Precipitation enhancement focus of workshop

By Jamie McDonald

The University Daily With dry winds blowing dust across Lubbock, it may be easy to see a need for an increase in precipitation.

Methods of increasing rainfall in Lubbock and surrounding areas will be the focus of a precipitation-enhancement workshop to be conducted Friday at the Sheraton Inn, said Gerald Jurica, Tech associate professor of atmospheric sciences.

"It is an effort to increase the amount of rainfall above what would naturally occur," Jurica said.

"One of the things that we find is that in West Texas, there are huge amounts of water that pass over, and we don't get rain on the ground. Our goal is to develop techniques to take existing clouds and to modify their precipitation."

The process is an old concept, sources Center director.
