Vandals write racial slurs on walls

by Tara McQueen

The University Daily

Racial slurs, which lined the walls of the 11th floor of Weymouth Residence Hall, were reported to the University Police Department Oct. 14.

Eleventh-floor residents said the incidents occurred between Oct. 10 and Oct. 14.

The words "f--- all peckerwoods," "black power bitch," "cottonbowl," "think," "KKK," and "kill whitey," were written, according to UPD reports.

No charges have been filed about the case, according to UPD reports.

UPD officials still are interviewing residents and no one has been referred to the Dean of Students Office for disciplinary action or expulsion in connection with the incident, said Steve Kauffman, assistant director and manager of Texas Tech News and Publications.

UPD officials are confident the vandalism acts are isolated to the 11th floor of the residence hall, Kauffman said.

"Someone who was probably drunk on this hall wrote foul language on the wall with a purple marker," said Robert Weaver, an 11th floor Weymouth resident and freshman undecided major from Bellaire.

"Then someone wrote 'KKK,' and in retaliation, someone else wrote 'kill whitey.'"

"They also wrote the word 'think' with a light bulb as the 'i.' They wrote 'cottonbowl' and then it was scratched out and they wrote something else. It got progressively worse. Someone got pissed off and it exploded when 'KKK' went up."

The words scribbled along the hallway were not the only form of vandalism which occurred on the 11th floor of Weymouth Residence Hall, Weaver said.

The floor used to have a bulletin board, but it was torn down in a related incident, he said.

"Whoever tore it down was totally drunk," he said.

"They tore the wood frame. It happened at night."

Weaver said he thought he knew who committed these acts, but he did not see anyone writing on the wall or destroying the bulletin board.

Slim Malone, an 11th floor Weymouth Residence Hall resident and a freshman electrical engineering and computer science major from Austin, found a cotton plant outside his door the night of Oct. 13.

"We came to school to learn here like anyone else," Malone said.

"The police didn't care when the white boys wrote on the wall."

UPD officers met with Malone after the original slurs were crossed out and responses were written, he said.

"Everybody had their own opinions — we are very emotional about this," Malone said.

Weymouth Residence Hall Director Stacy Klippenstein called a meeting with the residents on the 11th floor, Malone said.

Klippenstein said he had no comment about the incident.

Strong chemical odor ails Thompson Hall employees

by Emily Elsen

The University Daily

A chemical smell was investigated Wednesday at Thompson Hall by members of the Department of Safety at the Texas Tech Health Sciences Center and Tech Plant Operations.

The smell was noticed Thursday and Friday, and then started again Tuesday, said Eugene Stalnaker, M.D., an employee at Student Health.

"It is a bad smell which is not here all the time," Stalnaker said.

"For instance, it started at 9 a.m. and mysteriously quit at 11 a.m."

Employees who encountered the odor began coughing and had to run to windows for fresh air, Stalnaker said.

Other employees began feeling nauseous and experienced headaches as soon as they smelled it, he said.

"However, it's not a heavy smell,"

he said. "There are just pockets of the smell."

Stalnaker said he experienced tightening in his legs though he said he is usually not affected by smells.

Plant Operations looked everywhere in Student Health to locate the odor including the roof, basement and the air handling system, he said.

Stalnaker said at first Plant Operations thought it was a problem in the air handling system, but after the maintenance crew cleaned the vents the smell did not go away.

"The employees from HSC and Plant Operations have looked everywhere and the only solution might be the a combination of chemicals coming from the third floor photography lab," he said.

Stalnaker said the smell would be easier to locate if it was noticeable all the time, but it only comes in waves.

"The main problem is by the time

Plant Operations and HSC employees came to investigate, the smell was gone," he said. "They need to be here when it's here to understand what we are experiencing."

Charles May, an employee from HSC Department of Safety who came to look into the matter, said his department came to locate the source of the problem and then Plant Operations would be able to fix it.

"This particular smell could be a sewage problem," May said. "Most of the chemical problems are associated with plumbing."

The problem should be corrected, but it is just a matter of finding the source, he said.

"Of course, people will get irritated because of the smell," May said. "This is just one of these things we have to chase."

May said the odor will continue to be investigated until it is found.

Train, school bus collide; five die

FOX RIVER GROVE, Ill. (AP) — A commuter train ripped apart a school bus stopped on the tracks Wednesday as youngsters in the back rushed forward in terror at the sight of 620 tons of steel bearing down on them. Five students were killed and about 30 were injured.

Some witnesses said the bus was trying to cross the tracks about 7:20 a.m. when it got caught at a red light behind a car and couldn't make it all the way across.

But others said there was no car ahead and the driver could have moved forward.

"You could see the terror in their eyes," witness Coreen Bachinsky said.

"You could hear the metal, the glass flying, the screams. It was very, very scary."

Secretary warns Tech students of possible sweepstakes fraud

by Carrie Kilman

The University Daily

A possible sweepstakes fraud has reached Lubbock and may be targeting Texas Tech students.

Sabrina Robbins, a senior psychology major from Lubbock and secretary for the Tech Attorney for Students Office, said she received an award letter from the Board of Inquiry, a sweepstakes franchise located in Redlands, Calif., on Oct. 18 notifying Robbins that she had won a cash prize.

Robbins, who had not entered any contest, became suspicious of the award letter after noticing the almost $30 charge for claiming the prize, she said.

"After looking at it and reading the fine print, I realized it was probably a scam," Robbins said. "But it was very convincing. Now I know how other students might be fooled."

Robbins brought the letter to her employer after another student complained to the attorney about a similar sweepstakes award notification.

The Board of Inquiry is the most recent sweepstakes company to attempt to swindle Tech students out of money, said Deniece Jones, Tech attorney for students.

The company mails award letters to unsuspecting people announcing they have won a cash prize, Jones said. Letter recipients must call the company's accounting office and present their assigned check identification number stated in the letter.

The Board of Review and the chairmen listed on the award letter have unlisted phone numbers in California and were unavailable for comment.

The award letter states, "I am writing to you today on behalf of a national corporation in whose sweepstakes you were recently awarded a cash payment. We are currently holding the $6,000 grand prize in escrow."

The letter leads the recipient to believe the cash payment is worth $6,000, when actually the recipient has won only $1, Jones said.

To receive the award, the person must call a 900-number to reach the Board of Inquiry accounting office. The call costs $3.98 per minute, and the average call is seven minutes, the award letter states.

"The average call costs almost $30," Jones said. "Any legitimate sweepstakes would not make you spend money to claim your prize."

The award letter arrives in an official-looking envelope and is very convincing, she said. The professional notification includes an official seal and is signed by someone "claiming to be chairman or president — a very impressive title," she said.

The back of the award letter contains a customer disclosure in fine print that states the odds of winning. Letter recipients have only a one in about 5 million chance of winning the $6,000 prize, but have a one in one chance of winning $1.

"If you're not reading with a critical eye, it looks like you've won $6,000," Jones said.

Men affirm religious lifestyles

by Leslie Weeks

The University Daily

On Oct. 27 more than 70,000 men will gather at Texas Stadium in Irving. However, they won't be drinking beer, watching football or ogling cheerleaders. Instead, they will be praying together, sharing their problems and praising and worshipping God.

The men are members of Promise Keepers, a national organization created by Bill McCartney, former football coach at the University of Colorado, and Dave Waddell, state director for the Fellowship of Christian Athletes.

Danny Lacey, a junior music major from Pottsville, will be attending the conference with his brother and his father.

Lacey said he first heard about the conference on a radio program.

"They were broadcasting the conference in Colorado," he said. "It sounded really interesting. I heard 50,000 men singing and speaking about what it's like to be a godly man."

Lacey said his desire to have a godly family and to be a godly man in his family and in his church inspired him to attend.

"My family is really close, but I'm excited to see us be there together, worshipping together," he said. "After this, our relationship is going to be on a different level spiritually. We will be able to share more intimate problems."

Lacey said members will open up, share their problems and pray together.

"We talk about things men have a hard time talking about together," he said.

There also will be musical performances and various speakers, he said.

"Bill McCartney will probably give a protection and biblical backing; supporting the mission of the church by honoring and praying for the pastor and actively donating time and resources; reaching beyond any racial and denominational barriers to demonstrate the power of biblical unity; influencing the world by being obedient to the great commandment and great commission; and pursue vital relationships with a few other men understanding that members need brothers to help keep promises.

The event is free from denominational and racial barriers, he said.

"You will be sitting here in front of Catholics, behind Methodists, beside Church of Christ members," he said. "It doesn't matter who is right or wrong. You will be talking about things that really matter."

Michael Hardy, a freshman undecided major from Lubbock, has attended the conference in the past and plans to attend again Oct. 27.

"It was a huge conference," he said. "There were so many backgrounds religiously and ethnically. People lay down their differences and worship God."

Hardy also remembers the experience coach-type speech," he said. "He'll give a pep talk, as if it's a locker room."

"I guess he'll be sending the men out on a mission for the second half," he said.

Lacey said Promise Keepers focuses on seven promises, which include honoring Jesus Christ through prayer, worship and obedience to his word; practicing spiritual, moral, ethical and sexual purity; building strong marriages and families through love, editor do not pertain to the issue at hand.

La Ventana reserves right to exercise freedom of press

JULIE KIMBALL
LV managing editor

Grievances from members of the Student Senate and their constituents are duly noted by the La Ventana staff. We appreciate comments — criticisms included. However, we would like to make it apparent to the general public that it is our duty, as well as our right, to report what is deemed newsworthy.

Apparently, many have not seen fit to look past the pictures to read the article to find out why reporting of marijuana use last year was a newsworthy event. I wonder why a 300 percent increase in reported cases in the residence halls last year does not give enough credibility to the issue. Are enrollment percentages the only increases deemed worthy enough to regard at this university? Allow me to remind the Student Senate again that controversy surrounded a prominent student leader last year because of an accusation of marijuana use.

As for the article, it is well-balanced, offering the pros and cons of marijuana use at Texas Tech. Many have expressed it "glorifies" drug use.

"Robert," from the story "Mary Jane's Addiction," states, "I wasn't being productive smoking pot, and I used it as a buffer against the real world." That doesn't sound like glorification of drug use to me.

As for the statements from other marijuana users, they are quotes, not opinions from the La Ventana staff, but facts and beliefs perceived by individuals.

The purpose of La Ventana is to record each year at Texas Tech through the students' perspective — the good and the bad. We are not a public relations tool for the university nor is any entity of the student publications department. If the Student Senate, or anyone for that matter, is looking for that type of coverage, they should contact News and Publications at 742-2136.

As a product for students and by students, we regard our positions and responsibilities with the utmost care. One Student Senate member expressed that the La Ventana should not try to push the limits of our freedoms. Apparently, they are not aware that the La Ventana exercises the same First Amendment rights as The University Daily.

This lack of knowledge of the student press saddens everyone at student publications who puts in an effort every year to offer a forum for students to meet the press. "Meet the Media" is our way of getting input from Tech, although every year there are more members of the student press in attendance than concerned students. Student publications has provided this service to Tech since 1988 and will continue this tradition at 12:30 p.m. Nov. 15 in the University Center Courtyard. The Student Senate is not the only organization that cares about the opinion of the student body.

The spread in question has a precedent. The 1982 edition of the La Ventana encountered similar problems with drug use at Texas Tech. Photos from that particular spread also contained paraphernalia and drugs. History does repeat itself.

I was surprised to hear that the Student Senate passed a resolution expressing disapproval of the yearbook, when they could have passed a resolution which would actually do something about illegal drug use on campus. I do not want to bring up debates on what the senate does or doesn't do — that is not the issue. I would, however, like to express my concern that if the senate does feel so strongly about this issue, they should perhaps sponsor a campus wide awareness campaign.

The La Ventana and student publications encourage feedback from our readers. We also encourage anyone with an objective frame of mind to join the La Ventana and University Daily staffs. Applications are available in room 103 of the journalism building.

Writing on the Wall

Read it, write it, find a braver method to share opinions

PETER WILKINS
UD guest columnist

Imagine, if you will, a place where students and faculty may express ideas and opinions in writing, no matter how controversial, without fear of reprisal. Imagine the possibilities of this marketplace of ideas — the freedom to express one's views, to give voice to dissenters or a forum for the prevailing philosophy. Imagine the exciting interplay of ideas and flash of repartee.

Such a place does exist and it is available to all of us.

A place where we can see our ideas and the ideas of others in print.

What is this wondrous place? Is it the editorial page of The University Daily? Of course not, you big silly! I'm talking about public restroom stalls!

That's right, folks. Where else can you sit and express your most profound thoughts in comfort and privacy ... I mean, privacy. Bathroom stalls provide an easy forum for any moron (I mean, citizen) with a pen. And not just for opinion! What better place for the budding poet to see his or her works in print? I'm sure I'm not the only person whose heart has soared with joy upon reading those immortal lines.

"Here I sit, broken hearted ..." You know the words.

But seriously.

I've been checking out the graffiti in bathrooms around Tech lately, and have come to this conclusion: graffiti is how people express views that they are too ashamed to espouse in public. If you want to get a feel for what passes for thought in the Tech student's heart of hearts, check out the bathrooms.

Gay-bashing seems to be the most prevalent form.

Of course, this shouldn't be a surprise to anyone. No one has accused Texas Tech of being a mecca of tolerance lately. Gay-bashing isn't exactly unheard of around here.

But it takes on a particularly virulent form when the author doesn't have to sign his or her name. And so eloquent! Who can deny the beauty and wisdom of such lines as "Kill all Queers." (I actually saw that.)

A more puzzling form of graffiti is the religious stuff. Boy, is that weird!

"I've been checking out graffiti in bathrooms around Tech lately, and have come to this conclusion: graffiti is how people express views that they are too ashamed to espouse in public."

I can understand the joy in one's faith causing them to shout it from the housetops, but to write it on the bathroom wall?

What are they thinking?

"Hmm, I think I'll go praise the Lord while taking a nice, leisurely bowel movement." How pious.

I saw a pretty weird one the other day in Holden Hall that combined the two above-mentioned motifs. Someone had drawn a giant cross on the stall door, and written "I believe ... He created everything!" Underneath this, in a different pen, was written "Even faggots?"

I have yet to see any graffiti concerning some of the burning issues running rampant across the campus, like tortilla tossing or how those stinking communists over at La Ventana are pushing marijuana.

But I am sure that it is only a matter of time. I have been tempted to take out my pen and join the fray while whiling away a few minutes in the stalls, but have always been prevented by a basic sense of decency, plus the fact that I just can't get my pen to write on those slick walls.

So I have to inflict my views on the world through more mundane means ... like the editorial page of The University Daily.

Peter Wilkins is a junior social work major from Lubbock.

WELL, THAT WAS AN INCREDIBLE EXPERIENCE, LOUIS ... HUNDREDS OF THOUSANDS OF PROUD BLACK MEN, RESPONSIBLE AN' REAFFIRMED, READY T'GO BACK TO THEIR COMMUNITIES AN' MAKE A DIFFERENCE ... IT REALLY DID TURN OUT TO BE ABOUT MORE THAN JUST ONE MAN, DIDN'T IT?

UD editors are proof of strong student leadership

To the editor: I would like to thank Megan Clark for her interest in the Student Association. Tech needs more students like Clark, who instead of just complaining, actually do something about the issues. It is obvious that Clark is aware of the issues on this campus. I urge her to continue to follow up on all these matters of concern to students. This would be a big help for both the students across the campus as well as those who serve on the Student Senate.

Throughout the elections in the spring I heard the mention of senator accountability and Clark is the first to follow through and hold the entire senate accountable. It is obvious she understands this campus very well and I would urge someone with her dedication to Tech students to run for office in the spring campus general election — whether it be as a senator or executive officer.

I do agree that the editor of The University Daily is a leader, but not because of any meeting to which he or she has been invited. A leader is defined as one who leads. It is obvious that the editorial board is comprised of leaders. There were many letters against tortilla tossing published in The UD, one of which I wrote. The leaders on The UD editorial board voted that the "tradition" should continue and it has.

This was clearly evident at the Arkansas State game where our team was penalized 45 yards.

The "tradition" of tortilla oriented penalties would have continued at the Rice game without the help of a prevailing southwest wind. Your Student Association encourages all students to voice their opinions and concerns.

White males do not deserve minority status in society

To the editor: This letter concerns Trent Fielder's column (10/24/95). It amazes me that a person would be so threatened by having to share power, voice and citizenship. Yes, I am Hispanic and a true "male minority" in this country. You say that excluding the past 15 to 20 years or so, white heterosexual males have been the dominant force in this country. Well, doesn't that seem a little arrogant? Congress, the White House and corporate America still are dominated by white heterosexual males.

It doesn't seem to me that there is any power struggle whatsoever. The only minority status you should claim is that of being a minority in poverty, lack of education, and homelessness. Realistically, don't you think it is time to share the wealth, education, and good-old-boy system?

Video conference series benefits disabled

by Carrie Kilman

The University Daily

Students with disabilities now represent the largest single population on America's college campuses, according to the second interactive video conference in a series of three titled "Disability Issues in Higher Education."

The conference occurred at 12:30 p.m. Wednesday in Texas Tech University Center Faculty Club Room.

Tech students and faculty learned about the prevalence of disabilities on college campuses and how to educate campus communities about issues faced by disabled students during the nationwide conference.

The conference, sponsored by the Tech Dean of Students office and the National Association of Student Personnel Administrators, linked Tech students and faculty with 130 post-secondary institutions.

Participants discussed the increasing number of disabled students on college campuses.

One in every 11 people has a disability, and 9.2 percent of full-time freshmen on America's college campuses are disabled, according to NASPA statistics.

"Someone who has a physical or mental impairment that severely limits one or more life functions—that is the legal definition of someone with a disability," said Jane Jorrow, executive director of the Association on Higher Education and Disability and conference panel member.

Many people do not realize the term 'disability' encompasses more than students who are blind, deaf or in wheelchairs, Jorrow said.

The term also includes hidden disabilities, such as acquired brain injuries, speech disorders and epilepsy, she said.

"Hidden means it is not a disorder that shows to the outside world," he said.

About 60 percent of all college freshmen with disabilities have hidden disabilities, according to NASPA statistics.

Students should use 'disabled' when referring to students with disabilities, Jorrow said.

"It's not what's said, it's the feelings behind the words," she said. "Everyone knows 'handicapped' is out these days."

"We're not talking about someone who needs to be fixed or who is lacking in some way. 'Disabled' is a neutral term."

Sue Kroeger, director of Disability Services at the University of Minnesota and conference panel member, said the old definition of 'disabled' is changing.

"Many feel defined by the old, conceptual definition," Kroeger said. "(It was) medical, saying something was wrong with us. Now, the disabled community is seeing the definition in a kind of socio-political way. We don't need to be fixed, because we're OK the way we are."

a difficult time distinguishing their identity, she said.

Students should not be forced to decide whether to identify themselves by their ethnic status or their disabled status, but should be allowed to enjoy multi-identities, Kroeger said.

"Stereotyping is always a dilemma when bringing together such a diverse group of people under one label," she said.

Tom Thompson, director of the Center for Disabled Students with Disabilities at William Rainey Harper College and conference panel member, said professors sometimes unknowingly encourage the stereotypes of disabled students.

Professors sometimes tend to treat all disabled students alike, assuming they have similar disabilities and needs, Thompson said.

Punishment decision awaited in Selena trial

HOUSTON (AP)—A prosecutor asked a jury Wednesday to give Yolanda Saldivar life in prison for killing Tejano singing star Selena and silencing "that golden voice that brought joy to millions of people."

Defense attorneys urged the minimum sentence—probation—for the 35-year-old Selena fan club founder and business assistant who was convicted Monday of murder.

The jury began weighing seven punishment options after prosecutors presented only one witness during the sentencing phase.

The witness, Dr. Faustino Gomez, testified that he did not find Saldivar to be law-abiding. Gomez was not allowed by the judge to mention he fired her in 1983 after he suspected her of stealing money.

The prosecution also abandoned an effort to prove that Saldivar embezzled from the boutiques she managed for the singer.

But District Attorney Carlos Valdez argued emotionally for the maximum sentence.

"I'm asking you on behalf of that beautiful voice ... that voice that was silenced," he said.

A life sentence means at least 30 years behind bars.

Saldivar did not face the death penalty because the crime contained none of the aggravating circumstances required under Texas law, like a multiple murder or murder committed during a robbery.

Prosecutors contended Saldivar deliberately shot Selena in a falling-out over business. The singer's family suspected Saldivar of embezzling $30,000.

The defense called the shooting March 31 at a Corpus Christi motel a tragic accident that occurred when the gun went off by a complete mistake.

Educating feed industry goal of Tech center

by Charles Melton

The University Daily

Linking the livestock feed industry and the world of education is the goal of the Texas Tech Center for Feed Industry Research and Education.

"The center is the only one of its kind in the world which focuses on the animal side of the feed industry," said Reed Richardson, Tech assistant professor of animal sciences in the College of Agricultural Sciences and Natural Resources.

The center received start-up funding Sept. 1 from line-item funding from the state Legislature, Richardson said.

"The main reason we're involved with the center is as a representative of the grain and feed industry in Texas," said Ben Boerner, president of the Grain and Feed Association.

The association played a role in getting funding collected by the feed and fertilizer control center and donating it to the Center for Feed Industry Research and Education, Boerner said.

The association is interested in a national feed ingredients database, which has been an ongoing project for some time, Boerner said.

A feed ingredients database is a database containing the ingredients used in livestock feed and their nutritional value.

Tech is working on establishing a nationwide feed database network, Richardson said.

Ty Springer, education service coordinator of the center, will work on the project, he said.

The center has three areas of emphasis: education, research and service.

Tech has new undergraduate and graduate level classes focusing on feed utilization, feed manufacturing and the overall management and operation of a feedmill, Richardson said.

The center has hosted short courses on issues related to the feed industry as well as workshops and seminars, he said.

"We are trying to develop a strong link between the industry and the university," he said.

Research projects completed through the center are designed to answer questions and solve problems through direct application, Richardson said.

Feed costs for are the most significant part of animal production costs, amounting to 60 to 80 percent of total production costs, he said.

"Nationally, if we can improve the efficiency of feed utilization by 1 percent, it would equate to $1 billion in savings," Richardson said.

The research involves other departments such as the chemistry and physics departments, he said.

"For years the industry has looked at maximum rates of gain, but now we are looking at minimum waste feeding," Richardson said.

Minimum waste feeding involves looking at what is not utilized in diets such as nitrogen and phosphorous, he said.

"Through this we can identify specific things as problems in run-off water," Richardson said.

A dedication ceremony and feed symposium will take place Nov. 9 to honor the new center.

Legislators, students support amendment to finance loans

AUSTIN (AP) — Legislators, education officials and students have thrown their support behind constitutional Amendment No. 1 on the Nov. 7 ballot — a proposal to issue $300 million more in bonds to finance college loans.

Sen. Gonzalo Barrientos, D-Austin, said Wednesday the importance of Amendment No. 1 has grown in light of proposed congressional cuts that would affect education.

According to the Texas Guaranteed Student Loan Corp., Congress is considering reducing spending on student loan programs by $10 billion to $12 billion.

"Budget cuts currently under consideration in Washington and recent tuition and fee increases at Texas colleges and universities threaten the dream of higher education for most American families," Barrientos said.

If passed, Amendment No. 1 would authorize the Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board to issue up to $300 million in general obligation bonds to fund student loans.

If the amendment fails, approximately 15,000 students currently receiving loans will lose funding next spring.

About two-thirds of future loans for college students will be eliminated, Barrientos said.

SNOOZE

You slept through morning classes. And now you're gonna blow off the afternoon. The sad thing is, your parents have no clue. They think you're working hard. They're convinced you're busting your butt. They're so damn proud. If only they could see you now. Lying there like a lump. Suddenly guilt sets in. You feel so low. Quickly, you reach for the phone and surprise the folks with a call. Ahhh, now you can sleep in peace.

Men gather to keep spiritual promises

by Emily Elsen

The University Daily

The Promise Keepers rally gathering Friday at Texas Stadium in Dallas attempts to serve as a reminder to men of their duties.

Jim Gerlt, senior pastor at Indiana Avenue Baptist Church, said 85 men from his church are attending the rally in Irving and he is looking forward to it.

"This movement is so important because of the breakup of homes, men walking away from their responsibility in the family and involving themselves in sexual impurity," Gerlt said. "We will learn more about honoring our wives and how to help our daughters grow in esteem."

The Promise Keepers calls men to be godly men, he said.

"Another emphasis of these rallies is to promote racial harmony among men," Gerlt said. "Men of all races are invited to speak so we can break down racial barriers among us."

Tom Gristy, owner of Gristy's Cleaners in Lubbock, said the first time he attended a Promise Keepers rally he felt like it was the closest thing to being in heaven.

"The Promise Keepers rally offers men a different perspective," Gristy said. "After the rally, I felt like I could see things from God's perspective."

The biggest reason the movement is important is because men do not relate to men the same way women relate to other women, he said.

"This movement provides a vehicle to get men to become more open to other men," Gristy said. "This helps us talk and relate to each other and the women and children in our lives."

He said he does not understand the criticism Promise Keepers has been receiving from women's groups.

"I don't understand how any woman could be opposed to a man learning how to be a better man," Gristy said. "This helps us to develop into what God wants us to be."

Gristy said he is excited about the rally because he has convinced a good friend to come experience the movement for the first time.

"I am so excited because he's a good friend of mine," he said. "He is already a wonderful person, but this event could help him fulfill his role as a man."

Jason Richardson, a Texas Tech junior communications studies major from Lubbock, said he believes the movement is necessary because it teaches men how to take responsibility for their actions.

"I decided to go because I realize I am going to be a father and a husband someday," Richardson said. "God has placed the burden of responsibility now and I have accepted his challenge."

The rally is not about men being better than women, he said.

"We are all equal," Richardson said. "Within this, God has given us different roles and we each serve different purposes."

Men need to learn to not be dictators, but how to be loving in addition to this," he said.

"This movement teaches men it is OK to have an emotional attachment to other men," he said. "Men can learn how to build relationships and how to achieve goals within their relationships with women."

Richardson said he expected to see a certain element of change after the rally.

"I don't think it will be a night and day change," he said. "I do hope to come back a better person."

Future Akins, a local artist and a graduate student in the women's studies program at Tech, said when she first heard about the Promise Keepers' movement, warning lights went off.

She said she is supportive of the overall statement, but would have to see the application of it in order to make a judgment on the program.

"My main worry is that a program like this will keep others from developing," she said.

The feminist magazines are a little bit worried because women are not given access, Akins said.

"It would be amazing if we could start talking about our responsibilities to others as human beings," she said.

She said her worry is the rhetoric of the movement could get turned around against women.

"Sometimes when one group excludes another group, it means they are fearful of the one being excluded," Akins said.

Austin band devoted to different kind of rock

by Leslie Weeks

The University Daily

If you want loud, in-your-face, punk rock, don't bother showing up at the Depot Warehouse tonight.

Because that's not what Dah-veed, the band that will perform at 9:30 p.m., is about. In fact, the members of the band consider themselves pretty laid-back, positive sort of guys.

"We are not these kind of freaks with this hidden agenda of world domination," said lead singer David Garza, who also plays acoustic and electric guitars. "We are a little bit more optimistic."

"You won't catch us saying, 'Woe is me, I'm this tortured dude, everybody else go to hell except for me,'" Garza said. "We're more human."

The band, which Garza describes as "a rock band with a little bit of Latin influence," consists of Garza, drummer/singer Michael Hale and acoustic and electric bass player John Thomasson.

"The band isn't loud or fancy,"

Garza said. "It's more along the lines of the Talking Heads or The Police."

The band also plays some dance music.

"We play dance rhythms in order to pull people into what we are about," he said. "But there is a difference. There is a lot more involved in the music than just getting up and shaking your butt kind of thing."

Garza said band members work together, playing off each other.

"It's a certain style that they learn," he said. "Once you learn what I like and what my songs are like, it's easy."

Thomasson said each live performance is unique. The band does not follow a certain play list, he said.

"David just goes after the vibes of the crowd," he said. "Each night a song can be totally different. It can be a ballad and we can change it to a fast song," he said.

Thomasson said one thing the audience can be sure of is that the performance will be a little bit different from previous ones.

"They know it's always going to be a little bit different," he said. "That keeps the energy up. We are challenging ourselves."

"Our main goal is to have a good time and for everyone else to have a good time."

Promise

"I was walking out of the conference and these older men started yelling and screaming at me," he said.

"That was the first time that I had encountered something that verbal and that offensive," he said. "I was listening to screaming men and in the background I could hear 50,000 men a quarter of a mile away singing praises."

Hardy said he received instruction on how to be a godly man at the conference.

Customer sues for botched tattoo

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Dan O'Connor is fighting mad. Not "fighting." "Fighting."

The Notre Dame fan went to a tattoo parlor in August for a permanent symbol of his allegiance to the school's Fighting Irish — a $125 drawing of the university's leprechaun mascot.

But when O'Connor took the bandages off, his girlfriend began laughing at the mistake.

The inscription read: "Fighting Irish."

"I was irate, and for a minute or two after I cooled down I kind of giggled," he said. "But I can't just live with this. You're not talking about a dented car where you can get another one ... you're talking about flesh."

On Monday, the 22-year-old from Lodi sued the Tattoo Shoppe in Carlstadt. He is seeking unspecified damages.

O'Connor said he was humiliated by the typo. His friends call him "Fighting." And even his girlfriend mocks the dropped "I."

There was no comment Wednesday from the parlor. A man who answered the phone would not identify the owner, and the owner did not return a call.

Arnold reminisces on failed TV career

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Two failed TV comedy series have soured Tom Arnold on the small screen.

"Until I got kicked off television, I had no idea how big the movies are and how important the movies are compared to the little television," the ex-husband of caustic comedy queen Roseanne told TV's "Extra" during an interview for broadcast Thursday.

Arnold starred in the series "The Jackie Thomas Show" and "Tom," both of which quickly faded.

Since then, his movie credits have included "True Lies" and "Nine Months."

Arnold also stars in the upcoming films "The Stupids," "Big Bully," "Carpool" and "The Honeymooners," in which he will play Ralph Kramden.

Now he wants to try raising a family with new wife, Julie Champnella.

"I think I'm mature enough for it, maybe, who knows," the 37-year-old Arnold said.

Control game: Freshman forward Jennifer Benat fights Texas' Haley Hauptman for the control of the ball during Tech's 3-2 overtime win over the Longhorns Wednesday at R.P. Fuller Track Stadium.

Soccer team beats Texas in overtime

by Brent Ross

The University Daily

It took 30 minutes of overtime, but the Texas Tech women's soccer team came away with a 3-2 victory over Texas Wednesday at R. P. Fuller Track Stadium. The win was Tech's first against a school from the Southwest Conference.

"These kids have believed that they could beat Texas," Tech coach Diane Nichols said. "We went down there last year and they embarrassed us 5-0. We wanted them back here on our field."

After recognizing the efforts of seniors Stephanie Carter and Holly Woodburn, the game got off to a quick start. Tech had the advantage in shots on goal early in the game, but could not tally a goal.

The Longhorns then struck when Crystal Oswalt headed in Carol Finch's corner kick past Carter.

The Red Raiders continued to pressure the Lady Longhorns before scoring in the 29th minute. Sophomore midfielder Julie Clement took a feed from junior midfielder Kristi Patterson and hit on a turn-around shot from just outside of the penalty box to tie the game. The game remained knotted at 1-1 going into halftime, but four minutes into the start of the second stanza, Texas scored when Kristin Midyette crossed a ball that was flicked in by Valerie Page.

The Red Raiders continued to get scoring opportunities, but did nothing with them until freshman Katie Woodburn tied the game off an assist from fellow freshman Jennifer Benat with seven minutes remaining.

The game then moved into the first of two 15-minute overtime periods. Patterson put Tech in front for good, scoring on a free kick that was deflected just in front of the goal.

"I've had my opportunities in the past few games," Patterson said. "Unfortunately they didn't go in, but that's the way soccer is. I got one today so it worked out well."

The Red Raiders shut out the Longhorns in the second overtime, earning the victory in their final home game of the season.

"The rivalry is so great between the two schools," Nichols said. "I told the kids before the game that if they were to beat Texas, they would be heroes in this town."

Nichols said Tech showed no signs of missing sophomore defender Vanessa Balderrama, who missed the game because of a knee injury.

"I thought Amy (Smith) played a great game in place of Vanessa," Nichols said.

Busch to sell St. Louis Cardinals

ST. LOUIS (AP) — The traditional St. Louis combination of beer and baseball is breaking up — Anheuser-Busch is selling the Cardinals.

Anheuser-Busch, owner of the team for 42 years, made the surprise announcement Wednesday.

The company said the sale, expected to be completed in June, is part of a plan to concentrate on its core businesses of beer, theme parks and aluminum cans.

"We concluded it was in the best interest of everyone, including the Cardinals and the fans, to seek a new owner," brewery chairman and president August Busch III said.

Brewery spokesman John Jacob said will try to sell the team to a local buyer, or at least to owners who would keep the Cardinals in St. Louis. But, he added, there is no guarantee the team will not be moved.

"Anything could happen," Jacob said.

Financial World magazine estimated the value of the team at $110 million. Tony La Russa, who signed a two-year contract to manage the team earlier this week, said he was surprised when told of the Cardinals' situation.

Tech's upset bid of Texas falls short

by Chris Parry

The University Daily

For the second time this season the Texas Tech volleyball team had a winning streak snapped as the Red Raiders fell to Texas in four games 10-15, 15-8, 15-6 and 15-11 Wednesday at the Lubbock Municipal Coliseum.

The loss dropped the Red Raiders to 16-8 on the year and 3-5 in South-west Conference play. Despite the loss, Tech coach Jeff Nelson said he was pleased with his team's effort.

"I think we played them tougher this time," he said. "I saw some signs tonight of things that looked a lot better for us."

Tech hit .184 for the match, led by Lacy Nye's career-high 25 kills. Nelson said Nye got the job done against the Lady Longhorns.

"She had a great match," he said about Nye's play.

Tech unveiled its new offense in the first game and came out on fire with a 7-0 run to start the match Nelson said he wanted to try something new against Texas.

"We knew that we had to do something to change our game," he said. "We put some new things in our offense and I think we caught Texas off guard."

Texas clawed back to make the score 11-8. During the Longhorn comeback, Tech brought in junior middle blocker Jill Burness, who had three kills late in the game to help finish off the Longhorns 15-10. Burness said she was happy with the change in the Tech attack.

"I really like our new offense," she said. "It gives the other teams a different look at us and it's so much faster that the blockers don't have the chance to camp on our hitters."

Texas regrouped in the second game, hitting .364 to outlast Tech 15-8 in the second game. The Lady Longhorns were led by senior outside hitter Angie Breitenfield who had 19 kills in the match. Nye, who added seven kills in the second game, said the new style of play helped her hitting tremendously.

"It worked out great," she said. "Since the set is faster, it makes you go faster and (freshman setter) Lisa (Hilgers) did a great job with it."

Texas came back to win the third game 15-6 behind strong hitting from freshman outside hitter Demetria Sance who finished with 20 kills in the match. Hilgers said after the first game, Texas changed its blocking to help cope with Tech's new style of play.

"They really committed their blockers on the middle, so running the quick offense, they were getting late to the outside," Hilgers said. "Once they (Texas) started getting on that it made it harder because they were reading the ball a lot better."

Just dig it: Junior outside hitter Cristine Martin records one of her 20 digs during Tech's loss to Texas Wednesday in the Lubbock Municipal Coliseum.

Lethridge's reemergence sparks offense for Raiders

by Jared Parcell

The University Daily

After relying on its defense for the first half of the season, Texas Tech has turned its attention to the offensive attack.

The offensive charge the last two games has been led by the reemergence of sophomore quarterback Zebbie Lethridge, who completed more than 50 percent of his passes in wins over Arkansas State and Rice.

Lethridge, who set the SWC record for pass attempts without an interception against the Owls, and the rest of the Red Raiders face New Mexico at 2:07 p.m. Saturday at University Stadium in Albuquerque, N.M.

"The most important thing is to try and get a victory," Lethridge said. "My overall percentage has gone up in the last couple of games. I feel better that I've helped the team a great deal."

For the season, the Lubbock Estacado product is 70-of-156 passing for 1,070 yards and six touchdowns. Lethridge has also rushed for 184 yards on 64 carries and four more touchdowns.

Sophomore I-back Byron Hanspard continues to show flashes of brilliance, with seven touchdowns the last two contests.

Against Rice, offensive coordinator Dick Winder added a new threat to the offense, using fullbacks Todd Walker and Rod Hobbs extensively. Hobbs had five carries for 40 yards and caught two passes for nine yards. Walker finished with two rushes for 26 yards.

"Offensively, we need to do what we can to get points on the board," Lethridge said. "We need to keep them (New Mexico) off balance and take advantage of all of our threats."

New Mexico's defense is allowing 181.4 yards on the ground, while the Tech running game is averaging 168.5 yards.

Opponents against New Mexico have averaged 239.4 passing yards and the Raiders are picking up 181.7 yards in the air.

Walker said the confidence level of the offense remains the same, but the effort they've put in as a unit is paying off.

"We know we have to continue to work hard to perform as well as we have been," Walker said. "It has to do with how hard we've been working. I told Rod 'we're going to have to step it up (against Rice). They were keying on Byron (Hanspard) and it makes us more of a threat if we can pick up the slack like that."

Split end Field Scovell is tied for second with Tony Darden for 11 receptions. He has gained 199 yards and his touchdown reception came against Penn State Sept. 9.

Atlanta beats Cleveland 5-2, lead World Series 3-1

CLEVELAND (AP) — The Atlanta Braves, behind Steve Avery, moved within one victory of the World

Series championship that has always eluded them, beating the Cleveland Indians 5-2 Wednesday night for a 3-

1 lead. Atlanta, whose postseason history is filled with failure, could not ask for a better position. Braves' ace Greg Maddux, a three-time Cy Young winner will try to clinch it Thursday night in Game 5 against Orel Hershiser.
