15-yard penalty ousts tortilla tossing

A three-year unofficial student tradition at Texas Tech football games will become a thing of the past beginning Saturday, Tech Athletic Director Bob Bockrath said Monday.

The Tech student tradition of tossing tortillas toward the football field will not be allowed when Tech plays its home opener against Missouri beginning at 6:30 p.m. Saturday.

"There are many people who feel that tortilla tossing is inappropriate," Bockrath said about a conversation with Southwest Conference Commissioner Kyle Kallander.

Law professor mediates bilingual case

n an attempt to settle a child custody case involving bilingual parents, an Amarillo Judge appointed a Texas Tech law professor as mediator.

The case involves State District Judge Sam Kiser's order to the mother of a 5year-old girl to speak both English and Spanish to the child.

The mother, Marta Laureano, who is a Mexican native, spoke only Spanish to her daughter, while the father and exhusband, Timothy Garcia, said he taught his daughter the only English she knew, according to the Associated Press.

Though he declined to comment on specifics of the case, Bill Piatt, Edgar professor of law at Tech and the courtappointed mediator, said the issue is child reach a decision. custody, and how the child is treated when the child is with each parent.

"What the parties are going to try and do now is see if they can agree as mother and father how to deal with this and other issues," Piatt said.

"I'm willing to keep working with them and mediating as long as there is any hope we can resolve this."

Piatt said he has already spoken with the parties and their attorneys, and is still working out logistics of the meetings.

He said it would be in the best interest of the child to resolve the case as soon as possible.

The advantage to mediation is the ability to realize fairly quickly if the case can be resolved, Piatt said.

He said if the two parties can reach an agreement, it would be reduced to writing and presented to the judge for his approval.

"Where you are talking about children in a divorce situation, the judge has to decide what is in the best interest of the child," Piatt

"If the judge decides the agreement is not in the best interest of the child, he will not approve it."

If the parties cannot agree, Piatt said he will report back to the judge, and the case will continue as a litigated case.

Piatt said a mediator does not act as judge, rather as a neutral third-party who tries to get the parties to come together and

The reason for his being appointed as mediator in this case is his extensive work in the field of language rights, Piatt said. He said he has written books concerning this issue, in addition to teaching classes on the subject.

Piatt said though several courts have cited his writings in language rights-related cases, this is the first case of this type he is aware of in the United States.

Regardless of the case's outcome, Kiser has drawn criticism from Hispanic leaders for his remarks.

Piatt

Kiser, who apologized for those remarks Friday, did not apologize for his order.

Kiser said he made insensitive remarks concerning the child's future when he said the mother, by not teaching English to the child, was being abusive and could force the of Spanish, said the judge went over his legal boundaries.

"You should not limit the use of speaking Spanish or any language," he said. "To do that is completely illegal."

Bravo said the reaction to the judge's comments and decision in the Spanishspeaking media has been negative.

NATO strikes endanger talks

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Cruise missiles badly damaged Bosnian Serb air defenses, NATO said Monday, vowing to keep up its attacks until the skies over Bosnia are safe for Western warplanes. The Serbs were defiant, warning that the attacks could endanger the peace process.

The 13 Tomahawk missiles fired from the USS Normandy late Sunday caused "severe damage" to Serb anti-aircraft systems, Group Capt. Trevor Murray said in Naples, Italy.

But he said the defenses were not entirely destroyed, and attacks would continue - possibly with more of the $1.3 million Tomahawks - until they are.

Murray said NATO had no indication that the missiles killed or wounded civilians, as the Serbs claimed.

With the Serbs reeling from NATO's bombs, the Bosnian government took advantage of their weakness to capture a strategic village and gain control of a route linking government holdings in northern and central Bosnia.

Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic said the attacks showed that NATO was working together with the government army, and warned that they threatened to derail a diplomatic breakthrough last week that set the stage for possible peace talks.

"It is clear that the most powerful military alliance on earth is openly taking the side of our enemies," Karadzic wrote in a letter to Western leaders. "The entire peace process could be wrecked."

To toss or not to toss... There's No Question

■ Team should not be penalized for Tech students' game actions

SHANNON MURPHY

UD TechLife editor

For the past three years that I have been a Tech student, tortilla tossing has been one hot issue on this cam-

I am still not clear on how this tradition was started, but, as for me, I think it's OK.

But what the big issue now is the policy that has been put into effect by the NCAA, Southwest Conference and the Tech athletic department. The NCAA has a longstanding rule against throwing objects, whether it is food or whatever, onto the playing field, and they, in connection with the SWC, have asked that Tech comply and enforce this rule.

The rule states the first time a tortilla lands on the playing field, a timeout will be called and charged to Tech and the tortilla (or tortillas) will be removed from the field.

The second time a tortilla hits the playing surface, and each subsequent time a tortilla lands on the field, (and here's the kicker), a 15-yard penalty will be called against Tech. Now, I guess I should say that the reason I enjoy tossing tortillas for the most part is because it is a way to show my school spirit — I think it is especially fun to toss them during the kickoff And while I believe there are pros and cons to tossing, I do not agree with the new policy. Whether or not a policy is implemented, tortillas will still be tossed.

And what if the opposing team's fans come to Tech to watch a game and toss tortillas, causing Tech to receive a penalty? What will happen then?

This could cause Tech to lose a field goal, or even more serious, a touchdown and lose a game.

This issue about the action of opposing fans has been brought to the attention of SWC Commissioner Kyle Kallander and his answer was the conference is looking into it. He does not know yet what action will be taken in that situation.

Well, considering that our first home game is Saturday, I would say that the policy should not be put into effect unless they have a definite solution. It's wrong to implement a policy when there are still some questions to be answered.

The football team will be punished for the crowd's actions — that's

All in all, I enjoy tossing tortillas, but if this policy is implemented, strictly enforced and the team will be penalize for it, I will give up tossing completely.

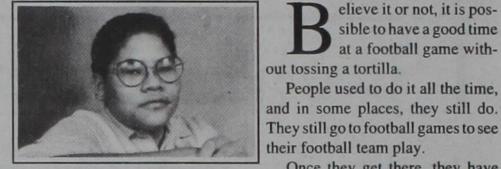

I hope that if this policy is put into effect, students and others will try to respect the team and stop throwing them. I sincerely hope that it does not take Tech losing a field goal or even the game for people to stop tossing.

Unfortunately, this very well could be the end of our tortilla tossing days as we know them at Tech. It was fun while it lasted.

College athletics are filled with game day traditions that people associate with the schools.

Do Tech students really want to be remembered as a bunch of tortilla tossers? I certainly hope not. First of all, is tortilla tossing even a tradition? According to Webster's, a tradition is the exchange of ideals or beliefs through example. Yell Practice at Texas A&M? — that's a tradition.

The Sooner Schooner at Oklahoma? — yet another tradition. The Tiger Walk at Auburn? — that's right, another tradition. Tortilla tossing at Texas Tech? — Guess again.

What beliefs or school pride is exactly being exchanged here? Is it something like "we like to throw food in West Texas?" or does it have some higher meaning that I'm just missing.

Secondly, there are a lot of great things done here at Tech leading up to games that ARE being overshadowed because of something so sensationalized by ESPN, ABC and the rest of television.

Every time Tech is on television in the region, there is a sideline reporter holding a tortilla talking about the "tradition," when he could be talking about the Saddle Tramps.

This exposure leads to more incoming students who know about tortilla tossing and less who know about Midnight Raiders.

(For those of you who don't know, it's how the Will Rogers statue gets wrapped in red ribbons, and how the campus is decorated on game weekends). It's a shame that Texas Tech gets more exposure from its athletics than its academics, but that's why many people know about Tech.

Now, because of the exposure, the Southwest Conference has placed a edict on Tech about tortilla tossing - toss tortillas, and the Red Raiders will be punished.

While the emphasis of this rule is aimed at the antics of the student body, should the student athletes be punished?

Imagine the reaction if Tech had lost a chance to beat Penn State because of a tortilla.

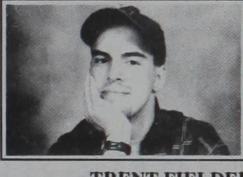

It wouldn't be the positive spin that's been heard around town since Saturday

I'll agree with most people that students have every right to enjoy themselves at Tech football games, let's just find a better way to do it. After all, think about the guys who will still be at Jones Stadium who have to clean up after us.

radition has always been a very important part of Texas Tech.

I can remember when my aunts and one uncle attended this school and would tell me incredible stories of the fun and excitement of simply going to Tech.

Even my parents, who both graduated from Texas, said that there is a spirit here like no other in the SWC, and even the country. Part of what this excitement comes from is the traditions which the students hold dear to them. Tortilla tossing has been a part of the football games here at Tech for as long as I've been here.

It is a part of not only this school, but the students as well. Some schools show their spirit by raising their hands in the form of horns, some do it by way of "Whoop!"; Texas Tech shows their pride with guns high and with tortillas flying.

I have already written one article on the dangers of taking away traditions, it looks like I have to write another one. I think it is noble what the administration is trying to do.

Texas Tech, and the image it presents, is important, especially as we enter into the Big 12 in '96. My problem is that the new tortilla policy isn't going to improve the image of Tech, but it will alienate the students who come out to the games and support

Perhaps we should be looking for other ways to improve the image of the university instead of attacking the traditions we have. Tech is rich with tradition and hopefully will continue to be.

According to this new tortilla rule, Tech will be penalized for each tortilla landing on the playing surface.

I want in no way for the football team to be affected by this decision and the actions of the students, so I am asking the students, faculty and fans of Texas Tech to bring any and all tortillas you have, pass them out to everyone in the crowd and, instead of throwing them in the air when the time comes, hold them high in honor of the tradition.

Hold them up as you sing the Tech Fight Song and show the administration and the football team that the spirit will always be there.

Why wait for graduation to become involved with the Texas Tech Ex-Students Association? Numerous opportunities await students who eagerly take on leadership roles, long before receiving their diploma. Student Alumni Board is a great opportunity for Tech students to get a head start on their involvement with Texas Tech Ex-Students worldwide.

Student Alumni Board is open to any Texas Tech student who wishes to join. A cumulative grade point average of 2.25 or above must be maintained and an enthusiastic spirit for Tech is certainly a necessity.

Applications available in the UC from 11 a.m. - 1:30 p.m. Thursday, Sept. 7th / Tuesday, Sept. 12th / Thursday, Sept. 14th Applications must be submitted to the Ex-Students Office by Sept. 15th

'Senior Trip' typical high school comedy

by Leslie Weeks

The University Daily

If you're looking for a movie with which you can display your sophisticated sense of humor, your classy style or your impeccable sense of taste to impress a date, don't go to "National Lampoon's Senior Trip."

However, if you're looking for a great show that'll take you back to your high school days - complete with fart jokes, bowel movements, beer and even a trick involving a piano-playing penis — then "Senior Trip" is the movie for you.

The movie focuses on two high school students named Dags (Rob Moore) and Reggie (Jeremy Renner). They're both classic underachievers, unconcerned about high school, grades, graduating, etc.

Their biggest worry is where the next party will be.

Ironically, Dags and Reggie and the rest of their detention buddies are awarded a trip to Washington, D.C. to meet the president. And that's where the fun begins.

The movie follows the class's various adventures as they encounter a perpetually stoned bus driver, corrupt politicians and an insane crossing guard with a Star Trek fixation, a white Cadillac and a blowup doll who stalks them throughout the movie.

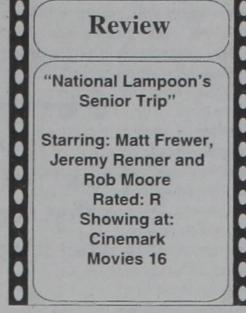

This movie kept me and the guy in the row behind me (an elderly man who insisted on repeating every single line he found amusing) laughing the entire time.

Most of the laughs involved sexual innuendos, bodily functions and slapstick gags.

Matt Frewer is excellent as anal, time-obsessed Principal Moss.

He portrays the ultimate principal horse tranquilizers for motion sickness. ("Look at that bus driver, ain'the hip!" the elderly man behind me raved.)

My only complaint on the movie was the movie's reliance on high school stereotypes. For example, there was a beautiful but brainy, girl fresh, innocent and eager to be corrupted, an electronics geek, an overweight guy who wore grease-stained shirts and ate everything in sight, a repressed lesbian and an anti-social anarchist.

It would have been nice to see a break from the typical formula for high-school comedies.

So if you're looking for a great but what do you expect, it's a movie little frightened of his demented stumovie with a no-brainer plot and lots of laughs to see with your closest buddies then you won't be disappointed with "National Lampoon's Senior Trip."

Rice's comments about Sanders show jealousy

BRENT ROSS

I know we're all tired of discussing the Deion Sanders saga, so I'm going to talk about San Francisco's Jerry Rice for a while.

Did anyone see Rice's exploits and expletives after Sunday's Atlanta-San Francisco game?

Rice was asked a question UD sports reporter about the 49ers' inability to sign Sanders. (Sorry, but we should all know by now that the entire world revolves around "Prime Time"). Rice responded by barking out an opinion filled with obscenities and rage.

What he did can only be described as a tongue lashing directed toward the reporters.

Rice's beef was that the other members of last year's Super Bowl champion team were not receiving their fair share of recognition and appreciation.

He specifically mentioned the 49ers defensive backfield of Eric Davis, Tim McDonald and Merton Hanks. In not so many words, Rice said this made him angry

First of all, let's deal with this allegation. San Francisco was a talented team going into last year, but they were definitely improved by the arrival of Sanders.

He shored up the defensive backfield and brought a little flair to a team that sorely needed a heartbeat.

Whether Rice wants to admit it or not, Sanders made the difference and the facts back that up.

In the new Cowboys-49ers era, the teams have met five times with the Cowboys winning three and the 49ers winning two. The overriding theme to this is that when Sanders wasn't a 49er, the Cowboys won. And when Sanders was a 49er, the Cowboys lost.

Second, what is the deal with Jerry Rice? I thought he was supposed to be the model citizen. The all-American boy from down the street. However, recently Rice has acted like your average, run of the mill thug. Prior to the 1994 NFC championship game, Rice and some of his cohorts started a brawl with the Cowboys. I thought this type of activity was reserved for teams such as the Miami Hurricanes. Notice that this is a college team not a professional team in which the players should be a little more responsible. THE RANGERS HANGING AROUND: As much as I hate to admit it, the Texas Rangers are still in the hunt for postseason play. I say this as a fan of the Rangers.

I thought the Rangers were done after their annual mid-season slump, but they seemed to have turned the corner.

With a series win over Milwaukee they are only two games out of the wild-card spot and seven and a half games out of the division

With a favorable schedule that includes a season-ending homestand against their divisional rivals, the scene is set for a memorable pennant chase in Arlington.

Hilgers makes big impact on Tech

Set me: Lisa Hilgers is not the tallest member of the Texas Tech volleyball team, but the freshman setter from Victoria, Minn., has made the biggest impact on the Red Raider roster. She was named to the all-tournament team at the Red Raider Classic last weekend.

Then finally there comes the matter of whether the NFL will find a capbuster in the contract. If so, Jones gets a $2 million fine.

"The deal is above reproach," said Jones. The deal will cost Dallas about $2 million per year against the cap for the next three years. Teams like the Cowboys and 49ers have gotten around this year's $37.1 million salary cap by extending contracts and deferring payments, often until 1999, when there will be no cap.

Coach Barry Switzer playfully told Sanders to be ready for a 3 p.m. prac-
