Arson blamed for blaze

Apartment catches fire for second time

By Michelle Elizardo

The University Daily

An apartment complex fire, the second in six weeks at the same location, was ignited by arsonists Thursday night, fire officials said.

"We have determined the fire was arson and are looking for two unidentified male suspects," said Marty Fanning, investigator for the fire marshal's office.

Firefighters responded to a 911 call at 6:12 p.m. to the vacant Terra Vista apartment complex located at 2102 10th St., four blocks east of Texas Tech.

The bottom apartment on the northwest corner of the building was on fire, said Capt. Billy Taylor of Lubbock fire station four.

Taylor said the fire was not intense and his 20-member crew distinguished the blaze in five minutes.

"It took five minutes to knock it down, but we will spot it for another hour to make sure it's all out," Taylor said.

"It (Thursday's fire) was a small apartment fire — the other was a lot worse than this," Taylor said of the blaze that occurred on Dec. 17, 1994.

"That fire was a two-alarm fire — we had to call in a second alarm to get more manpower," he said.

Fanning said the December fire caused $100,000 worth of damage in the 16-unit complex; whereas, Thursday's fire caused $24,000 in damage.

The December fire, Fanning said, had too much wiring damage to allow people to continue living in the structure which helped determine Thursday's fire was arson.

"The main clue was that no utilities were connected because of the previous fire," Fanning said. "Which alluded to the fact the fire was not accidental."

Mayor grades city projects in address

Landfill, lake prove to be year's failures

By Linda Carriger

The University Daily

City officials, even the mayor himself, would see a red B+ on their report cards if Mayor David Langston was in charge of grading the group's performance, he said Thursday.

During the State of the City address, Langston graded the city and listed the city's landfill and Lake Alan Henry as the year's failures.

"Quite frankly, we had a problem with solid waste," he said. "We were not doing as good a job as we should have been doing."

Problems included having too thin a layer of dirt topping the waste, allowing the wind to blow waste from the site and not conducting methane studies on deadline, said Quentin Thomas, Lubbock's assistant city manager.

The city was fined $49,400 for these landfill violations.

To assure that the city will comply with new federal regulations, Langston said council members are attempting to develop a new landfill for the city.

"We don't want to get to the end of the space in our current landfill and not have a space to go with it," he said.

Filing for the landfill and building the site will take seven years to complete, he said.

Langston said Lake Alan Henry is another fiasco the city is trying to correct.

"Lake Alan Henry continues to be a Gordian knot," Langston said. "You push one direction, and it pushes something else out."

Officials are unable to complete the water project because ranchers own the mineral rights to the land the reservoir was built on. Consequently, Thomas said, the city cannot drill on the land.

Though the city is still attempting to settle with the ranchers, officials are looking into sharing a project with Amarillo which would draw water from the Canadian River Water Authority.

"It would increase the quantity of water as well as the quality of water," he said.

Langston gave city officials an A for trying to fix these problems, he said.

He also touted the accomplishments of last year, which included a $2.72 million surplus in last year's budget.

"We estimate expenses high and income low and as a result, because we did a great job, we have a surplus," Langston said.

The 1994 budgeting cycle for Lubbock ended in September.

Audited figures from the city's accounting office will be released Monday, said Mark Hindeman, Lubbock's director of support services.

Though the Lubbock Airport

Board has yet to land more jet service in Lubbock, Langston applauded the city's efforts to make traveling easier for fliers through a shuttle system from Love Field to Dallas-Fort Worth Airport and a baggage carrier at the airport in Austin.

Langston also congratulated the tourism industry for drawing more crowds and more dollars to Lubbock.

Tourists added $210 million to the Lubbock economy last year, information from the Texas Department of Commerce states.

"Nobody understands or appreciates what tourism and conventions can mean," Langston said. "If you have a little bit of it, it can translate into a lot of dollars."

Langston said this year he would continue to make progress in the budget through privatization.

"If the private sector can perform services at an equal level, at an equal quality, then we let them do it," he said.

The mayor said a city service which can be turned over to the private sector is street sweeping.

Council members already have privatized parking facilities for the Lubbock International Airport and privatized the Meadowbrook Golf Course.

The city also is planning to toughen curfew laws. In February police will arrest juveniles who are on the streets past 11 p.m. on weekdays and midnight on weekends.

Tech gains six bids for Southwest Collection library

By Darrin Cook

The University Daily

Six contractors offered bids to Texas Tech officials Thursday to build the Texas Tech Southwest Collection/Special Collections library.

Officials would not comment Thursday about which company would receive the construction bid.

Groundbreaking was originally set to begin in September, before being delayed to December and now February 10.

Carrie Sundstrom, Tech assistant director of library development, said the reason for the setback was because of unexpected high construction bids.

"Our bids (received today) came in well under our budget, so we are in excellent shape," said David Murrah, director of the Southwest Collection.

A budget previously was set by the Tech Board of Regents at $8.8 million.

The building, slated for completion in late 1995, will be located on the north side of the Tech Library.

The facility will be the first main excellent shape," said David Murrah, director of the Southwest Collection.

The Southwest Collection, Archives of the Vietnam Conflict, rare books and university archives will be located in the new facility.

The library will include reading rooms, climate-controlled storage vaults, exhibit space and a conservation laboratory.

Murrah said officials have stored Southwest Collection items in room 106 in the math building or the main library since 1962.

"It's like moving from a little hole in the basement to an appropriate facility," Murrah said.

"This will allow us to do things properly for the first time in over 20 years," he said.

The building will help Tech become known as a first-class resource and allow appropriate space for processing, exhibits and public, he said.

Groundbreaking ceremonies are scheduled to begin at 10:30 a.m. Feb. 10., with a reception to follow in the Croslin Room of the Tech Library.

Goin' Band joins inaugural festivities

Two-hundred members march in governor parade

By Lisa Ray

The University Daily

The Texas Tech Goin' Band from Raiderland did not hang up its gaucho hats or red capes after the Cotton Bowl.

The Goin' Band also welcomed Texas Gov. George W. Bush into office Tuesday morning by marching in the inaugural parade in Austin.

Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock invited the Goin' band to participate in late December, said Keith Bearden, the band's director.

"We received the invitation after everyone went home, so I kind of had to throw everything together at the Cotton Bowl," Bearden said.

"I chose those who wanted to go and could. I didn't make anyone go if they didn't want to," Bearden said.

The band consisted of 200 brass, percussion and woodwind players, he said.

Twelve flags, two feature twirlers and two drum majors also participated in the parade march, he said.

The Tech Goin' band marched eight blocks down Congressional Avenue, toward the state capitol, playing "Macarena" four times, Bearden said.

The Goin' Band marched with band ensembles from other Texas universities: the University of Texas-Austin, Baylor University, Texas A&M University, Prairie View A&M University, Texas Southern University and about 20 to 30 high school bands, Bearden said.

Suzanne Wortmann, a French horn player from Arlington, said there were a lot of Raider fans at the parade.

Bearden said he was introduced to Bush and his father, former President Bush, during the parade.

"Speaker of the House John Montford and Sen. Pete Laney also were there, and they are both from the West Texas area," he said.

Students also were able to see former first lady Barbara Bush at the airport, said Eric Luttrell, a tuba player from Carrollton.

"While we were marching in the parade the president was right there, and we yelled 'four more years,'" Luttrell said.

"And he kind of motioned 'I wish' and gave us the guns-up sign," he said.

Bearden said he appreciates the confidence the university has in the Goin' Band.

"It's nice to be considered a good ambassador for our university," Bearden said.

World-traveling Harlem Globetrotters dribble into Hub City Monday

By Tara McQueen

The University Daily

The passing, shooting and whistling goodwill ambassadors of basketball will be rolling into town at 7:30 p.m. Monday at the Lubbock Municipal Coliseum.

In a telephone interview, Paul Gaffeny, the head showman and "man in the middle" of the Harlem Globetrotters, said the Globetrotters win all the time because, "We're good!"

"We practice every day before a game, for about an hour a day," Gaffeny said. "We perform seven to nine months out of the year."

The team, which was first created in 1969, has performed in more than 113 countries.

"Belgium was one the nicest places I have ever been," Gaffeny said. "I had a lot of fun there, but I have fun everywhere I go."

"The atmosphere was wonderful," he said.

Their audiences have included three different popes and 75,000 fans in Berlin's Olympic Stadium, a record which still holds the Guinness World Record.

Gaffeny said Globetrotter basketball does not resemble the style of the NBA.

"If you want to watch real serious, straight-up basketball, watch the NBA," Gaffeny said.

However, Gaffeny said, the NBA does not have all the best players.

"We have the best," he said. "The NBA doesn't entertain as well as we do."

The Globetrotters broke the gender barrier in 1985 when the first female player, Lynette Woodard, made the team.

Woodard was the first woman to compete professionally with male players.

"She was a great player, she still is a great player," Gaffeny said. "She was a lot of fun, like one of the guys — almost."

Since Woodard, seven more women have played for the Globetrotters. Gaffeny said the team is like a family.

"We get along like any other brother or sister," he said. "But you solve problems so quickly that it never gets out of hand."

Less than half the players are married, Gaffeny said.

"Their families come out about every two weeks," he said. "But we are usually only in a city for one day, so it is tough to bring your spouse or children."

A movie is slated to come out this year from Columbia Pictures that tells the history of the Globetrotters. Gaffeny said a portion of the movie will include actors and a portion will include current players.

"There are parts of the movie we know about and some parts that we still don't know about," he said.

Gaffeny said he would advise college students "to get your diploma, no matter how long it takes, keep your goals high and go for 'em."

He said the main focus of the Globetrotters is to be goodwill ambassadors.

Lubbock needs new multipurpose arena

When Texas Tech joins the Big 12 conference in 1996, it will mark a giant step for the Red Raiders. The time has come for a Lubbock to follow suit and take a step forward.

Too often when it comes time for the city to make improvements to the city's infrastructure, the citizens take the "not in my backyard" approach.

This proposed tax will not just affect property owners, it affects anyone who would buy anything in the city of Lubbock.

The political apathy among Lubbockites has led to poor turnout for citywide elections, statewide elections and other major events in the Hub City.

This has led many event promoters to drop Lubbock from their events' future appearances. Continued apathy concerning the future of Lubbock will only hurt the city, not help it.

The current home for events, the Lubbock Municipal Coliseum, is a great place to watch a basketball game — a basketball game in the 1960s. Since the coliseum was built, the Lady Raiders have become one of the premier women's teams in the country and the Tech men's team has progressed from pretender to contender. It's too bad when top-flight recruits visit, they see a world-class practice facility but a barn of an arena.

Sporting events in general have grown in popularity across the country.

Facilities built to house athletic contests as well as other entertainment events have sprung up throughout the South.

In the past 10 years, multipurpose arenas have been built in cities like Fayetteville, Ark., Biloxi, Miss. and Waco. In addition, a new arena has been planned in College Station.

The similarities between these cities and Lubbock are numerous.

All are roughly the same size, four have major universities and all are far removed from large metropolitan areas.

However, this is more than just a sports issue — that's why it is a MULTIPURPOSE ARENA.

The term "quality of life" has been thrown out by mayor David Langston. He is correct — it will affect the quality of life.

Businesses around the northern rim of downtown will receive an economic boost from the many people who will use the Buddy Holly Arena.

Where there is an arena, hotels, restaurants and merchants follow. The downtown area, which is in the midst of revitalization, will flourish.

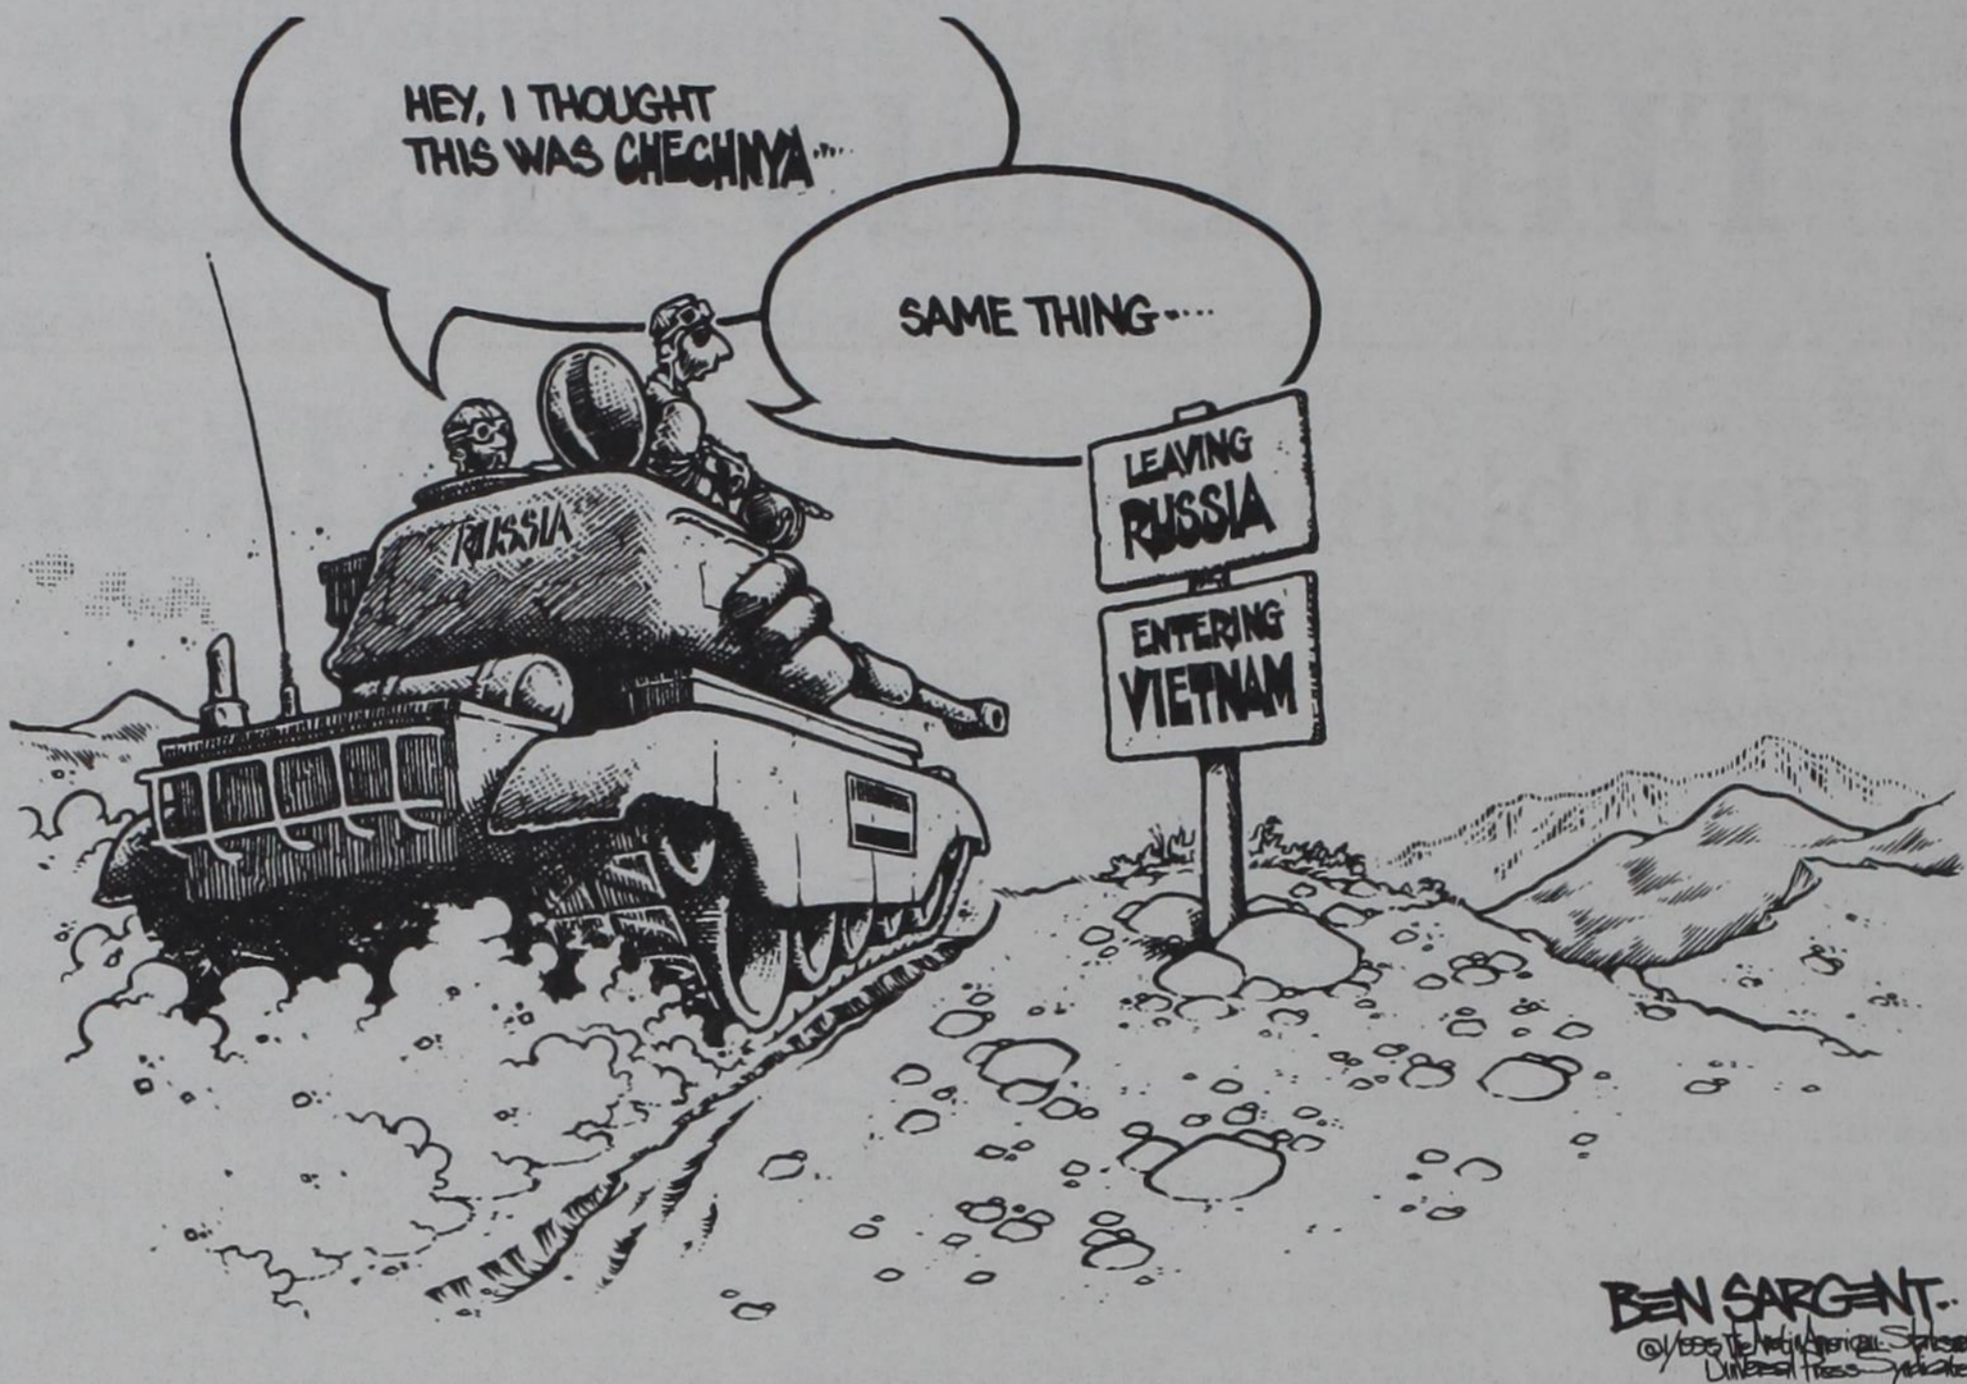

The existing merchants in Lubbock will also benefit from the people throughout the region who would come to a major concert or event.

Lubbock has one of the highest ratio of people going out to eat per capita in the nation. Imagine if 5,000 people from outside the Lubbock area joined them. It would add a lot of income into the economy.

The Buddy Holly Arena would prove to be a bigger and better home for Texas Tech basketball, major concerts, and trade shows. The future of Lubbock would only be brighter with an arena — after all an arena is not going to get any cheaper.

The seven-member editorial board voted 6-1 on this issue.

Q: Is homosexuality inborn? Is it curable? What about crimes against gays — how often do they occur? How often do they occur in Lubbock? How can a person report an anti-gay crime without "coming out"?

A: A variety of theories have tried to explain the origins of homosexuality. Considerable research has been done over the years, but the most honest answer science can provide at this time is that the cause of homosexuality is unknown. Proposed theories include psychological (relating to life incidences, parenting patterns, etc.), biological, and a combination of biological and social forces. Current research is suggesting, however, that a biological predisposition exists to exclusive homosexuality, while sexual orientation in general is more of a continuum influenced by various factors unique to each person. The American Psychiatric Association removed homosexuality per se from its list of mental disorders in 1973; therefore, homosexuality is not a disease that can be "cured." Attempting to change such individuals would be the equivalent of trying to change heterosexuals into homosexuals.

Concerning hate crimes against gays, many cities are reporting an increase in assaults on persons suspected as being gay. In 1987 the National Gay Task Force began a major project to monitor and document violence against homosexuals and planned to use the data as a tool for civil rights advocacy and help reduce crimes against homosexuals. However, the last two telephone numbers we have for this agency have been disconnected.

According to the Lubbock Police Department, statistics on crime are not kept by sexual orientation, race, color, socioeconomic status, or any other personal issues except whether the crime is adult or juvenile. All crimes are investigated in the same manner regardless of the issues surrounding the crime.

Tech Talks

Q: Are you for or against the proposed arena? What is the number one reason for your view?

"I think Lubbock needs more attractions and with all of it at one place it would probably work better. You can do everything there. You don't have to worry about different locations."

Multipurpose arena vote should not pass

To the Editor:
 Caveat Emptor! The Lubbock government may not have your best interest in mind. I find it interesting (and slightly disturbing) that there were early voting booths for the multipurpose arena issue at events in the Lubbock Municipal Coliseum. To me, I see the city of Lubbock trying once again to railroad another idea through. Lubbock's official response to allegations such as mine stated that these were not set up to allow people who would be interested in having a new arena a greater chance to vote for the idea. They stated that by setting up this early voting in the coliseum that it would allow for a large amount of people to access early voting, not a biased group. There are many persons that reside in Lubbock and because of cultural, monetary, or other reasons they don't ever use the coliseum as it is. Decide what you will, but when the issue was selling beer inside the city limits, did the city of Lubbock set up early voting booths at the strip, or the coliseum for that matter? Remember: there was allegations of harassing voters at voting locations. This was allegedly linked to the city of Lubbock. Also remember that the alcohol inside the city limit lost by only a handful of votes. Is there anything wrong with having the Lubbock Municipal Coliseum renovated instead of spending millions of dollars on a new one? Why do we need two arenas when we can barely fill up one at any given time? What group of people are lobbying hardest for this arena, and what are their motivations? These are questions you need to ask yourself before voting. I, myself think that the Lubbock Municipal Coliseum is just fine. It may need a little work, but there is nothing inherently wrong with it. Do we really need to spend your money or mine on something we already have? If it's not broke, don't fix it.

Banner represents diversity

College moves to global education

By Jamie McDonald

The University Daily

A banner that hangs in the Undergraduate Programs Office in the Texas Tech College of Business Administration represents more than Texas Tech, it also symbolizes the world to many students.

Rob Tomicic, a graduate business student from Lubbock, designed the banner in November to be used in commencement exercises and other ceremonies.

The banner represents the move toward global education, he said.

"The borders are falling," Tomicic said. "The banner says we are trying to provide an education in the global market."

Global education has spread through every college in the world and Tech is participating increasingly more in international education, said Carl Stem, dean and professor of finance in the College of the Business Administration.

"The idea of globalizing has gone on since World War II," Stem said.

"The policy of the leaders of America decided the best way to prevent wars was to bring the world together."

Madelaine Lowe, director of the Graduate Services Center in the College of Business Administration, said Tech is keeping up with what is happening worldwide.

"Internationally, students want to come for the American MBA program," Lowe said.

"We are active in recruiting internationally and becoming more so every day. With the diversity, our students learn so much."

What students learn will help them become better prepared for the global marketplace in the business world, he said.

"There is a need for global education in business to be competitive in the marketplace," said Shirley Whittman, director of the college's undergraduate program.

"They must have a cultural awareness."

The need for global education is increasing as the world is expanding, Lowe said.

"Our world is expanding so rapidly, (and) so is our student body in diversity," Lowe said.

"We are doing several joint-international programs including exchange programs."

We are getting very proactive in these areas. We are becoming very globalized here."

The college is working in four ways to integrate international students and faculty with the American students and faculty, Stem said.

"We are working to attract more international students to be in the same class with our American students," he said.

"We now have almost 200 international students. We are also trying to attract more foreign faculty and foreign business scholars.

"We are developing more and more overseas study opportunities for our students. We also get our faculty abroad as visiting professors."

Diversifying the classrooms also will diversify what students study, Lowe said.

"By diversifying the students there is a whole realm that can be integrated in the classroom," she said.

"Professors travel all over the world and bring it back to the classroom."

Changing the college's curriculum to be more global will attract more and better students, Stem said.

"It will enhance our reputation," he said.

"It is not possible for a major business school to be competitive today for high quality students without it having a major international thrust."

Fort Hood soldier arrested for kidnapping

KILLEEN (AP) — A Fort Hood soldier was arrested Wednesday in the kidnapping of a 14-month-old baby after a one-hour, three-county chase and a five-hour standoff.

Pfc. Michael Anthony Pisilli has been charged in Mills County with the aggravated kidnapping of Shelby Mohundro, the daughter of his girlfriend Brittney McAllister. According to authorities, Pisilli is not the child's father.

Pisilli, 26, of Philadelphia, was being held in Burnet County Jail Wednesday night on $50,000 bond.

Pisilli surrendered early Wednesday near Moline, Texas, but not before stepping out of his car with a shotgun pointed at the baby and holding law enforcement officials back for about five hours, said Mills County Sheriff Glenn Carr.

A charge of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon against Pisilli also was filed in Bell County late Wednesday in a Monday incident involving threats to the child's mother, according to Killeen police Sgt. Dennis Baldwin.

Other charges also may be filed, officers said.

Pisilli was stopped in a pasture on a ranch just south of Moline inside the Mills County line near the Lampasas County line, according to a news release from the Lampasas County Sheriff's Department.

"Several cars followed him on a bunch of dirt roads and finally got him in a field," said Mills County Sheriff Glenn Carr.

Columbia rocked by earthquake

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — An earthquake with a preliminary magnitude of at least 6.5 rocked Colombia on Thursday, killing at least three people, injuring 40 and damaging buildings in several cities.

The quake, centered in eastern Colombia's sparsely populated plains, was felt some 550 miles away in Caracas, Venezuela.

With news reports of Japan's massive quake on Tuesday still making headlines here, nerves were on edge. Hundreds were seen fleeing.

Murder suspect allowed to keep kids

AUSTIN (AP) — The man accused of murdering a 16-year-old girl he allegedly tortured was investigated by state child-protection officials at least three times concerning allegations he abused his own children.

Despite looking into allegations that Jose Fonseca Najera, beat his children with a belt, a stick and once forced them to sleep outside in the wintertime, the children remained at the home.

"If we had thought we had grounds for removal, we would have done so," Wanda Pena, lead program director for Child Protective Services in Travis County, told the Austin American-Statesman for Thursday's editions.

"Although we determined there was abuse and neglect, that was not enough to remove them. There have to be legal grounds," she said.

The abuse allegations, dating to 1992, are found in court records related to the children's removal from the Najera home.

A judge Tuesday granted temporary custody of the three girls to their godparents.

Najera has been charged with the murder of Maria Escalante, who died of hypothermia.

Najera tortured her and a 15-year-old boy.

Tech student chosen for spring internship

By Donald Gillilan
The University Daily

A little bit of everything is what Tom Sell, an agribusiness major from Lubbock, said he experiences during his internship with Lubbock Congressman Larry Combest.

Sell is participating in Combest's Congressional and Public Policy Internship Program through May.

"This is my chance to serve West Texas and my community," Sell said.

He said being in Washington is an incredible feeling that everyone should experience.

"Every office has interns, but we get to do a little bit of everything around here," he said. "I recommend this internship to anyone who has an interest in history or in government."

Sell, who has served as alumni secretary and chaplain of Phi Delta Theta fraternity, also is active as social chairman of Mortar Board.

"What I plan to do with my experience here in Washington is to be a good American," Sell said. "My parents were very excited for me, but my mother doesn't want me to become a politician."

A government internship might sound difficult to get, he said, but finding out about one was simple.

"I turned in an application, and it took about a month to go through," he said. "All the applications were posted around campus, so it was easy to find out about it."

Keith Williams, Combest's press

secretary, said he gives helpful hints to students interested in applying for an internship.

"What we're looking for in interns is just what any employer would look for in an employee," Williams said. "We need someone who is dependable and reliable."

Sell said he is participating in the internship through the agricultural economics department and is working with a professor to receive credit.

"Tom will be doing an indepth study while he's in Washington and will turn it in for credit," said James Graves, Tech agricultural economics professor. "All interns are required to turn in a study project while on an internship through this department."

Combest said he is pleased with the academic achievements and the dedication and abilities of the students participating in the internship.

"Our experience of the past several years has proven beneficial for the students here to learn, the universities whom they represent and the constituents we all work to serve," Combest said.

Kennedy matriarch's condition improves

HYANNIS PORT, Mass. (AP) — Rose Kennedy, the 104-year-old matriarch of the Kennedy family, was reported feeling better Wednesday, two days after she had trouble breathing.

"Mrs. Kennedy's condition is improved and her family feels there is no cause for immediate concern," said Pamela Hughes, spokeswoman for Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.

The senator returned to Washington a day after flying back to Massachusetts on Tuesday to be with his mother, who had difficulty breathing on Monday night.

Hughes said Kennedy is staying in close contact with his mother but "feels she is in no immediate danger."

Quake death toll continues to grow

KOBE, Japan (AP) — Swiss rescue dogs helped find bodies as the earthquake death toll swelled past 4,000 Thursday, and the bark of a pet led to one old man's salvation after more than two icy days in the wreckage.

New fires burst out around the shattered city, and firefighters' efforts to douse them were stymied by crushed water mains. With government relief efforts falling far short of victims' needs, thousands more gave up hope of finding food and shelter and joined the stream of residents abandoning the city on foot.

By early Friday, confirmed deaths totaled 4,047, making Tuesday's 7.2-magnitude earthquake the worst in Japan in more than 70 years.

Another 727 people were still unaccounted for, and freezing temperatures made relatives more desperate about finding missing friends or family members alive. But several rescues on Thursday revived hopes.

In one Kobe neighborhood, a barking pet dog led rescuers to his owner, 65-year-old Chiyoko Amakawa, who had been buried for 53 hours.

Doctors said she was badly bruised but suffered no broken bones.

"It was pitch dark and my leg hurt so much and I was thirsty, but I called to 'Pochi' and told him I was in pain and needed help," Amakawa told Kyodo News Service. "I just wondered over and over again when I was going to die."

Others rescued in the city included a 9-year-old boy and a 94-year-old man.

The shocking extent of the damage moved Japan's emperor, who rarely comments on natural disasters, to offer condolences, appeal for "strong solidarity" and urge more precautions in the future.

More than 21,600 people were injured. More than 30,400 homes and buildings were severely damaged or destroyed in and around Kobe.

Center prepares students

By Terri Lowrance

The University Daily

For Texas Tech students graduating in May, the time to begin thinking about a post-graduation position may be now. The Career Planning and Placement Center, located in 335 West Hall, provides services to help students prepare for job searches.

David Kraus, Career Planning and Placement Center director, said students need to think several months ahead of time, instead of a couple of weeks ahead.

"If the students wait until May, they won't find a recruiter that they might have found in March," he said.

Most businesses and organizations conduct their spring recruitment from the end of January to the beginning of March, Kraus said.

Students may register with the center by purchasing an application disk for $4.50 at the Tech Bookstore, he said.

Students should fill in all requested information and take the disk to the center, he said.

Students also are asked for 10 copies of their transcript and an optional list of references, Kraus said.

The center receives several calls each day from businesses searching for employees, he said.

The center can post job openings or release students' names and numbers to businesses, Kraus said.

"You never can tell what kind of jobs will surface," he said. "Every day we get jobs you don't expect to see."

The center also conducts orientation sessions, seminars and workshops.

The center also helps students write resumes and cover letters, prepare for interviews and write follow-up letters.

"We try to take the students through the whole process," Kraus said.

The center's services are available for every student in any department on campus.

"There is something over here for everybody," he said.

Recruiters from various businesses also contact the placement center looking for undergraduate students to fill intern, co-op and summer positions.

"The center lets all students have the same opportunity," he said.

Students should not hesitate to come by the center if they have any questions or concerns, Kraus said.

"Students do have something to offer to employers, and we help them understand that," Kraus said.

Students make living environmentally friendly

Project builds homes, experience

By Jamie McDonald

The University Daily

Building environmentally friendly housing is the focus of a project between Big Bend National Park, the National Park Service and Texas Tech's College of Architecture.

"The National Park Foundation contacted (Dean) Martin Harms and asked him to help the Park Service design better housing," said Glenn Hill, associate architecture professor. "It is housing that is more energy efficient, uses recycled materials and has less impact on the environment in general."

Hill selected students Damon Behrens, Dennis Gulseth, Jay Porterfield, Shae Jobe and Tom

Coppedge to work on the project last semester.

The students were chosen because of their interest in the program and their academic performance, he said.

"Our proposals were well received," Hill said. "Tech was chosen by reputation. Mort Meyerson (chairman of the National Park Foundation) had been told we were familiar with sustainable housing."

Now that the first phase is over, Tech students have been asked to build a modified version of one of their proposed houses, he said.

The project is giving students a real-world experience, he said.

"Students have a specific client that has a set of needs you are trying to respond to," he said.

Porterfield said he agrees that the project gives him good experience.

"It gives me practical hands-on knowledge," he said. "We had to start from scratch and develop a program that designs the criteria that is set by the client."

Students traveled to Big Bend in October and again last week.

"Last weekend we went to present our project," Porterfield said. "We got the go-ahead for the project to pursue it further. Everyone we presented to was very excited about what we had."

Hill said the project benefits the College of Architecture.

"The college gets recognition for its efforts in sustainable architecture," he said. "It also gives us good public relations. Now, we will receive more funded research."

Designing sustainable housing is a response to long-term housing needs because the housing is more likely to last longer, he said.

"We are trying to redefine housing in a more sustainable way and make it more environmentally friendly," Hill said. "We are trying to preserve our natural environmental heritage."

Porterfield said the project also is a way to help the Big Bend community.

"It helps bring the community up from where it is," he said. "Some people are living in trailers right now."

Lawyers debate jury's instructions

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The two sides in the O.J. Simpson murder trial disagree over whether jurors should be told from the start that they must feel a "moral certainty" in order to convict Simpson.

The lawyers met privately with the judge Thursday to debate the instructions that will be given to the jurors before they hear opening statements Monday.

Court papers outlined the point of contention.

The discussions were adjourned after two hours without a resolution.

Normally, instructions are not given to the jury until testimony is over and deliberations are about to begin.

However, Superior Court Judge Lance Ito decided to give instructions right away to offer the jurors some guidance during the months before they get the case.

He will also give instructions just before deliberations begin.

Prosecutors, apparently worried they will be held to a higher standard because of Simpson's fame and amiable image, want jurors told before opening statements that they can convict Simpson.

But they can convict him only if they feel guilt was proved beyond a reasonable doubt.

Casino deal falls through in Houston

HOUSTON (AP) — All bets are off regarding a plan to turn the aging Sam Houston Coliseum into a $300 million casino.

Mayor Bob Lanier said Wednesday the deal fell through because of a snafu in negotiations between city officials and developers.

"It just got to where the deal wasn't there for either one of us," said Lanier.

Lanier said he had hoped to use the 3.5-acre site as a cornerstone for redeveloping downtown.

Residents voice health concerns over materials near junior high

By Shannon Murphy
The University Daily

Arguments and comments concerning the relocation of West Texas Wilbert Vault Company to an area near Cavazos Junior High were heard during a town hall meeting Thursday.

The Wilbert Company manufactures, delivers and installs precast concrete burial vaults and burial boxes.

Three representatives from the Texas Natural Resources and Conservation Commission were present to answer questions concerning the plant. "According to the Texas Clean Air Act, facilities such as these must obtain a permit from the TNRCC or obtain an exemption in order to operate," TNRCC representative Kevin Jung said. "Wilbert Company has applied for a standard exemption number 117, in which special provisions are required and certain guidelines must be met."

Standard exemption number 117 is for specialty concrete batch plants, where precast products and special concrete is made, he said.

Lubbock residents discussed possible health problems resulting from breathing cement dust and hazardous materials and chemicals used in the plant.

Wilbert Company Employee David Solsa said the company's entire manufacturing process is done inside the building, and no concrete is poured outside of their facilities. "No cement dust flies out anywhere," Solsa said. "Everything stays in the building, and our facilities are kept clean."

Residents disagreed with Workman's and Solsa's statements.

"There is no way you can convince me that dust does not fly out into the air," Lubbock resident Max Winn said. "Workers in cement plants come out covered in white dust, some has to end up in the air."

The Wilbert Company also was required to submit material safety data sheets on other chemicals they will use during their operations.

The TNRCC said the Wilbert Company meets all expected criteria to qualify for the exemption.

Woman gets sperm extracted from dead husband's corpse

NEW YORK (AP) — A woman whose husband of 2 1/2 years died in a scuffle with police had sperm extracted from the corpse in hopes of having the children they had dreamed of.

Maribel Baez, 29, made the request while the body of her husband, Anthony, lay in the morgue, undergoing an autopsy.

"It was seeing my brother on the table that hurt so much," Anthony's sister, Elizabeth Baez, said Thursday. "That's when Maribel said, 'I want his baby. I want it now. I'm not going to let him go.'"

Baez, a part-time security guard from Orlando, Fla., died Dec. 22 during a visit to New York City to see relatives. Like his wife, he taught Bible school in Orlando.

The 29-year-old man was arrested for disorderly conduct after a football he and his two brothers were tossing around in the street in his native Bronx hit two police cars in the middle of the night.

Susan Karten, a lawyer for the family, said an officer restrained Baez with a chokehold banned by the Police Department in 1993.

The medical examiner said the cause of death was asphyxiation "due to compression of the neck and chest" and asthma and classified it as a medical homicide, a ruling that fixes no blame. The death is under investigation by the district attorney's office.

Sperm extraction from a corpse, performed in the Baez case by urologist Dr. Peter Schlegel, has been done before.

Last summer in Titusville, Fla., at another widow's request, Dr. Mark Jutras extracted sperm from the body of 22-year-old Emanuele Maresca, who died in a car accident.

Armed robbery suspect caught

HENDERSON (AP) — An armed bank robbery suspect who drove away in a stolen car, got stuck in a ditch then fled on foot into a wooded area has been caught after search dogs and horses tracked him.

The unnamed suspect was arrested Wednesday afternoon, about three hours after taking about $3,000 worth of traveler's checks from the Citizens National Bank, said Henderson Police Sgt. Mark Dickerson.

The man fled in a vehicle reportedly stolen in Tennessee, then headed into the field after he drove off the road. That's when officials called in the animals for help.

The man was arrested and taken to the Rusk County Jail.

Four dead from fire, address mix-up takes firefighters to wrong street

HUSTONVILLE, Ky. (AP) — As Lillian Coleman tried frantically to wake up three of her children in her burning home, firefighters were miles away, searching for the house on Chicken Gizzard Road instead of in Chicken Bristle.

Unable to wake the children, Coleman refused to leave. She and the children were dead and the house ablaze when firefighters finally arrived nearly 30 minutes after a 911 call early Wednesday.

"I watch 'Rescue 911' on television, and they say call 911 and save lives. I called 911 and got no help," Fire Chief Neil Reed quoted her husband, Charles Rogers, as saying.

Rogers escaped along with the couple's oldest daughter, 13-year-old Leslie.

The mix-up over the address and which counties handle calls delayed firefighters by 28 minutes, prompting an investigation into the routing of emergency calls in this rural central Kentucky community about 55 miles south of Frankfort. No disciplinary action has been taken against any dispatchers.

Reed, chief of Lincoln County's fire stations at Moreland and Hustonville, was uncertain what difference the extra time would have made. Carvon Hudson, who investigated the fire for the state fire marshal's office, said it would have made no difference.

"I think they were already dead from smoke inhalation," Hudson said of Coleman and her children.

Rogers and his wife awoke about 3 a.m. Wednesday to smoke from a fire that apparently began when a burning log rolled from an unprotected fireplace and ignited a couch.

"She was hollering 'Get up kids,' but they wouldn't get up," Rogers told The Advocate-Messenger of Danville.

Authorities believe the children, two boys and a girl ranging in age from 4 to 11, were overcome by smoke while they slept. Rogers pulled Leslie out a back window of the one-story, small frame house.

Rogers said his 29-year-old wife not only refused to leave but asked him to bring Leslie back inside so they could all die together. He said the girl also tried to go back inside.

"I had to get her and put her in the truck," he said. "I could hear them screaming. ... I thought about going back in myself," he said.

The house did not have a telephone and Rogers had to drive to an aunt's home less than a mile away in Lincoln County to call 911. But because of a fluke in the system, dispatchers in neighboring Casey County, not Lincoln, handled the call.

Casey County Deputy Sheriff Marvin Crutcher said the call was received at 3:25 a.m. and the dispatcher took down the information.

Chicken Gizzard Road is in Casey County and three officers were dispatched there. When no fire was found, they tracked the report to neighboring Lincoln County.

Volunteers lend teens helping hand

By Tara McQueen

The University Daily
For students discouraged by reports of juvenile crime, a hands-on alternative to apathy exists in Lubbock.

SMART (Students Mentoring Teens At Risk) is a volunteer organization of the Community Action Network that pairs at-risk teens with Texas Tech students.

"Personally, I got to see what it was like to see the other side," said Kyle Martin, a senior exercise and sports science major from Andrews.

Martin spent last semester as a volunteer, working with a 13-year-old at-risk teen.

"I was adopted, so I always wondered what life might have been like," Martin said.

"I have had an easy life, and this kid had it so bad. Both of his parents are dead, his brother is in jail, and he lives with his grandmother," Martin said.

Martin said he enjoys taking the teen he works with to play miniature golf, bowling or to a movie.

"He has a lot looking him," Martin said. "He was waiting for a big brother figure, so he bonded to me pretty easily."

Martin committed SMART was a "big-time commitment, but one that made him feel really good."

Another volunteer thought she would not have time to be a mentor, but she said she found herself looking forward to it each week.

"In the beginning I thought I wouldn't have time, but you only need two hours a week," said Spring Staggs-Williams, a senior exercise and sports science major from Lubbock.

The student Staggs-Williams spent time with was 15 years old and 5 1/2 months pregnant.

"Because she was pregnant, we weren't able to do many physical activities," she said. "We went to the mall and walked, and went to the movies, but mostly we sat down and talked.

"At first she was very close-mouthed," Staggs-Williams said. "In the beginning it was hard for her to open up. After the third week, she talked some about personal problems, birth control and her future."

Staggs-Williams said she thinks she gave her teen direction for her future.

"She is interested in cosmetology and possibly in becoming a counselor due to her life experiences," Staggs-Williams said. "We also talked a lot about marriage and her boyfriend."

"She decided to raise the baby alone with help from her family."

Students interested in the SMART program can attend an orientation session at 7 p.m. Thursday in the University Center Lubbock Room or call Hugh Southard at 742-3621 for more information.

Judge orders 'Star' to pay damages to Dangerfield

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A judge ruled Wednesday that a magazine fabricated parts of a 1990 story portraying Rodney Dangerfield as a vodka-guzzling, pot-smoking womanizer, but awarded the comedian only $45,000 in damages.

U.S. District Judge Robert S.W. Lew ordered the Star magazine to pay the 72-year-old Dangerfield $45,000 in damages, $1 for emotional distress and $1 for defamation.

Dangerfield's lawyer, Barry Langberg, called the ruling "ridiculous" and said he expects it to be overturned on appeal. Dangerfield had sought $1 million in compensatory damages and $3 million in punitive damages.

Vincent Cox, an attorney for the Star, called Lew's ruling severe. "We take seriously any finding that our client acted with malice toward any plaintiff," he said.

Maynard returns to campus

By Amy Osmulski
The University Daily

Friday afternoons at Texas Tech have not been the same since the bells stopped ringing two years ago.

Every Friday afternoon beginning in the '70s, Judson Maynard would work his magic in the west tower of the administration building as the Tech carillonneur.

Maynard retired from Tech in 1993, but has returned for another performance — this time on the pipe organ.

He will present a recital in the Hemmle Recital Hall of the music building at 8 p.m. today on Tech's Holtkamp pipe organ.

Maynard will play a collection of organ music from France, Germany, Great Britain and the United States.

With both parents being musicians, Maynard may have been destined for a life of music.

He began playing the piano but soon learned he wanted to be an organist.

"I was a piano player in high school," he said.

"I finally managed to convince my father to get me permission to play on the church organ."

After he graduated from college, he began working at high schools.

He was then given the opportunity to teach at Tech, where he taught organ and theories for 33 years.

Maynard worked with a number of students while at Tech, some of whom have won state and national recognitions.

"I was very excited to go to Tech," Maynard said. "I really enjoyed working there."

"I'm also very happy to come back and see a lot of old friends."

Maynard worked as organist for several churches in Lubbock.

He also served several terms as dean of the Lubbock Chapter of the American Guild of Organists.

Ann Adcock, dean of Lubbock's Chapter of the AGO and a former student of Maynard's, said the organization is excited to bring Maynard to Lubbock.

"Professor Maynard is a fine

Maynard

player," Adcock said.

"He doesn't do as much concert playing as some, but he has concertized all over America and Europe," she said.

The event is sponsored by the Lubbock Chapter of the AGO and admission is free.

Maynard is currently the organist and choir director at St. Thomas's Episcopal Church in New Haven, Conn.

Fighting for his dream

Jeremy Chesnutt: The University Daily

Heavy work: Grant Anderson, a 1993 Tech graduate, trains for his fight in the West Texas USA Boxing Championships Saturday.

Grant Anderson, a 1993 Tech graduate, is one of the top boxers in the nation

By Jared Parcell
The University Daily

Technical knockouts, split decisions and unanimous decisions. Not to mention court decisions. For former Texas Tech student Grant Anderson, boxing is a way of taking a break from his preparations for the Law School Admission Test.

Anderson, who graduated from Tech in December 1993 with a degree in business management, is trying to get into the Tech law school.

"My long-term goal is to get into law school," Anderson said. "Right now, I am studying for the LSAT."

Besides the LSAT, Anderson, who is 18-5 in his amateur career and ranked No. 9 in the nation in the light heavyweight division (178 lbs.), is preparing to fight for the United States Amateur Boxing Federation (USABF) title.

He is fighting this weekend in Lubbock in the West Texas USA Boxing Championships.

He will be fighting Eugene Alvarez, an opponent he has faced before, his coach Edward Hernandez said.

"They met once for the right to advance into Golden Gloves competition and Grant won," Hernandez said.

"Now he (Alvarez) is back again. These are two of the best in their weight class."

A win will move Anderson into the state tournament, the Texas USA Boxing Championships, scheduled for Jan. 27-29 in San Antonio.

"If I win Saturday (the region) and the state tournament down the road, I will move onto the national tournament in Colorado Springs, Colo. (March 30-April 7)," Anderson said.

"If I win nationals, I would be number one in the nation in my weight class with a possible invitation to the 1996 U.S.

Olympic Trials."

Anderson said his focus is on nationals and winning the state championship.

"A win would give me a boost of confidence," he said. "Right now, I am thinking small."

Hernandez, who is also a detective for the Lubbock Police Department, said Anderson has the potential to advance to the Olympics.

"I know he has the ability and desire," Hernandez said.

"If he wins Saturday and gets the right draw in San Antonio, he could advance to nationals.

"If he is one of the top three in April, he would be eligible for an at-large bid for the Olympic Trials."

Anderson said training and conditioning for fights is a year-round process.

"The time involved is year-round, five days a week," he said describing the amount of time he spends preparing.

"The closer the fight gets, the more intense the workouts are. For three months, it is almost non-stop."

He also added that workouts are intense throughout training.

"We drill on two punching bags, the heavy and the double 'm,'" Anderson said.

"We do three-minute circuit drills, sparring with partners, tossing the medicine ball and running sprints on the basketball court. Closer to the fight, we do three minutes on the circuit and one minute off, like a situational fight."

Hernandez said Anderson has improved any many areas in preparation for Saturday night's bout.

"We worked on his weight training, stamina and power punch," Hernandez said.

"His speed has increased and he has gotten his power punch to where he wants it."

The 24-year-old Anderson, who is originally from Conroe, said he has been interested in boxing since he was 14 years old when he went to watch fights at a Marriott hotel in Houston.

Three years later, he put on the gloves and has yet to give up the sport he fell in love with.

"I started boxing seven years ago in Conroe at the Roy Harris Boxing Club," Anderson said. "I have spent nearly four years in Lubbock boxing."

Anderson said his influence to participate in the sport comes from friends back home, one in particular.

"Steve Holloway, a DPS officer, would take me to watch fights all the time," Anderson said, reflecting on his influences. "I enjoy watching (former heavyweight champ Mike) Tyson fight, too."

High school sports also played a role in his decision to continue dancing in the ring.

"I got tired of team sports," Anderson said.

"I played football and did not like the fact that one person could affect the outcome of a game.

"I like the individual part of the sport, the one-on-one aspect," he said about his decision to box.

Anderson said that boxing is locally supported and funded by the Lubbock Warriors Club, but the interest is not where he would like it to be.

"The city interest is pretty good, but I wish it could be better," he said.

"I remember when the sport was popular during (Sigma Phi Epsilon) Fight Night."

Anderson, along with sparring boxing partner Joshua Melendrez, recently visited the U.S. Olympic Education Center in Marquette, Mich.

"The trip was a good experience," he said.

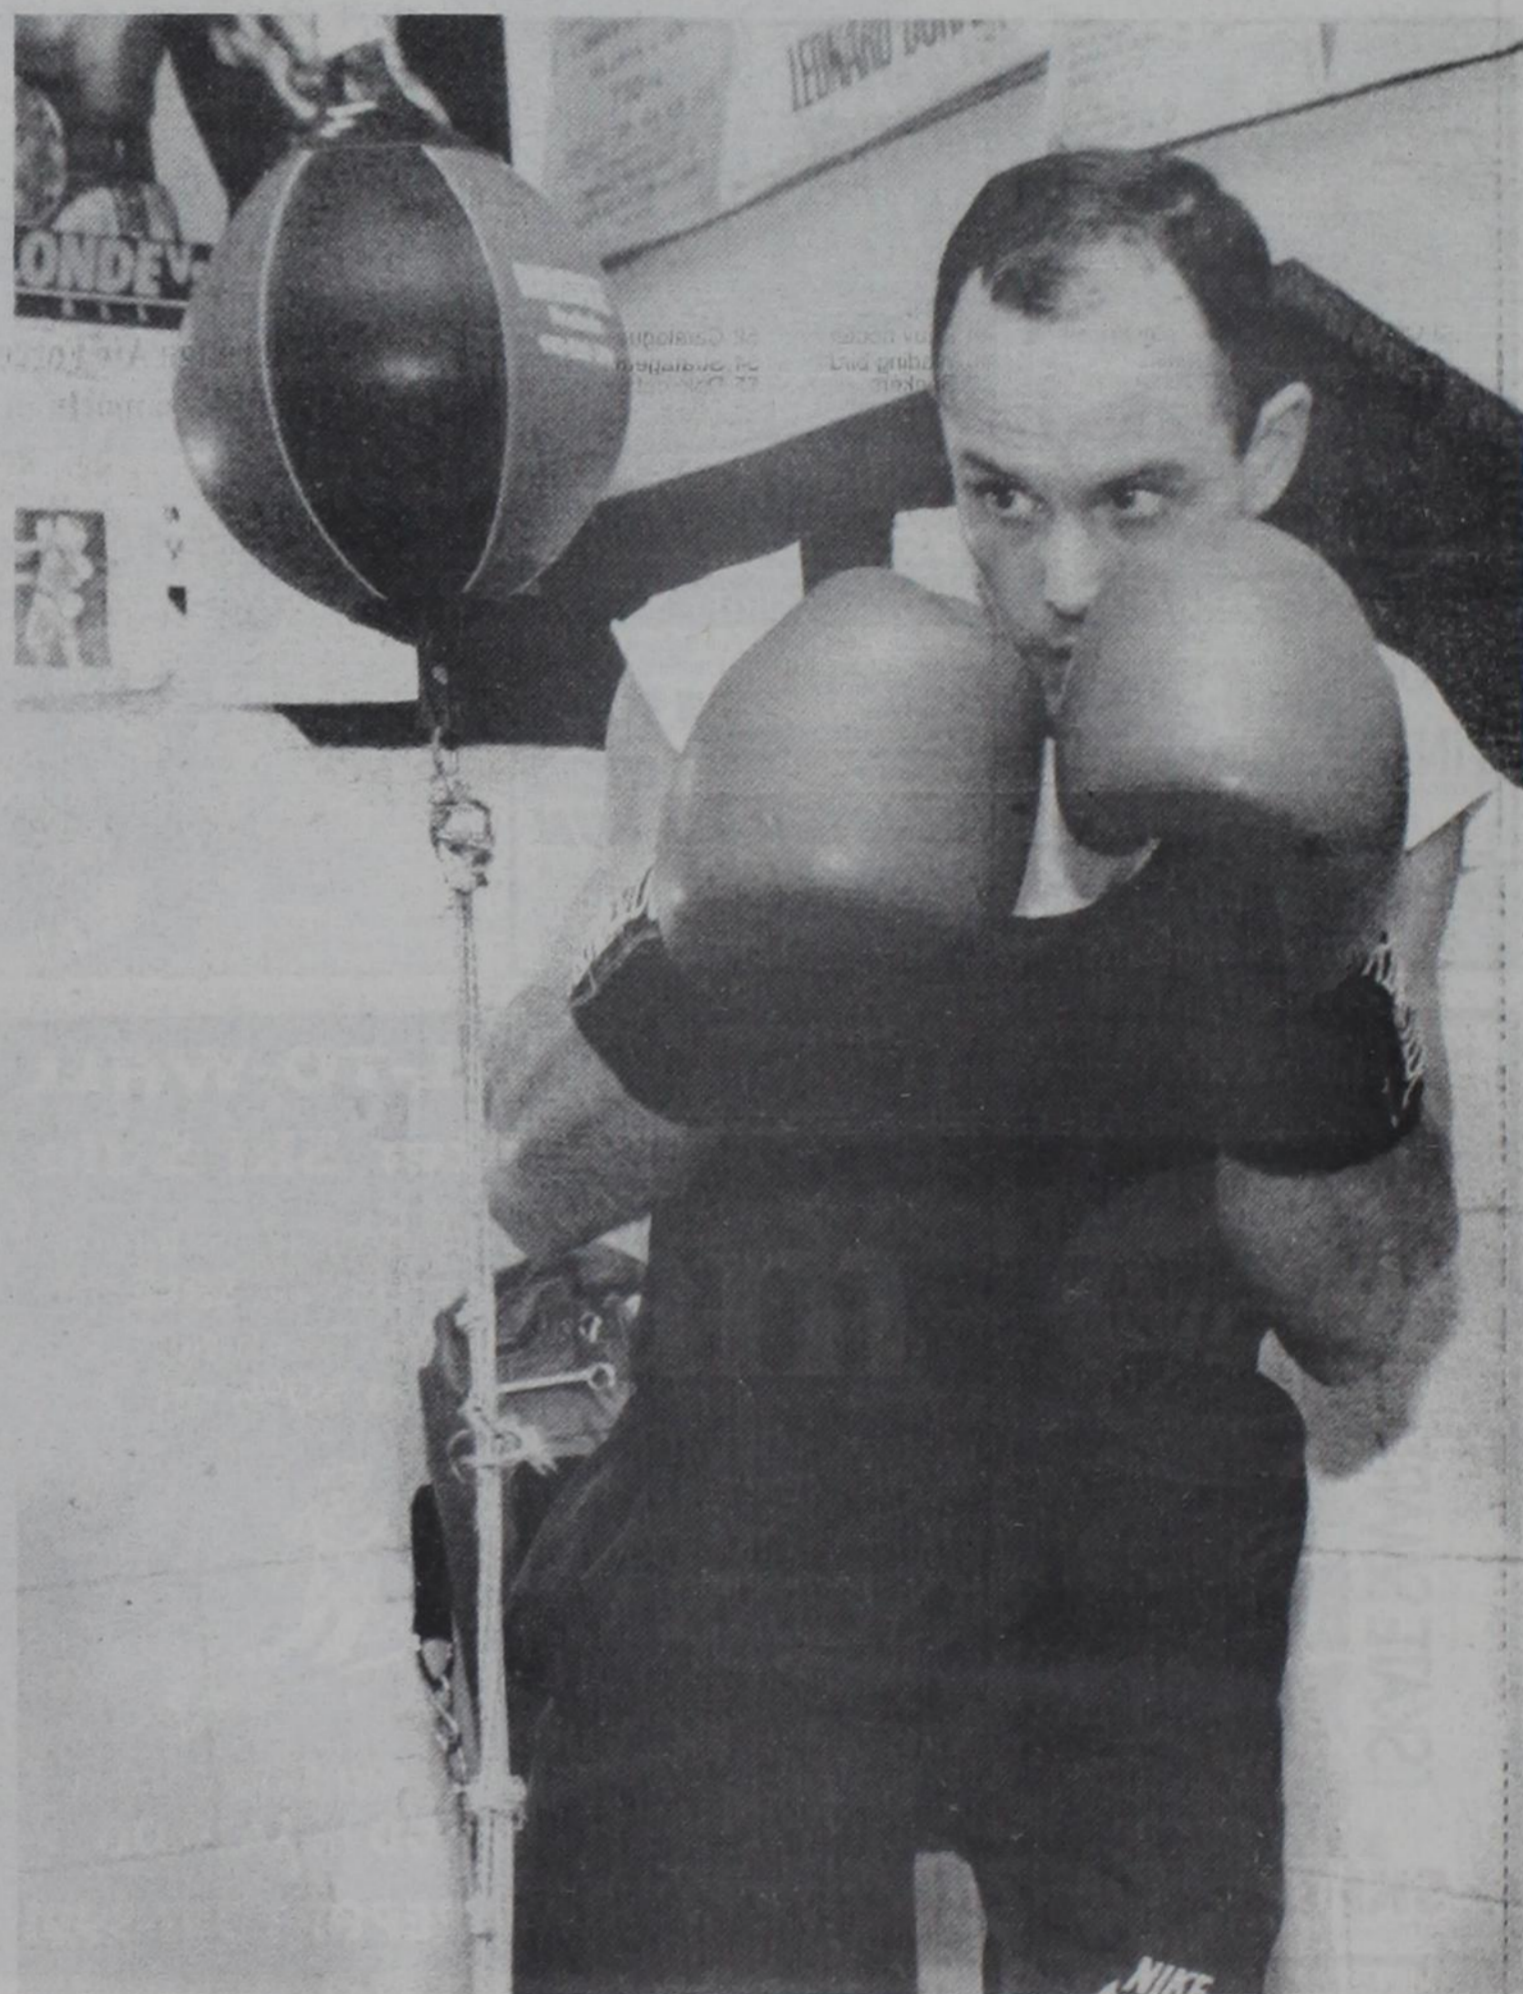

"I learned a lot. It was an educational experience because there were rules in boxing that I did not know."

Anderson reflected on some of his past fights, ones in which he fared exceptionally well.

His first memorable fight was in 1992 in the Golden Gloves tournament final.

"It was my second fight as an amateur, and I needed a certain number of fights, so we lied about the number of fights so I could participate," Anderson said.

"I ended up in the semifinals

Jeremy Chesnutt: The University Daily

Working out: Anderson competes in the light fighting in Lubbock for four years and boxing heavyweight division (178 pounds). He has been since he was 14 years old.

in front of 5,000 people at the Will Rogers Coliseum in Fort Worth."

Anderson lost in the semifinal round that year, but bounced back to win the Texas Athletic Amateur Federation tournament in August 1993 in El Paso.

Anderson, who Hernandez said is one of the most dedicated athletes he has seen, has no plans to continue fighting the rest of his life.

"Boxing keeps me in shape, and I will go as far as I can," he said.

Years spent in the ring and at school keep Anderson motivated to fight.

"I've learned what roads not to go down," he said. "I have a high self-esteem and a lot of confidence. Hopefully, I can do well and become nationally ranked."

This weekend, the Anderson camp hopes to hear the call, "... and the winner is Grant Anderson!"

Athletes excel in more than sports

By Jared Parcell

The University Daily

Books and opponents may be what many student athletes think about when they attend Texas Tech. For many, success has come on both sides of the spectrum, on the playing field or in the classroom.

Like most universities, Tech has established study halls for at-risk student athletes. These student athletes are walk-ons, transfers, incoming freshmen and those with GPAs lower than 2.3.

More than 100 student athletes had GPAs higher than 3.0 for the 1994 fall semester. Some were recognized for their work in the classroom during the past year.

Third baseman Clint Bryant was named to the College Sports Information Directors of America District VI Academic All-America team in the spring of 1994 for his 3.219 GPA in finance.

Cross country star Mandy Malouf was named to the 1994 GTE/Southwest Conference Cross Country Academic Honor team after earning a 3.686 GPA in premedical studies.

Mandatory study halls and a tutorial program established by the Athletic Student Services helped these athletes their first year at Tech.

Bryant, who also is a member of the Phi Delta Theta fraternity, said the study halls, provided every day for student athletes, helped him get things done for school, and he took full advantage of the tutorial system made available to him.

Malouf said her high school study habits carried over to college. "I had good habits in high school, and that didn't change at Tech," Malouf said.

Malouf and Bryant said balancing their sports with school is a matter of budgeting time.

"I study a lot because grades are important," Bryant said. "I realize I might not have a career in baseball."

Malouf said she is preparing for medical school in the fall of 1995. "I do as much studying as I can," Malouf said. "There are time restrictions with practice, but you do the best you can with the time you have."

Both student athletes agree it was satisfying to be recognized for their work in the classroom.

"It was rewarding knowing that I accomplished something other than running," Malouf said.

Bryant, who was named Freshman of the Year by the SWC sports information directors and Newcomer of the Year by the Associated Press in 1993, said being recognized for his academic work was a shock.

"I was surprised because I never considered myself smart," Bryant said. "I made my parents more proud. During the season I study more because I am more focused. It is a matter of getting your priorities in order."

Bryant said Tech wide receiver Field Scovell (1994 GTE Academic District VI football team), his roommate and fraternity brother and his girlfriend, junior Donna Ede, encourage each other to make good grades.

"If I don't do well, it makes me look bad," Bryant said. "It's fun because we make it a competition. My mom and dad, who live in Lubbock, also keep an eye on my grades. They want me to give my best on the field and in the classroom."

Head baseball coach Larry Hays uses grades as an incentive for his players.

"(Grades) are the reason why everyone's here, and they are our top priority," Hays said. "We need more people like Jimmy Frush. Guys that want (good grades) are going to do it. The opportunities are here to help athletes."

Hays also uses grades to determine a player's amount of time on the field.

"We encourage players to get good grades," Hays said. "We also let it affect their playing time and road trips. The bottom line is grades are their biggest motivation."

Is money more important than the game itself?

Jonathan Harris

"It's third and seven on the New York 25, Bradshaw goes back to pass and connects with Drew Pearson for a first down for the New York Jets."

If you asked anyone with any sports knowledge who Terry Bradshaw, Jack Lambert, Franco Harris and Rocky Bleier played for in the 1970s, they would say the Pittsburgh Steelers.

If these men of yore played today, Bradshaw would probably be playing for the New York Jets, while Lambert would be playing Buddyball in Arizona, and Harris would be playing for whoever paid the most money.

The NFL should stand for Not For Long referring to the time players usually play for a team. In these day of free agency, you can hear a player talking about how happy he is to play for a certain team — but usually only until his contract is up.

Free agency has changed the way people look at the NFL. When I was little I always wanted to get the jersey of my favorite player for Christmas. If that was the case today, I would probably get a different team jersey every Christmas.

When the Cowboys lost Sunday, both James Washington and Alvin Harper talked of abandoning ship because they are big free agents this year. Excuse me guys but if I were Jerry Jones or any other owner with players with this kind of attitude, I would send their butts to Cincinnati for someone who wanted to play for my team.

Although it is against my better judgment, I will give the 49ers credit. They put a better team on the field last Sunday. The reason is because of free agency. They acquired key players such as Ken Norton Jr., Richard Dent, Charles Mann and of course Deion "Did it for the Money" Sanders.

The main reason they got all these free agents was to beat the Cowboys. Case in point, Rickey Jackson got paid $838,000 if the 49ers made it to the Super Bowl.

Everyone is saying the Cowboys must go the way of the 49ers via free agency to get back into the Super Bowl.

With high-priced players already on the roster and a salary cap, Jones' pockets may not be deep enough.

Oh, how I miss the days when a championship team was built from the draft and a few trades here and there.

Free agency has not only affected football, but also the other three big-time sports.

The baseball fans missed the World Series for the first time since 1908, and hockey fans missed what could have been one of the best seasons in the NHL — 48 games does not a season make. One of the main reasons is free agency.

It seems players of today are playing sports not for the love of the game but for the money.

Lady Raiders hope 14 is lucky

By Bryan Adams

The University Daily

Texas Tech is hoping the No. 14 will prove to be lucky when it faces SMU at 7 p.m. Saturday in Dallas' Moody Coliseum.

The Lady Raiders are rolling on a 14-game winning streak and have beaten the Lady Mustangs the last 14 meetings.

The seventh-ranked Lady Raiders, now 17-2 overall and 3-0 in Southwest Conference play, will face an SMU team that is probably glad to be at home. The Lady Mustangs (10-5, 1-2) have lost four of their six road games, including back-to-back losses to Rice and Texas. The Lady Mustangs are 5-0 at home this season and 3-1 at neutral sites.

"SMU has a good basketball team, and they'll play well on their home court," said Tech coach Marsha Sharp. "They are undefeated at home this season, and they had a tough loss against Rice the other night. They will come and get after you. The trademark of an SMU basketball team is they'll come attack you."

Who will be doing the attacking for SMU is the question. SMU has four players averaging more than 12 points a game. Junior forward Kim Brandl, a transfer from Texas, is the leading scorer for the Lady Mustangs with 16.5 points a game.

Tech is 4-1 on the road this season, its only loss coming to No. 4 Stanford, and despite shooting 42.8 percent in the first half, the Lady Raiders are shooting 51.1 percent in the second half and outscoring its opponents 74-64.

"I think if we focus and play well and really go down and take advantage of opportunities we have to score, we'll be fine," Sharp said. "We really have to make sure we're ready to play, and I think that's always the case when you go away from the coliseum."

Tech's leading scorer, Connie Robinson, will look to extend her 38-game streak of scoring in double figures. Robinson is the only Lady Raider to score in double digits every game this season.

Oilers name Jets assistant new line coach

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Oilers on Thursday named Larry Beightol their new offensive line coach. Beightol joins the Oilers after five seasons with the New York Jets. Last year the Jets offense remained among the NFL leaders in sacks allowed with only 28 quarterback drops.

Braves tryout shows dream of baseball career still alive

HOUSTON (AP) — A rag-tag group of about 90 people showed up at Houston Baptist University on Thursday with their baseball gloves and a common hope — a chance to play baseball for a living.

After the daylong tryout with the Atlanta Braves, they left without contracts or even much of a chance to make the big show. But a small chance was all some sought.

"The dream never dies," said pitcher Kevin McDonald, who played four seasons in the minor leagues and now is pitching coach at nearby Alvin Community College. "I did play four years and saw what was there and I know what they are looking for. I think I still have what they want."

The Braves hold four open tryouts every year, including one in Houston, but this year's version took on added importance because of baseball's ongoing labor dispute.

McDonald was one of the few players with professional experience at the training camp, one of four that the Braves conduct each year.

"We may sign one or two out of camps like this," said Bill Lajoie, the Braves' special assistant to the general manager. "This gives us a chance to get our scouts together and go over procedures."

"We then have a tryout camp that is good for showing our scouts how to conduct a camp and also, sometimes you find a player who slipped through the system."

Lajoie told 12 of Thursday's hopefuls, including McDonald, they might be offered contracts after further evaluation. The Braves will hold additional tryouts on Saturday in West Palm Beach, Fla., and on Monday in Atlanta.

"I guess it's a good sign," McDonald said. "They haven't ruled me out, but I'm not getting my hopes up."

McDonald said he decided to try his hand at baseball again because of the strike.

"If everything was normal I wouldn't be here," he said.
