Insurance companies won't see some tickets

It has happened to many college students.

After travelling hour after endless hour on the long, dusty stretch of road home, flashing blue and red lights appear in the rearview mirror.

A new bill passed may help decrease the fear those lights cause as college students prepare to rejoice in one tiny travelling victory.

A bill passed by the House Monday will restrict the Department of Public Safety from reporting to insurance companies any speeding tickets given for people travelling between 55 mph and 70 mph on rural interstates and state highways.

It's about time.

Similar law recently vetoed

The Legislature passed a similar law in 1993, but it was vetoed by Gov. Ann Richards.

It is nice to see the government finally begin to think of ways to save its people money.

This measure is positive because although a national law was passed in 1974 to lower the travelling speed to 55 mph on rural highways, the state law is still set at 70 mph.

The change was caused by the Arab oil embargo and the subsequent national effort to save energy.

Regulation too old

This regulation is a little outdated.

Besides, insurance companies already are receiving enough funding from the average "high-risk" college student.

We will be thankful for any break we can get.

Although people should still be responsible for taking care of the ticket, it should not affect one's insurance rates.

After all, these roads were originally intended to accommodate vehicles traveling more than 80 mph.

As Tech students realize, travelling the speed limit is sometimes more likely to cause an accident than following the law.

Not to mention the long road to Dallas is rather boring and dusty.

Until the national law is changed to increase the rate of speed, violators should not be required to face both a ticket and an insurance hike.

For many years, Texas Tech and South Plains astronomers may have had only the dark skies and constellations to lead them in their study of the stars.

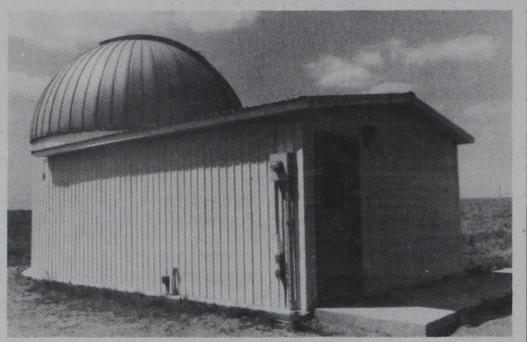

But after years of dedication and hard work completed by the Texas Tech department of physics and the South Plains Astronomy Club, the Preston F. Gott Skyview Observatory is open for Tech astronomy students, faculty and astronomy club members, said Charles Myles, Tech physics department professor and chairman.

TCADA finances under investigation

AUSTIN (AP) - A special legislative committee voted Wednesday to place the Texas Commission on Alcohol and Drug Abuse into conservatorship, citing fiscal mismanagement at the agency.

Members of both the House and Senate investigating committees voted 9-0 to recommend the conservatorship after a report from Col. James R. Wilson, head of the Department of Public Safety.

The Texas Rangers are leading a task force investigating allegations of fiscal mismanagement and misuse of public funds within the commission's system.

The commission, which has 271 employees and budget of about $180 million, funds drug and alcohol rehabilitation programs across the

In a letter to Gov. George W. Bush, Wilson said the results of the task force's examination, while not complete, "indicated an environment ... pervaded by an absence of fiscal and management controls."

"There is ample evidence to support a finding of gross fiscal mismanagement," said Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, who chairs the Senate General Investigation Committee.

"We want a neutral and detached component coming in from the outside to look at this thing. The allegations are voluminous. This is not idle talk," Montford said.

The DPS task force audited 23 agencies across the state that use TCADA funds. Wilson's letter said "nearly all ... of the providers examined (22 of the 23) have had some level of noncompliance with their TCADA contracts."

Noncompliance included potential fraud and criminal acts, misuse of funds, questionable expenditures, conflicts of interest and internal control weaknesses, according to a summary of the task force audit ob-Southern Star received its first tained by The Associated Press.

t this season we are celebrating an event that lies at the heart of our faith and hope - the resurrection of Jesus. While more skeptical minds say "It couldn't have happened," we believe that it did, and that conviction, once affirmed, has made all the difference in our world. The claims of Jesus remain a matter of personal decision - no one forces faith - but we think the evidence is compelling. The Apostle Peter counseled Jesus' followers to "always be prepared to give the reason for the hope that you have" and we would welcome the opportunity to share our faith with anyone open to consider it.
