreal because "surrealism is where things are heading, at least for this band."

SA veep-elect motivates young people by encouraging them to make positive life choices

by BETH RASH
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

"You hear things today about kids making low scores on all the tests and not being able to get into college, but there are kids out there who really can make a difference."

Just ask Zach Brady, the newly-elected Texas Tech Student Association external vice president.

In addition to holding down a part-time job, serving as historian of his fraternity and an executive officer of the Interfraternity Council, Brady also is involved in something he said is worth the effort for himself as well as those whose lives he touches.

Brady, an agriculture communications and Spanish major from Abilene, is a representative of the Ambassadors for Agriculture, an organization sponsored by the Dean's office of the College of Agricultural Sciences and Natural Resources.

He speaks to about 15 groups of young people each year on topics that center on how the students can make a difference in their lives and the world they live in.

Most of the groups who hear Brady's speeches are high school chapters of Future Farmers of America and the 4-H Clubs of America.

Brady said the young people who attend the speeches are the main reason he enjoys this part of his life, and getting them involved in his presentation is the most rewarding part.

"It's definitely the interaction with the young people that's appealing," Brady said. "I always try to relate to my audience. The most important thing is to try to relate to people and say things from their point of view. I'll do stuff that's a little off the wall to try to get them involved. It's not like speeches that you hear all the time."

Brady said the difference between his speeches and ones he calls ordinary is that he uses examples that strike a chord in the hearts and minds of the students.

"I'll talk about people I knew in high school or people in my family that have made a difference in my life," Brady said. "I don't necessarily use people that are on the front page of the Wall Street Journal or the New York Times because I don't think that matters. I use normal folks that have made a difference closer to home."

Brady's efforts do not go unrewarded. He said he saw one of the fruits of his labor Saturday at a high school agriculture competition on the Tech campus.

Brady saw a boy who had been in his audience at a February 1992 speech. The boy had just received an award in an individual category of judging and was waiting for the results of the team competition, a result that would determine if the team was to advance to the state competition. Brady said the young man was very quiet during the wait, but the announcement came that his team had placed second in the competition.

"He was really happy," Brady said. "He's going to go on and graduate from high school and play football at Hardin-Simmons University. It was neat to see him do what he is capable of. That's what's really rewarding, when someone I talked to who has told me that maybe I made a difference makes that kind of achievement."

Brady said he has no plans to stop making motivational speeches in the near future, even though he has a lot of activities on his schedule.

He said the things he will be involved in from now until the time he graduates will make his life hectic, but he is prepared for the challenge.

"It's going to be a big time commitment, sure, but I think I'll be able to balance it," Brady said. "I really wouldn't feel like I was doing anything if I wasn't running around like a wild animal all the time."

anything again, then I'd be unhappy. That's the only thing I'd miss, that kind of excitement and we still have that," Le Bon said.

"Things are quite different from what it was before, from the first time," Le Bon said. "We all feel very, very lucky to be given a second chance."

'Cheers' cast bids farewell to hit sitcom

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Filming of the final scene of "Cheers" ended in tears as Ted Danson, Kirstie Alley and other cast members bade farewell to the 11-year-old sitcom.

Most of the 90-minute episode, featuring the return of Shelley Long as the intellectual barmaid Diane Chambers, was shot last week because of the actress' time constraints.

Former Paramount Studios chief Brandon Tartikoff Garry Trudeau were among the extras seated at the bar for that episode.

Woody Harrelson, who plays Woody the bartender, said just reading through the final script was "heavy."

"Boy, did I cry! Just bawled my eyes out," he said.

Harrelson said he will miss his fellow cast members terribly, but he's not entirely sorry the nation's most popular TV bar will be closing down after 271 episodes on NBC.

In the past few years, the work has been "just totally unchallenging," he said.

Despite changes, local theater preserves South Plains, West Texas history on stage

by BETH RASH
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

The little town of Post is bringing a little bit of South Plains history into the future. Post's Garza Theatre was built in the earliest years of this century and has housed countless vaudeville acts and silent movies in its history, but it has since graduated to an art that is more in touch with the present, live theater.

In 1986, Post resident Will McCrary opened the Garza Theatre and began delivering South Plains residents the excitement of the theater. McCrary died in 1991, but the legacy still remains.

Jane Prince-Jones, Garza Theatre Managing Director, said McCrary's death inspired those remaining at the theatre to find a way to keep the play performances going.

Prince-Jones said the historical aspect of the theater has a definite impact on the audience.

"It's a totally different experience," she said. "I call it the 'Post Experience'.

When you step inside that theater it's like you stepped back in time." She said the Garza Theatre is still housed in its original brick building on Main Street in Post, but the theater was nearly totally renovated after being gutted by fire in the 1950s.

Some items inside the theater have been donated for restoration, but she said the newness of some of the equipment is sometimes a drawback.

"You want to fix up some things to make it modern, but then again you want the nostalgia," she said.

Prince-Jones said the theater is doing well considering its location, which is nearly 40 miles from Lubbock. She said generally about 70 to 75 percent of audience members are Lubbock residents. She said the trip to Post is a worthwhile excursion for those looking for something interesting to do rather than "just go to the movies."

"People come to Post because it's a way to get out of Lubbock," she said.

"It's just a totally different type of entertainment."

Prince-Jones and the cast and crew of the play have begun performances of their third production of the 1993 theater season. The play, "The Lilies of the Field," opened April 2.

The story centers around a man who has recently been discharged from military service and is looking for work. A group of nuns take the man under its wing, and he begins doing odd chores for them. The chores escalate into a bigger project later, the construction of the nuns' long time dream of building their own chapel.

"It's a story about faith," Prince-Jones said. "I thought it would be really appropriate for Easter."

Performances will run consecutive weekends until through April 18. Evening shows on Friday and Saturday will begin at 7:45, and Sunday afternoon performances start at 2 p.m.

Tickets are $7 for adults and $4 for children ages 6 through 12.

They may be purchased at Mail & More in Memphis Place Mall in Lubbock or at the Garza Theatre Box Office, 226 E. Main St., in Post.

Spring weather means new entertainment in Lubbock

JESSICA SMARTT

Spring is finally here.

The hurricane winds are blowing everyone across campus, the bunnies are distracting drivers on the Tech freeway and everyone is wearing shorts and freezing through their 8 a.m. classes. But most importantly, the Beer Garden is open.

Tonight, weather permitting, the hallowed meeting grounds for drunken college students, The Depot Beer Garden, will open its doors and greet people with the sounds of local band Mr. Love Dog. Cover is $3 at the door. Saturday night the Beer Garden will feature local band, Rumble. Cover for the show is also $3.

Next door, the Depot Warehouse will be housing yet another giant rave party. Whip out those combat boots and glow in the dark toys, and prepare to dance all night long.

Make sure to drink a lot of water while you're there, though. I read a story about some kid in New York dying of heat exhaustion at one of these things. The rave will feature Prodigal Son and Grain, along with Mr. Johnson, Charaka D., Voltaire, Troy Anderson, Kasey and Picadilly. Tickets are $6 in advance at Ralph's Records or University Records and $8 at the door. Doors open at 9 p.m. and the show will last until the wee hours of the night.

Want to mellow out and unwind instead? The jazz music of the Jim Morris Group can be heard Friday night at Day Break. The show is $2.

Saturday night the "kooky entertainment" of the Meatball Heads will be on stage at Day Break to please the crowd.

The group will present a variety show of acoustic, folk and show tunes, including its own version of the musical "Annie." Should be interesting. That show is $2 and will begin at 9 p.m.

HOW MANY BOARDS WOULD THE MONGOLS HOARD, IF THE MONGOL HORDES GOT BORED?

THE FAR SIDE

Hot off the press, the very first edition of the Desert Island Times caused the newspaper to quickly fold.

"One more time: You were at the park, enjoying the afternoon, when you distinctly heard the defendant turn to his dog and say: 'Look, boy! A stickman!'"

Program teaches about hardships of living with physical disabilities

TYLER (AP) — When Mary Kay Armstrong climbed into a wheelchair at the University of Texas at Tyler, she knew by afternoon's end she would be back on her feet.

When Sandra Senna and Kelly Anderson sat in their wheelchairs, it was a day like any other, and they knew those chairs would be their link with mobility for years to come.

Ms. Armstrong and 12 other nursing and psychology students at UT Tyler recently spent the day in wheelchairs as part of the "A Mile in My Shoes" disability program sponsored by the Association of Students with Disabilities and the Division of Nursing at the university.

Several other nursing students participated in "a blindfolded lunch" to simulate how a person who is blind feels when being fed by another and how to feed a person who is blind.

After lunch, several of the students who adopted wheelchairs for the day participated in a panel discussion with Ms. Senna and Ms. Anderson.

Ms. Armstrong, who is studying rehabilitation psychology, said she had a new understanding for the frustration people with disabilities feel when trying to open a heavy door or fit into a bathroom stall.

"I'm frustrated. My hands hurt extremely bad. And I had a lot of people stare at me today. There were two professors who were previously my teachers who just looked down at me and walked by, and I knew they knew me," she said.

She said she found most of the students on campus to be very helpful and willing to lend a hand, even without being asked.

Ms. Armstrong relied on the help of a passerby to make it up a very steep hill, then had to apply the brakes liberally when going down the other side of the hill.

Hall says starting QB position still up for grabs

by JAKE RIGDON
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

Hall

After helping Carter High School capture the Texas 5A championship in 1988, Texas Tech senior quarterback Robert Hall still had many knocks against him.

At six feet tall, he was too short. At 170 pounds, he was considered too small.

But as the Raiders prepare for the 1994 campaign, Hall is the leader the Raider offense is looking to. Hall is also considered as one of the top signal callers in the Southwest Conference.

"Really, the only thing they were saying was that I didn't have the size to play, so I guess some teams didn't look at me as much," Hall said.

Tech and Syracuse were two of the few teams that took a good hard look at the Carter product. Also one of the quickest quarterbacks in the league, it was rumored that some teams wanted to switch Hall to running back or wide receiver.

"Really, that was never a question (about switching positions) in my mind. Even though I might not be as big as some of the other quarterbacks, they only looked at me as a quarterback because my technique was more sound than others," he said.

Even though Tech had already given all their scholarships, Hall still decided to join the team as a walk-on.

"I wanted to go to Syracuse or Tech because they recognized my talent even before we went to the championship (at Carter). I realize now that I made the right decision," Hall said.

However, coming out of Carter brought along its problems, too.

Many of his friends at Carter went to Texas A&M, and he said he took some heat for not becoming an Aggie.

"A lot of those people wanted me to go to A&M because of playing at Carter," he said. "But they realize that I wanted to go out here and help Tech, and I just wanted to go to a school where I knew I was going to play."

After a stellar second half season as a sophomore, the expectations were riding high for Hall in 1992.

But when Hall injured his shoulder against Southern Methodist, he only played in one more complete game, the last one of the season against Houston.

"My shoulder feels pretty good right now, I'm just trying to get all my strength back in it," he said. "The pain isn't there when I throw, just when I lift."

In Hall's absence, senior Jason Clemmons came on to lead the team to victories against SMU and a last-second win over TCU. Clemmons finished second on the team in passing with 979 yards and nine touchdowns, and was fourth on the team in total offense behind Hall, "Bam" Morris and Lloyd Hill.

Because of this, Hall said the quarterback competition is wide open this year.

"I think it's free competition at every position. I think everyone has to prove themselves," he said. "I mean, we're grown men out there, if you don't want to play then you shouldn't be out there."

As is evident from spring practice, the offense this year should be even more improved from last season's squad that produced more than 423 yards per game on offense.

"I definitely think we'll be better (on offense) next year because we have nine starters coming back," Hall said.

"I think last year we were not as smooth. I've been real pleased with how things have gone so far this year because we've found some players we need. We have a lot of good offensive linemen, good runners in the backfield, and we've found some wide receivers that can catch."

With this season being his last as a Raider, Hall said he is going to try to help out some of the younger quarterbacks Tech signed earlier this year. The Raiders signed Tony Darden from San Antonio Holmes and Lubbock Estacado's Zebbie Lethridge, both considered Hall prototypes.

"I guess when I got here, I pretty much had to figure out everything for myself," Hall said. "But I'm going to help make their stay more pleasant than it was for myself."

"I think I had a pretty good spring practice," he continued. "I got back in the flow of things. I was throwing good and just executing well. Overall, this spring was OK."

Other happenings around conference

DALLAS (AP) — A weekly round-up of Southwest Conference sports outside the realms of football and men's basketball:

BAYLOR — The Bears have begun a bit of a comeback from a midseason hitting lull to jump into fourth place in the conference baseball race. Coach Mickey Sullivan's crew has raised its batting average back to .306 behind the stickwork of junior outfielder Matt Trozzo of Houston at .376 and senior pitcher-1B Joe Wharton of Farmers Branch with a .361 batting average.

HOUSTON — Taking a week off the conference circuit, the Cougars' baseball team hosts NAIA power Tarleton State in a three-game series Friday and Saturday. UH pitcher Matt Beech of San Antonio has been among conference strikeouts throughout the year (he's 10th this week with 51) while Houston's Phil Lewis has a league-leading seven triples.

RICE — The Owls' tennis squad is scheduled to play its fourth SWC match of the season Thursday against SMU in Dallas and brings a 2-1 mark into that bout in all-important SWC tournament seeding opportunities. Houston's Matt Berry continues to be a steady influence on the young Owls after combining for a 11-9 mark in SWC singles and doubles last year.

SMU — After hosting some of the world's top decathletes at Morrison-Bell Track earlier this week, the Mustangs duly have been inspired to compete well in the Texas-Arlington Invitational Saturday. Freshman sprinter Glen Elferink of Uitenhage, South Africa, already has one of the SWC's top performances in the 200 meters with a wind-aided 20.94-second clocking.

TEXAS — Junior Justin Leonard of Dallas has been paired with defending Master's champion Fred Couples, a University of Houston alumnus, in the first round of the 1993 Master's golf tourney at Augusta, Ga. That honor came after Leonard, the two-time defending SWC champ, captured the 1992 U.S. Amateur title and followed in the footsteps of UT's Tom Kite.

TEXAS A&M — Hosting the Texas A&M Invitational Saturday, the Aggies look to some outstanding area competition to challenge an A&M team which could be a high NCAA Outdoor finisher. Senior Kalleen Madden of Yoakum already has the 1993 SWC high-point total in the women's heptathlon at 5,390 points while sprinter Gerry Woodberry of Lamesa has a 10.2-second hand time in the 100 meters.

TCU — The Lady Horned Frogs' tennis team began the week just one match out of first place in conference standings behind 5-0 Texas with a 4-1 SWC slate. Coach Roland Ingram has built the 1993 outfit from an almost all-underclass 1992 contingent, including Arlington's Leigh Ann Smith and Nancy Terrell of Marble Falls with a composite 42-16 singles' record.

Tennis team picks up first SWC win

by LEN HAYWARD THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

The Texas Tech men's tennis team picked up its first Southwest Conference victory of the season Thursday by defeating the Rice Owls 4-3 at the Athletic Training Center.

The Red Raiders overcame a tough surge by the Owls to improve their record to 13-8 and 1-3 in the SWC.

Beuerlein's quest could lead him back to 'Pokes

IRVING (AP)— Steve Beuerlein's search to find an NFL team willing to pay him the millions he feels he's worth on the open market seems to be leading him right back to the Dallas Cowboys.

Troy Aikman's backup may indeed find himself hanging his cleats next season in the same stall he's occupied at the Cowboys Valley Ranch headquarters the past two years.

To keep Beuerlein, Dallas would have to pay him about $1.5 million for one season. That's about $1 million dollars more than Beuerlein made last season.

Cowboys officials also have expressed a willingness to consider signing Beuerlein to a long-term deal that would pay him about $2 million a season.

Beuerlein became popular with Dallas fans when he stepped in and led the Cowboys to a string of victories on the way to an 11-5 regular season record and wild card playoff berth.

But Cowboys coach Jimmy Johnson has made it clear that Aikman will be the main man in Dallas for many years to come.

Aikman started every game for Dallas last season, and Beuerlein made it known that he was not willing to spend the rest of his career riding the bench.

Finding a team to pay him the annual $2.8 million he's seeking hasn't been easy.

Beuerlein's quest has been complicated by other free agent quarterbacks, such as San Francisco's Joe Montana, also shopping their services around the league. Montana is a candidate to move to the Kansas City Chiefs, the Phoenix Cardinals and the Tampa Bay Buccaneers. The Cardinals, along with the Bucs, have shown the most interest in Beuerlein.

"I don't think we'll know where I'm going until we know where Montana's going," Beuerlein said.

The Owls fell to 5-11 overall and 2-2 in league play.

Tech picked up three victories in the singles portion of the match, while taking two of three doubles matches for the crucial doubles point.

The match between the Raiders' No. 5 singles player Shay Coker and Rice's No. 5 player Willie Dann was the one that vaulted Tech to the win.

"This was a tremendous win," said coach Tim Siegel. "(Erick) Guzman and (Klint) Graf played near perfect matches and (Thomas) Cook and (Juan) Gutierrez lost in tough three-set matches."

"Jason White at No. 6 played the best match of the year, and Shay Coker pulled out the biggest win of his career. Shay had no confidence at the beginning of the year, but has pulled out match after match under pressure," he said.

Raiders ready for crucial series with Aggies

by CASEY WESTENRIEDER
THE UNIVERSITY DAILY

The Texas Tech baseball team has stacked the numbers in the win column this season boasting a 31-8 overall record and a 7-2 Southwest Conference mark, while grabbing a No. 11 ranking in the latest Baseball America poll.

This weekend all of those things will be on the line with the Red Raiders facing their toughest challenge to date when they face the No. 2 Texas A&M Aggies today and Saturday at C.E. "Pat" Olsen Field in College Station.

Today's game will begin at 7 p.m. and Saturday's twinbill starts at 2 p.m.

Tech's latest No. 11 standing is the highest ranking for a Raider baseball team and with convincing wins against the second best in the Baseball America and the USA Today polls, Tech could possibly break into the top 10.

But before coach Larry Hays looks ahead to an improved ranking, he must get his team past the Aggie crowd and the natural grass of Olsen Field.

"We've got to overcome playing on natural grass," Hays said. "Those are the two things that really concern me. This team is pretty mentally tough so hopefully we'll handle the crowd pretty well. We've just got to adjust to not playing on AstroTurf."

Hays said there was really no way to prepare a team for natural grass when Tech is accustomed to playing on artificial turf.

"Other than going out and spending a lot of time on natural grass, you can't really be prepared," he said.

Regardless of the A&M setting, Hays said one key factor he looks for in the Aggie series is pitching.

"There will be two good ballclubs and it's going to come down to pitching," Hays said after Tuesday's win over the College of the Southwest. "It's imperative that we go out and pitch with them because their three left handers are considered the best in the country, not just the conference."

The Raiders plan to use their regular pitching rotation against the Aggies, which consists of righthanders Travis Driskill, J.J. Varney and John Macatee.

Driskill, a junior from Austin, leads the trio with a 1.82 ERA and a 7-2 overall record while stacking 72 strikeouts. Varney has pitched 64 and one-third innings in 10 games, including four complete games. He holds a 3.49 ERA and 49 strikeouts with a 4-2 record.

Macatee has a 5-2 record and a 3.20 ERA, allowing only 41 hits in 50 and two-thirds innings pitched and said the College Station crowd is inviting.

"I think going out there to play in front of that many people — that fires you up right there," he said. "It's kind of a neat deal because it will probably be a packed house. Playing in front of that many people is the reason you play in the first place."

Macatee said with the Raiders being "on a roll," he hopes to knock the Aggies out of the No. 2 spot. The senior Plano product explained the only way the grass field would effect him not making the routine plays.

"All I hope is that we make the routine plays," he said. "We struggle sometimes on grass but we usually we do all right. We've got a good enough infield that we make the plays most of the time."

The Texas Tech women's tennis team is in Fort Worth today to play Southwest Conference rival Texas Christian. The match will start at 11 a.m. TCU, at 8-6 overall and 4-1 in league play, is tied for second place with Texas A&M. This will be Tech's (8-7, 1-4) first outing since their match in Las Vegas over spring break. The singles lineup for the Raiders includes: Jennifer Brennan, Debbie Biswell, Lynne Jackson, Christy Davis, Sheri Gilreath and Renna Rhodes. In doubles play, Brennan/Jackson, Biswell/Gilreath and Davis/Rhodes get the call for Tech.

"TCU is definitely a good team," Tech coach Kathy Vick said. "We will be looking forward to the challenge. Things are going well in practice and we feel good about the match. We will give it our best shot and see what happens."

Men's track team to participate in Jacobs Invitational

The Texas Tech men's track team is traveling to Norman, Okla., to participate in the John Jacobs Invitational Saturday. The tournament includes 14 teams from around the nation, including Big Eight teams Missouri, Kansas, Kansas State, Oklahoma State and the host team, Oklahoma.

"This will be a good meet for us with some great competition," coach Corky Oglesby said. "(Brit) Pursley and Rodrigo (Zelaya) should be favored to win their events after coming off good performances last weekend in the Texas Relays."

Tech's entire squad, including both relay teams, will compete in Norman.

Women thinclads head to San Angelo Relays

Texas Tech's women tracksters will be in San Angelo Saturday for the San Angelo Relays. The Red Raiders will send their full squad for the competition this weekend.

Coach Liz Parke kept most of her squad home last weekend, with hopes of keeping her team healthy for this weekend's event.

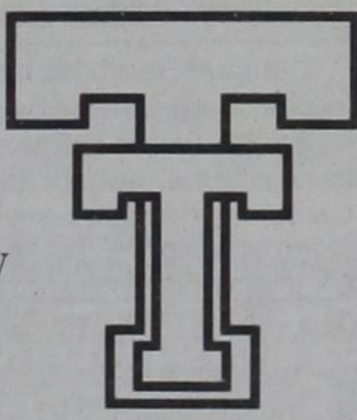

"This will be a good meet for the whole team to compete. They have all been working hard, and should continue their improvement," Parke said.

Tech claims Lady Raider Classic title, earns four tourney awards

by CASEY WESTENRIEDER
LADY RAIDERS COMMEMORATIVE EDITION

Dec. 9, 1992
The Texas Tech women's basketball team defeated Northwestern State University Sunday in the championship round of the Lady Raider Classic by a score of 91-67 in front of 1,012 fans at the Lubbock Municipal Coliseum.

The Lady Raiders also scooped up four of the six tournament awards.

The Demons started the scoring on their first possession and gained as much as a five-point lead over Tech. The Lady Raiders then scored 12 unanswered points to gain and keep the lead for the remainder of the game.

In the second half, NSU had a last-effort surge by never came within 12 points of Tech, who went into the locker room with a 47-28 lead.

The game produced career highs for two players: Krista Kirkland (23 points) and Cynthia Clinger (16 points).

Senior forward Sheryl Swoopes marked her third career triple-double, scoring 17 points while getting 13 rebounds and 11 assists.

Tech received two awards for the all-tournament team (Kirkland and Noel Johnson), the tournament's most valuable player award (Swoopes) and the tourney's championship trophy.

"I think it's a tremendous honor," Swoopes said of the MVP award. "But I think Noel (Johnson) played great the entire tournament, Krista played great, even our freshmen and other players, who don't play much, played great."

After winning the tournament, coach Marsha Sharp pointed out some places where the team struggled in the second half.

"Defensively, we struggled a little bit in the second half," she said. "We gave them some 3-point shots that nearly got them back in the game."

"I feel that maybe our intensity level wasn't quite as good for about seven minutes."

Sharp implemented a new offense for the first time on Sunday and said the new offense still needs some fine tuning.

"We tried to put a new offense in where we won't have to post Sheryl up quite as much," she said.

"We haven't gotten all the bugs worked out and we obviously didn't have much of a chance to work on it at Stanford. We didn't use it yesterday because (Texas-Pan American) was running a little bit more of a zone against us. Today was the first time we were able to put it into full scale operation."

Sharp was pleased overall with the team and gave credit to the bench.

"We've had a few bright spots," she said. "I think our young kids may be a little bit closer to being able to play. I thought Michi Atkins had to come in some pretty tough minutes of the game. I thought she handled that pretty well for a freshman."

In the opening round of the tournament Saturday, the Lady Raiders qualified for the championship game by defeating the University of Texas-Pan American with a 79-36 victory.

Tech came onto the court and scored three 3-pointers before the Lady Broncs were even on the scoreboard.

Sharp said she was pleased by the way her team came out and dominated the action.

"We're really pleased with the way we started the basketball game," Sharp said Saturday.

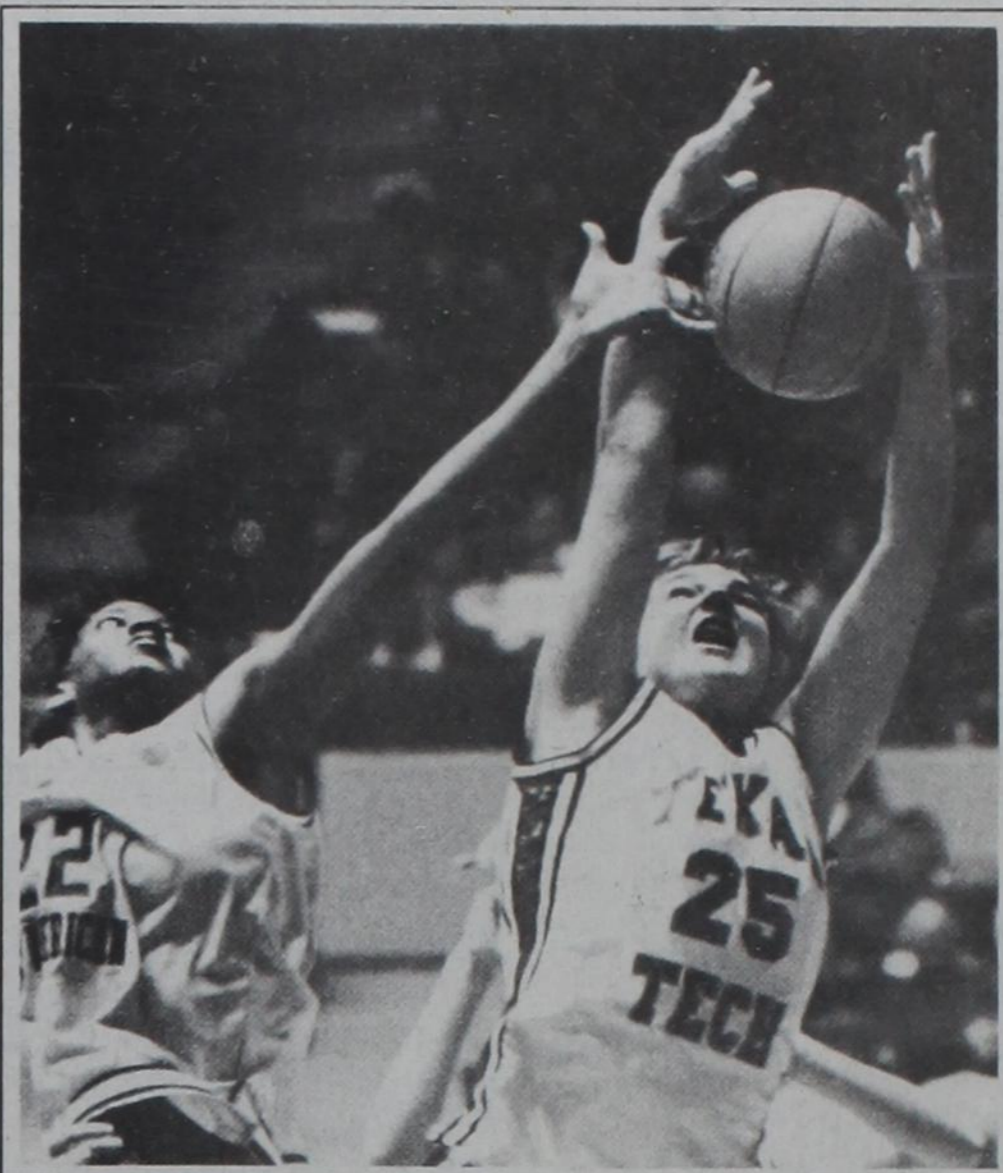

"When you have your three guards come out and all three of them shoot a 3-pointer, I think that maybe got us off to the kind of start we needed."

Sharp also said the game helped her team get experience early that will help in the Southwest Conference play.

"Pan American did a lot of different things to us," she said.

"They threw a lot of different defenses at us. It was a good test for our guards to recognize and change the offensive set. I think the thing we were most pleased with was that we finally got a chance to put all of our kids on the floor. Every time we play (the bench) they're going to get better and better and that will help us during conference play," she added.

Sharp said some improvements made during Saturday's game were in man-to-man defense and in the future she would like to see Swoopes handle the ball more often.

Lady Raiders tripped up by Texas, 76-75

Meeks sinks clutch free throws after questionable call to ice win

by LEN HAYWARD
LADY RAIDERS COMMEMORATIVE EDITION

Jan. 21, 1993

Pundits called the game between Texas Tech and Texas one of the top three women's basketball games in the country this week. The game lived up to its billing.

It featured the two favorites for the Southwest Conference crown, with the Lady Raiders coming in with a No. 12 ranking in the latest AP Poll and the Lady Longhorns at No. 16. The makings for a great matchup.

It all boiled down to one last play with less than 10 seconds left. Texas senior forward Fay Meeks drove down the court after receiving the ball from fellow Lady Longhorn Nekeshia Henderson with the scoreboard reading Tech 75 and Texas 74.

Meeks drove into the lane only to run into Tech senior guard Krista Kirkland. Kirkland was called for a block by the officials and Meeks, who is a 71.6 percent free throw shooter, went to the line and calmly hit both ends of a one-and-one, making the final score 76-75 in front of a sold-out Coliseum (8,174).

"We did defend it (talking about the defensive play toward the end)," coach Marsha Sharp said after the game. "I thought Fay Meeks played the best basketball game she has ever played against Texas Tech."

"I think there were a lot of calls that could have gone either way in the ball game," Texas coach Jody Conratt said.

"I thought it was a late call for a block," Kirkland said. The Lady Longhorns raised their record to 10-4 overall and 4-0 in conference play, while Tech fell to 12-3 and 2-1 in league play.

Meeks finished the game with a career-high 20 points, while Tech's Sheryl Swoopes led all scorers with 22.

The biggest lead for either team was nine points, but every time one team would take the lead, the other squad would snatch it back.

Texas' last bucket came at the 3:23 mark, with senior center Cinietra Henderson hitting a jumper to give UT a 72-70 lead. Tech's Noel Johnson came back down the court to hit a three-pointer with 3:08 left.

The Lady Raiders did not give up a point until the two free throws made by Meeks after Kirkland's foul.

Tech shot four of eight from 3-point land, with all four coming in the second half. This helped to outscore the Lady Horns in the second half 47-39.

"I thought the game was won and lost in the first half. I thought we were a little tentative at first," Sharp said. "I thought we showed a lot of courage in the second half in making a basketball game of it."

Tech went into the locker room down 37-28, but Sharp said she challenged the team during halftime.

"I think I challenged them at halftime to make sure we come out and were a little bit more aggressive," she said. "I thought Krista had to be a go-to player. I thought in the second half she certainly was that."

Kirkland ended the game with 19 points, hitting 17 of those in the second half.

Texas picked up the ball after the whistle blew for the second half, but a miss by senior forward Vicki Hall started an 11-4 run by the Lady Raiders. The run cut the score to 41-39, capped off by senior center Cynthia Clinger's lay-in with 15:19 to play.

Lady Raiders near perfect in trouncing of Rice

by CASEY WESTENRIEDER
LADY RAIDERS COMMEMORATIVE EDITION

Jan. 28, 1993
Stephanie Scott set the pace with a 3-pointer in the opening seconds and that was all the confidence 14th-ranked Texas Tech needed to stomp the Rice Owls 101-48 Wednesday night.

Prior to the game, coach Marsha Sharp had expressed some concern about the Owls' 1-3-1 zone defense which seemed to have little effect on the Lady Raiders' near-flawless play in the Lubbock Municipal Coliseum in front of 3,830 fans.

"The 1-3-1 scares you a little bit because you're probably going to have to shoot the ball from the perimeter," Sharp said after the game. "I thought we attacked (the defense) very well. The first shot Scott took to set the stage was a big bucket, obviously. (The shot) gave us a little bit of confidence at the start."

Elation Janice Farris, right, and assistant coach Linden Weese express their joy during the Lady Raiders' 101-48 walloping of Rice in the Lubbock Municipal Coliseum. SHARON STEINMAN: LADY RAIDERS COMMEMORATIVE EDITION

With the win, Tech upped its record to 13-3 overall and 3-1 in the Southwest Conference, while Rice fell to 9-5 and 1-3 in league play.

Wednesday's win was the second time this season that Tech hit the 100-point mark and the first time this year the century-score was seen at home.

Sheryl Swoopes led the team in scoring with 19 points, making eight of her 13 field goal attempts.

"It's always harder to keep your intensity up when you play a team that's not as good as you are," Swoopes said. "I think we played well as a team. Everyone was really pumped up to play this game and hopefully we'll have a lot of momentum going into (Texas Christian) this weekend."

Once again, Sharp was able to utilize her entire roster with each player playing a minimum of six minutes.

Junior forward Kim Pruitt played six minutes but made every shot count, hitting all of her field goal and free throw attempts.

"I got sick," Pruitt said. "I woke up this morning with a sore throat and it always seems that when I get sick I play better. (The big win) was definitely something we needed after last week's loss to Texas. We needed to get the bad taste out of our mouths."

The Lady Raiders went in at the half with a 23-point lead. More than three minutes ticked off the second-half clock before Rice answered Tech's 10-point run with the Owls turning the ball over four times in a row. Rice had 17 turnovers in the game, helping Tech gain momentum and build on a towering score.

"It's really great," Pruitt said. "It's really more of a mental boost than anything to be able to come out and score that many points. We are able to come out and control the boards and run our breaks, which kept our momentum going."

Another standout player for the Lady Raiders was freshman sensation Michi Atkins.

Atkins hit five of 10 from the floor and grabbed two rebounds, while playing 19 minutes with no fouls.

The Lady Raiders as a whole had eight fouls the entire game.

As Sharp aims her sights on the next conference confrontation in Fort Worth, she hopes a 53-point victory will lift the team's confidence enough to beat TCU Saturday.

"We're really pleased to be back on the winning track and I thought (the big win) was a good way to get started," Sharp said.

Tech pounds TCU, 111-65

by CASEY WESTENRIEDER
LADY RAIDERS COMMEMORATIVE EDITION

Feb. 1, 1993
Fourteenth-ranked Texas Tech tied the third-highest point total in the history of the Lady Raiders' program Saturday night, rolling over Texas Christian 111-65 at Daniel-Meyer Coliseum in Fort Worth.

With the majority of the 1,175 fans in attendance waving guns up for Tech, senior forward Sheryl Swoopes gave the crowd something to cheer about with 27 points in the first half as the Lady Raiders went in at the break with 58-28 lead. Tech, which has never lost to TCU in women's basketball, boosted its record to 14-3, 4-1 after handling the Frogs, 8-9, 0-6, their 31st straight Southwest Conference loss. The last conference game TCU won was against Rice in the 1990-91 season.

Senior guard Krista Kirkland hit 50 percent of her 3-point attempts, converting 9-of-14 from the floor and finishing with 21 points. Swoopes led all scorers with 30.

Coach Marsha Sharp's entire roster scored points to help the Lady Raiders hit the 100-point mark for the third time in the last four games. When the team hit the century mark on Saturday, for the second-straight game, it marked a first in the school record books for that feat. Michi Atkins scored 14 points to score in double figures for the fifth time in as many games.

Sharp said she was happy with the victory and that the points scored could help her team gain confidence.

"We've struggled (at TCU) in recent years," Sharp said after the game. "It was good for us to feel like we came out and played well. We had a lot of kids that played well. The fact that we for to play 10 minutes with some of our younger players really helps us with our experience factor."

Tech ousts A&M for 15th victory

by CASEY WESTENRIEDER
LADY RAIDERS COMMEMORATIVE EDITION

Feb. 4, 1993

Behind Cynthia Clinger's career-high 20 points, the Lady Raiders downed Texas A&M 91-68 Wednesday night at the Lubbock Municipal Coliseum.

Texas Tech improved to 15-3 on the year and 5-1 in Southwest Conference play, while the Lady Aggies slipped to 10-7, 3-3.

Tech earned the first numbers in the game and the Lady Aggies tied the score twice before the Lady Raiders poured on the muscle and topped off A&M with the 23-point victory.

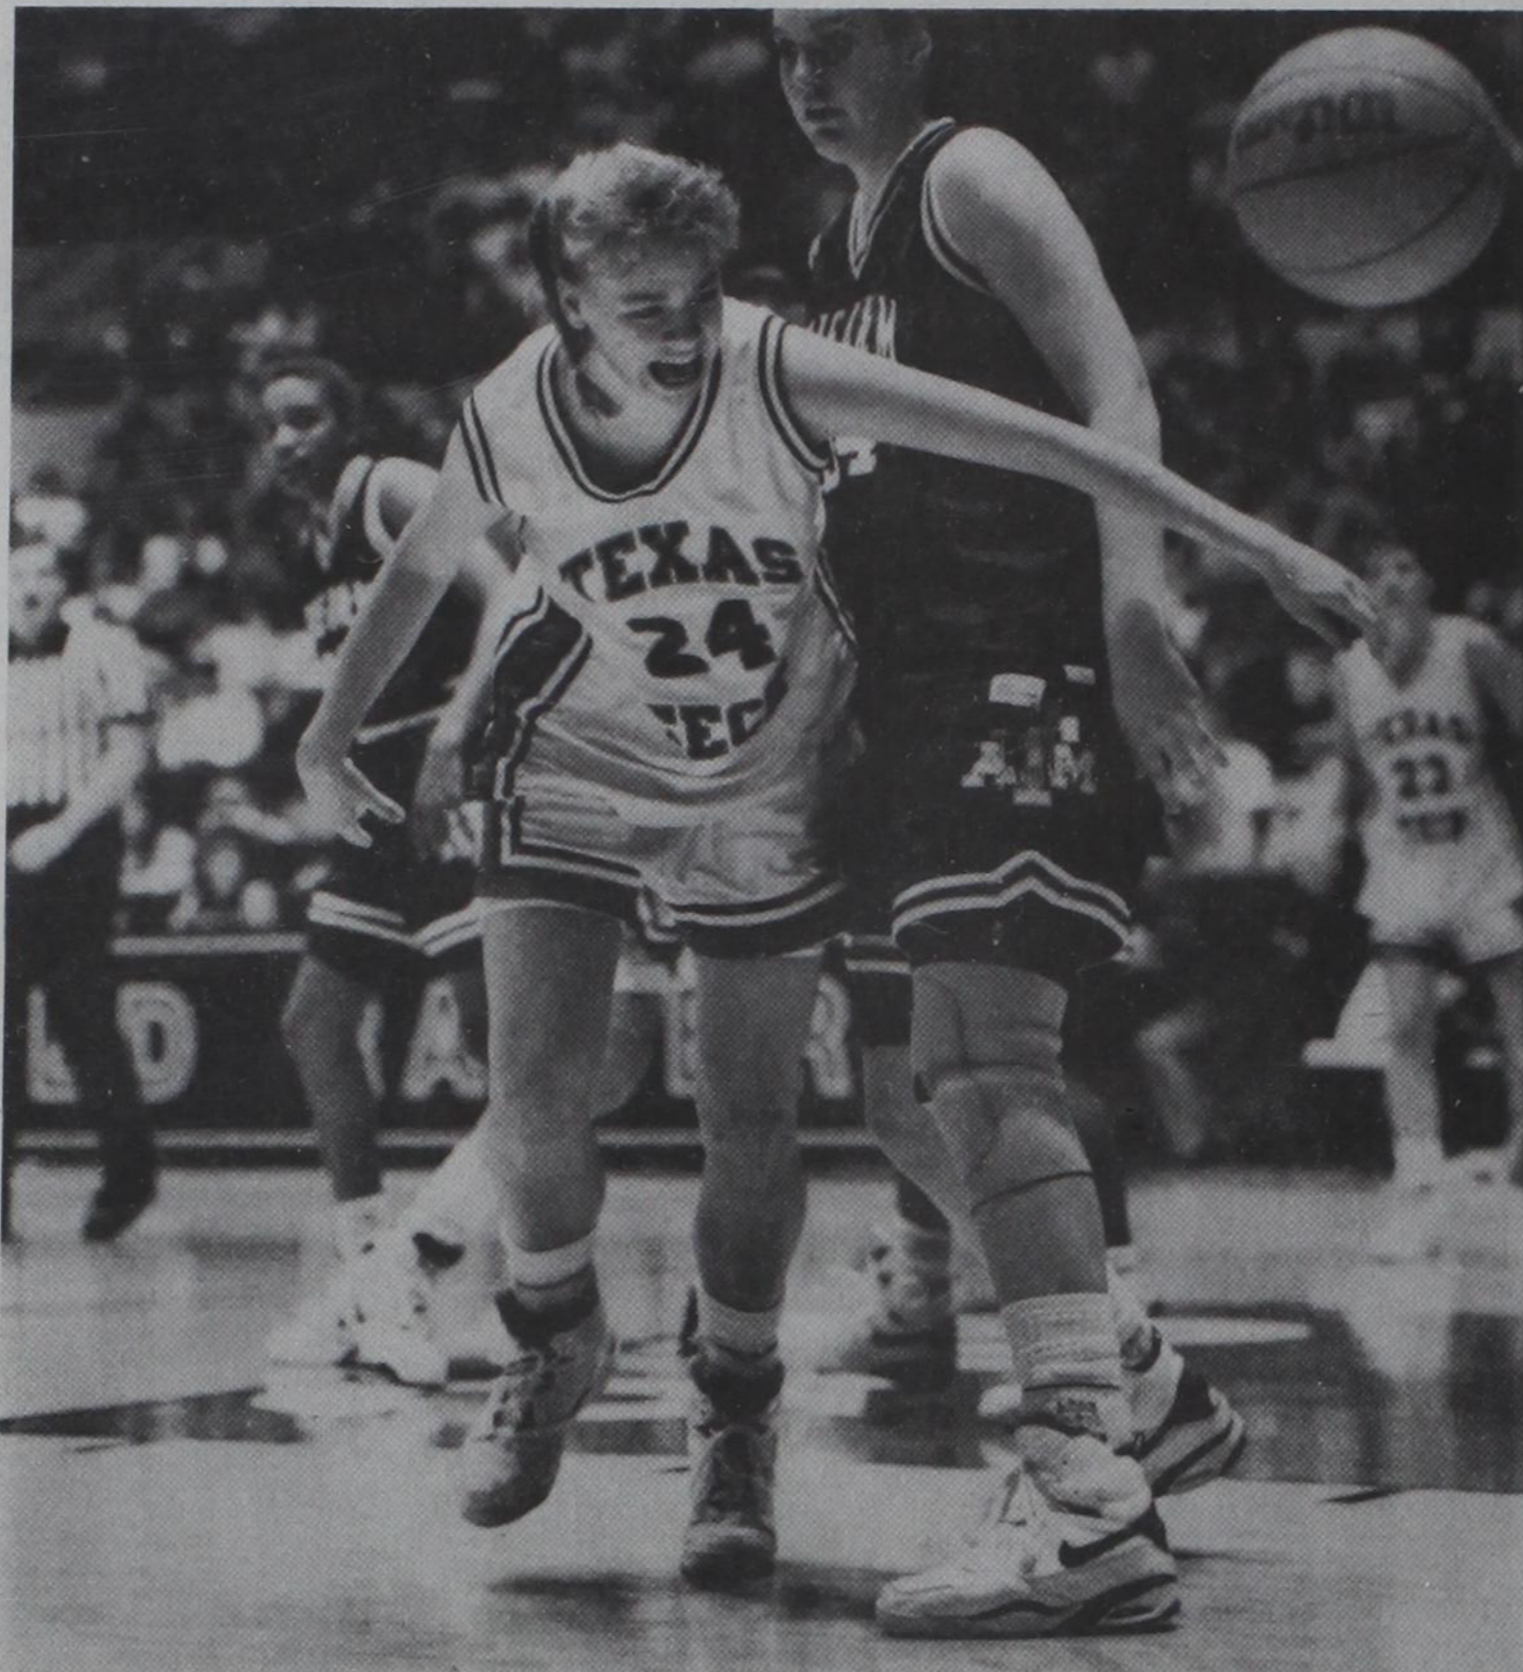

The Lady Aggies made 43.3 percent of their field goals and 71.4 percent from the line, but it wasn't enough to head off the surging Lady Raiders.

Tech amassed as much as a 36-point lead as senior forward Sheryl Swoopes contributed 25 points — the 33rd time she has scored 20 or more points in a game. Swoopes has scored in double figures in 48 of her 50 career contests as a Lady Raider.

"We had some good individual performances," Sharp said after the game.

"I thought we were a little bit out of sync at times. Our offense looked a little bit unorganized at times. We were trying to do a few different things than we had done before."

Tech showed signs of disorganization offensively as the team turned the ball over 18 times in the game.

Clinger scored 22 points for her second career-high game in as many outings. She put in 20 points last Wednesday against Texas A&M.

Tech opened the game by winning the tip off and Clinger opened the scoring with two points. The Lady Raiders dominated the first half, scoring 58 points and hitting 72.7 percent from the field, a season-high for a single half. It was the ninth time this season the team scored 50 or more points in a half and the third time this year Tech has done it in the first half.

Nine Lady Raiders scored in the first half, including Clinger with 16 points and Sheryl Swoopes with 14.

The scoring run in the first half was the third-largest run of the year for Tech.

Lady Raiders earn first victory ever in Frank Erwin Center

by LEN HAYWARD
LADY RAIDERS COMMEMORATIVE EDITION

Feb. 18, 1993
AUSTIN—Ninth-ranked Texas Tech, clad in new black uniforms, rang the death knell on Texas' 15-year home-court dominance of the Lady Raiders, defeating the Lady Longhorns 77-67.
Sheryl Swoopes, electrifying the crowd of 9,577 at the Frank Erwin Center, scored 37 points, including 16 in the last 12 minutes of the second half. Swoopes' total was the most points scored by an individual against Texas this season.

"It is a great feeling," Swoopes said after Tech's first win in Austin. "In the first half, Krista was down on herself a little bit, and I thought maybe I needed to step up. The opportunity was there and I took it."

With the win, Tech upped its record to 19-3 and 9-1 in the Southwest Conference, while Texas fell to 16-6, 9-1. The teams are now tied for the lead in the Southwest Conference standings.

Texas tied the game at 48-48 on a Fay

Meeks' layup with 12:23 remaining in the game.

The Lady Raiders then embarked on an 11-4 run, capped by a Swoopes layup with 7:55 left, making the score 61-52.

After that, the closest the Longhorns came was eight points, with Texas stars, Cinetra Henderson and Joanne Benton, each having four fouls in the second half.

"What a great win," coach Marsha Sharp said. "We had a great play from a bunch of people and Sheryl did a great job of making the big play."

Swoopes also grabbed eight rebounds along with freshman post Michi Atkins.

The Lady 'Horns came out in the second half and outscored Tech 14-4 to cut the Lady Raiders' 12-point halftime lead to 46-44.

"We knew coming in Texas was a great team and we knew they were going to make a run at us," she said. "We just wanted to stay patient and stick with our game plan."

Sparked by Swoopes' 19 first-half points, Tech jumped out to a 42-30 lead going into the locker room.

Tech's biggest lead of the half came at the 1:14 mark when Atkins hit a layup, making the score 40-25.

"Every time since we played in Lubbock we have talked about being focused in the first half," Sharp said.

Nekeisha Henderson answered the score immediately with a layup.

Vicki Hall stole the ball on Tech's transition, hitting a 3-pointer with 22 seconds on the clock.

The two teams were tied at 8-8 when Swoopes added to her point total, hitting a 3-pointer with 13:37 left in the first stanza.

Lady Raiders win 20th game

Feb. 25, 1993

HOUSTON (Special) — The Lady Raiders, guided by Krista Kirkland's five 3-point shots, earned their 20th victory of the season by walking over the Rice Owls 89-53 Wednesday night in Autry Court in Houston. Ninth-ranked Tech's record now is 20-3, while the Lady Raiders maintained their tie with Texas for the SWC lead at 10-1.

Kirkland scored 21 points to lead the team as Cynthia Clinger and Sheryl Swoopes both put up 18 points. Freshman Michi Atkins played 15 minutes of the contest grabbing seven boards and scoring 12 points. The double-figure point total was Atkins' 10th in which she scored in double figures. At the half, Tech went into the locker room with a 50-27 lead, but just four more points would have been enough to win the game.

Tech win keeps TCU winless in SWC

by LEN HAYWARD
LADY RAIDERS COMMEMORATIVE EDITION

March 1, 1993

Walking away with big victories and scoring more than 100 points is something No. 9 Texas Tech has done a bunch this season. But in Saturday's 103-74 win over Texas Christian, the Lady Raiders took a while to get going in front of 5,812 fans at the Lubbock Municipal Coliseum.

Tech overcame a slow start in the first half to open up leads as large as 31 in the second half, but in the first half the Lady Raiders had trouble shooting and getting their offense going.

But thanks to a blistering offensive show in the second half, the Lady Raiders posted their fourth 100-point game this season.

With the win Tech upped its record to 21-3 and 11-1 in the SWC, while the Frogs remained winless in Southwest Conference play at 0-12 and 9-15 overall.

Aggies no match for Lady Raiders

March 4, 1993

COLLEGE STATION (Special) — The No. 7 Lady Raiders overcame a shaky first half to overpower Texas A&M 89-59 behind Sheryl Swoopes' 28 points and Noel Johnson's 3-pointers Wednesday at G. Rolie White Coliseum in College Station.

Tech improved to 22-3 overall and 12-1 in Southwest Conference play as the Lady Raiders kept pace with Texas, who defeated Texas Christian 75-50 Wednesday night for the top spot in the league standings. Swoopes led Tech in scoring, shooting 12-of-24 from the floor with two-of-three 3-pointers. Johnson added three shots of her own from behind the 3-point line.

The Lady Aggies opened the game with a 6-0 run and the Lady Raiders were forced to play catch-up for most of the first half, which was tied seven times.

Tech began the second half leading 38-35 and Krista Kirkland opened the second half by making her first shot from 3-point land to trigger the rout.

Texas Tech honored three seniors before Saturday's game against the Baylor Bears and in return, Sheryl Swoopes, Krista Kirkland and Cynthia Clinger led the Lady Raiders to a 104-72 victory, helping Tech to its second straight Southwest Conference championship in front of a crowd of 7,208 at Lubbock Municipal Coliseum.

The Lady Bears made the game interesting at the 16:12 mark of the first half by taking a short-lived lead.

But when Swoopes grabbed a defensive rebound and took the ball for two points, the Lady Raiders were on their way to victory. Tech finished the regular season with a record of 23-3 and 13-1 in SWC play, while Baylor fell to 11-15 and 6-8 in league play.

The Lady Raiders settled for a share of the league title after Texas defeated Texas A&M 76-64 at the Frank Erwin Center Sunday in Austin.

Tech coach Marsha Sharp and Texas coach Jody Conradt will participate in a conference call at 10 p.m. today, where a coin toss will determine the top seed in this week's SWC Post-Season Tournament in Dallas. Tournament play begins Wednesday.

On Saturday, Tech owned a 57-35 lead after shooting better than 61 percent from the field and 70.6 percent from the free-throw line.

In the second half, Tech dominated by outscoring Baylor 47 to 37.

Swoopes finished the game with 29 points and 10 rebounds.

Lady Raiders rout TCU 107-50; Swoopes named 'best' by SI

by CASEY WESTENRIEDER
LADY RAIDERS COMMEMORATIVE EDITION

March 11, 1993
DALLAS — Texas Tech began its drive for a second straight Southwest Conference Post-Season Classic title by defeating Texas Christian 107-50 Wednesday at Moody Coliseum in Dallas.

Senior guard Krista Kirkland led the Lady Raiders with 20 points in a game where Tech dominated from the tipoff.

The win qualified Tech for the second round where it will face Baylor at 8:30 p.m. today in Reunion Arena.

In the first half, Tech opened the game with a 13-0 run which eventually turned into a 31-8 run before the Lady Frogs could climb into double figures. Noel Johnson led the first-half scoring with 11 as coach Marsha Sharp utilized her entire roster.

The only Tech players on the team not scoring in the first half were Michelle Thomas and Kim Pruitt, each playing only two minutes.

Sheryl Swoopes, who was named Sports Illustrated Player of the Year on Wednesday, only played nine first-half minutes before being replaced by Nikki Heath.

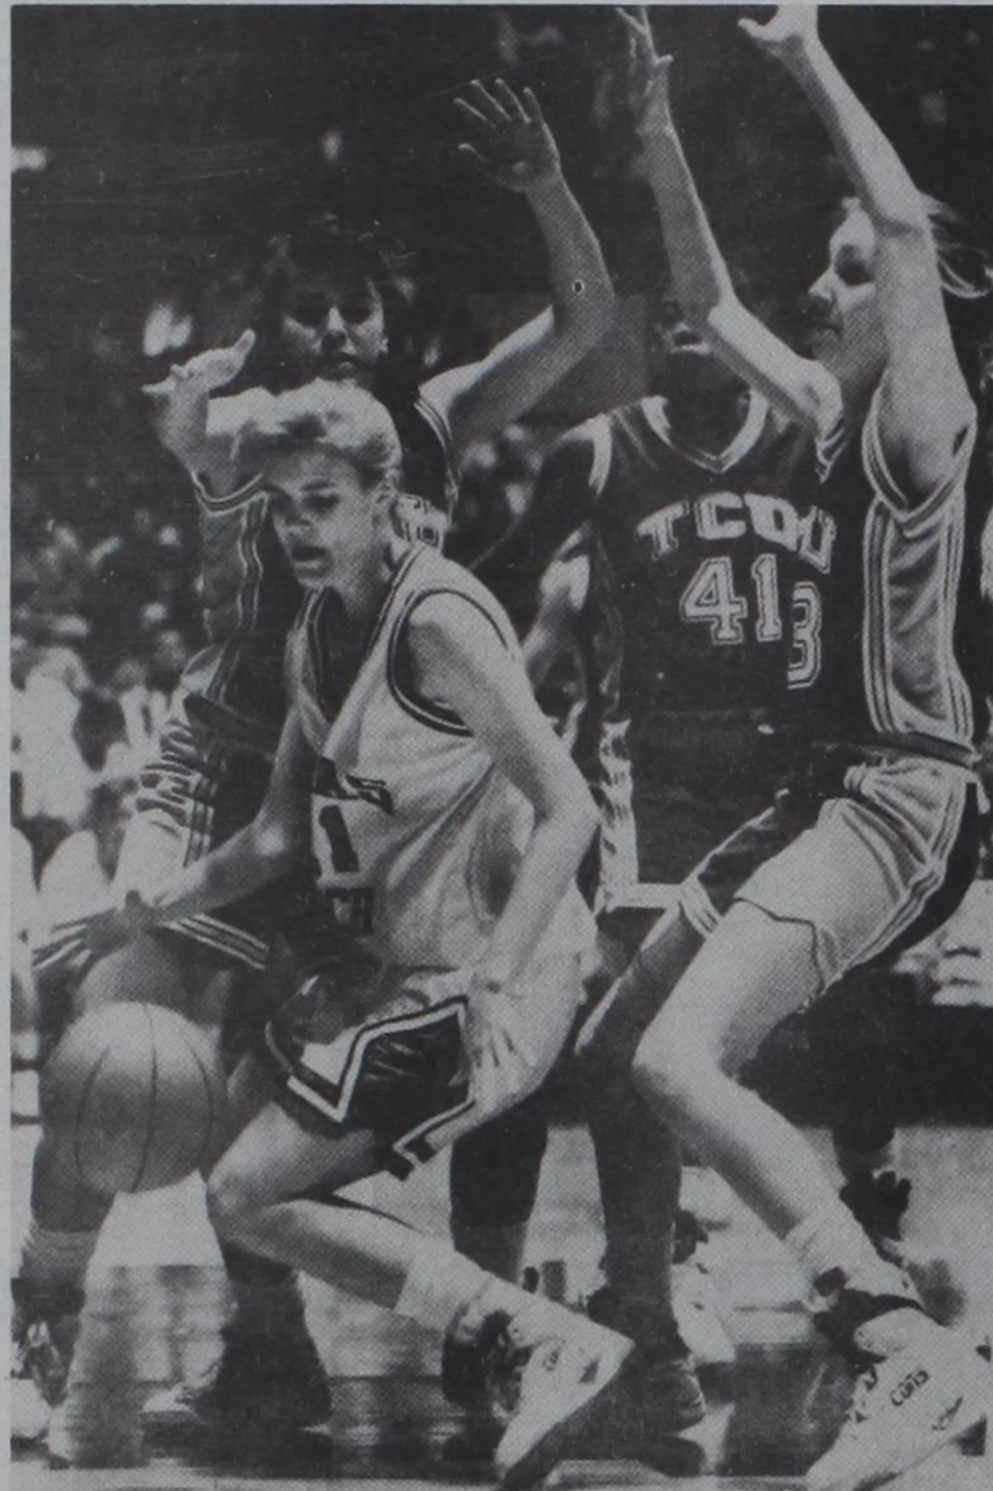

In the first period, the Lady Raiders shot 56.4 percent from the field and made five of seven 3-pointers.

The second half was more of the same as TCU was able to score only 23 points to Tech's 53.

The Lady Raider starting lineup all scored in double figures. Swoopes scored 12 points after playing 19 minutes in the game.

Kirkland and Johnson played 24 minutes in Wednesday's game as Sharp said she was planning ahead.

"We had talked a great deal about making sure we were ready to play tonight's ball game," Sharp said. "We wanted to rest (the starters) and I think we did that. I think our younger players came in and played well for a pretty long period of time."

Swoopes learned of her new honor after the game and, as usual, gave credit to her teammates.

"I think it's great," Swoopes said of the SI honor. "I think the recognition I have gotten as an individual is really great for the team. It allows a lot of people across the country to know and see how great we are at Texas Tech. Of course, without my teammates, it never would have happened. I have to give a lot of credit to them also."

CASEY WESTENRIEDER

March 23, 1993

I've been a long-haired hippie freak for quite some time now and as graduation looms around the real job corner, I realize my days of paying homage to the '60s are numbered.

So what do I do?

I haven't had a real haircut in almost three years when I got my ears lowered to get a dead-end job I hated.

I don't know where to go or what to say.

This dilemma has plagued me for about a month, and believe me, my mother keeps reminding me that an employer doesn't want to hire Gene Simmons.

I knew it was coming when the cashier at McDonald's called me "ma'am."

And that wasn't the first time that has happened.

I guess I'm also getting a little sick of guys whistling at me when I'm walking across campus.

Well, I've been looking at some current hairstyles that are fashionable for the "in crowd" and I've come up with a few examples.

Fellow sports writer Jake Rigdon has an interesting "do."

He has the "hair on top but shaved around the sides to look like a mushroom" haircut.

Maybe that looks good on Rigdon, but I'm afraid that's not my style.

I could get the Lady Raider assistant coach haircut, a.k.a. "the Roger Reding," which is the "hair all around but slicked back on the sides" style. That probably wouldn't look good with my cowlick.

How about the other Tech assistant coach style, "the Lindy."

But what would the Lindy look like on me if I got my hair Weesed?

I could get "the Len Hayward Sports Editor" which is similar to "the Rigdon" but has hints of being truffled by high winds caused by sprint cars.

Nyet! (My knowledge of the Russian language shows through.)

I think my favorite, so far, is the "Kent Best" which is like mine but shorter — a lot shorter.

The "James David" is fetching but I'm not ready to join the United States Marine Corps, nor will I ever be.

The good old "bowl" style is out of the question!

What I really would like is the "Craig Anderson" which belongs to the infamous Court Jesters' drummer, but that would be counter-productive.

So much hair, so few decisions — only one to be exact.

What I could do is make a little deal with the Lady Raiders.

I could say, "If the Lady Raiders win the national championship this weekend in Atlanta, I'll let the team decide how to cut my hair."

Yeah, I could say that.

Then I could get enough scissors for the players and coaches, and let them all do a little sculpting.

Studio Art major and junior guard Diana Kersey would surely love that idea.

I'm scared but it has to be done. The shears are on the table.

After Tech cuts the net, the Lady Raiders can carve my mane and watch me cry (but I'm still a man).

Casey Westenrieder is a sports reporter for The University Daily.

Tech cans Baylor to set up showdown with Texas

by CASEY WESTENRIEDER
LADY RAIDERS COMMEMORATIVE EDITION

March 12, 1993

DALLAS — In a press conference following the Baylor victory over Texas A&M, coach Pam Bowers mentioned she would bring a spare uniform for Sheryl Swoopes for Thursday night's semifinal matchup of the Southwest Conference Post-Season Classic.

Unfortunately for Bower, Swoopes and the rest of the Lady Raider squad knew which team's uniform to wear as Tech overpowered Baylor 91-67 to advance to the final round on Saturday against Texas for the tournament championship title, which will be televised nationally on Home Sports Entertainment, cable channel 40.

In the first half, teamwork and rebounds helped the Lady Raiders jump ahead of the Lady Bears for a halftime score of 46-26.

Tech's leading scorer at the half was Krista Kirkland with 12 points. She finished the game with 15.

The Lady Raiders out-rebounded Baylor 26 to 21 in the first half and the Lady Bears helped Tech with nine turnovers.

Tech was effective on all of its first half 3-pointers and made 51.5 percent of its shots from the field.

As the second-half fouls mounted against the Lady Raiders and the lack of fouls called against Baylor continued, the partisan Tech crowd of 3,210 helped spur the Lady Raiders by calling for the customary pizza, which is supplied by Pinocchio's whenever Tech scores 85 or more points at home and wins.

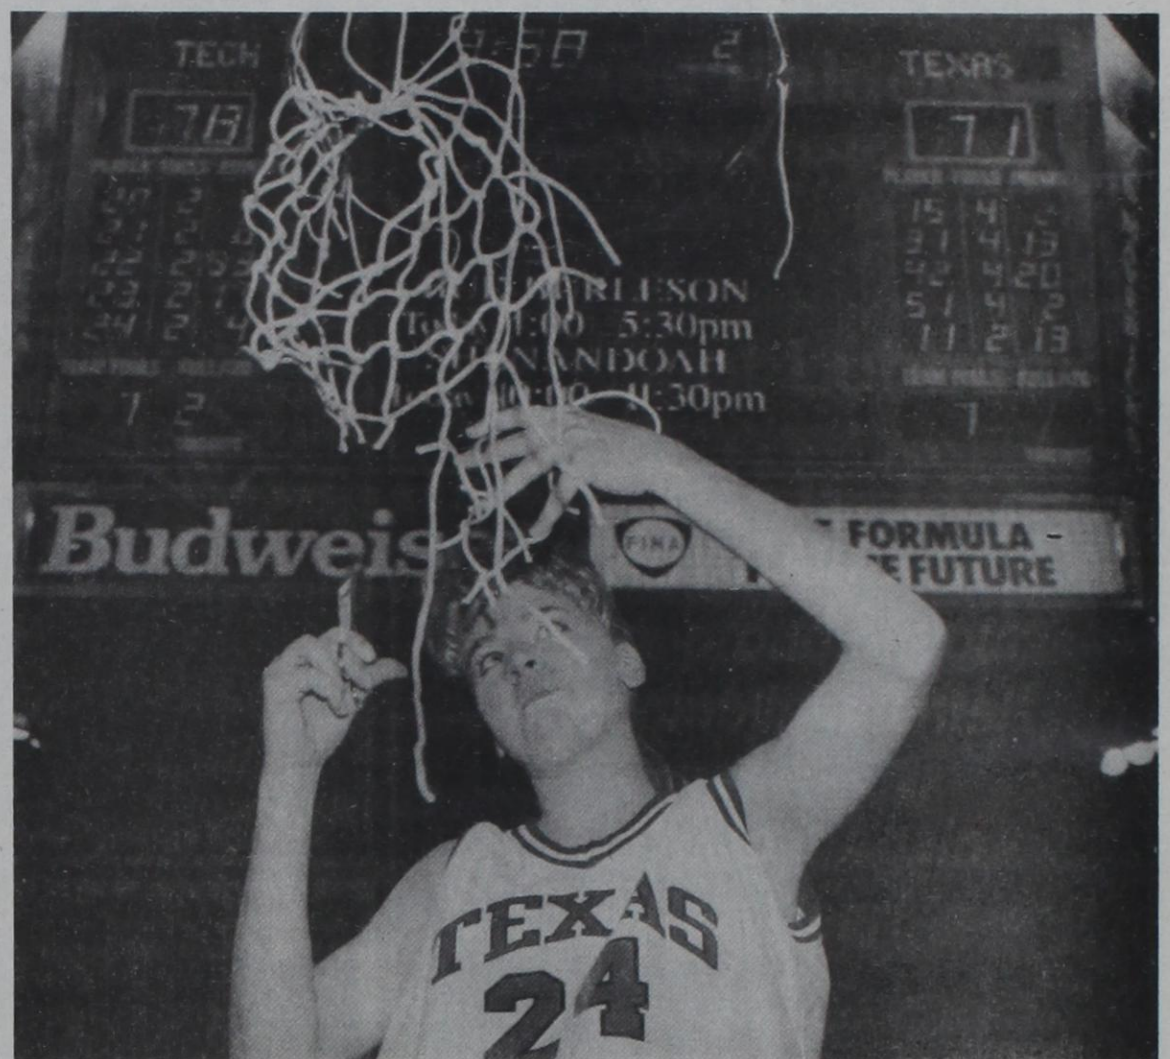

The Lady Bears never said die, continuing to make 3-point attempts throughout the game, but it was to no avail as only eight of 30 attempts fell for points in the game.

Swoopes, who was honored during halftime at the Texas-Southern Methodist game with the presentation of the SWC Player of the Year trophy, ended the game playing 26 minutes and scoring 28 points, leading all players in scoring. Cynthia Clinger chipped in 20.

Coach Marsha Sharp said she was a little disappointed in the team's performance but blamed it on the setting.

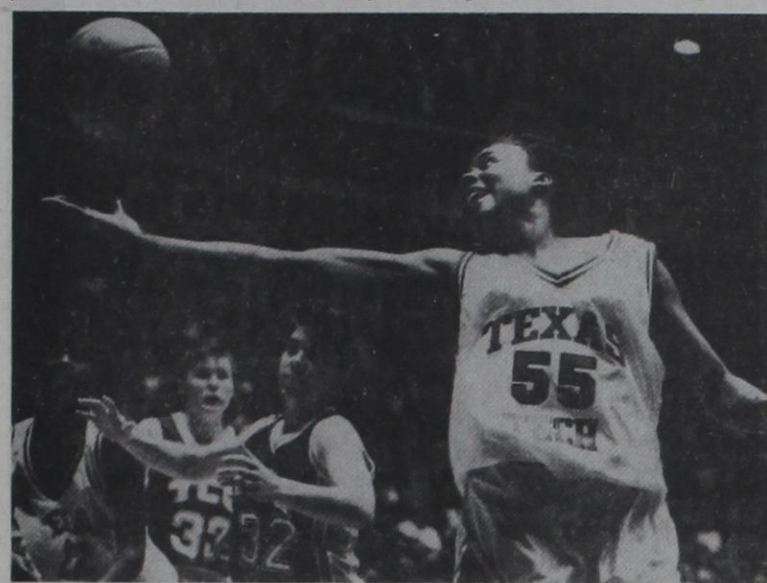

"We might not have adjusted as well as we should have early," Sharp said after the victory. "We got big play out of our seniors. Our floor leaders really did things with the basketball that I think they should have. I don't think our younger players did as well as they did last night, but maybe that was Reunion Arena. This is the first time a lot of them have been on the floor here."

Sharp said that practice time on Friday should help the situation with her green players.

The first of many Michi Atkins stretches to grab a rebound during a game against TCU. Of Tech's four 100-plus games, three were against the Horned Frogs.

Janice Farris snips the net after the Lady Raiders defeated Texas, 78-71, for the Southwest Conference Post-Season Classic title. Sheryl Swoopes scored a Reunion Arena record 53 points, breaking Larry Bird's and Bernard King's record of 50. It was the Lady Raiders second straight SWC tourney title.

Tech weathers Swoopes' scare, overcomes Huskies 70-64

by CASEY WESTENRIEDER
LADY RAIDERS COMMEMORATIVE EDITION

March 27, 1993

The late Stevie Ray Vaughn said it best, "When the house is a-rockin', don't bother knockin'."

When the No. 5 Lady Raiders played the Washington Huskies in the second round of the NCAA women's basketball tournament in the Lubbock Municipal Coliseum Saturday, the house was rockin'. That rocking crowd helped Tech to slip by the Huskies 70-64 in front of an all-time high Lady Raider crowd of 8,541.

And let it not be said that fans of coach Marsha Sharp and her team are unfair because the zealots in the stands, after some spent Sunday and Wednesday night outside the Tech ticket officie to buy tickets, gave Washington a standing ovation in the second half — every time the Huskies had the ball.

The Lady Raiders improved their record to 27-3 putting another notch in the win streak increasing it to 15, a Tech women's record.

"I felt like our crowd was a huge factor just like it was last year against Santa Clara," Sharp said during a post-game press conference.

"Coach Weese pointed out to me that there were probably six trips in the second half when we were on defense that the crowd was on its feet and we got the basketball back. The fans did a great job."

In the first half, Tech was forced to work hard to keep up with the Washington pressure defense and it looked, for two minutes at least, that the Hus-gies had discovered a way to defend Sheryl Swoopes.

After only 45 seconds had expired on the game clock, Swoopes went in for a layup and missed with Washington grabbing the rebound and taking the ball to the Lady Raider side of the court.

As all eyes watched the ball, the referee signalled a stop in the action as Swoopes lay under the Washington goal clutching her knee.

The rambunctious crowd fell silent but soon cheered with Swoopes walking unassisted from the court where she remained for two minutes before being inserted back into the game.

"It was scary," Swoopes said of her injury.

"I went up for the shot and twisted my knee and it was sore for a few minutes. It feels fine now."

Swoopes' knee felt fine enough for the senior forward to score 30 points to lead all scorers in the game.

The Huskies, who finished third in the Pac-10 conference behind Stanford and Southern Cal, kept the Lady Raiders and Swoopes in check in the first half with Washington sending Tech to the locker room at the half behind 30-28.

It didn't help when Husky senior guard Laura Moore came out in the first half to start the scoring with a 3-pointer.

But when Krista Kirkland tied the score at 37-37 and Michi Atkins pushed the Lady Raiders ahead with a layup, Tech never looked back holding Washington to only two points in a span of 7 1/2 minutes with the Lady Raiders scoring 13.

The Huskies were unable to bounce back from the Lady Raider run as Tech advanced to the third round of the NCAA tourney in Missoula, Mont., to play Southern Cal on Thursday. The Lady Trojans defeated Nebraska Sunday 78-60 in Los Angeles. The time the two teams will meet in Missoula will be determined today at 9 a.m.

Atkins scored 15 points in Saturday's game making her the second leading scorer of the game.

"I felt like I played with more confidence today than I've been playing with," Atkins said Saturday. "It felt good to play well and help my team win a big game."

Tech was seeded No. 2 in the West Region of the NCAA Tournament after defeating Texas in the Southwest Conference Post-Season Classic 78-71 before 8,122 at Reunion Arena in Dallas.

In the game against the Lady Longhorns, Vicki Hall threatened early with Swoopes making only two of her first nine field goal attempts.

But as the game progressed, Swoopes began to write a new set of records for the history books scoring 53 points.

Swoopes' 53 points earned her bragging rights for the most points in SWC history for a single game and most points scored in Reunion Arena, beating a record set by Larry Bird set on March 10, 1986 with 50 against the Dallas Mavericks, as well as a personal career high.

"I'm really thrilled (with the records)," Swoopes said after beating Texas. "But just winning this game is the most exciting thing that has happened to me this season. We wanted to get into the NCAA Tournament and now we are there."

Hot Scott

Stephanie Scott excitedly catches a pass during the Second-Round game against Washington. Tech survived a scare after Sheryl Swoopes injured her knee, but she only missed two minutes for the contest.

Lady Raiders shut down Leslie, ease by Trojans 87-67

March 25, 1993

MISSOULA, Mont. (Special) — Texas Tech overcame Southern California 87-67 Thursday night to advance to the West Region finals to play in the game which could advance the Lady Raiders to the Final Four.

Sheryl Swoopes led all scorers in the game with 33 points with Tech passing the Trojans in the race to Atlanta. USC opened the game with the first two points with the Trojans taking the tipoff via Lisa Leslie, but it took only 35 seconds before Tech tied the game at two.

And when Lady Raider Noel Johnson grabbed a steal and took the basketball down to the USC end of the court and was fouled, Tech never looked back as Johnson sank both free throws putting the Lady Raiders ahead for the remainder of the game.

Tech shot 48.1 percent from the field, but hit 30-of-39 from the free-throw line while doing what coach Marsha Sharp asked from the team.

"For 40 minutes I think those kids did exactly what coach Sharp asked them to do," assistant coach Linden Weese said. "(Sharp) had a great game plan lined out for those players and they executed to perfection. We took the ball and challenged (USC) and that's what coach Sharp said would be so critical in the first five minutes."

Krista Kirkland scored 26 points for the Lady Raiders with both her and Swoopes having a good game. Tech showed they are not east to stop.

"The cream came to the top," Weese said. "They've been our best players all year long and once again they were tonight. Krista was huge in our performance tonight, and Sheryl, what can you say. Once again she was 33 in a big-time ball game."

Tech held USC's Lisa Leslie to 5-of-16 from the field and two assists, while the Lady Raiders improved their record to 28-3.

Tech topples Commodores 60-46 to advance to final

by CASEY WESTENRIEDER
LADY RAIDERS COMMEMORATIVE EDITION

April 3, 1993

ATLANTA — The Lady Raiders gave Vanderbilt a present the No. 1 team in the nation rarely receives in Saturday's NCAA Championship semifinal — a scratch in the loss column.

Texas Tech thumped the top-ranked Commodores 60-46 to advance to Sunday's national championship game behind All-America Sheryl Swoopes' 31 points.

"Sheryl Swoopes is arguably the best player I've seen in a long time," Vanderbilt coach Jim Foster said after watching the Commodores lose for just the third time this season. "(Swoopes) came out of nowhere to get rebounds a couple of times. I don't know if you even saw the best of her today. Today Texas Tech was the better basketball team."

In the first half, Swoopes, who became women's basketball unanimous player of the year this weekend, scored 15 points, two on free throws boosting the 6-foot senior into second place on the Tech all-time scoring list.

Krista Kirkland scored seven first half points to help give the Lady Raiders a 28-26 halftime lead.

The Commodores defense made it difficult for Tech to get inside, forcing the Lady Raiders to the perimeter.

"We did have to play the perimeter game and a lot of kids played really hard," coach Marsha Sharp said after the game. "And, of course, Gillingham intimidates shooters in the middle so I thought our post players were really patient in there but at the same time we were not able to create much offense."

Tech made 48 percent of its first half field goals while limiting Vandy to 40 percent from the field.

Swoopes was the only player from either team to go to the free-throw line in the first half, hitting both shots.

Despite Vanderbilt's size advantage, the Lady Raiders won the rebounding battle 17-12 in the first half.

Tech increased its lead by four points within the first minute of the second half and the Commodores were able to keep pace with the Lady Raiders for a time. But after Swoopes made a layup to start a second half 8-0 run, Vanderbilt could only pull within three points, the last time coming with 4:49 left. In the final 10 seconds of the game, guards Noel Johnson and Kirkland kept the ball on the Tech side of the court playing keep-away with Vanderbilt to run out the clock.

"If you had told me before the game we would beat Vandy 60-46, I'd have said you were crazy," assistant coach Roger Reding said after the game. "We are so happy to be here. It's like a dream come true."

SHARON STEINMAN; LADY RAIDERS COMMEMORATIVE EDITION

Up, up and away

Sheryl Swoopes takes the ball up for two of her 31 points against Vanderbilt. Swoopes, who began her offensive show by scoring 53 points against Texas in the Southwest Conference Post-Season Classic, finished the NCAA Tournament with a record 177 points in five games, demolishing the previous record by 43 points.

Lady Raiders roll over Buffaloes to reach Final Four

March 27, 1993

MISSOULA, Mont. (Special) — Texas Tech forward Sheryl Swoopes has said all year that the Lady Raiders would not settle for less than the Final Four this season.

After a pair of one-sided wins in the West Region this weekend the Lady Raiders won't have to.

Swoopes once again boosted her team to another big win Saturday night in the region's championship game, leading Tech to a 79-54 win over Colorado by scoring 36 points. By virtue of the win, the Lady Raiders advanced to this weekend's Final Four in Atlanta.

Tech will face Vanderbilt at 1:30 p.m. Saturday in the semifinal round of the Final Four at The Omni in Atlanta. The other semifinal game will feature Iowa versus Ohio State.

Before this year, no Tech basketball team, men or women, had advanced beyond the Sweet 16 round of the NCAA Championship. The previous best for a Tech squad came last season when the Lady Raiders lost to eventual national champion Stanford in the regional semifinals.

Against Colorado, Swoopes energized the Dahlberg Arena crowd of 7,131 fans, making 15-of-16 free throws and shooting 47.6 percent from the field. Colorado had advanced to the Elite Eight after upsetting the West Region No. 1 seed Stanford, but could not produce the same trick twice making just 40 percent of their field goals against Tech.

The No. 5 Lady Raiders, who knocked off Southern California 87-67 Thursday night in the semifinal round, took a 40-21 halftime lead against Colorado after Swoopes scored 14 of the game's first 16 points.

It wasn't all Swoopes, however.

"It's a tough matchup, and not just Swoopes," Colorado coach Ceal Barry said of the Lady Raiders. "It's the fact that (Tech) can shoot so well outside that you can't drop off and help on (Swoopes). Anytime you drop a player off, they have somebody who can shoot consistently."

Swoopes was named the West Region's MVP after her performance.

"I'm not even thinking about Vanderbilt," Swoopes said of Tech's next opponent. "I'm enjoying this (the win)."

Lady Raiders top Ohio State for crown

by CASEY WESTENRIEDER
LADY RAIDERS COMMEMORATIVE EDITION

April 4, 1993

ATLANTA — With Sheryl Swoopes pounding out 47 points, Texas Tech held off Ohio State 84-82 in the last minute and a half of the National Championship game in Atlanta to accomplish a mission — a victory for the national title.

From the beginning of the season, the Lady Raiders had said time after time that they were on "a mission," and after receiving the Championship Trophy and rings to match, Tech senior Krista Kirkland said their task was complete.

"Mission accomplished," Kirkland said after the game. "I wouldn't want to end it any other way."

Tech ended the season with a 31-3 record and finished with an 19-game winning streak that dates back to the loss to Texas in Lubbock.

Texas Tech started the game with a two-point lead with a layup by Cynthia Clinger but the Buckeyes, after winning an overtime decision over Iowa the previous day, showed no signs of being too tired to play.

The two-point lead diminished to a one-point deficit with the Lady Raiders playing lead tag with Ohio State for the remainder of the game.

After retaining the lead at the 5:60 mark of the first half, Tech fell behind after Nikki Keyton made a jumper from 19 feet to give the Buckeyes an 8-7 lead.

The biggest lead the Buckeyes were able to muster in the first half was four points before Kirkland hit a 3-pointer from the top of the key to give the Lady Raiders the advantage, a lead Tech would hold until midway through the second half.

Tech went to the locker room at the half owning a 40-31 lead.

"I had my doubts, I'll be honest with you, I had my doubts going into the half," assistant coach Roger Reding said after the game. "But when Coach Sharp told me we have never lost a game when we led at the half, I felt better."

Clinger increased the lead to 11 points in the first few minutes of the second half but Ohio State slowly chipped away until the Buckeyes pulled ahead by one point with 10:53 left in the game.

The lead changed hands six times in a little more than a two-minute span but when Tech capitalized on a Kirkland steal after Stephanie Scott was good for a layup, the Lady Raiders held the lead for the remainder of the game.

"It always feels great to be the president of Texas Tech," Tech president Robert Lawless said from the court of The Omni in Atlanta. "But this (the victory) is just the icing on the cake. I think it proves what I've been saying for four years — that we truly have the finest women's basketball coach in the country."

Sharp, who was victorious in her first-ever Final Four, followed the team in cutting down the last piece of the net on the basketball goal with tears in her eyes.

"I don't know if I can tell you how I am feeling right now," Sharp said in a post-game press conference.

"Obviously it's the greatest feeling any of us have had in our careers. I thought we met every challenge put in front of us, but maybe (the team's) biggest factor was their composure when things weren't going well."

Tech finished the game shooting 54.7 percent from the field and 82.6 from the line.

Kirkland and Swoopes played 40 minutes but Clinger played only 19 minutes due to foul trouble, fouling out with 3:46 left in the game.
